The fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival will be held at Tanglewood during the first two week-ends in August. The festival which is composed of six concerts, will be presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The festival will mark the inauguration of the new Music Shed at Tanglewood, which has a seating capacity of 5,000. Seats may be reserved for the concerts which will be held Aug. 4, 6, 7 and 11, 13 and 14. A large variety of classical music has been planned with works chosen from nearly all of the famous composers.

Since last summer when thousands gathered from all points of the music loving world to hear the beautiful music played by the Boston Symphonic orchestra under Tanglewood's pines, large sums have been sent in to the board of trustees to enable the construction of a permanent auditorium. This structure has been erected and certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones, as audiences signify their approval of the inaugurations.

It is the hope of the trustees of the festival that public recognition and support of such programs will continue to grow, thus bringing reknown to Tanglewood as a vitalizing force in the world of music.

Seat reservations by Winsted residents wishing to attend the concerts may be made at Desci's drugstore.

103

CHELSEA, MASS.
EVE. RECORD

JUL 28 1938

Esplanade Concerts

Four thousand smiling, happy children from Boston settlement houses, school playgrounds and several from this city, sat with mothers, fathers and teachers yesterday and beat time with tapping feet at the second children's program presented in the Esplanade shell by Arthur Fiedler and his selected group of musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The children's concert, which featured such numbers as "Some Day My Prince Will Come" and other "Snow White" selections, delighted the juvenile gathering fully as much as the Esplanade concerts charm upward to 20,000 adult music lovers every night during the summer months. The Esplanade concerts have grown in popularity and a large audience is assured regardless of whether the weather is warm or cool.

Several Chelsea organizations, among them the Young People's Forum of the First Baptist church, have availed themselves to the opportunity of hearing the Esplanade concert orchestra. It is too bad that other groups and individuals cannot find time to attend one of the programs, for in the music of Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra is found pleasant relaxation from the hum-drum routine of our daily lives.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

JUL 27 1938

MUSIC

Fine Music in New Records

By Martin McCall

An interesting recording made by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra before the Hitler invasion is one of Beethoven's most neglected works, the Triple Concerto in C Major. Designated by the composer as Opus 56, the work was written somewhere between the "Waldstein" Sonata and the opera "Fidelio."

The solo parts are excellently played by musicians unknown in this country: R. Odnoposoff, violinist; S. Auber, cellist; A. Morales, pianist. Felix Weingartner is the inimitable conductor. (Columbia Set No. 327).

The newest recording of Brahm's Sonata in D minor, the last of the three Sonatas for violin and piano, features two great soloists, Joseph Szigeti and Egon Petri, respectively (Col. Set No. 324). The ensemble is exemplary art, and the performance cannot be excelled.

Only a few months after the Victor Co's release of orchestral excerpts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" (the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky), Columbia has given out the same music. It is performed by Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic Orchestra (Set No. X-94). The present recording makes more of the composer's flair for instrumental resources; besides, these records have the advantage of coming in an album.

The Italian composers of the 18 century did not simply enrich the field of violin music, but they gave it its basic charcater. By exploiting the violin's resources they developed the so-called "violinistic" style, whereby the instrument could be said no longer to imitate the human voice.

On one record, the gifted violinist Nathan Milstein presents a Larghetto by Pietro Nardini and a little Sonata by Giovanni Pergolesi. Both selections set a standard of loveliness and musical intelligence, or "style" (Col. 69179-D).

Columbia's current folk music releases are of Gaelic and Welsh selections: the London Gaelic Choir sings two old Scottish folk songs in the original tongue (357), and the National Folk Dance Orchestra of the British Isles plays four old Welsh folk dances—in the correct tempo (358-M, 359-M).

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1938 ✓

Aaron Copland has just sent the final chapter of his "What to Listen for in Music" to Whittlesey House which expects to publish the book in October. Mr. Copland completed the manuscript in Paris and in London, where he attended the recent performance of his "El Salon Mexico" at the summer festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music. He will return to this country to appear as piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August [illegible] in his "Music for the Theater" at the Berkshire Festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1938

Franconia Social Notes

Special to the Herald Tribune

FRANCONIA, N. H., July 28.—Forest Hills Hotel guests enjoyed a motion picture show last night and a dance tonight. Dr. T. W. Gilmer and party, of Hempstead, L. I., arrived there today.

Mrs. M. L. Gollan, of the Crawford House, gave a tea at Pont d'Avignon for Mrs. Hubbell Rowland, Mrs. Andrew Robeson, Mr. Serge Koussevitzky and in Boaz Piller. ~~Mr. and~~ Mrs. Henry Parish, of New York, and Mrs. W. J. Fobes, of the cottage colony, also were there with guests.

SYMPHONY REACHES OUT

At the opening program Thursday night, it was briefly announced that the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had assumed the management of the Esplanade concerts. This statement was more important than it may have seemed. It insures—as much as anything can be insured in these uncertain times—the permanence of this series of free, open-air concerts which Mr. Fiedler so courageously initiated in 1929 and, with the help of loyal friends, has admirably maintained.

Simultaneously it was announced that the trustees of the fund left by Maria Hatch in memory of her brother, Edward Hatch, for years a merchant on Bromfield street, have decided to use the money, about $200,000, to build a permanent orchestra shell on the Esplanade to replace the present inadequate structure. The new shell will be considerably larger, thus providing room for a full symphony orchestra if one is ever employed, will have dressing rooms for the musicians, and will embody the latest scientific advances in acoustics.

The taking over of the management of the concerts by the orchestra's trustees does not, however, lighten the necessity of private contributions. They are still most urgently needed. But it does insure a continuous and efficient control of the enterprise, which has become a regular part of the orchestra's annual program. This now includes the long winter series of concerts in Symphony Hall; in Cambridge, New York and other cities; the "Pops" concerts in May and June in Symphony Hall; and the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge in August. If the Esplanade series is brief, its audiences are large,—the Thursday night throng was estimated at 15,000—and in the matter of popular appeal it probably exceeds all the others.

Thus, more than a half century after its founding by Henry L. Higginson in 1881, the Boston Symphony takes another step forward in his ambition to provide the finest music for all the people. It is sometimes forgotten that the prices of tickets for the original series of concerts in the old Music Hall ranged from 25 to 75 cents! Only the formidable expense of engaging the best conductors and front-rank musicians forced him to raise these prices. But even then Maj. Higginson, for over thirty years, made up the annual deficit from his own pocketbook.

That deficit still exists, and every year it is met by men and women who are proud to carry on his great venture, one of the finest an American ever undertook. As Bliss Perry said at the orchestra's 50th anniversary in 1931:

> What we recall tonight is not the details of fifty years of musical history, intimately related as that is to the growth of musical appreciation in Boston and throughout the United States. We think chiefly of the one person who was so greatly fortunate as to create a fellowship of artists, in which he himself was a comrade. He made one vast field of beauty accessible to persons having little other enjoyment, "people"—as Maj. Higginson said so perfectly in his farewell address in 1918—"unknown to me, who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine."

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 26 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL HAS NEW MUSIC SHED

The chorus of hammers has subsided at "Tanglewood." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed, built under the direction of Joseph Franz, engineer and member of the festival's board of trustees, is finished so far as construction this year is concerned and everything is in readiness for the inaugural of the shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 4 at 8:30 P. M. "Tanglewood" is on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Additional concerts will be given Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, while in nearby Pittsfield Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played at the festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 28 1938

On August 3, Longmans, Green will publish "The Orchestra Speaks," by Bernard Shore, a book of character sketches of many of the great conductors, among them, Mengelberg, Goosens, Coats, Koussevitsky Casals, Beecham, and Toscanini.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 30 1938

FROM Victor comes an outbreak of violin concerti, all recorded in this country by super-fiddlers. Jascha Heifetz, with the Boston Symphony, plays Prokofieff's second concerto (M-450)—new to New Yorkers, unless they travelled to Boston to hear it last December. Fritz Kreisler performs his version of the Paganini first concerto (M-361)—actually a new work based on the first movement of the Paganini opus—with The Philadelphia Orchestra. This is practically a novelty here because Mr. Kreisler has played it in Carnegie Hall only with piano accompaniment, and if you haven't heard the orchestral setting, you've missed something. Yehudi Menuhin transcribes to wax Schumann's violin concerto (M-451), for which he is an eloquent propagandist. John Barbirolli and the Philharmonic-Symphony assist.

Of the three concerti, the Prokofieff seems the most important, being not only the best of recent violin concerti but a substantial composition, leaving time out of it. The second movement is top Prokofieff; the first is almost as good; and the third suffers only from an apparently arbitrary jerkiness. Mr. Heifetz's playing couldn't be better, and Mr. Koussevitzky conducts the orchestra handsomely.

The Kreisler-Paganini collaboration is charming, effective music all the way, and it ought to be a great crowd-pleaser. The composer—taking it as a Kreisler creation—seems a bit cautious here and there on the records, thus losing some of the impact of his music. The orchestra, led by Mr. Ormandy, is immense without being too aggressive.

Mr. Menuhin does everything that can be done for the Schumann concerto, which still sounds to me like good, second-rate Schumann.

GREENE IS ELECTED SYMPHONY TRUSTEE

Honor Given Secretary of Harvard Corporation

B. Herald July 26/38

Jerome D. Greene, secretary of the corporation of Harvard University, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra, it was announced last night.

Greene, who has been associated with Harvard 33 years, has held a number of trusteeships. Among the organizations he has served in that capacity are: Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, Institute for Government Research in Washington, American Academy in Rome, American Historical Association and the New England Conservatory of Music. He was joint secretary of the reparations committee at the 1919 peace conference in Paris. In 1936, he directed the tercentenary celebration of Harvard.

Mr. Greene will be the 12th member of the orchestra's board of trustees. The others are: Bentley W. Warren, president; Henry B. Sawyer, vice-president; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer; Allston Burr, Henry B. Cabot, Alvan T. Fuller, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Roger I. Lee, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft.

SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1938

WILL HONOR HADLEY.

By United Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 27. — Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of Aug. 13 by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

Berkshire Symphony Festival

● The fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival will be held the first two weeks in August at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Six concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 p. m. Programs for the festival follow:

SERIES A

Thursday Evening, Aug. 4, at 8:30
Bach.....Chorus and Chorale from the Cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80.
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and Soloists.
Saturday Evening, Aug. 6, at 8:30
Haydn.....Symphony in E flat, No. 99.
Debussy.....''La Mer,'' Three Symphonic Sketches.
Sibelius.....Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39.
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 7, at 3:30
Mozart.....''Eine Kleine Nachimusik.'' Serenade for String Orchestra (K 525).
Brahms.....Symphony in E Minor, No. 4, Op. 98.
Copland.... Music for the Theater.
Ravel.....''Ma Mere l'Oye (''Mother Goose'') Five Children's Pieces
Respighi.....Symphonic Poem, ''The Pines of Rome''

SERIES B

Thursday Evening, Aug. 11, at 8:30
Wagner.....''Die Walkure'' Introduction to Act III, ''The Ride of the Valkyries.'' Act III, Final Scene.
Wagner.....Act III, ''Siegfried'' Four Soloists
Saturday Evening, Aug. 13, at 8:30
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 6, in F major, Op. 68, ''Pastoral.''
Hadley.....''Angelus'' from the Symphony No. 3 in B-minor, Op. 60.
Tchaikovsky.....Symphony No. 6, in B-minor, ''Pathetic,'' Op. 74.
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 14, at 3:30
Schumann.....Symphony in B-flat No. 1, Op. 38.
Sibelius.....''Tapiola,'' a Tone Poem for Orchestra.
Brahms.....Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

Information concerning tickets may be obtained by writing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

103

CHELSEA, MASS.
EVE. RECORD

JUL 28 1938

Esplanade Concerts

Four thousand smiling, happy children from Boston settlement houses, school playgrounds and several from this city, sat with mothers, fathers and teachers yesterday and beat time with tapping feet at the second children's program presented in the Esplanade shell by Arthur Fiedler and his selected group of musicians from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The children's concert, which featured such numbers as "Some Day My Prince Will Come" and other "Snow White" selections, delighted the juvenile gathering fully as much as the Esplanade concerts charm upward to 20,000 adult music lovers every night during the summer months. The Esplanade concerts have grown in popularity and a large audience is assured regardless of whether the weather is warm or cool.

Several Chelsea organizations, among them the Young People's Forum of the First Baptist church, have availed themselves to the opportunity of heating the Esplanade concert orchestra. It is too bad that other groups and individuals cannot find time to attend one of the programs, for in the music of Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra is found pleasant relaxation from the hum-drum routine of our daily lives.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

JUL 27 1938

MUSIC

Fine Music in New Records

By Martin McCall

An interesting recording made by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra before the Hitler invasion is one of Beethoven's most neglected works, the Triple Concerto in C Major. Designated by the composer as Opus 56, the work was written somewhere between the "Waldstein" Sonata and the opera "Fidelio."

The solo parts are excellently played by musicians unknown in this country: R. Odnoposoff, violinist; S. Auber, cellist; A. Morales, pianist. Felix Weingartner is the inimitable conductor. (Columbia Set No. 327).

The newest recording of Brahm's Sonata in D minor, the last of the three Sonatas for violin and piano, features two great soloists, Joseph Szigeti and Egon Petri, respectively (Col. Set No. 324). The ensemble is exemplary art, and the performance cannot be excelled.

Only a few months after the Victor Co's release of orchestral excerpts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" (the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky), Columbia has given out the same music. It is performed by Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic Orchestra (Set No. X-94). The present recording makes more of the composer's flair for instrumental resources; besides, these records have the advantage of coming in an album.

The Italian composers of the 18 century did not simply enrich the field of violin music, but they gave it its basic charcater. By exploiting the violin's resources they developed the so-called "violinistic" style, whereby the instrument could be said no longer to imitate the human voice.

On one record, the gifted violinist Nathan Milstein presents a Larghetto by Pietro Nardini and a little Sonata by Giovanni Pergolesi. Both selections set a standard of loveliness and musical intelligence, or "style" (Col. 69179-D).

Columbia's current folk music releases are of Gaelic and Welsh selections: the London Gaelic Choir sings two old Scottish folk songs in the original tongue (357), and the National Folk Dance Orchestra of the British Isles plays four old Welsh folk dances—in the correct tempo (358-M, 359-M).

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
JUL 27 1938 ✓

Aaron Copland has just sent the final chapter of his "What to Listen for in Music" to Whittlesey House which expects to publish the book in October. Mr. Copland completed the manuscript in Paris and in London, where he attended the recent performance of his "El Salon Mexico" at the summer festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music. He will return to this country to appear as piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on August 7 in his "Music for the Theater" at the Berkshire Festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 29 1938

Franconia Social Notes

Special to the Herald Tribune

FRANCONIA, N. H., July 28.—Forest Hills Hotel guests enjoyed a motion picture show last night and a dance tonight. Dr. T. W. Gilmer and party, of Hempstead, L. I., arrived there today.

Mrs. M. L. Gollan, of the Crawford House, gave a tea at Pont d'Avighon for Mrs. Hubbell Rowland, Mrs. Andrew Robeson, Mr. Serge Koussevitzky and in Boas Piller. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parish, of New York, and Mrs. W. J. Fobes, of the cottage colony, also were there with guests.

SYMPHONY REACHES OUT

July 16/38

At the opening program Thursday night, it was briefly announced that the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had assumed the management of the Esplanade concerts. This statement was more important than it may have seemed. It insures —as much as anything can be insured in these uncertain times—the permanence of this series of free, open-air concerts which Mr. Fiedler so courageously initiated in 1929 and, with the help of loyal friends, has admirably maintained.

Simultaneously it was announced that the trustees of the fund left by Maria Hatch in memory of her brother, Edward Hatch, for years a merchant on Bromfield street, have decided to use the money, about $200,000, to build a permanent orchestra shell on the Esplanade to replace the present inadequate structure. The new shell will be considerably larger, thus providing room for a full symphony orchestra if one is ever employed, will have dressing rooms for the musicians, and will embody the latest scientific advances in acoustics.

The taking over of the management of the concerts by the orchestra's trustees does not, however, lighten the necessity of private contributions. They are still most urgently needed. But it does insure a continuous and efficient control of the enterprise, which has become a regular part of the orchestra's annual program. This now includes the long winter series of concerts in Symphony Hall; in Cambridge, New York and other cities; the "Pops" concerts in May and June in Symphony Hall; and the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge in August. If the Esplanade series is brief, its audiences are large,—the Thursday night throng was estimated at 15,000 —and in the matter of popular appeal it probably exceeds all the others.

Thus, more than a half century after its founding by Henry L. Higginson in 1881, the Boston Symphony takes another step forward in his ambition to provide the finest music for all the people. It is sometimes forgotten that the prices of tickets for the original series of concerts in the old Music Hall ranged from 25 to 75 cents! Only the formidable expense of engaging the best conductors and front-rank musicians forced him to raise these prices. But even then Maj. Higginson, for over thirty years, made up the annual deficit from his own pocketbook.

That deficit still exists, and every year it is met by men and women who are proud to carry on his great venture, one of the finest an American ever undertook. As Bliss Perry said at the orchestra's 50th anniversary in 1931:

What we recall tonight is not the details of fifty years of musical history, intimately related as that is to the growth of musical appreciation in Boston and throughout the United States. We think chiefly of the one person who was so greatly fortunate as to create a fellowship of artists, in which he himself was a comrade. He made one vast field of beauty accessible to persons having little other enjoyment; "people"—as Maj. Higginson said so perfectly in his farewell address in 1918—"unknown to me, who, leading gray lives, have needed this sunshine."

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 26 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL HAS NEW MUSIC SHED

The chorus of hammers has subsided at "Tanglewood." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed, built under the direction of Joseph Franz, engineer and member of the festival's board of trustees, is finished so far as construction this year is concerned and everything is in readiness for the inaugural of the shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 4 at 8:30 P. M. "Tanglewood" is on Route 183, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Additional concerts will be given Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, while in nearby Pittsfield Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played at the festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 28 1938

On August 5, Longmans, Green will publish "The Orchestra Speaks," by Bernard Shore, a book of character sketches of many of the great conductors, among them, Mengelberg, Goosens, Coats, Koussevitzky, Casals, Beecham, and [illegible]

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 30 1938

FROM Victor comes an outbreak of violin concerti, all recorded in this country by super-fiddlers. Jascha Heifetz, with the Boston Symphony, plays Prokofieff's second concerto (M-450) —new to New Yorkers, unless they travelled to Boston to hear it last December. Fritz Kreisler performs his version of the Paganini first concerto (M-361)—actually a new work based on the first movement of the Paganini opus—with The Philadelphia Orchestra. This is practically a novelty here because Mr. Kreisler has played it in Carnegie Hall only with piano accompaniment, and if you haven't heard the orchestral setting, you've missed something. Yehudi Menuhin transcribes to wax Schumann's violin concerto (M-451), for which he is an eloquent propagandist. John Barbirolli and the Philharmonic-Symphony assist.

Of the three concerti, the Prokofieff seems the most important, being not only the best of recent violin concerti but a substantial composition, leaving time out of it. The second movement is top Prokofieff; the first is almost as good; and the third suffers only from an apparently arbitrary jerkiness. Mr. Heifetz's playing couldn't be better, and Mr. Koussevitzky conducts the orchestra handsomely.

The Kreisler-Paganini collaboration is charming, effective music all the way, and it ought to be a great crowd-pleaser. The composer—taking it as a Kreisler creation—seems a bit cautious here and there on the records, thus losing some of the impact of his music. The orchestra, led by Mr. Ormandy, is immense without being too aggressive.

Mr. Menuhin does everything that can be done for the Schumann concerto, which still sounds to me like good, second-rate Schumann.

GREENE IS ELECTED SYMPHONY TRUSTEE

Honor Given Secretary of Harvard Corporation

B. Herald July 26/38

Jerome D. Greene, secretary of the corporation of Harvard University, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra, it was announced last night.

Greene, who has been associated with Harvard 33 years, has held a number of trusteeships. Among the organizations he has served in that capacity are: Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, Institute for Government Research in Washington, American Academy in Rome, American Historical Association and the New England Conservatory of Music. He was joint secretary of the reparations committee at the 1919 peace conference in Paris. In 1936, he directed the tercentenary celebration of Harvard.

Mr. Greene will be the 12th member of the orchestra's board of trustees. The others are: Bentley W. Warren, president; Henry B. Sawyer, vice-president; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer; Allston Burr, Henry B. Cabot, Alvan T. Fuller, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Roger I. Lee, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft.

SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1938

WILL HONOR HADLEY.

By United Press.

BOSTON, Mass., July 27. — Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of Aug. 13 by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

Berkshire Symphony Festival

● The fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival will be held the first two weeks in August at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Six concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 p. m. Programs for the festival follow:

SERIES A

Thursday Evening, Aug. 4, at 8:30
Bach.....Chorus and Chorale from the Cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80.
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125, Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and Soloists.
Saturday Evening, Aug. 6, at 8:30
Haydn.....Symphony in E flat, No. 99.
Debussy.....“La Mer,” Three Symphonic Sketches.
Sibelius.....Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39.
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 7, at 3:30
Mozart.....“Eine Kleine Nachtmusik.” Serenade for String Orchestra (K 525).
Brahms.....Symphony in E Minor, No. 4, Op. 98.
Copland..... Music for the Theater.
Ravel.....“Ma Mere l'Oye (“Mother Goose”) Five Children's Pieces
Respighi.....Symphonic Poem, “The Pines of Rome”

SERIES B

Thursday Evening, Aug. 11, at 8:30
Wagner.....“Die Walkure” Introduction to Act III, “The Ride of the Valkyries.” Act III, Final Scene.
Wagner.....Act III, “Siegfried” Four Soloists
Saturday Evening, Aug. 13, at 8:30
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 6, in F major, Op. 68, “Pastoral.”
Hadley.....“Angelus” from the Symphony No. 3 in B-minor, Op. 60.
Tchaikovsky.....Symphony No. 6, in B-minor, “Pathetic,” Op. 74.
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 14, at 3:30
Schumann.....Symphony in B-flat No. 1, Op. 38.
Sibelius.....“Tapiola,” a Tone Poem for Orchestra.
Brahms.....Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

Information concerning tickets may be obtained by writing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

104

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

JUL 13 1938

Berkshire Music Festival Is Now Four Years Old

History Is Interesting Story Of Struggle For Recognition

It was but four years ago the late Dr. Henry Hadley sent an emissary to the Berkshires with the germ of the idea for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. With New England skepticism the idea was noted and studied and finally accepted. Sponsors of the Festival were fortunate in 1934 in obtaining use of the Dan Hanna estate in the Village of Interlaken, in the township of Stockbridge. A shell and some benches were built in the horse show ring at the farm, and in August of that year 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra assembled and presented three concerts under the baton of Dr. Hadley. Approximately 2,000 people attended each concert.

In the fall the Festival was incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts with a broad charter. Dr. Hadley was again engaged to conduct three concerts. In 1935 a larger orchestra and 200 voices of the Berkshire Musical Association, and Rudolph Ganz, pianist, were presented. A tent seating 3,000 persons was erected as rain insurance, and additional benches were built.

At the end of the 1935 concerts the financial deficit of the Festival was made up. A communication was dispatched to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to determine if that orchestra were available. Dr. Koussevitsky, distinguished conductor, was enthusiastic. The orchestra arrived and its triumph in three concerts given at Holmewood on the Stockbridge-Lenox Rd. is now history. There was no deficit this year.

A shift in the scene of the concerts was made in 1936 because of the possibility of a change in ownership in the Hanna farm. Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented "Tanglewood" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival. It was a gift beyond the dreams and expectation of those who had labored three years without the assurance of permanence of the idea nor of a home.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitsky now linked in a family tie to the Festival, plans were made for six concerts. An improved and larger tent was procured seating 5,000 people. 1937 was memorable in more ways than one. Crowds came from all over the country. More than 50 newspapers and magazines sent representatives. It was broadcasted over a national hook-up. Western Union installed a branch to take care of newspaper copy.

In 1938 improvements in the building were completed, and eventual plans include a permanent floor, stage, etc. These will come when more money has been received.

Six concerts have been scheduled for this year, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13, and 14. With the orchestra will appear the Cecilia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists, The Festival has grown, from a concert hall in a horse show ring, to a tent, to a building seating more than 5,000 in a permanent location. What the future holds, no one knows. But America has demonstrated that it is ready for a great Festival center. Great things are believed in store for "Tanglewood."

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 30 1938

Omnibus

Several other events should be noted among this week's Goes. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass., is rather remote from CUE's usual hunting grounds. But it's a musical Go with a capital "G". Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony, and the whole affair is a happy blending of all that is best in music and all that is best in Back Bay. A New Yorker can get in—if he watches his broad "A's".

The 9th floor Rotunda down at Wanamaker's these days is virtually a slice of the South Seas. A realistic grass roof shelters the Hawaiian Exhibition, which includes the proverbial grass skirts, Hawaiian foods ranging from the succulent papaya to the pasty poi, Hawaiian jewelry made of Koa seeds and cocoanut shells, and other assorted Hawaiiana. Better see it.

Sitting quietly beside your radio isn't, strictly speaking, going anywhere, but the Go department doesn't want you to miss the Mercury Theater players in The 39 Steps. You'll hear them over CBS Mon. Aug. 1st from 9 until 10 p.m. Orson Welles, grand young man of the American Theater, is both narrator and director for the Mercury Theater airplays.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUL 28 1938

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL'S FIRST '38 CONCERT, AUGUST 4

One week from tonight the first concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will take place in the new music shed which has recently been completed at "Tanglewood," the estate given for the concerts, which is located between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky as conductor. Many from this city and the county who attended the concerts last year are planning to do so again this year.

Among those from this vicinity who are subscribers to one or both series of the concerts are: James E. Leath of Kinderhook, who is a boxholder, Mrs. Alfred T. Ogden and Mrs. Paul Judson of Kinderhook, Mrs. Howard U. Herrick, Mrs. Charles P. Hermance and Miss Annah Hermance of Claverack, Mrs. Harry A. Pattison of Livingston, and Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Gerald Bliss, Mrs. Wendover Neefus and Mrs. Homer D. Armstrong of this city.

The final meeting of the advisory board will take place this afternoon on the stage of the music shed at "Tanglewood." Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, president of the board of trustees of the Festival, who recently returned to Stockbridge after several weeks in France and Italy, will preside.

News
Millerton, N.Y.

JUL 28 1938

Festival Opens Next Thursday

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Give Six Concerts

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open next Thursday at "Tanglewood" in the Berkshire Hills, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky. The six concerts this season will be augmented by performances of the Cecilia Chorus and distinguished guests soloists.

Concerts will be given Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 8:30 p. m. and Aug. 7 and 14 at 3:30 p. m.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will deliver four lectures in the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, on Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 p. m.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

B. Herald — July 31/38

THE fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which is the third to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, and the first to take place in the new Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, about a mile west of the center of Lenox, Mass., will begin next Thursday night.

As in the 1937 festival, there will be six concerts, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The evening concerts will begin at 8:30, and the Sunday concerts at 3:30. The programs announced are:

Thursday, August 4—8:30

Assisting artists, the Cecilia Society of Boston (Arthur Fiedler, conductor); Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, basso.

Chorale and first chorus from cantata, "Ein' feste Burg" .... Bach
Orchestra and Chorus
Concerto Grosso, Op. 6, No. 10, in D minor .... Handel
Orchestra
Symphony No. 9, in D minor ... Beethoven
Orchestra, Chorus and Soloists

Saturday, August 6—8:30

Symphony in E flat, No. 99 .... Haydn
La Mer .... Debussy
Symphony No. 1, in E minor .... Sibelius

Sunday, August 7—3:30

Eine kleine Nachtmusik .... Mozart
Symphony No. 4, in E minor .... Brahms
Music for the theater .... Copland
Ma Mere l'Oye .... Ravel
Pines of Rome .... Respighi

Thursday, August 11—8:30

Wagner program: Soloists, Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, basso.

"Die Walkuere," Act I, final scene.
Sieglinde, Miss Hober; Siegmund, Mr. Althouse.
"Siegfried," Act III.
Siegfried, Mr. Althouse; Bruennhilde, Miss Hober; Erda, Miss Kaskas; Wanderer, Mr. Cordon.

Saturday, August 13—8:30

Angelus from Symphony No. 3, Op. 60 .... Hadley
Symphony No. 6, in F (Pastoral) .... Beethoven

Sunday, August 14—3:30

Symphony No. 1, in B flat .... Schumann
Suite from "Lieutenant Kije" .... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, in D major .... Brahms

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give four lectures on the festival programs at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on Thursday and Saturday afternoons, August 4, 6, 11 and 13.

Parking Arrangements

The parking space at Tanglewood has been enlarged. The two large fields bordering West Street in Lenox, on Route 183, will be used for general parking, with several exits and entrances. Volunteers from American Legion posts in Pittsfield, Lenox and Lee will again direct parking.

For patrons and for invalids there will be a separate parking area, entered from Hawthorne Street in Stockbridge. Cars in this area can drive to the Music Shed to discharge passengers. Applications for cards for invalids' chairs should be made to the festival office in Stockbridge. Wheelchairs will be available.

The Music Shed

The Music Shed, whose acoustics have been pronounced perfect by Professor Richard F. Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, covers an acre and a half, and resembles a half open fan in shape. For its construction, it is noted, 308 tons of steel were required. The roof is made of two-inch planks covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. The foundations were built to support a load of 7,500 pounds a square foot. There are 150,000 feet of lumber in the structure. The stage, built of plywood, is thirty-five feet deep, sixty feet across the front and forty-five across the back, and thus slightly larger than the stage of Symphony Hall in Boston. The distance from the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade is 150 feet. A clear view of the stage is promised from every seat in the house. The seating capacity is 5,700.

History of the Festival

The idea of a symphonic festival in the Berkshires was originally suggested by the late Henry Hadley in the spring of 1934. The first festival, of three concerts, was held in August of that year outdoors on the Dan Hanna estate in the village of Interlaken and the township of Stockbridge, with an orchestra of sixty-five Philharmonic-Symphony players under Dr. Hadley's direction.

The festival was incorporated under Massachusetts laws on a non-profit-making basis in the autumn of 1934, with a broadly inclusive charter. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith was elected president, with Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge as honorary president. The present officers of the board of trustees, in addition to Miss Robinson Smith, are Norval H. Busey jr., vice-president; Mrs. George W. Edman, executive vice-president; George W. Edman, clerk; Henry W. Dwight, treasurer; Milton B. Warner, attorney; Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Philip Marshall Brown. William L. Bull, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Laurence R. Connor, Mrs. Carlos M. De Heredia, Mrs. Henry A. Francis, Joseph Franz, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. John B. Lloyd, Mrs. John C. Lynch, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, John F. Noxon jr., Edward S. Rogers, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Albert Spalding and Robert K. Wheeler.

The 1935 festival, also on the Hanna Farm, consisted of three concerts by a specially recruited orchestra under Dr. Hadley's direction. A tent, seating 3,000 persons, was set up to meet the possibility of rain, and proved necessary for the third concert. The gross attendance, slightly more than in 1934, was 7,500. Friends of the festival made up the deficit. It was then decided that the continuance of the series called for the engagement of an existing orchestra as a unit, and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, was consulted. Dr. Koussevitzky was enthusiastic about the idea, and the orchestra came to the Berkshires for three concerts under his direction on the Holmwood estate, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Precautions as to the weather were again taken by the provision of a large tent. Each concert had an audience of 5,000, and there was no deficit. The Hanna Farm was under consideration for the 1937 festival, having been offered for this purpose by its new owner, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, of Cleveland, but, in December, 1936, the owner of the Tanglewood estate, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, presented the estate to the Boston Symphony as a permanent home for the festival. The number of concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky was doubled for the 1937 series, which was held under canvas before audiences representing thirty-two states, Canada and Europe.

A Forward Step

Acoustic conditions were good beyond expectation, but the realization of plans for a building, which had been decided upon as a future step in the festival's development was hastened by the storm which coincided with the Wagner program of August 12, 1937, when the noise of rain and thunder halted the concert temporarily. Dr. Koussevitzky eventually completed the program, but the storm had dramatically set forth the need of a building for the 1938 festival, and $80,000 was raised for this purpose within the next few months. Revised plans for the music shed were approved late last December. Ground was broken on the last day of 1937, and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation began deliveries of steel in March. The eventual completion of the shed, including a permanent floor and stage, will follow the receipt of further funds. The festival management has noted that the success of the institution thus far is due in large measure to efforts by volunteers in the Berkshires and many other parts of the United States.

Inquiries about tickets, lodgings and musical activities in the Berkshire region, in addition to the symphony concerts, should be made to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Other Events in This Region

Several concerts of chamber music will be held in the Berkshire region during the Festival fortnight. The fourth chamber music concert of the South Mountain String Quartet's series in the Temple of Music, South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., will be given today at 4 o'clock, with a program including Ravel's string quartet and violin and piano sonata, played by Kathleen Parlow and Gunnar Johansen, and Courtlandt Palmer's piano quintet. To avoid conflict with the symphony concerts, the next two programs will be given on Friday. Next Friday afternoon the quartet will be heard in Hindemith's quartet in F minor and the Brahms piano quintet, and Miss Parlow and Willem Willeke will play a Handel Passacaglia arranged by Halversen for violin and cello. The program for the following

(Continued on page 7, column 1)

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 26 1938

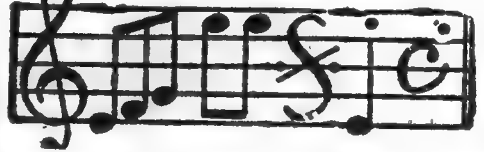
Sunshine Brings Inquiries About Festival Concerts

Requests for tickets and information at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge are in direct proportion to the amount of sunshine. With prolonged wet weather last week, the mail slumped. Today the mail box at the Postoffice was jammed full. It was one of the most encouraging mails this season, with inquiries and orders from Canada, the Middle West and many points in the East.

There was almost a perfect attendance of ushers at the meeting called by Willard M. Sistare for Tanglewood last evening. Instructions for handling the great crowds expected for the Boston Symphony concerts next month were discussed in detail. Mr. Sistare, who is chief usher, will have another meeting with the heads of his departments as soon as all direction signs and entrances are completed.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

July 26/38



For the benefit of music lovers attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," the first two week-ends in August when the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky will be heard in six concerts, Willem Willeke, director of the South Mountain Temple of Music in Pittsfield, has arranged two chamber music concerts. The concerts will be given Friday afternoons, Aug. 5 and Aug. 12, on days when there will be no concerts at "Tanglewood."

Berkshire Festival

(Continued frmo page six)

Friday afternoon, August 12, includes Mozart's quartet in D, Richard Strauss's sonata for cello and piano and Reger's quartet in F minor, Op. 120. There is no admission charge; applications for tickets should be made to Mr Willeke at South Mountain.

In the series of free concerts in the Playhouse Auditorium at Cummington, Mass., the Berkshire Playhouse Trio (Lonny Epstein, piano, Hugo Kortschak, violin, and Emmeran Stoeber, cello) will be heard today at 4 in Mozart's trio in B flat (K. 502); Kodaly's Duo, Op. 7, for violin and cello, and Brahms's piano quartet in G minor. Mr. Kortschak will give a violin recital next Sunday afternoon.

At Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., the Gordon String Quartet will play Beethoven's quartets, Op. 59, No. 1, and Op. 131 today at 4 o'clock. James Friskin, pianist, will be the assisting artist next Sunday afternoon in a program including Daniel Gregory Mason's Quartet on Negro Themes, Brahms's piano quartet in G minor and Boccherini's quartet in A, Op. 33, No. 6. On Sunday, August 14, Beryl Rubinstein will be the pianist in Dvorak's quintet.

During the festival period, the Alexander Bloch String Quartet, at Mr. Bloch's summer school on Route 22, seven miles from Hillsdale, N. Y., will play on Friday evenings instead of Saturday afternoons. The Debussy quartet and a Mozart quartet in G will be played next Friday, and Schubert's quartet in A minor and Beethoven's quartet, Op. 18, No. 3 on August 12. There is no admission fee.

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, "Stage Door" by Edna Ferber and George Kaufman will be given this week, and Rachel Crothers's "Susan and God" in the week of August 8, with Jane Wyatt and Violet Hemming in the respective principal roles.

Lucy Monroe, soprano, will sing the role of Micaela in "Carmen" at Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, tomorrow and Tuesday nights.

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

JUL 13 1938

Berkshire Music Festival Is Now Four Years Old

History Is Interesting Story Of Struggle For Recognition

It was but four years ago the late Dr. Henry Hadley sent an emissary to the Berkshires with the germ of the idea for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. With New England skepticism the idea was noted and studied and finally accepted. Sponsors of the Festival were fortunate in 1934 in obtaining use of the Dan Hanna estate in the Village of Interlaken, in the township of Stockbridge. A shell and some benches were built in the horse show ring at the farm, and in August of that year 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra assembled and presented three concerts under the baton of Dr. Hadley. Approximately 2,000 people attended each concert.

In the fall the Festival was incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts with a broad charter. Dr. Hadley was again engaged to conduct three concerts. In 1935 a larger orchestra and 200 voices of the Berkshire Musical Association, and Rudolph Ganz, pianist, were presented. A tent seating 3,000 persons was erected as rain insurance, and additional benches were built.

At the end of the 1935 concerts the financial deficit of the Festival was made up. A communication was dispatched to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to determine if that orchestra were available. Dr. Koussevitsky, distinguished conductor, was enthusiastic. The orchestra arrived and its triumph in three concerts given at Holmewood on the Stockbridge-Lenox Rd. is now history. There was no deficit this year.

A shift in the scene of the concerts was made in 1936 because of the possibility of a change in ownership in the Hanna farm. Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented "Tanglewood" to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival. It was a gift beyond the dreams and expectation of those who had labored three years without the assurance of permanence of the idea nor of a home.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitsky now linked in a family tie to the Festival, plans were made for six concerts. An improved and larger tent was procured seating 5,000 people. 1937 was memorable in more ways than one. Crowds came from all over the country. More than 50 newspapers and magazines sent representatives. It was broadcasted over a national hook-up. Western Union installed a branch to take care of newspaper copy.

In 1938 improvements in the building were completed, and eventual plans include a permanent floor, stage, etc. These will come when more money has been received.

Six concerts have been scheduled for this year, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13, and 14. With the orchestra will appear the Cecilia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. The Festival has grown, from a concert hall in a horse show ring, to a tent, to a building seating more than 5,000 in a permanent location. What the future holds, no one knows. But America has demonstrated that it is ready for a great Festival center. Great things are believed in store for "Tanglewood."

104

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 30 1938

Omnibus

Several other events should be noted among this week's Goes. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass., is rather remote from CUE's usual hunting grounds. But it's a musical Go with a capital "G". Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony, and the whole affair is a happy blending of all that is best in music and all that is best in Back Bay. A New Yorker can get in—if he watches his broad "A's".

The 9th floor Rotunda down at Wanamaker's these days is virtually a slice of the South Seas. A realistic grass roof shelters the Hawaiian Exhibition, which includes the proverbial grass skirts, Hawaiian foods ranging from the succulent papaya to the pasty poi, Hawaiian jewelry made of Koa seeds and cocoanut shells, and other assorted Hawaiiana. Better see it.

Sitting quietly beside your radio isn't, strictly speaking, going anywhere, but the Go department doesn't want you to miss the Mercury Theater players in The 39 Steps. You'll hear them over CBS Mon. Aug. 1st from 9 until 10 p.m. Orson Welles, grand young man of the American Theater, is both narrator and director for the Mercury Theater airplays.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUL 28 1938

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL'S FIRST '38 CONCERT, AUGUST 4

One week from tonight the first concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will take place in the new music shed which has recently been completed at "Tanglewood," the estate given for the concerts, which is located between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky as conductor. Many from this city and the county who attended the concerts last year are planning to do so again this year.

Among those from this vicinity who are subscribers to one or both series of the concerts are: James E. Leath of Kinderhook, who is a boxholder, Mrs. Alfred T. Ogden and Mrs. Paul Judson of Kinderhook, Mrs. Howard U. Herrick, Mrs. Charles F. Hermance and Miss Annah Hermance of Claverack, Mrs. Harry A. Pattison of Livingston, and Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Gerald Bliss, Mrs. Wendover Neefus and Mrs. Homer D. Armstrong of this city.

The final meeting of the advisory board will take place this afternoon on the stage of the music shed at "Tanglewood." Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, president of the board of trustees of the Festival, who recently returned to Stockbridge after several weeks in France and Italy, will preside.

News
Millerton, N.Y.

JUL 28 1938

Festival Opens Next Thursday

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Give Six Concerts

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open next Thursday at "Tanglewood" in the Berkshire Hills, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky. The six concerts this season will be augmented by performances of the Cecilia Chorus and distinguished guests soloists.

Concerts will be given Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 8:30 p. m. and Aug. 7 and 14 at 3:30 p. m.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will deliver four lectures in the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, on Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 p. m.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

THE fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which is the third to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, and the first to take place in the new Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, about a mile west of the center of Lenox, Mass., will begin next Thursday night.

As in the 1937 festival, there will be six concerts, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The evening concerts will begin at 8:30, and the Sunday concerts at 3:30. The programs announced are:

Thursday, August 4—8:30

Assisting artists, the Cecilia Society of Boston (Arthur Fiedler, conductor); Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, basso.

Chorale and first chorus from cantata, "Ein' feste Burg"	Bach
Orchestra and Chorus
Concerto Grosso, Op. 6, No. 10, in D minor	Handel
Orchestra
Symphony No. 9, in D minor	Beethoven
Orchestra, Chorus and Soloists

Saturday, August 6—8:30

Symphony in E flat, No. 99	Haydn
La Mer	Debussy
Symphony No. 1, in E minor	Sibelius

Sunday, August 7—3:30

Eine kleine Nachtmusik	Mozart
Symphony No. 4, in E minor	Brahms
Music for the theater	Copland
Ma Mere l'Oye	Ravel
Pines of Rome	Respighi

Thursday, August 11—8:30

Wagner program: Soloists, Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, basso.

"Die Walkuere," Act I, final scene. Sieglinde, Miss Hober; Siegmund, Mr. Althouse.

"Siegfried," Act III. Siegfried, Mr. Althouse; Bruennhilde, Miss Hober; Erda, Miss Kaskas; Wanderer, Mr. Cordon.

Saturday, August 13—8:30

Angelus from Symphony No. 3, Op. 60	Hadley
Symphony No. 6, in F (Pastoral)	Beethoven

Sunday, August 14—3:30

Symphony No. 1, in B flat	Schumann
Suite from "Lieutenant Kije"	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, in D major	Brahms

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give four lectures on the festival programs at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on Thursday and Saturday afternoons, August 4, 6, 11 and 13.

Parking Arrangements

The parking space at Tanglewood has been enlarged. The two large fields bordering West Street in Lenox, on Route 183, will be used for general parking, with several exits and entrances. Volunteers from American Legion posts in Pittsfield, Lenox and Lee will again direct parking.

For patrons and for invalids there will be a separate parking area, entered from Hawthorne Street in Stockbridge. Cars in this area can drive to the Music Shed to discharge passengers. Applications for cards for invalids' chairs should be made to the festival office in Stockbridge. Wheelchairs will be available.

The Music Shed

The Music Shed, whose acoustics have been pronounced perfect by Professor Richard F. Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, covers an acre and a half, and resembles a half open fan in shape. For its construction, it is noted, 308 tons of steel were required. The roof is made of two-inch planks covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. The foundations were built to support a load of 7,500 pounds a square foot. There are 150,000 feet of lumber in the structure. The stage, built of plywood, is thirty-five feet deep, sixty feet across the front and forty-five across the back, and thus slightly larger than the stage of Symphony Hall in Boston. The distance from the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade is 160 feet. A clear view of the stage is promised from every seat in the house. The seating capacity is 5,700.

History of the Festival

The idea of a symphonic festival in the Berkshires was originally suggested by the late Henry Hadley in the spring of 1934. The first festival, of three concerts, was held in August of that year outdoors on the Dan Hanna estate in the village of Interlaken and the township of Stockbridge, with an orchestra of sixty-five Philharmonic-Symphony players under Dr. Hadley's direction.

The festival was incorporated under Massachusetts laws on a non-profit-making basis in the autumn of 1934, with a broadly inclusive charter. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith was elected president, with Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge as honorary president. The present officers of the board of trustees, in addition to Miss Robinson Smith, are Norval H. Busey jr., vice-president; Mrs. George W. Edman, executive vice-president; George W. Edman, clerk; Henry W. Dwight, treasurer; Milton B. Warner, attorney; Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Philip Marshall Brown, William L. Bull, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Laurence R. Connor, Mrs. Carlos M. De Heredia, Mrs. Henry A. Francis, Joseph Franz, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. John B. Lloyd, Mrs. John C. Lynch, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, John F. Noxon jr., Edward S. Rogers, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Albert Spalding and Robert K. Wheeler.

The 1935 festival, also on the Hanna Farm, consisted of three concerts by a specially recruited orchestra under Dr. Hadley's direction. A tent, seating 3,000 persons, was set up to meet the possibility of rain, and proved necessary for the third concert. The gross attendance, slightly more than in 1934, was 7,500. Friends of the festival made up the deficit. It was then decided that the continuance of the series called for the engagement of an existing orchestra as a unit, and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, was consulted. Dr. Koussevitzky was enthusiastic about the idea, and the orchestra came to the Berkshires for three concerts under his direction on the Holmwood estate, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Precautions as to the weather were again taken by the provision of a large tent. Each concert had an audience of 5,000, and there was no deficit. The Hanna Farm was under consideration for the 1937 festival, having been offered for this purpose by its new owner, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, of Cleveland, but, in December, 1936, the owner of the Tanglewood estate, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, presented the estate to the Boston Symphony as a permanent home for the festival. The number of concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky was doubled for the 1937 series, which was held under canvas before audiences representing thirty-two states, Canada and Europe.

A Forward Step

Acoustic conditions were good beyond expectation, but the realization of plans for a building, which had been decided upon as a future step in the festival's development was hastened by the storm which coincided with the Wagner program of August 12, 1937, when the noise of rain and thunder halted the concert temporarily. Dr. Koussevitzky eventually completed the program, but the storm had dramatically set forth the need of a building for the 1938 festival, and $80,000 was raised for this purpose within the next few months. Revised plans for the music shed were approved late last December. Ground was broken on the last day of 1937, and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation began deliveries of steel in March. The eventual completion of the shed, including a permanent floor and stage, will follow the receipt of further funds. The festival management has noted that the success of the institution thus far is due in large measure to efforts by volunteers in the Berkshires and many other parts of the United States.

Inquiries about tickets, lodgings and musical activities in the Berkshire region, in addition to the symphony concerts, should be made to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Other Events in This Region

Several concerts of chamber music will be held in the Berkshire region during the Festival fortnight. The fourth chamber music concert of the South Mountain String Quartet's series in the Temple of Music, South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., will be given today at 4 o'clock, with a program including Ravel's string quartet and violin and piano sonata played by Kathleen Parlow and Gunnar Johansen, and Courtlandt Palmer's piano quintet. To avoid conflict with the symphony concerts, the next two programs will be given on Friday. Next Friday afternoon the quartet will be heard in Hindemith's quartet in F minor and the Brahms piano quintet, and Miss Parlow and Willem Willeke will play a Handel Passacaglia arranged by Halversen for violin and cello. The program for the following

(Continued on page 7, column 1)

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 26 1938

Sunshine Brings Inquiries About Festival Concerts

Requests for tickets and information at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge are in direct proportion to the amount of sunshine. With prolonged wet weather last week, the mail slumped. Today the mail box at the Postoffice was jammed full. It was one of the most encouraging mails this season, with inquiries and orders from Canada, the Middle West and many points in the East.

There was almost a perfect attendance of ushers at the meeting called by Willard M. Sistare for Tanglewood last evening. Instructions for handling the great crowds expected for the Boston Symphony concerts next month were discussed in detail. Mr. Sistare, who is chief usher, will have another meeting with the heads of his departments as soon as all direction signs and entrances are completed.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
July 26/38

For the benefit of music lovers attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," the first two week-ends in August when the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky will be heard in six concerts, Willem Willeke, director of the South Mountain Temple of Music in Pittsfield, has arranged two chamber music concerts. The concerts will be given Friday afternoons, Aug. 5 and Aug. 12, on days when there will be no concerts at "Tanglewood."

Berkshire Festival

(Continued frmo page six)

Friday afternoon, August 12, includes Mozart's quartet in D, Richard Strauss's sonata for cello and piano and Reger's quartet in F minor, Op. 120. There is no admission charge; applications for tickets should be made to Mr. Willeke at South Mountain.

In the series of free concerts in the Playhouse Auditorium at Cummington, Mass., the Berkshire Playhouse Trio (Lonny Epstein, piano; Hugo Kortschak, violin, and Emmeran Stoeber, cello) will be heard today at 4 in Mozart's trio in B flat (K. 502); Kodaly's Duo, Op. 7, for violin and cello, and Brahms's piano quartet in G minor. Mr. Kortschak will give a violin recital next Sunday afternoon.

At Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., the Gordon String Quartet will play Beethoven's quartets, Op. 59, No. 1, and Op. 131 today at 4 o'clock. James Friskin, pianist, will be the assisting artist next Sunday afternoon in a program including Daniel Gregory Mason's Quartet on Negro Themes, Brahms's piano quartet in G minor and Boccherini's quartet in A, Op. 33, No. 6. On Sunday, August 14, Beryl Rubinstein will be the pianist in Dvorak's quintet.

During the festival period, the Alexander Bloch String Quartet, at Mr. Bloch's summer school on Route 22, seven miles from Hillsdale, N. Y., will play on Friday evenings instead of Saturday afternoons. The Debussy quartet and a Mozart quartet in G will be played next Friday, and Schubert's quartet in A minor and Beethoven's quartet, Op. 18, No. 2 on August 12. There is no admission fee.

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, "Stage Door" by Edna Ferber and George Kaufman will be given this week, and Rachel Crothers's "Susan and God" in the week of August 8, with Jane Wyatt and Violet Hemming in the respective principal roles.

Lucy Monroe, soprano, will sing the role of Micaela in "Carmen" at Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, tomorrow and Tuesday nights.

TANGLEWOOD MUSIC SHED

Completed Ahead of Schedule!

BIGGEST BUILDING OF ITS TYPE IN THE WORLD NOW READY FOR BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Well, what of it? That is the way it might seem to you but it means a lot to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., and particularly to Mr. Joseph Franz, Engineer in charge for the Festival. He has extra time to get the equipment installed, the seats in place and attend to the multitude of details without making a last minute rush. Last, but not least, the lawns around the building have ample time to become green before the crowds arrive.

How was it done? Well, that is no secret and we will tell you all about it if you have the patience to read to the last line.

It is the real story behind the building; every construction job has its story and some of them are interesting if not exactly thrilling.

First—a few facts and figures, the building is called the "Tanglewood Music Shed"; is shaped like a huge fan with the stage down at the handle, it will seat 5700 people without the collonades which are 27' wide and extend almost around the building. These collonades will "stand" or seat another 3000 people. There are over 300 tons of steel in the construction. Just why is it called a "Shed"? Frankly, we don't know. You think of a shed as something leaning against the back of the house as a "catchall" and to keep the dog in; but after you walk across the roof of the Music Shed a few times and around the building it seems as tho a better name would be the "Berkshire Square Garden."

The Contractors that completed this job ahead of schedule are Graves & Hemmes, Inc., of Great Barrington and this "Story behind the building" is written by their construction engineer.

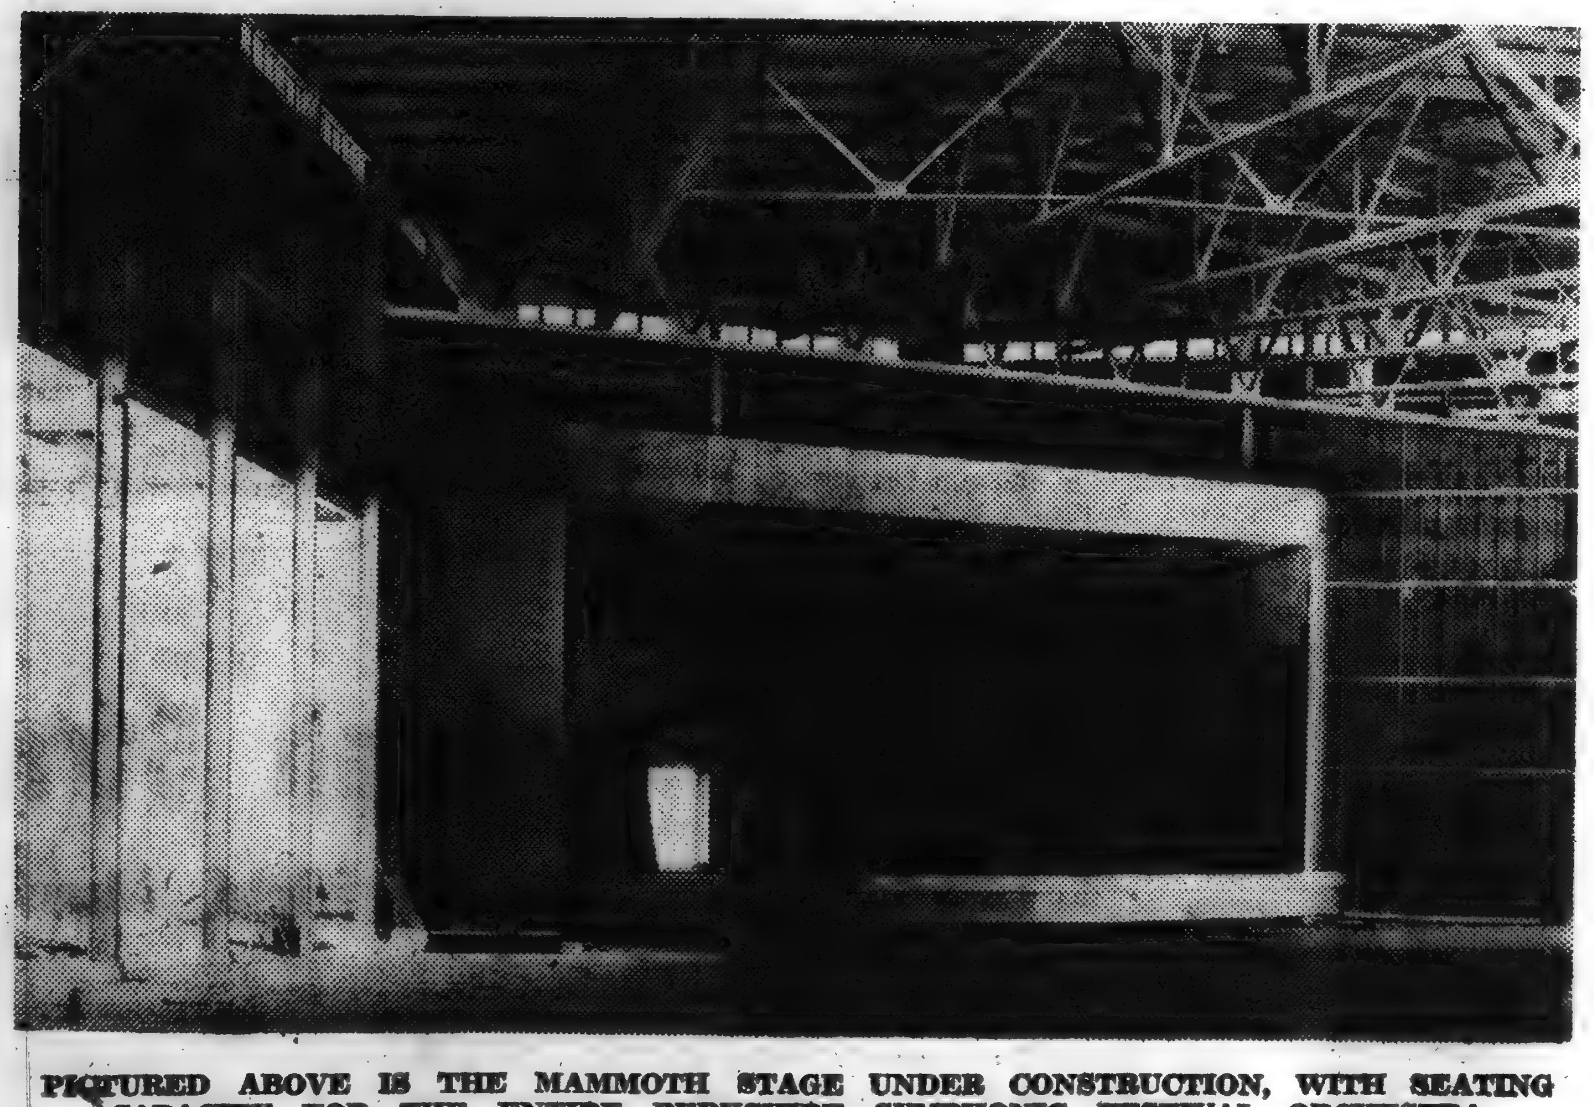
"Within three days after the contract had been let to us in early January every sub-contract had been let and all material purchased even though it might be the last that went into the job. But ahead of all this buying and the first thing done was making the "Progress Schedule," giving the date when each part of the work was to start and the date to be finished. All progress seemed to hinge on "Structural Steel" for after the foundations were in place no other work could be started until the steel arrived. Getting the exact date on "Delivery of Steel" was difficult. Every individual piece of steel had to be detailed, size and location of every rivet hole shown, then everything checked and rechecked before actual fabrication could start. The steel mills were working only part time; add to this the possibility of a "sit down" strike, that seemed to be an epidemic, and you can visualize the difficulties of giving an exact date for delivery.

All materials were purchased with deliveries to maintain the all important "Schedule." Beating the schedule sometimes causes a contractor difficulties on these deliveries, as happened here.

The Douglas Fir was ordered by wire from the Pacific Coast, it had to be sawed from logs, matched and dressed; shipped by boat thru the Panama Canal to Albany and then trucked to the job. When the order was placed we knew the date the boat would leave Puget Sound and approximate date of arrival in Albany. Part of the shipment was 2x4's to be bolted on top of each steel beam to support the roof, and there are 7000 feet of these beams. The Bethlehem Steel Co. beat their date of delivery by ten days, and we knew we couldn't get the 2x4's in time, therefore, it was necessary to send a rush order to Maine for a car of spruce.

Within 24 hours of the signing of the contract, we were digging for the column foundations, 78 of them, some holes were 10 ft. square and 7 ft. deep, in clay and hardpan. When you see the small concrete bevelled caps around the base of each column it is hard to realize that down deep in the ground is a block of concrete over eight feet square weighing 14 tons.

About 15 foundation holes were dug at one time. Every night they had to be filled with hay to keep the bottom from freezing. Then followed the operations of placing forms, reinforcing steel, concrete, and anchor bolts to fasten the steel columns to the concrete. Those anchor bolts had to be set exactly, and most of them were on a curve. Unfortunately our steel tape would only measure straight lines, and to make matters more difficult an allowance had to be made for the expansion and contraction of the steel tape. We found that a point located accurately in the morning with the temperature around zero was way off when checked the next afternoon with the temperature at 45 degrees.



PICTURED ABOVE IS THE MAMMOTH STAGE UNDER CONSTRUCTION, WITH SEATING CAPACITY FOR THE ENTIRE BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL ORCHESTRA

PICTURED ABOVE ARE THE TRUSSES, COLONNADES AND ACOUSTICAL TREATMENT

Mr. Franz and our Superintendent, Mr. Hemmig, worked fifteen days with a transit and steel tape getting these bolts set exactly.

In pouring concrete all materials, sand, stone and water had to be heated and then everything covered up at night to protect from freezing. All excavation and concrete work was completed in 22 days. So carefully had this work been done that no concrete was frozen altho all of the work was done in January, and every steel column fitted exactly.

After the steel arrived in early March, troubles developed thick and fast. After the first three days of hauling the entire site was a sea of mud, not just "slippery" that required chains on trucks, but mud with trucks down to their axles and deeper. With the help of Bulldozers and Cranes, the trucks and trailers were dragged in and unloaded. Some of the trusses were over 90' long and weighed 16 tons. After the steel was unloaded the Bethlehem Steel Co. made a quick erection, which gave us a chance to beat some records. An abundance of electric saws, and drills, with a well organized force of men quickly put the finishing touches to the "Shed."

About the last work to be done was the grading and seeding but it was by no means the least. When you sit in your chair and look down toward the stage it is difficult to realize that before the grading was started you would have been looking up hill to the stage. Just in front of the stage was the highest level on the site. Over six thousand cubic yards of earth had to be moved to make the site look as it does at present. We used "Bulldozers" and "Graders" to do the grading. What is a Bulldozer? Try to imagine one of those Tanks that were used in the World War, mounted on caterpillar treads and with a 60 horse power Diesel engine—the whole machine weighing over 10 tons. In the front of it is a great steel blade that weighs 3 tons. It is an interesting sight to see one of these snorting machines pushing along a small hill of earth. A large boulder or a tree means nothing to a "Bulldozer"—they just have to go along with the earth. After the rough grading was completed the fine grading (to within ½ inch) inside the "Shed" had to be completed by hand and then rolled with a power roller.

Everything completed! Oh, No! What about the grass on the outside? You might think that all we had to do was buy some grass seed and spread it around, but there was more to it than that. The best period for planting had passed. In early August there would be crowds of people walking around the building and an ordinary grass seed that would require a considerable period of time to grow was not enough. We took soil samples, had them analyzed, and put our problem up to a lawn expert. He selected six different kinds of grass seed which after being mixed and sowed, he would guarantee to make a lawn by August. If everything is not green by August, we will blame either the specialist or the elements. However, with all the efforts put forth by all, we should have a beautiful green "carpet" for all to enjoy when the Concerts begin in August.

A great deal of the success of the "Completion ahead of Schedule" is due to our Construction Superintendent, John Hemmig. Every detail of construction was worked out far in advance, labor was distributed to the best advantage, no lost time or motion. In fact he worked too strenuously, and had to take a "forced vacation," under his physician's orders; and another capable Superintendent, Harry Johnson, had the honor of finishing.

We cannot say too much about the co-operation and assistance given us by Mr. Joseph Franz, Engineer. Without his assistance and co-operation we could not have "Completed ahead of Schedule."

There Is a Graves and Hemmes Building Service for Every Building Need

At this time we are constructing a large dairy barn in Connecticut; remodeling a large residence in Stockbridge; and we are figuring a concrete dam, filling stations, mill additions, homes, kitchen remodelling, store alterations, and an insulation job.

Graves and Hemmes, Inc.

105 MAIN STREET General Building Contractors Telephone Great Barrington 57

RECORD

Amherst, Mass

JUL 27 1938

106

Chorus of Hammers at Tanglewood Subsided

First Concert of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug 4

The chorus of hammers has subsided at "Tanglewood." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed, built under the direction of Joseph Franz, engineer and member of the Festival's board of trustees, is finished so far as construction this year is concerned and everything is in readiness for the inaugural of the shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 4 at 8:30 p. m. "Tanglewood" is on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Additional concerts will be given Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 while in nearby Pittsfield Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played at the Festival.

There is no other building in the world like the Festival's shed. Lacking many details that will have to be completed another year, the shed will assure protection from the elements and provide perfect acoustics, according to Prof. Richard F. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology who was the consultant on acoustics.

The shed, shaped like a half-open fan, covers an acre and a half. In it are 308 tons of steel. The roof is made of two inch planks covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. There are 150,000 board feet of lumber in the structure. The foundations were built to withstand a load of 7500 pounds per square foot. This will take care of the maximum snowfall in the Berkshires with something to spare.

The stage, built of plywood, is 35 feet deep. It is 60 feet across the front and 45 across the back, slightly larger than the stage in Symphony Hall in Boston.

From the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade it is about 265 feet from one end of the open fan to the other. Every seat in the house is so located that it commands a clear view of the stage. The shed will seat 5700 people.

Although hotel accommodations in Stockbridge and Lenox are nearly exhausted, there are plenty of accommodations in private homes and in hotels in nearby Pittsfield and Great Barrington. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival invites music lovers who have not yet made reservations for rooms to communicate with the office at Stockbridge.

TUCKAHOE, N. Y.
Eastchester Progress

JUL 28 1938

WESTCHESTER CRITIC COVERS BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

Mr. Andrew Mabley, well-known Westchester music and theatre critic, and writer of a column for this newspaper, is now covering the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

This music festival will have the Boston Symphony, under Koussevutski, playing at all its concerts, which will be held on August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

Mr. Mabley was teaching at the Northwoods School, Lake Placid Club, during the winter months, and just recently returned from a trip through California.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 30 1938

Festival Shed Ready for Opening

THE chorus of hammers has subsided at "Tanglewood." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed, built under the direction of Joseph Franz, engineer and a member of the Festival's board of trustees, is finished so far as construction this year is concerned, and everything is in readiness for the inaugural of the shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky Aug. 4 at 8:30 p. m.

Additional concerts will be given Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, while in nearby Pittsfield Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played at the festival.

There is no other building in the world like the festival's shed. Lacking many details to be completed another year, the shed will assure protection from the elements and provide perfect acoustics, according to Prof. Richard F. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, consultant on acoustics.

The shed, shaped like a half-open fan, covers an acre and a half. In it are 308 tons of steel. The roof is made of two inch plank covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. There are 150,000 board feet of lumber in the structure. The foundations were built to withstand a load of 7,500 pounds to the square foot. This will take care of the maximum snowfall in the Berkshires, with something to spare.

The stage, built of plywood, is 35 feet deep. It is 60 feet across the front and 45 across the back, slightly larger than the stage in Symphony Hall in Boston.

From the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade it is 160 feet. It is about 265 feet from one end of the open fan to the other. Every seat in the house is so located that it commands clear view of the stage. The shed will seat 5,700 people.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

JUL 30 1938

Six concedts by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are scheduled for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which begins August 4th at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewood estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

With the orchestra will appear the Cecelia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. Concerts will be given August 4th, 6th, 7th, 11th, 13th and 14th. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony is conductor.

Since the concert series began in 1934, the festival has been evolving gradually into an institution—typically American—establishing its own traditions with realization that, to merit continued support of a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Immediately after last year's series, the festival trustess enlisted the aid of its many friends and raised more than $80,000 within a few months for a music shed.

Now the building is completed to the point called for by plans for this year. Eventual competion, including a permanent floor and stage, will come when more money is received.

Two years ago Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

B. Sunday Post - July 31/38

BY LANING HUMPHREY

Why can the frail tones of one violin, unaided by electrical amplification, be heard across a distance twice as long as Symphony Hall by 20,000 listeners at the Esplanade concerts, which end their 10th season tonight?

Dr. W. R. Barss of Cambridge, famous sound-scientist, gave the Sunday Post this seemingly queer answer:

"The violin tone carries so far on the Esplanade partly because it is so weak."

That crinkled the brows of the interviewer. The serious face of the noted physicist broke into a genial grin.

"There's an awful lot of psychology in sound-study," he said. "Here's a case in point. "The audience expects to hear beautiful tones when Mr. Elcus rises to play a violin solo. If they see him moving his bow, and can't hear, everybody listens with the greatest intentness. The slightest rustling of clothing and programmes, or shifting of feet on a gravel walk, on the part of 20,000 persons, would have covered up the music. That is what we call 'masking' one sound with another. The cessation of those competing sounds would enable the weak tone of the violin to be heard to a considerable distance by quiet listeners.

Oddities of Sound

"Can you call to mind some particular occasion when you were surprised at the carrying-power of a violin solo?"

"Yes," the reporter answered readily. "I was at the extreme end of the Esplanade concert grounds, just coming out of the refreshment booth. When I heard the violin solo, 'Meditation from Thais,' at that distance, I nearly dropped an ice cream cone."

"Well, if you had been a hundred yards nearer, you might not have heard so well," was Dr. Barss' puzzling comment.

"Back of the refreshment booth were the rear walls of the brick buildings which front Beacon street," he added, as if that explained everything. When the interviewer's face indicated no such result, the acoustics engineer went into detail.

"At a certain point short of the extreme end of the area in front of the acoustic shell, the tone fades, or as we would say, 'attenuates.' Then, as the listener goes farther to the rear, it gains strength again from the reflection of the sound from the brick walls of those Beacon street buildings. Here, you can see the same effect that you heard, in these charts."

Doctor Barss spread out three diagrams. They showed outline drawings of the acoustic shell and the walls of buildings along Embankment Road and the alley to the rear of Beacon street. They were criss-crossed with lines extending like beams from the shell to the walls. Everywhere appeared figures—plain, decimal and fractional, often accompanied by the letters B and db.

Chasing Music

"These are the result of tests by sound-analyzing instruments from inside the shell and out on the grounds. Here is the visualization of the far-carrying effect of the violin which you heard."

With one leg of a compass he traced the course of a line from the shell to a wall on the alley.

"It must be very pleasant to have a private concert so that you can note the sound-effects in these charts," the reporter remarked.

"Oh, but I get the same effects without the music."

The Barss grin was back again.

"Instead of an orchestra I use this little box. It is an oscillator. The instrument puts out sound vibrations which correspond to the number of vibrations per second made by low or high tones of the various musical instruments. The lower the pitch of a tone the more slowly it vibrates. The higher the pitch the faster the vibrations. But in the laboratory we speak of low and high frequency instead of pitch."

So far, the conversation had centered on what happened to sounds after they had got out of the acoustic shell. Only passing mention had been made of the shell itself, for which Dr. Barss was the acoustic consultant, as he now is for the new Edward Hatch Memorial.

Shell Problems

"Of course," he admitted, "the designing of the shell on scientific principles is important. But hardly more so than its location in relation to its surroundings. In itself, it could be as nearly ideal as possible in design and construction, and yet its good qualities could be severly impaired by errors in placement. It might face the buildings on Embankment road at an unfavorable angle, for example."

The interviewer wanted some light on that matter of an unfavorable angle.

"The walls of the buildings reflect sound. The reflections may go into the audience, or back into the shell, or both. At a desirable angle, a certain amount of reflection helps to spread the sound out amongst a large crowd. At a poorly-chosen angle, reflections from walls of the buildings could be directed back into the shell with much concentration, and re-reflected to the buildings. As a result, part of a tune emerging from the shell would become mixed up with the reflections coming back from previous notes of the tune."

"Result, musical hash?" the reporter queried.

"I was going to call it cacophony," Dr. Barss smiled. "But hash will do.

"Now, the calculations worked out on these charts show how to avoid disastrous echoes?"

"As far as possible."

"Which comes first, the sound-chart, or the architect's drawings?"

"First comes a drawing to show the architect's general idea of the form and size of the shell."

"Here's what has taken place in connection with the new Edward Hatch Memorial Shell. First, the architect, Richard Shaw, showed me drawings presenting a generalization of his ideas for the shape and size of the structure. By mathematical calculation, I was able to suggest some alterations in the proportions, which would result in better projection and distribution of musical tone from within it. Next in order was for me to go to the concert grounds with instruments and make tests as far as possible of the behavior of sound as it would be when projected from the size and shape of the shell that is going to be built."

The reporter wanted to know what kinds of instruments were used, and the order of procedure.

Noise Meter Used

"First came work with the noise meter. After the general location was selected for a new concert shell, the first problem was to pick a specific location to avoid as much as possible the competing noises characteristic of the neighborhood. So the existing noise levels were measured. That is, the average noise of auto traffic, elevated trains on the Longfellow bridge, pedestrians following gravel paths, wind in trees and shrubbery, distant railroad trains, and general noise background—or, as we often say, "the voice of the city."

"The noise meter registers directly on a dial the noise level in decibels.

"The intensity, or strength, of noise or of musical tone is measured in 'decibels.' One decibel is approximately the smallest change of intensity the average human ear can appreciate. That is, the smallest sound after silence, or the smallest increase of an existing sound that the average ear can detect.

"The second step to study the general layout of the place—the location of buildings on Embankment road and the alley back of Beacon street, the height and breath of the walls, and the material used. The reflection of sound from these buildings was traced, and the area of the seating oval covered by these reflections was calculated by mathematical formulae. Also, interference effects between the direct and reflected sound were computed.

"Interference, by the way, is not necessarily destructive. If the reflection collides with the direct sound 'in phase'—that is, if the wave of the reflection cups in with the wave of the direct sound—the result will be a tone of greater intensity. Destructive interference results when the wave of the direct sound and that of its reflection describe curves like two cups held mouth to mouth. The outcome will be a tone of lesser intensity than the original. In fact, the original tone might simply disappear.

"Constructive interference causes 'live' spots, destructive interference causes 'dead' spots, which are duly noted on sound-charts.

Any resident of those buildings would be able to see on that chart just how much or how little the walls of his residence work for the good of the Esplanade Concerts. But how were those facts charted?

"For the third step, a study was made of attenuation. You might call that 'fading' of sounds. Attenuation varies with the amount of surface of trees and shrubbery, and according to the nature of the ground. It makes a difference whether the ground is bare or gress-covered, whether it is flat, rolling, sloping, generally convex or concave.

"With the instrument called an 'oscillator,' tones at different 'frequency' or degrees of musical pitch, if you like, were fed through an amplifier and then through a loud speaker. A frequency of 40 cycles, or complete vibrations per second, would correspond to the lowest orchestral tone. That would be the low E of a bass viol. At the other extreme would be 4608 cycles, corresponding to the top note of the piccolo—the highest note in the orchestra.

"What the acoustician is after, basically, is to establish which law of acoustics the place being studied responds to. Theoretically, intensity varies inversely with the square of the distance. That is, with an increase in distance from 200 yards to 400, the amount of sound will be one-fourth what it was before.

"But that theoretical law makes no allowance for reflection and all the other effects we have been discussing. On a practical basis, there are as many laws as places and conditions. Therefore the law of attenuation for any locality should be obtained experimentally. This was done on the Esplanade concert grounds by using the oscillator to set up a sound of known frequency and intensity, and using the sound-meter to measure the intensity at various distances from the oscillator.

"Now that the walls, shrubbery and so on are accounted for, the audience shouldn't be forgotten. I don't mean the audience as listeners, but as a mass of absorbent material in the path of the sound. The area of the audience's bodies, and the material of their clothing both tend to reduce the intensity of sound by their absorbing effects.

"In theory, at least, one reason why the summer concerts are heard to advantage is because of the light material of summer clothing, and its minimum quantity. Suppose it were possible for the same audience of 20,000 listeners in summer attire to reassemble in winter clothing and hear the same programme repeated, the music would be heard less well by the listeners in the rear and on the sides.

"The whimsical thought occurs to me that a feminine audience in old-time voluminous hoopskirts wouldn't hear an Esplanade concert as well as the same audience dressed in present style. The long hair worn by the ladies in hoopskirts would also offer more absorption than the short hair of today's mode."

Reflecting Sound

A glance at a drawing of the new Hatch Memorial Shell reminded the reporter that the discussion had covered the grounds and the audience, but not the shell itself.

"What is the basic principal of scientific design which, for example, in the instance of the present shell, enables half as many musicians as play in Symphony Hall to be heard by eight times the audience there occupying eight times the space of the hall?"

"A sound heard by an audience is no better than the excellence of reflection of the inside of a concert shell. Consequently, the reflecting surfaces must be designed with the greatest of care in order to give maximum reflection, in the proper direction. Inseparable with the object of maximum reflection is consideration of quality of tone. This is dependent upon resonance. Hence, the present shell was lined with wooden reflectors instead of metal ones."

"All clear so far as the search for reflection and resonance are concerned," the interviewer asserted. "But how do you know what proportions, curvature, and so on, to give the shell?"

"Well, to cut a few corners in the explanation, it all amounts to this: From a study of the sound-charts and the audience location, the proper proportions of the width, height and depth of the shell, and the curvature and incline of the reflectors, can be mathematically determined."

In a word, sound may be invisible, but it can be juggled around and measured as handily by an acoustical engineer as a grocer getting out a Saturday order of eatables and drinkables. He can follow the course of a sound as clearly as a fan watching a baseball in a fast game.

The reporter pocketed his well-worn pencil, and Dr. Barss rolled up his charts.

"Well, I've certainly got as much of the story as I can carry away," the interviewer remarked.

"Would you mind one more note?" queried the interviewee.

"Of course not."

"I also enjoy music."

106

RECORD
Amherst, Mass
JUL 27 1938

Chorus of Hammers at Tanglewood Subsided

First Concert of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug 4

The chorus of hammers has subsided at "Tanglewood." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed, built under the direction of Joseph Franz, engineer and member of the Festival's board of trustees, is finished so far as construction this year is concerned and everything is in readiness for the inaugural of the shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky Aug. 4 at 8:30 p. m. "Tanglewood" is on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Additional concerts will be given Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 while in nearby Pittsfield Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played at the Festival.

There is no other building in the world like the Festival's shed. Lacking many details that will have to be completed another year, the shed will assure protection from the elements and provide perfect acoustics, according to Prof. Richard F. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology who was the consultant on acoustics.

The shed, shaped like a half-open fan, covers an acre and a half. In it are 308 tons of steel. The roof is made of two inch planks covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. There are 150,000 board feet of lumber in the structure. The foundations were built to withstand a load of 7500 pounds per square foot. This will take care of the maximum snowfall in the Berkshires with something to spare.

The stage, built of plywood, is 35 feet deep. It is 60 feet across the front and 45 across the back, slightly larger than the stage in Symphony Hall in Boston.

From the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade it is about 265 feet from one end of the open fan to the other. Every seat in the house is so located that it commands a clear view of the stage. The shed will seat 5700 people.

Although hotel accommodations in Stockbridge and Lenox are nearly exhausted, there are plenty of accommodations in private homes and in hotels in nearby Pittsfield and Great Barrington. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival invites music lovers who have not yet made reservations for rooms to communicate with the office at Stockbridge.

TUCKAHOE, N. Y.
Eastchester Progress
JUL 28 1938

WESTCHESTER CRITIC COVERS BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

Mr. Andrew Mabley, well-known Westchester music and theatre critic, and writer of a column for this newspaper, is now covering the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

This music festival will have the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitski, playing at all its concerts, which will be held on August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

Mr. Mabley was teaching at the Northwoods School, Lake Placid Club, during the winter months, and just recently returned from a trip through California.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEW
JUL 30 1938

Festival Shed Ready for Opening

THE chorus of hammers has subsided at "Tanglewood." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed, built under the direction of Joseph Franz, engineer and a member of the Festival's board of trustees, is finished so far as construction this year is concerned, and everything is in readiness for the inaugural of the shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky Aug. 4 at 8:30 p. m.

Additional concerts will be given Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, while in nearby Pittsfield Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played at the festival.

There is no other building in the world like the festival's shed. Lacking many details to be completed another year, the shed will assure protection from the elements and provide perfect acoustics, according to Prof. Richard F. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, consultant on acoustics.

The shed, shaped like a half-open fan, covers an acre and a half. In it are 308 tons of steel. The roof is made of two inch plank covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. There are 150,000 board feet of lumber in the structure. The foundations were built to withstand a load of 7,500 pounds to the square foot. This will take care of the maximum snowfall in the Berkshires, with something to spare.

The stage, built of plywood, is 35 feet deep. It is 60 feet across the front and 45 across the back, slightly larger than the stage in Symphony Hall in Boston.

From the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade it is 160 feet. It is about 265 feet from one end of the open fan to the other. Every seat in the house is so located that it commands clear view of the stage. The shed will seat 5,700 people.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE
JUL 30 1938

Six concedts by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are scheduled for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which begins August 4th at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewood estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

With the orchestra will appear the Cecelia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. Concerts will be given August 4th, 6th, 7th, 11th, 13th and 14th. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony is conductor.

Since the concert series began in 1934, the festival has been evolving gradually into an institution—typically American—establishing its own traditions with realization that, to merit continued support of a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Immediately after last year's series, the festival trustees enlisted the aid of its many friends and raised more than $80,000 within a few months for a music shed.

Now the building is completed to the point called for by plans for this year. Eventual competion, including a permanent floor and stage, will come when more money is received.

Two years ago Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

B. Sunday Post - July 31/38

BY LANING HUMPHREY

Why can the frail tones of one violin, unaided by electrical amplification, be heard across a distance twice as long as Symphony Hall by 20,000 listeners at the Esplanade concerts, which end their 10th season tonight?

Dr. W. R. Barss of Cambridge, famous sound-scientist, gave the Sunday Post this seemingly queer answer:

"The violin tone carries so far on the Esplanade partly because it is so weak."

That crinkled the brows of the interviewer. The serious face of the noted physicist broke into a genial grin.

"There's an awful lot of psychology in sound-study," he said. "Here's a case in point. "The audience expects to hear beautiful tones when Mr. Elcus rises to play a violin solo. If they see him moving his bow, and can't hear, everybody listens with the greatest intentness. The slightest rustling of clothing and programmes, or shifting of feet on a gravel walk, on the part of 20,000 persons, would have covered up the music. That is what we call 'masking' one sound with another. The cessation of those competing sounds would enable the weak tone of the violin to be heard to a considerable distance by quiet listeners.

Oddities of Sound

"Can you call to mind some particular occasion when you were surprised at the carrying-power of a violin solo?"

"Yes," the reporter answered readily. "I was at the extreme end of the Esplanade concert grounds, just coming out of the refreshment booth. When I heard the violin solo, 'Meditation from Thais,' at that distance, I nearly dropped an ice cream cone."

"Well, if you had been a hundred yards nearer, you might not have heard so well," was Dr. Barss' puzzling comment.

"Back of the refreshment booth were the rear walls of the brick buildings which front Beacon street," he added, as if that explained everything. When the interviewer's face indicated no such result, the acoustics engineer went into detail.

"At a certain point short of the extreme end of the area in front of the acoustic shell, the tone fades, or as we would say, 'attenuates.' Then, as the listener goes farther to the rear, it gains strength again from the reflection of the sound from the brick walls of those Beacon street buildings. Here, you can see the same effect that you heard, in these charts."

Doctor Barss spread out three diagrams. They showed outline drawings of the acoustic shell and the walls of buildings along Embankment Road and the alley to the rear of Beacon street. They were crisscrossed with lines extending like beams from the shell to the walls. Everywhere appeared figures—plain, decimal and fractional, often accompanied by the letters B and db.

Chasing Music

"These are the result of tests by sound-analyzing instruments from inside the shell and out on the grounds. Here is the visualization of the far-carrying effect of the violin which you heard."

With one leg of a compass he traced the course of a line from the shell to a wall on the alley.

"It must be very pleasant to have a private concert so that you can note the sound-effects in these charts," the reporter remarked.

"Oh, but I get the same effects without the music."

The Barss grin was back again.

"Instead of an orchestra I use this little box. It is an oscillator. The instrument puts out sound vibrations which correspond to the number of vibrations per second made by low or high tones of the various musical instruments. The lower the pitch of a tone the more slowly it vibrates. The higher the pitch the faster the vibrations. But in the laboratory we speak of low and high frequency instead of pitch."

So far, the conversation had centered on what happened to sounds after they had got out of the acoustic shell. Only passing mention had been made of the shell itself, for which Dr. Barss was the acoustic consultant, as he now is for the new Edward Hatch Memorial.

Shell Problems

"Of course," he admitted, "the designing of the shell on scientific principles is important. But hardly more so than its location in relation to its surroundings. In itself, it could be as nearly ideal as possible in design and construction, and yet its good qualities could be severly impaired by errors in placement. It might face the buildings on Embankment road at an unfavorable angle, for example."

The interviewer wanted some light on that matter of an unfavorable angle.

"The walls of the buildings reflect sound. The reflections may go into the audience, or back into the shell, or both. At a desirable angle, a certain amount of reflection helps to spread the sound out amongst a large crowd. At a poorly-chosen angle, reflections from walls of the buildings could be directed back into the shell with much concentration, and re-reflected to the buildings. As a result, part of a tune emerging from the shell would become mixed up with the reflections coming back from previous notes of the tune."

"Result, musical hash?" the reporter queried.

"I was going to call it cacophony," Dr. Barss smiled. "But hash will do."

"Now, the calculations worked out on these charts show how to avoid disastrous echoes?"

"As far as possible."

"Which comes first, the sound-chart, or the architect's drawings?"

"First comes a drawing to show the architect's general idea of the form and size of the shell."

"Here's what has taken place in connection with the new Edward Hatch Memorial Shell. First, the architect, Richard Shaw, showed me drawings presenting a generalization of his ideas for the shape and size of the structure. By mathematical calculation, I was able to suggest some alterations in the proportions, which would result in better projection and distribution of musical tone from within it. Next in order was for me to go to the concert grounds with instruments and make tests as far as possible of the behavior of sound as it would be when projected from the size and shape of the shell that is going to be built."

The reporter wanted to know what kinds of instruments were used, and the order of procedure.

Noise Meter Used

"First came work with the noise meter. After the general location was selected for a new concert shell, the first problem was to pick a specific location to avoid as much as possible the competing noises characteristic of the neighborhood. So the existing noise levels were measured. That is, the average noise of auto traffic, elevated trains on the Longfellow bridge, pedestrians following gravel paths, wind in trees and shrubbery, distant railroad trains, and general noise background—or, as we often say, 'the voice of the city.'

"The noise meter registers directly on a dial the noise level in decibels.

"The intensity, or strength, of noise or of musical tone is measured in 'decibels.' One decibel is approximately the smallest change of intensity the average human ear can appreciate. That is, the smallest sound after silence, or the smallest increase of an existing sound that the average ear can detect.

"The second step to study the general layout of the place—the location of buildings on Embankment road and the alley back of Beacon street, the height and breath of the walls, and the material used. The reflection of sound from these buildings was traced, and the area of the seating oval covered by these reflections was calculated by mathematical formulae. Also, interference effects between the direct and reflected sound were computed.

"Interference, by the way, is not necessarily destructive. If the reflection collides with the direct sound 'in phase'—that is, if the wave of the reflection cups in with the wave of the direct sound—the result will be a tone of greater intensity. Destructive interference results when the wave of the direct sound and that of its reflection describe curves like two cups held mouth to mouth. The outcome will be a tone of lesser intensity than the original. In fact, the original tone might simply disappear.

"Constructive interference causes 'live' spots, destructive interference causes 'dead' spots, which are duly noted on sound-charts.

Any resident of those buildings would be able to see on that chart just how much or how little the walls of his residence work for the good of the Esplanade Concerts. But how were those facts charted?

"For the third step, a study was made of attenuation. You might call that 'fading' of sounds. Attenuation varies with the amount of surface of trees and shrubbery, and according to the nature of the ground. It makes a difference whether the ground is bare or grass-covered, whether it is flat, rolling, sloping, generally convex or concave.

"With the instrument called an 'oscillator,' tones at different 'frequency' or degrees of musical pitch, if you like, were fed through an amplifier and then through a loud speaker. A frequency of 40 cycles, or complete vibrations per second, would correspond to the lowest orchestral tone. That would be the low E of a bass viol. At the other extreme would be 4608 cycles, corresponding to the top note of the piccolo—the highest note in the orchestra.

"What the acoustician is after, basically, is to establish which law of acoustics the place being studied responds to. Theoretically, intensity varies inversely with the square of the distance. That is, with an increase in distance from 200 yards to 400, the amount of sound will be one-fourth what it was before.

"But that theoretical law makes no allowance for reflection and all the other effects we have been discussing. On a practical basis, there are as many laws as places and conditions. Therefore the law of attenuation for any locality should be obtained experimentally. This was done on the Esplanade concert grounds by using the oscillator to set up a sound of known frequency and intensity, and using the sound-meter to measure the intensity at various distances from the oscillator.

"Now that the walls, shrubbery and so on are accounted for, the audience shouldn't be forgotten. I don't mean the audience as listeners, but as a mass of absorbent material in the path of the sound. The area of the audience's bodies, and the material of their clothing both tend to reduce the intensity of sound by their absorbing effects.

"In theory, at least, one reason why the summer concerts are heard to advantage is because of the light material of summer clothing, and its minimum quantity. Suppose it were possible for the same audience of 20,000 listeners in summer attire to reassemble in winter clothing and hear the same programme repeated, the music would be heard less well by the listeners in the rear and on the sides.

"The whimsical thought occurs to me that a feminine audience in old-time voluminous hoopskirts wouldn't hear an Esplanade concert as well as the same audience dressed in present style. The long hair worn by the ladies in hoopskirts would also offer more absorption than the short hair of today's mode."

Reflecting Sound

A glance at a drawing of the new Hatch Memorial Shell reminded the reporter that the discussion had covered the grounds and the audience, but not the shell itself.

"What is the basic principal of scientific design which, for example, in the instance of the present shell, enables half as many musicians as play in Symphony Hall to be heard by eight times the audience there occupying eight times the space of the hall?"

"A sound heard by an audience is no better than the excellence of reflection of the inside of a concert shell. Consequently, the reflecting surfaces must be designed with the greatest of care in order to give maximum reflection, in the proper direction. Inseparable with the object of maximum reflection is consideration of quality of tone. This is dependent upon resonance. Hence, the present shell was lined with wooden reflectors instead of metal ones."

"All clear so far as the search for reflection and resonance are concerned," the interviewer asserted. "But how do you know what proportions, curvature, and so on, to give the shell?"

"Well, to cut a few corners in the explanation, it all amounts to this: From a study of the sound-charts and the audience location, the proper proportions of the width, height and depth of the shell, and the curvature and incline of the reflectors, can be mathematically determined."

In a word, sound may be invisible, but it can be juggled around and measured as handily by an acoustical engineer as a grocer getting out a Saturday order of eatables and drinkables. He can follow the course of a sound as clearly as a fan watching a baseball in a fast game.

The reporter pocketed his well-worn pencil, and Dr. Barss rolled up his charts.

"Well, I've certainly got as much of the story as I can carry away," the interviewer remarked.

"Would you mind one more note?" queried the interviewee.

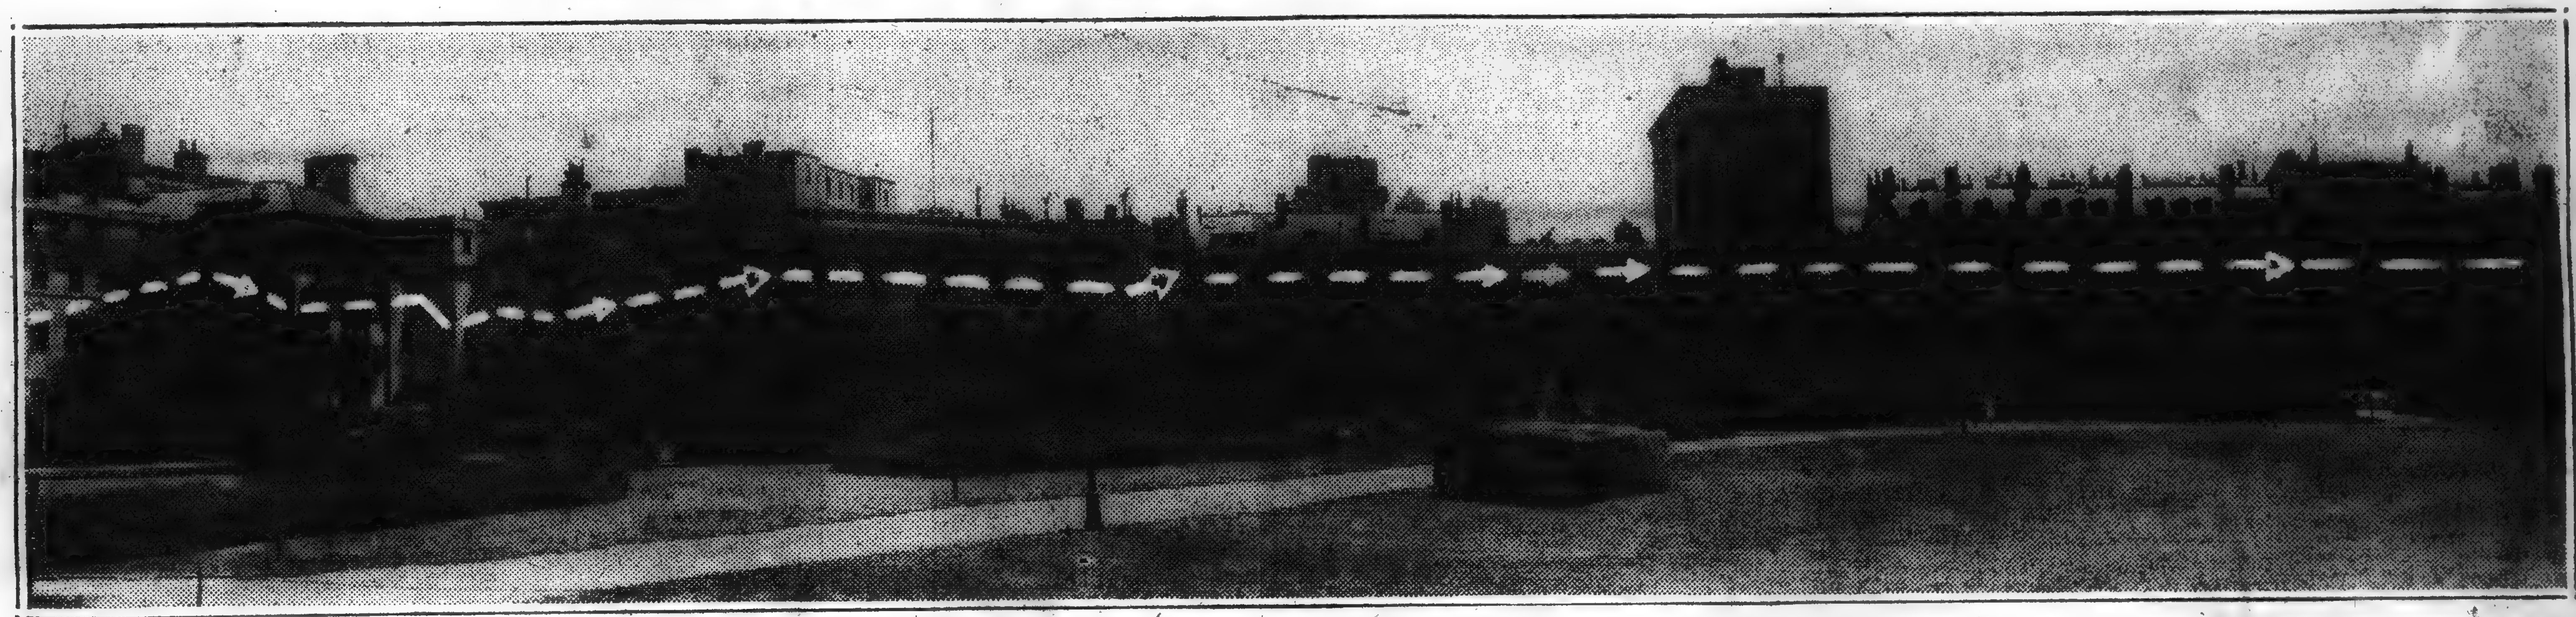
"Of course not."

"I also enjoy music."

Summer Clothes Make Summer Symphonies Gayer

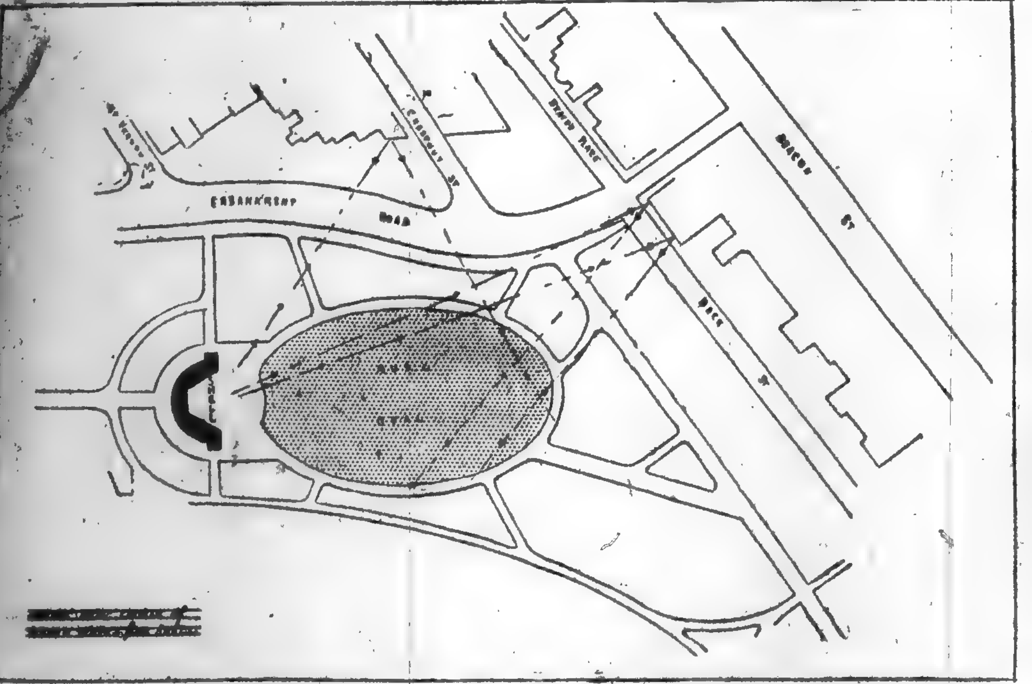
Dr. W. R. Barss, Noted Cambridge Sound-Scientist, Explains How New Edward Hatch Memorial Shell on Esplanade Will Make It Possible for You to Hear Good Music Better Than Ever Before

Dr. W. R. Barss, noted acoustics engineer, notes down the readings on his sound-meter, as he sends out vibrations at different pitch from within the Esplanade concert shell, by means of an oscillator hooked up with amplifying apparatus. When the sounds are reflected back from the distant walls, their intensity is registered on a dial on the sound-meter, at the right.

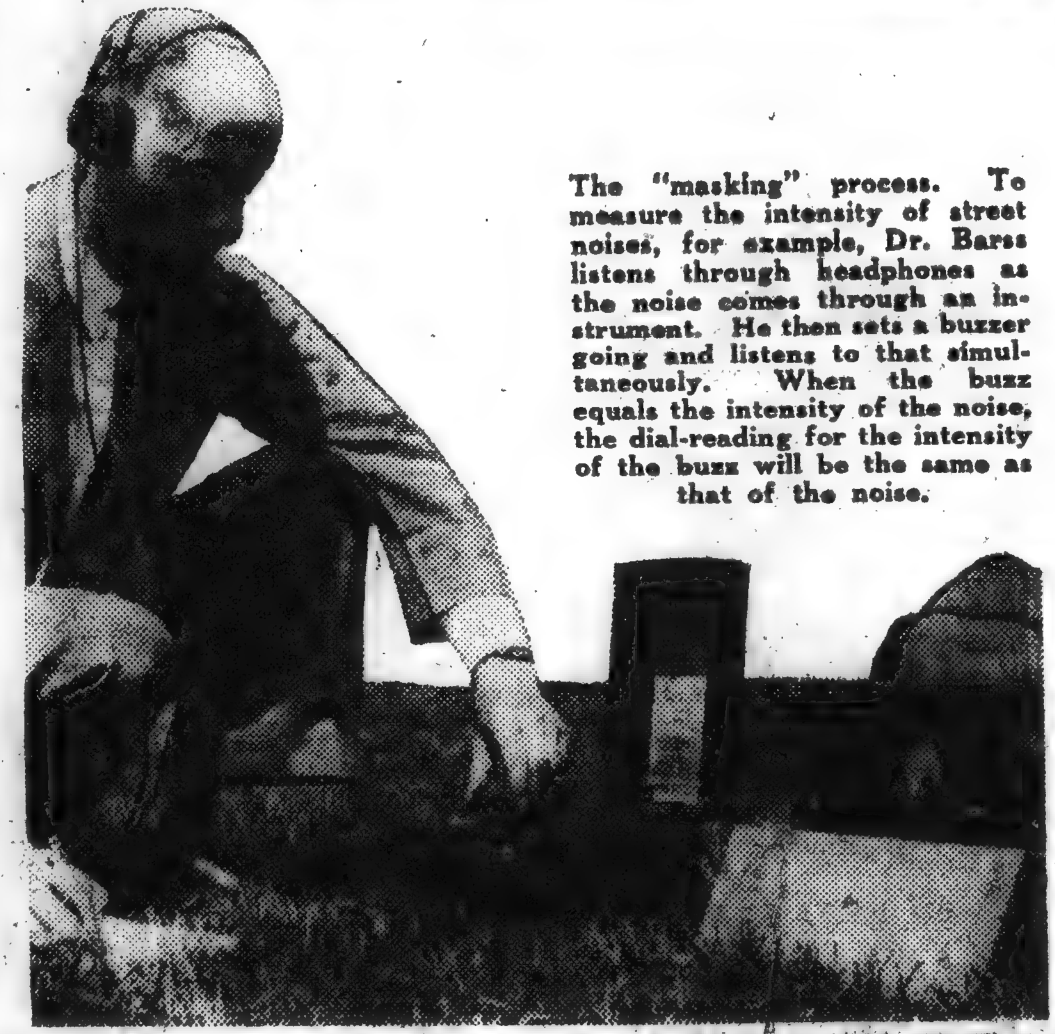


OFF THE GROUNDS, BUT ALL-IMPORTANT

Looking out from the Esplanade concert shell, the observer gets this view. He might easily think of the buildings as being detached from the grounds, because they are across the street—Embankment road on the left, Beacon street far to the rear. But it is the reflection of musical tones from the odd angles and irregular shapes of these walls, which helps the thousands of concert-goers to hear so well. Dotted line emphasizes peculiarities of the lines of buildings.



A simplified version of a portion of one of the sound-charts made by Dr. W. R. Barss for the new Edward Hatch Memorial Shell on the Esplanade concert grounds. (Courtesy of Metropolitan District Commission.)



The "masking" process. To measure the intensity of street noises, for example, Dr. Barss listens through headphones as the noise comes through an instrument. He then sets a buzzer going and listens to that simultaneously. When the buzz equals the intensity of the noise, the dial-reading for the intensity of the buzz will be the same as that of the noise.

Music is music and an Esplanade children's concert is something extra-special, but boys also will be boys. Thus, while the girls here are very good, the boys in the background are finishing a "rassling match"; concert or no.

See story on page opposite

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1938

FINNISH ARTISTS ENTERTAIN

Artists who presented concert last night in Finnish Lutheran Church. Left to right, Mrs. Tauno Hannikainen and Professor Hannikainen of Finland, and Mrs. Olga Mikkonen Gellatly of Quincy, their accompanist.

Prof. Hannikainen Praises American Symphonies

Finnish Artist Tells How Orchestras Are Supported by His Government

Europe recognizes America as having the finest symphony orchestras of the world, Prof. Tauno Hannikainen, cello virtuoso and conductor of the Turku Symphony orchestra of Finland, said yesterday at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Viljo Heiman, 187 Eastern avenue.

Professor Hannikainen presented a concert last night in Finnish Lutheran Church together with his wife, who is an opera singer of renown in Finland.

"Symphony orchestras of America have members who were outstanding concert masters of famous European orchestras Professor Hannikainen," added.

Professor Hannikainen was the guest conductor of the U. S. Navy Band during the Swedish and Finnish tercentenary celebrations at Chester, Pa., and the Boston Symphony Orchestra June 20. He directs the second largest symphony orchestra in Finland consisting of forty pieces. The Helsingfors Symphony Orchestra which is the largest in Finland has 75 members.

The orchestra has given concerts in Berlin, England and Stockholm.

Supported By State

"The major orchestras of Finland are supported by the state" he said. "This is a fine arrangement as members are employed nine months of the year. The remaining three months members have as a vacation on full pay. At the age of 67 they are given a pension."

To join such an organization he said an applicant must be first, a union member; second, he must demonstrate his ability and technique by playing a composition of his own choosing and finally must play a composition which has been selected for him. The required composition must be played while the conductor wields his baton. This demonstrates his ability to keep one eye on the music and the other on the conductor. It also proves his ability at sight-reading, the professor declared.

"How about swing music in Finland?" he was asked.

"We do not have as much swing music as America," he said, "but we have our dance orchestras playing in restaurants and over the radio."

Professor Hannikainen, came from a musical family. His father was P. J. Hannikainen, a professor of music. He was the organizer of the present Helsinki University Chorus, of Finland which appeared in a concert last December in Worcester. He was also the choruses first director. His mother was a singer.

Family of Musicians

A brother, Ilmari, is now a pianist at the Helsingfors Conservatory; another brother, Arvo, a violinist, is concert master of the Helsingfors Symphony Orchestra and a third brother, Vaino, is a harpist in the same orchestra.

Professor Hannikainen began his musical studies at the age of six.

The couple will appear in a concert tonight in Fitchburg and in Quincy tomorrow night. Mrs. Olga Mikkonen Gellatly of Quincy was the accompanist at the concert last night.

News

Colum[illegible] Pa

JUL 30 1938

* * *

JOSE ITURBI, pianist and conductor, has been initiated at Los Angeles into the Spanish honorary fraternity of Sigma Delta Pi. Amparo Iturbu, pianist and sister of the honored guest, as well as various distinguished members of the faculty of the University of Southern California, were present at the dinner in honor of the occasion.

* * *

SIX CONCERTS by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are scheduled for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which begins Aug. 4 at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewodo estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

With the orchestra will appear the Cecilia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. Concerts will be given Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony is conductor.

Since the concert series began in 1924, the festival has been evolving gradually into an institution — typically American—establishing its own traditions with realization that, to merit continued support of a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Immediately after last year's series, the festival trustees enlisted the aid of its many friends and raised more than $80,000 within a few months for a music shed.

Now the building is completed to the point, called for by plans for this year. Eventual completion, including a permanent floor and stage, will come when more money is received.

Two years ago Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 31 1938

THE BERKSHIRES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—In the new fan-shaped music shed at Tanglewood the first concert of the Berkshire Music Festival will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday evening. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be conductor. Other concerts of the first series will be given Saturday evening and next Sunday afternoon.

Funds for the music shed, which cost $82,000, were raised by public subscription under the direction of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. The 1938 budget is $51,000, an increase of $10,000 over last year.

Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, is to give lectures on the symphony programs at Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 P. M.

The first annual Berkshire County Photographic Exhibition is opening today at Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield. Two special art exhibitions and three permanent natural history exhibits are to be opened on Tuesday.

The Edward Parsons Davis memorial best-ball handicap and final matches in the Wyantenuck Country Club golf tournament will be played this afternoon at Great Barrington.

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

JUL 30 1938

Mrs. Bray Attends Meeting of Advisors

Mrs. Archie W. Bray attended a meeting of the board of advisors of the Berkshire Festival of Music Association Thursday afternoon on the festival grounds at Tanglewood, Mass. Tea was served on the lawn after the meeting.

The Troy representative, Mrs. Bray, spoke encouragingly of the interest shown in the local area, and says those who have attended this festival of music in other years have formed groups and parties to attend the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the new roof at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, Mass. The festival dates will be Aug. 4 and 6 at 8:30 p.m., Aug. 7 at 3:30 p.m., Aug. 11 and 13 at 3:30 p.m. and Aug. 14 at 3:30 p.m.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 30 1938

Berkshires Music Festival to Be Held In Fan-shaped Shed

New Structure Is Built to Accommodate 5000 at Performance.

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 30.—Preparations have been made for the fifth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, where six concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. There will be two series and the dates are August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

For the first time they will be held in a new fan-shaped music shed costing $82,000, raised by public subscription through the efforts of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., and a group of workers in the organization.

There are seats for 5,000 persons with room for 4,000 more in the promenade. One hundred and forty-three boxes have been sold at $150 each. The festival budget this year is $51,000, an increase of $10,000 over last year. Most of the first-class hotels in Berkshire are booked to capacity for the two weeks.

At the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, will be Mrs. Walter Jennings of Cold Spring Harbor, L. I.; Mrs. Edward Robinson, Mrs. Henry White Cannon of New York, Mrs. Eugene Lentilhon of Paris, Mrs. S. M. Lehman, aunt of Gov. Lehman, and Miss Helen J. Bowman of Tarrytown, N. Y.; Misses Dorothy Fleming and H. Sophie Davis of Bedford, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. John Gordon of Cambridge, Mass.

Many Reservations Made.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky and their niece, Miss Olga Naumoff are to be at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, Lenox. Others who have made reservations at the club are Ernest Dane, treasurer of the orchestra; Mrs. Dane, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Valentine of Scarsdale, Baroness Clemens von Kettler of Florence, Italy; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Blumenthal of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Milton J. Warner of New Haven.

Mrs. William E. S. Griswold of New York, is entertaining a group of twelve friends at the club for the second series.

Among those who will be at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Archibald McDougal, Mr. and Mrs. Julian Olney, Mrs. John Anderson of New York, Mrs. Edwin M. Moore of Bronxville, Mrs. John Parker Holmes, Mrs. Roland Nickerson, Mrs. George M. Davenport, Mrs. Louise Sawyer Metcalf of Boston.

MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

JUL 31 1938

* * *

JOSE ITURBI, pianist and conductor, has been initiated at Los Angeles into the Spanish honorary fraternity of Sigma Delta Pi. Amparo Iturbu, pianist and sister of the honored guest, as well as various distinguished members of the faculty of the University of Southern California, were present at the dinner in honor of the occasion.

* * *

Six concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are scheduled for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which begins August 4 at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewood estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

With the orchestra will appear the Cecilia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. Concerts will be given August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony is conductor.

Since the concert series began in 1934, the festival has been evolving gradually into an institution—typically American—establishing its own traditions with realization that, to merit continued support to a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Immediately after last year's series, the festival trustees enlisted the aid of its many friends and raised more than $80,000 within a few months for a music shed.

Now the building is completed to the point called for by plans for this year. Eventual completion, including a permanent floor and stage, will come when more money is received.

Two years ago Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 29 1938

FESTIVAL BOUND TO BE SUCCESSFUL

Community is Giving Whole-Hearted Support

AT "TANGLEWOOD"

Six Hundred Volunteers Are Offering Their Services for Fifth Season.

If the work of 600 volunteers counts for anything, if the enthusiasm of a community reflects the interest of that community, if painstaking study of minute details ever itself, the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, opening next Thursday evening at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, will be a success.

Everyone works for the Festival for the love of music and because of their belief in what the future has in store for "Tanglewood."

From Maine to California and Canada to Florida there are 70 community chairmen sponsoring the Festival and the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. The average number on community committees is five, making a total of 350 committee members.

The ushering crew, program girls, aides and other assistants, all serving on a voluntary basis under the direction of Willard M. Sistare of Pittsfield, number 135. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield has a crew of 50 members of the American Legion from neighboring towns in charge of parking. Traffic arrangements at the entrances to "Tanglewood" will be in charge of Lieut. William Sullivan of the Massachusetts state police. The women of the Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington will be in charge of the refreshment stand for the third successive year.

Already indications point to a near capacity house for the opening concert when the orchestra will inaugurate the new shed. For tickets and other information, music lovers may write to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

Tickets for the festival may be obtained in this city from Mrs. Shelley W. Potter, the local chairman, or at Apothecary Hall.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 30 1938

Symphonies

SUNDAY.

Stadium concert, New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at 8:30 (WABC):

Overture, "In Bohemia"	Hadley
Symphony No. 1 in B major	Gutman
Concerto for violin and orchestra,	Saint-Saens
American Symphonette No. 2	Gould
Negro rhapsody	Powell
Symphony No. 2 in E minor	Thompson

Perole String Quartet at 12:30 tomorrow over WJZ:

Quartet in C minor, opus 18, No. 4,	Beethoven
Funeral march and scherzo from piano quintet in E flat	Schumann
Canzonetta, opus 44, No. 1	Mendelssohn
Quartet in A major	Dittersdorf

Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, Albert Stoessel conducting, on WEAF tomorrow at 3:

Suite from "Dido and Aeneas"	Purcell
Concerto for violin	Glazounov
Dream pantomime from "Hansel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
Sorcerer's Apprentice	Dukas

Columbia Broadcasting Symphony, Howard Barlow conducting, tomorrow afternoon at 3 over WABC:

Concerto for two violins	Bach
Symphony in G major, No. 88	Haydn
Theme in Yellow	Sowerby

THURSDAY.

Toronto Promenade Symphony Orchestra on WEAF at 9, with Dr. Frank Simon conducting:

Sakuntala Overture	Goldmark
Carnival in Paris	Svendsen
Piano concerto in A minor	Grieg
Cortege from "Mlada"	Rimsky-Korsakoff

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday night at 8:30 during a broadcast over WJZ from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

109

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 31 1938

Symphonic Festival In the Berkshires

Boston Symphony, Directed by Dr Koussevitzky, to Give Its Fifth Series Starting Thursday Night—Arrangement of the Programs and Contemporary Composers—List of Selections and Remarks

By BENJAMIN BUXTON

The programs to be offered during the fifth Berkshire Symphonic festival during the next two weekends by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, encompass the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, with accent on the 19th, and are wider in scope than any previous series presented by this enterprising organization. Anyone who attends each of the six concerts, in fact, will have opportunity to gather together some of the tagends of his appreciation and understanding, and sense, in concentrated form, the quality of all symphonic music.

The directors of the festival and Dr Serge Koussevitzky, have thus far not seen fit to build the programs along experimental lines, although there will be, during the coming series a small scattering of contemporary music. This, for the time being, at least, may be wise, yet it is probable that the festival, being as young as growing as it is, will later branch out and select works by little known and struggling composers. The brief history of the festival indicates a desire for experiment and change; the history of Dr Koussevitzky as leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, indicates a courageous pushing forward toward new things, so it seems inevitable that in the future there will not only be a larger number of programs, but a greater emphasis placed on contemporary works.

While six concerts appear to be a great number, it is after all impossible to include samples of all types of music, so it is natural that the most familiar and most easily understandable should have first place while the festival makes its plans for the coming years. Later there will be ample time to cast about in the growing literature of modern music, both European and American, to broaden still more the scope of the festival and to give it a still wider significance. If, later on, a school for orchestral conductors is established in the Berkshires, it is not too much to hope that composers themselves will not be neglected.

20th Century Composers

Of the seven 20th century composers selected, three are alive: Sibelius, Copland and Prokofieff. The others—Debussy, Ravel and Respighi,—have already taken their individual places in the hall of fame, and Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival, who will be represented on the Saturday night program, August 13, is remembered as an American composer of substantial gifts. Aaron Copland is the only living American to be included in any of the programs.

The first concert, Thursday night, will include music by Bach, Handel and Beethoven. The latter's Ninth symphony will highlight the program, with the St Cecelia society of Boston singing the choral part in the final movement. Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Paul Althouse, tenor; Anna Kaskas, contralto, and Norman Cordon, basso, will be the soloists. Considering the great number of performers and the severe classical outline of the program, it will be in every way the most impressive to be presented by the festival during its four years of existence. Beethoven's Ninth is seldom heard outside of the great music centers, and while it is not one of the most popular of his symphonies, it has a unique place in the literature of music. Being performed at the festival, it has a special meaning because of the text, Schiller's "Ode to Joy," which Dr Koussevitzky is said to have selected as "an answer to troubled conditions in Europe." Bach's chorale from the cantata, "Ein Feste Burg is unser Gott," will open the concert, and Handel's Concerto Grosso in D-minor will precede the symphony.

The Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts will probably offer the widest variety of period and contrast in the entire series. Saturday night, Haydn's D-flat symphony, Debussy's "La Mer," and the Sibelius First symphony will comprise a program that is typical of the Boston orchestra's selections. Dr Koussevitzky has long been know as a champion of Sibelius, the Finnish composer whose works are becoming increasingly popular, and is regarded as one of his most capable interpreters. The Second symphony introduced festival audiences to Sibelius two years ago. The Debussy symphonic sketches are more or less familiar to concert audiences, and the Haydn, which will open the program, will offer its refreshing message.

The first Sunday afternoon concert will open with Mozart's serenade for string orchestra, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," a short work in three move- Symphony in E-minor, No 4 Op 98. Copland's "Music for the Theater," Ravel's "Mother Goose," suite, five childrens pieces, and Respighi's symphonic poem, "The Pines of Rome," will comprise the second half of the concert. In this program, music of the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, has been placed in striking juxtaposition, with classicism and neoclassicism holding the first half and the free modern style the second half.

The Second Series

The opening concert of the second series, Thursday night, August 11, will consist of a miniature Wagnerian festival, with an act each from two of the "Ring" music dramas, "Die Walkuere," and "Siegfried," given in concert form. In the first act of 'Die Walkuere," Sieglinde will be sung by Beale Hober, soprano, and Siegmund by Paul Althouse, tenor. The third act from "Siegfried," will feature the following cast: The Wanderer, Norman Cordon; Erda, Anna Kaskas; Siegfried, Paul Althouse, and Bruennhilde, Beale Hober.

The Saturday night concert, August 13, will be purely symphonic in character, opening with the "Angelus," (andante tranquillo) from the Symphony No 3 in B-minor, Op 60, by Henry Hadley. The rest of the program will be devoted to two famous Sixth symphonies—those of Beethoven, the "Pastoral," and of Tschaikowsky, the "Pathetique."

The concluding program will consist of Schumann's B-flat Symphony No 1, and Brahms's Second symphony in D-major. By way of modernism, Prokofieff's "Lieut Kije," an orchestral suite, will be played.

In glancing over these lists, and comparing them with the lists presented at New York or Boston during the regular winter season, it is pleasant to note that a high standard of excellence is maintained in program building. A writer in a current magazine, complaining of music in the summer, stated that outdoor concerts suffer from poor selection and reduced symphony orchestras. Symphonic music, he said, is only for the concert hall, and the repertoire is usually of the "pops" variety. He had evidently not seen the above-mentioned programs, or talked with any of the festival directors. He cannot have been aware of the infinite pains that have gone into the construction of the new music shed which has been built as a permanent home for the orchestra, nor can he have heard of the festival's ambitious plans for the future. The programs have obviously been arranged with as discriminating care as any of the best winter programs, and if by any chance the shed fails to satisfy the directors, it will be reconstructed, in whole or in part, until it gives the service that will be required of it.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.
SUN

JUL 31 1938

Lines And Spaces

By CONSTANCE HERRESHOFF

Friday Concert

Guest conductor on Friday night will be Russell Ames Cook, of Boston, member of Harvard's faculty and director of the "Symphonic Ensemble of Boston," a chamber music ensemble composed only of players from the Boston Symphony. Mr. Cook also conducts the Portland (Maine) Symphony Orchestra.

Lyell Barbour, who has appeared as piano soloist with various major symphony orchestras in this country and in Europe, will be Friday night's soloist in Chopin's F minor Piano Concerto. Mr. Cook will direct the following orchestral numbers: Overture, "The Secret Marriage" (Cimarosa); "Water Music" (Handel); "Italian Symphony" (Mendelsohn); "St. Paul Suite" (Holst); "Vorspiel" to "Die Meistersinger" (Wagner).

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT

JUL 31 1938

Music Festival Arranged for Unusual 'Shed'

Berkshire Symphonic Event at Tanglewood to Begin Thursday

Stockbridge, Mass., July 30.—(AP) More than 30,000 persons will listen, it is expected, to six of the finest summer concerts in the East in the "Music Shed" of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between this village and Lenox.

Though incomplete in some details, the unusual "shed" will be ready by next Thursday to seat 5,700 persons at the first concert, the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony and the same city's Cecilia Society Chorus of 110 voices.

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony just as its audiences in Symphony Hall hear it all winter, and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

Both Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival board, president of which is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, have consistently refused to play more concerts than can be rehearsed carefully.

Although the festivals of two weeks' duration, there are only six concerts, each prepared as carefully as it would be in the winter.

The local organization is a model for such affairs. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer. Around 600 persons share the work, and the idea is so popular there are actually waiting lists for some posts—ushers, for example.

The new shed covers an acre and a half of the estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston symphony as a home for its festival. It is shaped like a half-opened fan, with the 60-foot stage at the handle end, and a deep colonnade surrounding the whole.

The roof has been made of two-inch planking, insulated with a layer of felt so that the sound of showers will not disrupt programs as it has in the past. Eventually sliding shutters will be provided at the side, so that wind also can be shut out.

From Dr. Koussevitzky's podium to the last row of seats the depth is 160 feet, and it is 265 feet across the wide end of the fan. Only three posts were needed at the center, so that all seats command a clear view of the stage.

The six audiences will be, festival officials feel, among the most cosmopolitan ever assembled for a similar event in America. Ticket holders already represent most of the states, and a number of foreign countries, and the advance interest has been so great that on some days since the shed was opened for inspection as many as 1,500 people have visited it.

The festival opens Thursday, with the five remaining programs on August 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 31 1938

Symphonic Festival Will Be Broadcast from Berkshires

The opening concert of America's outstanding Summer music festival will be brought to NBC's coast-to-coast audience when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates its Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Thursday, Aug. 4. The complete two-hour program, starting at 8:30 p. m., will be broadcast over the NBC-Blue Network.

Two choruses from Bach's cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, will comprise the program, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will be assisted by Boston's noted Cecilia Society Chorus. The soloists in the final choral movement of the Beethoven symphony will be Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, basso. Olin Downes, distinguished music reviewer for the New York Times, will discuss the Beethoven work during intermission.

The first half of the program will open with the first chorus of the Bach cantata, and close with the famous choral from the same work in the singing of which the audience will be invited to join. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give brief addresses dedicating the new open-air auditorium just completed to house this annual festival.

The auditorium, built on the historic farm where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," nestles beside a lake in the picturesque Berkshires between Stockbridge and Lenox, and accommodates an audience of more than 5,000. The four previous festivals were performed under canvas on Tanglewood Farm, which last year was deeded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent site for this annual Summer series.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 31 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY STARTS BERKSHIRE SERIES THURSDAY

More Than 30,000 Expected to Hear Symphonic Festival Under New Music Shed at Tanglewood

Stockbridge, July 30—(AP)—More than 30,000 persons will listen, it is expected, to six of the finest summer concerts in the East in the "music shed" of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between this village and Lenox.

Though incomplete in some details, the unusual "shed" will be ready by next Thursday to seat 5700 persons at the first concert, the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony and the same city's Cecilia society chorus of 110 voices.

Six Concerts

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony just as its audiences in Symphony hall hear it all winter, and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

Both Dr Koussevitzky and the festival board, president of which is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, have consistently refused to play more concerts than can be rehearsed carefully. Although the festivals are of two weeks' duration, there are only six concerts, each prepared as carefully as it would be in the winter.

The local organization is a model for such affairs. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer. Around 600 persons share the work, and the idea is so popular there are actually waiting lists for some posts—ushers, for example.

The new shed covers an acre and a half of the estate given by Mrs Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony as a home for its festival. It is shaped like a half-opened fan, with the 60-foot stage at the handle end, and a deep colonnade surrounding the whole.

The roof has been made of two-inch planking, insulated with a layer of felt so that the sound of showers will not disrupt programs as it has in the past. Eventually sliding shutters will be provided at the side, so that wind also can be shut out.

Shed 265 Feet Wide

From Dr Koussevitzky's podium to the last row of seats the depth is 160 feet, and it is 265 feet across the wide end of the fan. Only three posts were needed at the center, so that all seats command a clear view of the stage.

The six audiences will be, festival officials feel, among the most cosmopolitan ever assembled for a similar event in America. Ticketholders already represent most of the states, and a number of foreign countries, and the advance interest has been so great that on some days since the shed was opened for inspection as many as 1500 people have visited it.

The festival opens Thursday, with the five remaining programs on August 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUL 31 1938

OVER 30,000 TO HEAR CONCERTS

Symphonic Festival To Be Held in "Music Shed"

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 30 (AP).—More than 30,000 persons will listen, it is expected, to six of the finest summer concerts in the east in the "music shed" of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between this village and Lenox.

Though incomplete in some details, the unusual "shed" will be ready by next Thursday to seat 5,700 persons at the first concert, the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony and the same city's Cecilia Society chorus of 110 voices.

Boston Symphony

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony just as its audiences in Symphony Hall hear it all winter, and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

Both Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival board, president of which is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, have consistently refused to play more concerts than can be rehearsed carefully.

Although the festivals of two weeks' duration, there are only six concerts, each prepared as carefully as it would be in the winter.

The local organization is a model for such affairs. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer. Around 600 persons share the work, and the idea is so popular there are actually waiting lists for some posts—ushers, for example.

The new shed covers an acre and a half of the estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony as a home for its festival. It is shaped like a half-opened fan, with the 60-foot stage at the handle end, and a deep colonnade surrounding the whole.

Shuts Out Showers

The roof has been made of two-inch planking, insulated with a layer of felt so that the sound of showers will not disrupt programs as it has in the past. Eventually sliding shutters will be provided at the side, so that wind also can be shut out.

From Dr. Koussevitzky's podium to the last row of seats the depth is 160 feet, and it is 265 feet across the wide end of the fan. Only three posts were needed at the center, so that all seats command a clear view of the stage.

The festival opens Thursday, with the five remaining programs on August 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

JUL 31 1938

Boston Symphony Plays Baltimorean's Work

Berkshire Symphonic Festival To Hear "Fleche D'Or" By Edmund Hammerbacher

"Fleche d'Or," an orchestral composition by Edmund Hammerbacher, a Baltimorean who submitted it in the recent New York Philharmonic Society contest, has been selected for performance during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, presenting Mr. Hammerbacher's work, will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

Mr. Hammerbacher's initial recognition as a composer dates back to 1913, when he received second prize in an international contest in which 4,000 musicians were entered. This competition took place at Stuttgart, Germany. Less than ten years later he also carried off honors in a musical competition sponsored by the Chicago North Shore Festival Association in 1922. Baltimoreans heard this composition a short time later when it was played at the Lyric by the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Hammerbacher has written numerous other compositions for orchestra, band and for solo instruments.

110

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
JUL 31 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

THE fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which is the third to be held with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, and the first to take place in the new Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, about a mile west of the center of Lenox, Mass., will begin next Thursday night.

As in the 1937 festival, there will be six concerts, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The evening concerts will begin at 8:30, and the Sunday concerts at 3:30. The programs announced are:

Thursday, August 4—8:30

Assisting artists, the Cecilia Society of Boston (Arthur Fiedler, conductor); Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, basso.

Chorale and first chorus from cantata, "Ein' feste Burg"................Bach
Orchestra and Chorus
Concerto Grosso, Op. 6, No. 10, in D minor..........................Handel
Orchestra
Symphony No. 9, in D minor...Beethoven
Orchestra, Chorus and Soloists

Saturday, August 6—8:30

Symphony in E flat, No. 99.......Haydn
La Mer..........................Debussy
Symphony No. 1, in E minor......Sibelius

Sunday, August 7—3:30

Eine kleine Nachtmusik..........Mozart
Symphony No. 4, in E minor......Brahms
Music for the theater...........Copland
Ma Mere l'Oye...................Ravel
Pines of Rome...................Respighi

Thursday, August 11—8:30

Wagner program: Soloists, Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, basso.

"Die Walkuere," Act I, final scene.
Sieglinde, Miss Hober; Siegmund, Mr. Althouse.
"Siegfried," Act III.
Siegfried, Mr. Althouse; Bruennhilde, Miss Hober; Erda, Miss Kaskas; Wanderer, Mr. Cordon.

Saturday, August 13—8:30

Angelus from Symphony No. 3, Op. 60
Hadley
Symphony No. 6, in F (Pastoral) Beethoven

Sunday, August 14—3:30

Symphony No. 1, in B flat......Schumann
Suite from "Lieutenant Kije"....Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, in D major......Brahms

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will give four lectures on the festival programs at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on Thursday and Saturday afternoons, August 4, 6, 11 and 13.

Parking Arrangements

The parking space at Tanglewood has been enlarged. The two large fields bordering West Street in Lenox, on Route 183, will be used for general parking, with several exits and entrances. Volunteers from American Legion posts in Pittsfield, Lenox and Lee will again direct parking.

For patrons and for invalids there will be a separate parking area, entered from Hawthorne Street in Stockbridge. Cars in this area can drive to the Music Shed to discharge passengers. Applications for cards for invalids' chairs should be made to the festival office in Stockbridge. Wheelchairs will be available.

The Music Shed

The Music Shed, whose acoustics have been pronounced perfect by Professor Richard F. Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, covers an acre and a half, and resembles a half open fan in shape. For its construction, it is noted, 308 tons of steel were required. The roof is made of two-inch planks covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. The foundations were built to support a load of 7,500 pounds a square foot. There are 150,000 feet of lumber in the structure. The stage, built of plywood, is thirty-five feet deep, sixty feet across the front and forty-five across the back, and thus slightly larger than the stage of Symphony Hall in Boston. The distance from the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade is 150 feet. A clear view of the stage is promised from every seat in the house. The seating capacity is 5,700.

History of the Festival

The idea of a symphonic festival in the Berkshires was originally suggested by the late Henry Hadley in the spring of 1934. The first festival, of three concerts, was held in August of that year outdoors on the Dan Hanna estate in the village of Interlaken and the township of Stockbridge, with an orchestra of sixty-five Philharmonic-Symphony players under Dr. Hadley's direction.

The festival was incorporated under Massachusetts laws on a non-profit-making basis in the autumn of 1934, with a broadly inclusive charter. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith was elected president, with Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge as honorary president. The present officers of the board of trustees, in addition to Miss Robinson Smith, are Norval H. Busey jr., vice-president; Mrs. George W. Edman, executive vice-president; George W. Edman, clerk; Henry W. Dwight, treasurer; Milton B. Warner, attorney; Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Philip Marshall Brown, William L. Bull, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Laurence R. Connor, Mrs. Carlos M. De Heredia, Mrs. Henry A. Francis, Joseph Franz, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. John B. Lloyd, Mrs. John C. Lynch, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, John F. Noxon jr., Edward S. Rogers, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Albert Spalding and Robert K. Wheeler.

The 1935 festival, also on the Hanna Farm, consisted of three concerts by a specially recruited orchestra under Dr. Hadley's direction. A tent, seating 3,000 persons, was set up to meet the possibility of rain, and proved necessary for the third concert. The gross attendance, slightly more than in 1934, was 7,500. Friends of the festival made up the deficit. It was then decided that the continuance of the series called for the engagement of an existing orchestra as a unit, and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, was consulted. Dr. Koussevitzky was enthusiastic about the idea, and the orchestra came to the Berkshires for three concerts under his direction on the Holmwood estate, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Precautions as to the weather were again taken by the provision of a large tent. Each concert had an audience of 5,000, and there was no deficit. The Hanna Farm was under consideration for the 1937 festival, having been offered for this purpose by its new owner, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, of Cleveland, but, in December, 1936, the owner of the Tanglewood estate, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, presented the estate to the Boston Symphony as a permanent home for the festival. The number of concerts under Dr. Koussevitzky was doubled for the 1937 series, which was held under canvas before audiences representing thirty-two states, Canada and Europe.

A Forward Step

Acoustic conditions were good beyond expectation, but the realization of plans for a building, which had been decided upon as a future step in the festival's development was hastened by the storm which coincided with the Wagner program of August 12, 1937, when the noise of rain and thunder halted the concert temporarily. Dr. Koussevitzky eventually completed the program, but the storm had dramatically set forth the need of a building for the 1938 festival, and $80,000 was raised for this purpose within the next few months. Revised plans for the music shed were approved late last December. Ground was broken on the last day of 1937, and the Bethlehem Steel Corporation began deliveries of steel in March. The eventual completion of the shed, including a permanent floor and stage, will follow the receipt of further funds. The festival management has noted that the success of the institution thus far is due in large measure to efforts by volunteers in the Berkshires and many other parts of the United States.

Inquiries about tickets, lodgings and musical activities in the Berkshire region, in addition to the symphony concerts, should be made to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Other Events in This Region

Several concerts of chamber music will be held in the Berkshire region during the Festival fortnight. The fourth chamber music concert of the South Mountain String Quartet's series in the Temple of Music, South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., will be given today at 4 o'clock, with a program including Ravel's string quartet and violin and piano sonata, played by Kathleen Parlow and Gunnar Johansen, and Courtlandt Palmer's piano quintet. To avoid conflict with the symphony concerts, the next two programs will be given on Friday. Next Friday afternoon the quartet will be heard in Hindemith's quartet in F minor and the Brahms piano quintet, and Miss Parlow and Willem Willeke will play a Handel Passacaglia arranged by Halversen for violin and cello. The program for the following Friday afternoon, August 12, includes Mozart's quartet in D, Richard Strauss's sonata for cello and piano and Reger's quartet in F minor, Op. 120. There is no admission charge; applications for tickets should be made to Mr. Willeke at South Mountain.

In the series of free concerts in the Playhouse Auditorium at Cummington, Mass., the Berkshire Playhouse Trio (Lonny Epstein, piano; Hugo Kortschak, violin, and Emmeran Stoeber, cello) will be heard today at 4 in Mozart's trio in B flat (K. 502); Kodaly's Duo, Op. 7, for violin and cello, and Brahms's piano quartet in G minor. Mr. Kortschak will give a violin recital next Sunday afternoon.

At Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., the Gordon String Quartet will play Beethoven's quartets, Op. 59, No. 1, and Op. 131 today at 4 o'clock. James Friskin, pianist, will be the assisting artist next Sunday afternoon in a program including Daniel Gregory Mason's Quartet on Negro Themes, Brahms's piano quartet in G minor and Boccherini's quartet in A, Op. 33, No. 6. On Sunday, August 14, Beryl Rubinstein will be the pianist in Dvorak's quintet.

During the festival period, the Alexander Bloch String Quartet, at Mr. Bloch's summer school on Route 22, seven miles from Hillsdale, N. Y., will play on Friday evenings instead of Saturday afternoons. The Debussy quartet and a Mozart quartet in G will be played next Friday, and Schubert's quartet in A minor and Beethoven's quartet, Op. 18, No. 3 on August 12. There is no admission fee.

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, "Stage Door" by Edna Ferber and George Kaufman will be given this week, and Rachel Crothers's "Susan and God" in the week of August 8, with Jane Wyatt and Violet Hemming in the respective principal roles.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
JUL 31 1938

30,000 EXPECTED TO ATTEND BOSTON SYMPHONY FESTIVAL

Six Concerts to Be Given in "Music Shed" at Tanglewood, Mass., Beginning Thursday.

By the Associated Press.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 30.—More than 30,000 persons are expected to attend a summer series of six concerts in the "Music Shed" of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The unusual auditorium will be ready by next Thursday to seat 5700 persons at the first concert, the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony and the Cecilia Society chorus of 110 voices. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is president of the festival board. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer. Some 600 persons share the work.

The new shed covers an acre and a half of the estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony as a home for its festival. It is shaped like a half-opened fan, with the 60-foot stage at the handle end, and a deep colonnade surrounding the whole.

The roof has been made of two-inch planking, insulated with felt so that the sound of showers will not disrupt programs as it has in the past. Eventually sliding shutters will be provided at the side.

From Dr. Koussevitzky's podium to the last row of seats the depth is 160 feet, and it is 265 feet across the wide end of the fan. Only three posts were needed at the center, so that all seats command a clear view of the stage.

The audiences, festival officers say, will be among the most cosmopolitan ever assembled for a similar event in America. Ticket holders represent most of the states and several foreign countries.

Five remaining programs will be given on Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT & LEADER
JUL 31 1938

Catching the Beat In Music World Today

By INA WICKHAM.

THE fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, outstanding in the United States during the month of August, opens on Thursday evening at Tanglewood, Mass. The programs will be presented by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony and the new music shed built at a cost of $100,000 will be used for the first time. The festival is held on the historic farm where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" and is located between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The auditorium seats 5,000 persons and covers an acre and a half of ground. It is surrounded by an arcade 27 feet wide and is open on all sides to the summer air. It is said to be perfect acoustically and has been thoroly tried out and tested by acoustical engineers. The site was once an Indian council ground and an Indian fireplace still stands on the shore.

THE OPENING CONCERT

. . . Thursday evening is of particular interest because the entire program will be broadcast beginning at 6:30 o'clock over the NBC Blue network. Two choruses from Bach's cantata, "Ein Feste Berg Is Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will comprise the program. Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Gordon will be soloists in the choral movement of the symphony.

THE PROGRAM ON

. . . Saturday evening, Aug. 13, will be a memorial to the late Henry Hadley who inaugurated the festival in 1934 as the first step in America's progress as a music festival center. Dr. Hadley was the first conductor of the festival and Mrs. Hadley will be an honored guest at the concert which will open with Hadley's "Angelus" from the Symphony No. 3. Concerts will be presented on Saturday evening, Aug. 6, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 7, Thursday evening, Aug. 11, and the final one on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, will feature Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije."

ANOTHER FESTIVAL

. . . in August will be the second annual symphonic series at Silvermine, Conn. Three "starlight" concerts will be given by the New York Philharmonic Symphony on Aug. 18, 19 and 21 and a children's concert on Saturday, Aug. 20. Eugene Ormandy and Jose Iturbi are conductors for the series and special features will include George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Many improvements have been made for the comfort of the patrons of the Silvermine festival. Additional seats have been placed and a new amplifying system installed in the natural amphitheater which is located on a lake between New Canaan, Conn., and Norwalk. The shell is placed on the opposite shore from the seats.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CHRONICLE
JUL 31 1938

PROKOFIEFF: CONCERTO FOR VIOLIN, ORCHESTRA, G MINOR. Recorded by Jascha Heifetz with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Three 12-inch records in album; $6.50. Victor set No. M-450.

PROKOFIEFF likes the concerto and the concerto likes Prokofieff, and the results to date have been uniformly good. This work, stunningly recorded by Heifetz, is the Russian's second violin concerto, composed three years ago, and is not to be confused with the first concerto, recorded by Szigeti. It has all the distinctive, exciting qualities of Prokofieff at the top of his form—that curious flavor of the grotesque, mysterious and diabolical mingled with ingenuous romantic lyricism. It has Prokofieff's magnificent energy, abruptness and fire, his melodiousness, his love of tunes volcanically tossed up to float for a perilous moment in a seethe of sound that seems to threaten the complete, catastrophic collapse of the entire tonal fabric. It ends with the typical Prokofieff crescendo—that sweeping, onward rush of irresistible force that raises both the hair and the blood pressure and leaves you limp and panting when it suddenly stops. In brief, it is glorious, full blooded stuff, both in the music and the playing.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
JUL 31 1938

Figure Skating Operetta At Lake Placid Will Be Occasion for Entertaining

Special to The Eagle

Lake Placid Club, N. Y., July 30—Many Brooklyn and Long Island people, at this Adirondack resort for the Summer, are planning to entertain in connection with the feature event of the Summer ice season, the seventh annual mid-Summer figure-skating operetta, which will be held at the Olympic Arena in Lake Placid village next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. To be known as "Carnival Merry-go-Round," this year's operetta will prove more interesting than ever to club members and guests due to the fact that Miss Joan Tozzer, the national champion; Miss Eleanor O'Meare, Canadian champion, and other skaters who have been spending the Summer at the club, will take part in the program. Mrs. Lloyd B. Sanderson, the former Miss Ardelle Kloss, of Brooklyn, who also is summering at the club with Mr. Sanderson, their daughter, Miss Mary Duncan Sanderson, and Mrs. Sanderson's sister, Miss Evalyn Kloss, also of Brooklyn, will skake as part of the New York Skating Club girls' four.

Miss Erin O'Brien-Moore, actress, will have the leading role in Noel Coward's "Private Lives," which the Lake Placid Players have chosen for their second presentation of their 1938 season, to be presented by the Players for five nights beginning Tuesday. Dancing will follow the performance on Tuesday night, which is Club night.

On Tuesday evening, in the main clubhouse, Dr. William Starr Myers, of Princeton University will give an informal talk on political and economic trend, while on Wednesday Professor Jean Marius Gelas of Hamilton College will give a talk on fencing. Other events on the club's program for the week includes several concerts by the Lake Placid Club ensemble, which is composed mainly of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bridge tournaments, a picnic for members of the Saddle Club, and motion pictures.

Expected at the club during the week are Mrs. Walter Hammitt and Miss Julia F. Ring of Brooklyn; Mrs. Frank J. Saxe of Flushng, and Mr. and Mrs. William Belden of Bedford Hills.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 31 1938

Baroness Clemens von Kettler of "Villa Gamberaia," Settignano, Florence, Italy, has come over for the music festival and will be at the Berkshire Hunt and County club, Lenox. The baroness is the former Miss Matilda Ledyard of New York city. Mrs William E. S. Griswold of 888 Fifth avenue, New York city, is to be at the club with a party of 12 friends for the second series of concerts. She is the former Miss Evelyn Sloane, daughter of the late John Sloane, who built the magnificent villa, Wyndhurst, now the clubhouse. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Mrs Koussevitzky, with their niece, Miss Olga Naumoff of Paris, have taken a suite at the club for the two weeks. Among others there will be Ernest B. Dane, Jr., treasurer of the orchestra, and Mrs Dane of Chestnut Hill; also Mr and Mrs Irving Valentine of Scarsdale, N. Y.; Mr and Mrs Milton J. Warner of Ne wHaven, Ct.; Mrs Fenelon-Young of Longmeadow.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1938

Six Symphonies Will Comprise Berkshire Fete

The Berkshire Symphonic festival will take place Aug. 4 to 14 at the music shed at Tanglewood, a beautiful estate near Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The festival consists of six concerts, played Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Serge Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony orchestra in all six concerts.

At the opening concert Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and the opening chorus and final chorale from Bach's cantata "Ein' Feste Burg ist Unser Gott" will be sung by the Cecilia society of Boston, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, with Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, and Norman Cordon as soloists. In addition to the Bach and Beethoven works, Handel's Sixth Concerto Grosso in D minor will be played on the first program.

The list for Aug. 6 includes Haydn's Symphony No. 99 in E-flat, Debussy's "La Mer," and the First Symphony by Sibelius. The Aug. 7 matinée offers Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Brahms' Fourth Symphony, "Music for the Theater," by Aaron Copland; the "Mother Goose" suite of Ravel, and Respighi's symphonic poem, "Pines of Rome."

The all-Wagner program, consisting of the final scene of act 1 from "Die Walküre" and act 3 of "Siegfried" will be heard Aug. 11. Soloists are Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass.

On the evening of Aug. 13 the late Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Berkshire festival, will be memorialized by the "Angelus" movement from his Third Symphony in B minor. Other items on the same program are Beethoven's Sixth ["Pastoral"] Symphony and Tschaikowsky's Sixth ["Pathetic"] Symphony.

Two symphonies, the First of Schumann and the Second of Brahms, are found on the closing program, as well as the suite, "Lieutenant Kijé," by Prokofieff, originally composed for a motion picture of that title.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

AUG 2 - 1938

Berkshire Festival To Inaugurate Music Shed Thursday Night

Members of the Cecelia Chorus of Boston will board buses at Symphony Hall Thursday morning and head West for Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, to participate with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky in the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed that evening. Arriving with the chorus will be the soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse, who will also participate in the dedication.

The orchestra will arrive in the Berkshires tomorrow, fresh from new triumphs at the Esplanada in Boston. Members of the chorus have been attending rehearsals with the orchestra in Boston for weeks.

Thursday night's program will begin promptly at 8:30 with the Bach chorus and choral from the cantata, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God." The second half of the program will consist of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony."

Olin Downer, New York critic, will give his first lecture Thursday at 3 p. m., in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield. It will be devoted principally to the music to be played that evening. The concert will be the initial program in the new music shed, funds for which were raised by subscription after a thunderstorm wrecked one of the ten concerts last Summer.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

JUL 31 1938

BERKSHIRE CONCERTS TO DRAW BIG CROWDS

More Than 30,000 Will Listen to Boston Symphony At Tanglewood Festival.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 30.—(AP)—More than 30,000 persons will listen, it is expected, to six of the finest summer concerts in the east in the "music shed" of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between this village and Lenox.

Though incomplete in some details, the unusual "shed" will be ready by next Thursday to seat 5,700 persons at the first concert the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston symphony and the same city's Cecilia society chorus of 110 voices.

The orchestra is the Boston symphony just as its audiences in Symphony hall hear it all winter, and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

Both Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival board, president of which is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, have consistently refused to play more concerts than can be rehearsed carefully.

Although the festivals of two weeks' duration, there are only six concerts, each prepared as carefully as it would be in the winter.

The local organization is a model for such affairs. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer. Around 600 persons share the work, and the idea is so popular there are actually waiting lists for some posts—ushers, for example.

The new shed covers an acre and a half of the estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston symphony as a home for its festival. It is shaped like a half-opened fan, with the 60-foot stage at the handle end, and a deep colonnade surrounding the whole.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR - ENTERPRISE

AUG 1 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Opens Season At Tanglewood on Thursday

The first concert of the season at the Berkshire Festival in Stockbridge, Mass., officially to open "Tanglewood" will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under direction of Serge Koussevitzky, on Thursday. Many music lovers from Poughkeepsie and vicinity will attend the series which is being held two weeks Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13, and 14. The program will begin at 8 o'clock and will include: Chorale from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80, Bach; First Chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80, Bach; Concerto Grosso in D Minor, Op. 6, No. 10, Beethoven and Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125, Beethoven. The Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, will assist, with Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Paul Althouse, tenor; Anna Kaskas, contralto, and Norman Cordon, bass, as soloists.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1938

Cecilia Chorus To Join Festival

One hundred ten members of the Cecilia Chorus of Boston will board buses at Symphony Hall, Boston, Thursday morning and head west for "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., to participate with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky in his inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed that evening.

Arriving with the chorus will be the four soloists, Anna Kaskas, Jeanette Vreeland, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse, who also will participate in the dedication.

The orchestra will arrive in the Berkshires the day before. Members of the chorus have been coming to Boston from widely scattered points for weeks to rehearse with the orchestra for the Festival.

The women members will use the main house with the 200 acres given the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline as a permanent home for the festival. The male members of the chorus will share the tuning room in back of the stage with the orchestra.

Thursday night's program will begin at 8:30 with the Bach chorus and choral from the cantata, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." The second half of the program will consist of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

AUG 1 - 1938

COSMOPOLITAN AUDIENCES TO HEAR CONCERTS

Boston Symphony Will Open Summer Series on Thursday

Stockbridge, Mass. — (AP) — More than 30,000 persons will listen, i is expected, to six of the fine summer concerts in the East i the "Music Shed" of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between this village and Lenox.

Though incomplete in some details, the unusual "shed" will be persons by Thursday to seat 5,700 persons at the first concert, the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony and the same city's Cecilia Society Chorus of 110 voices.

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony just as its audiences in Symphony Hall hear it all winter, and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, regular conductor.

Perfection Is Demanded

Both Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival board, president of which is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, have consistently refused to play more concerts than can be rehearsed carefully.

Although the festival is of two weeks' duration, there are only six concerts, each prepared as carefully as it would be in the winter.

The local organization is a model for such affairs. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer. Around 600 persons share the work, and the idea is so popular there are actually waiting lists for some posts—ushers, for example.

The new shed covers an acre and a half of the estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony as a home for its festival. It is shaped like a half-opened fan, with the 60-foot stage at the handle end, and a deep colonnade surrounding the whole.

Roof Insulated for Noise

The roof has been made of two-inch planking, insulated with a layer of felt so that the sound of showers will not disrupt programs as it has in the past. Eventually sliding shutters will be provided at the side, so that wind also can be shut out.

From Dr. Koussevitzky's podium to the last row of seats the depth is 160 feet, and it is 265 feet across the wide end of the fan. Only three posts were needed at the center, so that all seats command a clear view of the stage.

The six audiences will be, festival officials feel, among the most cosmopolitan ever assembled for a similar event in America. Ticket holders already represent most of the states, and a number of foreign countries, and the advance interest has been so great that on some days the shed was opened for inspection as many as 1,500 persons have visited it.

The festival will open Thursday, with the five remaining programs on Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

AUG 1 - 1938

'MUSIC SHED' DUE TO DRAW 30,000 FOR SYMPHONIES

Boston Orchestra to Offer Six Concerts at Berkshire Festival

(The Associated Press)

Stockbridge, Mass., July 31.—More than 30,000 persons will listen, it is expected, to six of the finest summer concerts in the East in the "music shed" of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between this village and Lenox.

Though incomplete in some details, the unusual "shed" will be ready by next Thursday to seat 5700 persons at the first concert, the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the same city's Cecilia Society chorus of 110 voices.

The orchestra is the Boston Symphony just as its audiences in Symphony Hall hear it all winter, and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

Both Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival board, president of which is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, have consistently refused to play more concerts than can be rehearsed carefully.

Although the festival is of two weeks' duration, there are only six concerts, each prepared as carefully as it would be in the winter.

The local organization is a model for such affairs. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1938

Music House Again at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

With Record and Record-Playing Facilities. Tickets on Sale at the Store Here

The Music House of this city has again been invited by the administration of the Berkshire Symphonic festival to bring its record and record-playing facilities to the Berkshires for the coming festival Aug. 4 through the 14th. The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, will perform a series of six concerts on successive Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The local firm is sharing quarters with the festival administration and ticket office at Stockbridge, and will have displays on the grounds at Tanglewood, where the concerts are to be given under the spacious music shed just completed, and at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield where recorded concerts of the festival programs are being given for music lovers who wish to study the music in advance of presentation by the orchestra. There is also a series of four lectures on the festival music by Olin Downes, distinguished critic of the New York Times. These are given at the Berkshire museum Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3.30 in the afternoon.

Through Miss Dorothy Bement, co-principal of the Northampton School for Girls, chairman of the festival advisory committee for this section, the Music House is acting as ticket headquarters for the festival at their Main street store, and are in daily contact with the Stockbridge office. Reserved and unreserved seats may be arranged for by calling or telephoning there.

DULUTH, MINN.
NEWS TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1938

Big 'Shed' To House Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 30.—(AP)—More than 30,000 persons will listen, it is expected, to six of the finest summer concerts in the East in the "music shed" of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between this village and Lenox.

Though incomplete in some details, the unusual "shed" will be ready by next Thursday to seat 5,700 persons at the first concert, the chief feature of which will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony and the same city's Cecilia society chorus of 110 voices.

The orchesra is the Boston Symphony just as its audience in Symphony hall hear it all winter, and conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, the regular conductor.

Both Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival board, president of which is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, have consistently refused to play more concerts than can be rehearsed carefully.

Although the festivals are of two weeks' duration, there are only six concerts, each prepared as carefully as it would be in the winter.

The local organization is a model for such affairs. The office staff is almost entirely volunteer. Around 600 persons share the work, and the idea is so popular there are actually waiting lists for some posts—ushers, for example.

The new shed covers an acre and a half of the estate given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony as a home for its festival. It is shaped like a half-opened fan, with the 60-foot stage at the handle end, a deep colonnade surrouning the whole.

The roof has been made of two-inch planking, insulated with a layer of felt so that the sound of showers will not disrupt programs as it has in the past. Eventually sliding shutters will be provided at the side, so that wind also can be shut out.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

12

Berkshire Music Fete To Revive Old Custom

Audience, Which it is Estimated Will Fill New Music Shed, Seating 5,700, Will be Invited to Join With Chorus of Cecelia Society of Boston in Singing Bach's Magnificent Hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" With Boston Symphony Orchestra at Opening Thursday Night.

When Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock by playing J. S. Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott", they will be reviewing an old custom.

The audience, which it is estimated will fill the new shed to be inaugurated at this opening concert, will be invited to join with the chorus of the Cecilia Society of Boston in singing this magnificent hymn with the orchestra. Bach composed the music to be sung with the orchestra by the choir and congregation of his church. And now for the first time in many years concert goers will again have an opportunity to participate actively in the singing. The first concert will close with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, and Norman Cordon.

Music Lovers Coming

Music lovers, musicians and many well known people from all parts of America, Canada and even Europe will be on hand for the inaugural of the shed, which has a seating capacity of 5700. Well known people in attendance will include Albert Spalding, eminent violinist; Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large and president of the National Red Cross; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival; Sir Ernest MacMillan, of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra trustees; Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Mrs. Edward Harkness, of New York; Bentley Wirt Warren and Ernest B. Dane, president and treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Miss Alice J. Clapp, of Washington; President Newbold Morris, of the New York City Council; Miss Mabel Choate; Mrs. Alt Rockerfeller Prentice; Owen Johnson; Congressman Allen T. Treadway; Mrs. Charles Sumner Bir and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

New Parking Arrangements

New parking arrangements will b in effect this year. All but thos having boxes and invalids, will us the West street (Lenox-Route 183 entrances. American Legion me under Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre c Pittsfield will direct cars to the larg parking areas available. There is a unloading platform for the convenience of those wishing to use i Boxholders and invalids will be permitted to drive to the southwes corner of the building. Their entrance will be by way of Hawthorn street. Drivers are asked especiall to watch for signs in Lenox an near the Shadowbrook intersectio with Hawthorne street, directin cars to this special entrance. Hawthorne street should be avoided b everyone but boxholders and invalids. The special parking area fo boxholders will be closed at 8.15 an drivers will be asked to drive aroun to the West street entrance and us the area set aside for chauffeur-driven cars.

Persons wishing to come early wi find it possible to obtain refreshments on the grounds at Tanglewood. The women of the Thursda Morning club will be in charge o the refreshment tent west of th shed, and not far from the entranc to the gardens.

All tickets will be removed from the Stockbridge office to the box office at Tanglewood at 6.30 p. m. Thursday evening. Reservations may be made before 6.30 by telephoning Stockbridge 400. After 6.30 reservations may be made by telephoning Lenox 51. They will be held until 8 o'clock.

Among Boxholders

Among boxholders at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival are Norman H. Davis, Mrs. Edward Harkness, Newbold Morris, Bentley W. Warren, Mrs. E. Parmelee Prentice, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Ernest B. Dane, Miss Mabel Choate, Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Owen Johnson, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs. W. E. S. Griswold.

Edward A. Taft, Albert Spalding, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. John S. Newberry, Miss Anna Alexandre, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Heaten Ives Treadway, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Paul D. Cravath, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Giraud Foster, Mrs. Carlos M .de Heredia.

Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Miss Mary Parsons, Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. Norval H. Busey, Jr., Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, Mrs. Edward Davis, Mrs. Stanley Benton, Mrs. Edward A. Jones, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Miss Ellen Bullard, Mrs. David T. Dana, Mrs. William Knapp, Henry B. Sawyer, Mrs. A. D. Budd, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Hoffmann.

Mrs. E. E. Whitney, Mrs. George H. Davenport, Mrs. Evelyn Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Flick, Laurence R. Connor, John Shepard, Jr., Mrs. Harry Adams, M Marshall Bullitt, Mr. and Mrs. La rence K. Miller, Mrs. J. Graham Pa sons, Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet, Alfr Granger, Mrs. Donald Weston, M Gertrude Walker, Mrs. Henry Ivis Parsons.

Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, I and Mrs. Robert Metz, Mrs. Geor O. Rockwood, Mr. and Mrs. Arth H. Lippincott, Daniel England, E ward H. Cranwell, James E. Lea Miss Alice J. Clapp, Mrs. John Waters, Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Do ald Warner, Mrs. Rodney Procter, M and Mrs. Alan M. Limburg, Mrs. Jo A. Topping, Mrs. Frank C. Smit Mrs. Edwards Spencer, David McA pin, Mrs. Walter Jennings, Mrs. Jo C. Breckinridge, and Mrs. Arno Whitridge.

Need Not be Rained Upon at Tanglewood

Fair weather is predicted for the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at 8.30 Thursday evening.

But should it rain at Tanglewood, music lovers need have no apprehension. The Festival management has taken every precaution to assure comfort. First of all, the shed, seating 5,700 people, provides a sound-proof and weather-proof roof. Secondly, a canvass covered walk will be provided through the stately Hawthorne Pines right to the building. It will have a link connecting with the unloading platform at the parking field. Another canopy will extend to the entrance to be used by boxholders.

The festival management once more today urged music lovers to arrive early, to follow the signs and to obey traffic rules to avoid any possible confusion at the parking areas.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 2 - 1938

THE Cecilia chorus, which will participate in the dedication of the new concert shed at "Tanglewood" in Lenox at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic festival Thursday night, held its first joint rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night. The famous chorus of picked singers from the ranks of doctors, lawyers, bankers, housewives and secretaries, will sing in the great ninth or choral symphony of Beethoven. Asked why he chose the ninth symphony for the dedication of the shed, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, said: "The world is so full of strife today that it needs the message of the brotherhood of man, which in the poem of Schiller inspired Beethoven. The message may not go far into the world from little 'Tanglewood.' But we shall have the satisfaction of sending it."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1938

Many Guests Arriving For Festival

Lenox Booth To Be Opened Tomorrow

LENOX, Aug. 2.—This town i preparing for the biggest influx o visitors for the summer season thi week for the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Thursday. Miss Estell Hutchinson and Lester Roberts co-chairmen of the Lenox committee for the festival have about completed their plans for the opening of the festival information boot on the lawn of the Lenox Brotherhood Club tomorrow. Miss Hutchinson will be in charge of a corp of volunteer women who will assis at the booth during the two weeks

The huge banner, stretche across the intersection of the Ne York and Boston roads near Trinity Church, was taken down las week by the local committee an the name of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was added to th 90-foot piece of canvas advertisin the event.

Places Filled

The Curtis Hotel and Berkshires Hunt and Country Club as well a many of the inns and rooming houses in the community are expected to be filled to capacity with guests from all sections of the country during the two weeks of the festival.

Members of the summer colony are planning several dinner parties during the two weeks and many will have house guests during the festival.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitsky with their niece, Miss Olga Naumoff of Paris will be at the Berkshires Hunt.

Others who will be registered there will be Baroness Clemens von Kettler of "Villa Gamberaia," Settignano, Florence Italy. She is the former Miss Matilda Ledyard of New York.

Mrs. William E. S. Griswold of New York, daughter of the late John Sloan, who built the clubhouse, will be at the club with 12 friends for the second series of the concerts.

Among the guests at the Curtis Hotel will be Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, wife of former Governor Fuller of Massachusetts; Mrs. S. M. Lehman, aunt of Governor Herbert Lehman of New York; Mrs. Edward Robinson and Mrs. Henry White Cannon of New York City; Mrs. Walter Jennings of Cold Spring Harbor, L. I.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Musicians Arrive For Berkshire Festival

LENOX — More than 100 musicians and officials of the Boston Symphony orchestra, headed by Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, arrived here today for the opening tomorrow of the fifth annual Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

The festival, a non-commercial affair, consists this year of six concerts and four lectures. This year marks the inaugural of the "music shed," built with funds contributed by music-lovers in all parts of the United States.

Concerts will be given on the evenings of Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 and on the afternoons of Aug. 7 and 14. The 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston and several soloists will appear with the orchestra at the opening concert.

Tanglewood, the permanent site of the festival, was the summer home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the place where he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book" and sketched "Tanglewood Tales."

Photos by The New York Times Studio and Sisson

(Above) 1936—The scene of the concerts has now shifted to "Holmwood," on the Stockbridge-Lenox Road. (Center) 1937—"Under the Big Top," and this year a permanent home, "Tanglewood," has been presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Festival. (Below) 1938—A beautiful new building, seating more than 5,000, in another step in the growth of the Festival, which opens Thursday night.

(Used with article of opposite page dated July 31/38)

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 2 - 1938

Cecelia Chorus Will Come By Busses To Sing At Festival

One hundred and ten members of Cecilia Chorus of Boston will board busses at Symphony Hall Thursday morning and head west for "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge to participate with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed that evening. The distance from Boston to "Tanglewood" is 140 miles.

Arriving at "Tanglewood" with the chorus will be the four soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Norman Cordon, and Paul Althouse, who also will participate in the dedication. The orchestra will arrive in the Berkshires the day before, fresh from new triumphs at the Esplanade in Boston. Members of the chorus have been coming to Boston from widely scattered points for weeks to rehearse with the orchestra for the Festival. The women members will use the main house at "Tanglewood" as headquarters. This house was included with the 200 acres given the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline as a permanent home for the Festival. The male members of the chorus will share the tuning room in back of the stage with the orchestra. The chorus will have dinner on the terrace of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox and be transported the mile and quarter to "Tanglewood" in busses.

Members of the advisory board, whose membership includes representatives from Maine to California and Canada and Florida, were asked to make every effort to reach music lovers in their communities to make sure they are familiar with directions upon approaching "Tanglewood", and to sell subscriptions to help assure success of the event. The meeting was held on the stage of the new shed.

The Festival office again stressed the importance of action if music lovers prefer reserved seats. There are only a few reserved seats left. They are all good, however, because of the unique construction of the auditorium. There are plenty of unreserved seats. If there is an overflow, the unreserved sections will be extended to the colonnades where there are accommodations for 3000. The main part of the shed accommodates 5700.

The Festival office also stressed the desirability of making room reservations and invited those who have not made plans to communicate with the office by telephone, mail, or in persons. The office is located in Stockbridge, telephone 400.

Thursday night's program will begin promptly at 8:30 with the Bach chorus and choral from the cantata, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God". The second half of the program will consist of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Olin Downes, New York critic, will give his first lecture Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield. His first lecture will be devoted principally to the music to be played that evening. Tickets for the lectures may be obtained at the Festival office or by communicating with Mrs. W. Bradford West, 616 West Street, Pittsfield.

VALLEJO, CAL.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1938

Wonder how many Russian singers there are now in America? . . . All's well with the land. Edwin Franko Goldman has again mounted the bandstand in Central Park . . . Blanche Waldo Dewey, cousin of Admiral Dewey, is a composer. Her best known piece is called "Love Shall Decide" . . . The sixtieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra isn't so [illegible] . . . Only really happy kings today are the kings of jazz. So many innkeepers rushing for their services. So many new tones, too, in dance music—harps, oboes, French horns . . . But always the same old smile. The maestros' smiles never change . . . First requisite of a dance band leader is a good set of teeth . . . Frank Black is the music world's foremost collector of antique bronze . . . Fanciest names in the field of entertainment are those of vocal quartets.

• • •

A chief difference between symphony musicians and jazzbos in the studio concert orchestras is that the former ave more work to do. They have o play both Bach and the "St. Louis Blues." The dance band boys re silenced for Bach. The director's hardest task is to see that the jazzbos don't get impatient, start doing hings to Bach.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 31 1938

MUSIC OF THE TIMES: NEWS AND CURRENT COMMENT

A PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE BERKSHIRE
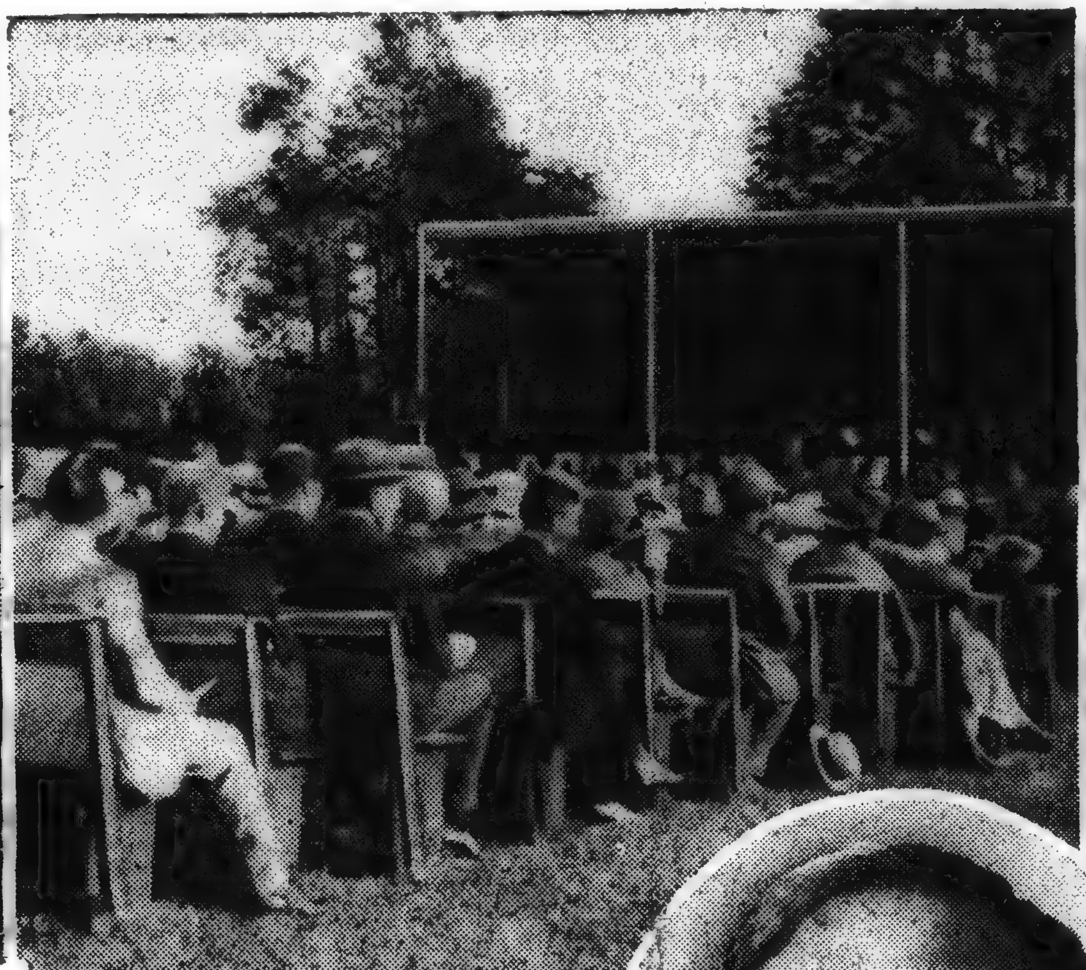
FESTIVAL



David M. Jones, Stockbridge, Mass.

1934—The open paddock on the Hanna Farm, scene of the inaugural concerts. (Right) 1935—Still "Under the Stars," and, as in the previous season, still under the direction of the late Dr. Henry Hadley.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the concerts at Stockbridge since the season 1936.

OPENING CEREMONIES AT STOCKBRIDGE

Significance of Programs Given There—Undertaking Makes Musical History

By OLIN DOWNES

THE opening exercises of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next Thursday night at "Tanglewood," in Stockbridge, Mass., will celebrate the erection of the new music shed which henceforth will shelter the performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its distinguished leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and constitute the permanent home of this festival.

Much has been written about the new edifice, which seats nearly 6,000, with a fan-shaped auditorium and a stage slightly larger than that of Symphony Hall in Boston. It is a stage which could readily be adapted to operatic as well as symphonic performance, and this is appropriate to the nature of the festival, now at the threshold of a new period in its short but brilliant history. For Dr. Koussevitzky's plans for the future of the Berkshire Festival do not stop at short series of symphony concerts. They embrace other kinds of musical and dramatic performance, and a school for advanced musicians and conductors of proved talent. Such concepts designate a festival which is to be part of, and a power in, the cultural life of the nation.

The public support given this festival in recent years justifies such a purpose. Its audiences assemble from all parts of the country. For the past two seasons the concerts have been self-supporting. Not only this: the festival has reached its present status less as the result of a preconceived plan than because of the public demand for its offices.

* * *

No one foresaw the future of what was a comparatively unpretentious project when Dr. Henry Hadley assembled an orchestra of sixty-five players from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony in August of 1934, and gave the three concerts which have proved to be the genesis of the festival of today. In fact the Bekshire Symphonic Festival, with the highest international standards of programs and performances, is a popular undertaking, representative of the nation and its culture. It is of local origin, but of far more than local significance. Its prestige is international, and rightly so. Its Summer performances cultivate the same artistic levels as those of the Winter seasons, so that it is no longer necessary in vacation months for connoisseurs of symphonic performance to go overseas for satisfaction.

The first Berkshire Symphonic Festival attracted from 1,800 to 2,000 patrons to each of its concerts. That festival was given for temporary use the Dan Hanna estate in Interlaken, in the township of Stockbridge. A shell was built in the horse-show ring at the farm, and benches were supplied with the aid of a few hundred dollars of Federal funds. Guarantors met a modest deficit. In the Fall of 1934 the festival was incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts with uncommonly broad provisions: "to encourage education in the arts, to organize, conduct and support an annual musical festival, to provide opportunities for developing musical and artistic talents, to engage in any other activities that will legitimately aid and foster art. There is no capital stock and the corporation is not conducted for the purpose of profit, but to contribute to the development of art and music." (From the by-laws of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc.)

* * *

In the following year the orchestra for the festival, again under Dr. Hadley's direction, was enlarged, and the Berkshire Musical Association of two hundred voices was engaged to augment the instrumental performances. There came also Rudolph Ganz, as piano soloist at one of the concerts. For the open-air arrangements of the first season was now substituted a tent seating 3,000, and this just in time, since at the final concert the horse-show ring and the out-of-door stage formerly patronized were deluged.

This was deluge number one. Sudden thunder showers, even rainy spells, can menace outdoor performances in the Berkshires as well as New York City and its environs. (Deluge number two, as will be seen, was largely responsible for the erection this year of the new music shed.) The attendance in the second season of the festival was slightly larger than that of the first, but the festival still faced financial problems. These were met with initiative and imagination, since, instead of attempting to retrench and give the public less for its money the management approached the Boston Symphony Orchestra with an inquiry as to whether it was available for the festival's future seasons.

This invitation had an unforeseen interest for Dr. Koussevitzky, who never has been content with socially stratified audiences. The plan of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was similar in certain respects to one he had entertained in Russia just before the outbreak of the revolution. Nor are the concert tours that Koussevitzky gave in the first decade of this century, taking his orchestra by boat along the Volga River and giving performances at nominal prices for the population, to be forgotten. Dr. Koussevitzky views the Berkshire Symphonic Festival not as an entertainment for Summer people but as a center of art for the nation. To condense the narrative: the Boston Symphony came with its leader to Stockbridge; each of its three concerts at Holmwood on the Stockbridge-Lenox Road drew audiences of five thousand, and the festival had no deficit.

* * *

In 1936 Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Cleveland, Ohio, purchased the Hanna Farm and invited the festival to return to its original home. But in the meantime Mrs. Gorham Brooks offered the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as permanent home for the festival, the famous "Tanglewood" estate where Hawthorne wrote "The Wonder Book" and the "House of Seven Gables." This beautiful place has become the site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Last season, with a tent and a shell as well contrived as a canvas tent and a wooden shell might be, six concerts were given before immense audiences. Then occurred deluge number two. A veritable cloudburst drowned completely the sound of the orchestra. Within the tent there were no wet feet, but no one could get out while the furious patter of rain on the canvas roof made the orchestra inaudible. Three times Dr. Koussevitzky tried to proceed, but until late in the evening Jupiter Pluvius was his successful rival. The conductor sat betimes in his wooden box with leaking roof back of the stage. But he was not dejected. The ultra-conservatives and the doubting Thomases of Stockbridge would now be assured that ere another Summer passed, there must be a suitable edifice for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its festival.

* * *

Eighty thousand dollars has been subscribed for the new music shed. Three hundred and eight tons of steel and 150,000 feet of lumber have gone into its making. Beethoven's Ninth symphony, preceded by the chorale and opening chorus of Bach's cantat, "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott," will constitute the musical ceremonies of the opening concert. They may serve, with the Lutheran text and that of Schiller which enters into the finale of Beethoven, to remind the audience that there is a country today where liberty and democracy still exist and where art may unite its citizens in a faith that embraces present and future.

114

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Symphony Orchestra in Berkshires for Music Festival

First concert to be given in festival's new shed at Tanglewood, Hawthorne's old home, tomorrow night.

Tanglewood-in-the-Berkshires, Aug. 3—One hundred members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, headed by their eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, arrived in the Berkshires today in anticipation of the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at "Tanglewood" tomorrow (Thursday) evening at 8.30. The festival's new shed, built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country, will be inaugurated at the opening concert.

As a preliminary to the opening, Olin Downes, New York critic, will deliver the first of a series of four lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield tomorrow (Thursday) afternoon at 3 o'clock. He will discuss the music to be played that evening.

No elaborate ceremony will mark the inaugural of the shed. It is Dr Koussevitsky and the festival's wish that the emphasis be placed on the music. There will be brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival, and Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the orchestra. The concert will open with the chorale and chorus from "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by J. S. Bach. More than 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston, which has sung many times with the orchestra, will participate in the opening, as will Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse, soloists. Adding to the festival spirit, the audience will be invited to join in singing one verse of the magnificent old Bach hymn. The chorus will arrive from Boston in buses tomorrow afternoon.

Orchestra members scattered to all parts of the Berkshires upon their arrival and then left their living quarters in time for their first rehearsal at the new shed at "Tanglewood."

"Tanglewood" is where Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires and where he wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book" and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

The festival management indicated today that there would be a sell-out of all reserved seats for the opening concert. There will be plenty of unreserved seats, since extra chairs can be moved into the colannade to the number of 3000 if necessary.

Miss Robinson Smith today urged everyone coming to the concert to come early since the concert will begin promptly. The gardens will be open to the public. Refreshments will be served.

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 2—All indications point to a complete sell-out for the first concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra in the fifth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Thursday at 8.30 p. m. Here is a list of box-holders for the first series:—

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc.; Bentley Wirt Warren, Henry B. Sawyer and Ernest B. Dane, Jr., president, vice-president and treasurer, respectively, of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Mrs Bruce Crane, Mrs Charles C. Griswold, Miss Mary Parsons, Norval H. Busey, Jr.; Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Mrs Edward Davis, Mrs Edward A. Jones and Mrs Stanley P. Benton, Mrs Carlos M. De Heredia, Grenville Lindall Winthrop, Prof Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs John Bross Lloyd, Mrs David T. Dana and Miss Ellen Bullard.

Mrs Carl A. de Gersdorff, Princess Diana Eristavi, Mrs Daniel England, Mrs Winthrop M. Crane, Jr.; Mrs Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs William Knapp, Mrs Owen Johnson, Edward A. Taft, a trustee of the orchestra and president of the Harvard club of Boston; Mrs Arthur D. Budd, Mrs Elizabeth C. T. Miller, Mrs Samuel G. Colt, Robert K. Wheeler, Heaton I. Treadway.

Mrs Edward Harkness, Mrs E. E. Whitney, Mrs George Davenport, Mrs Evelyn Adams, Mrs Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs Walter Atherton, Mrs Cornelia Colton Hollister, Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs R. Jay Flick, John Shepard, Jr., Mrs Harry Adams, Mrs Norman H. Davis, Mrs Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs Laurence Connor, Mrs James Graham Parsons, Mrs E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs Donald M. Weston, Alfred Granger, Miss Gertrude Walker, Mrs Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mrs Robert Metz, Mrs Leonard Clark Feathers.

Mrs John Barry Ryan, Mrs John S. Newberry, Mr and Mrs Albert Spalding, Mr and Mrs Arthur Horton Lippincott, Edward H. Cranwell, Mr and Mrs A. Newbold Morris, James E. Leath, Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre, Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed, Mr and Mrs Charles Douglas Jackson, Mrs Rodney Procter, Mrs Donald J. Warner, Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs Nellie Walters, Miss Alice Clapp.

Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline has had a stone seat in the Tanglewood garden inscribed as follows: "Given to the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, who lived here many years."

Many from the Berkshire colonies were present this afternoon at a Berkshire museum reception held at Pittsfield to mark the opening of an exhibition of paintings and decorative panels by Augustus Vincent Tack and also an exhibition of oils and water colors by Stuart C. Henry, curator of the art department of the museum, of which Miss Laura M. Bragg is the director.

CHILLICOTHE, O.
NEWS ADVERTISER
AUG 2 - 1938

World of Mus

NEW YORK, Aug. 2. (UP)—

Six concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are scheduled for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which begins Aug. 4 at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewood estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

SOUTH BEND, IND.
TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1938

BERKSHIRE FETE READY TO START

Boston's Orchestra Will Play Six Concerts.

By United Press.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 2.—Six concerts by Boston Symphony orchestra musicians are scheduled for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, which begins Thursday at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewood estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

Wtih the orchestra will appear the Cecilia chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. Concerts will be given Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony is conductor.

Since the concert series began in 1934, the festival has been evolving gradually into an institution typically American, establishing its own traditions with realization that, to merit continued support of a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Immediatly after last year's series the festival trustees enlisted the aid of its many friends and raised more than $80,000 within a few months for a music shed.

Now the building is completed to the point called for by plans for this year. Eventual completion, including a permanent floor and stage, will come when more money is received.

Two years ago Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, to the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

AUG 3 - 1938

LENOX, MASS.—More than 100 musicians and officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, headed by conductor Serge Koussevitzky, arrived here today for the opening tomorrow of the fifth annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 2 - 1938

Boston Orchestra Opens Berkshire Festival Thursday

Beethoven 9th on First Program of 5th Annual Event at Stockbridge

Presenting the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Cecelia Club of Boston, and several distinguished soloists, the fifth annual Berkshire Festival will open at "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., on August 4.

Concerts will subsequently be given on Saturday evening, August 6, Sunday afternoon, Augsut 7, Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 11 and 13, and Sunday afternoon, August 14. The evening concerts will be given at 8:30 p. m. and the two Sunday afternoon concerts at 3:30 p. m.

A feature of this year's festival will be the inauguration of the new concert shell, capable of seating around 5000 persons and roofed over against any repetition of last year's situation, in which some of the performances were interrupted by sudden showers.

On Thursday of this week, the program will offer the Chorale and the First Chorus from Bach's Cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," the Haendel Concerto Grosso in E Minor, Op. 6, No. 10, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" sung by the Cecelia Club of Boston, conducted by Arthur Fiedler. Soloists will be Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, basso.

Saturday's program will include the Haydn Symphony No. 99 in E minor, (B&H No. 3), Debussy's three symphonic sketches, "La Mer," and Sibellius's First Symphony in E Minor, Op 39.

On Sunday afternoon the program presents "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" by Mozart; Brahm's Fourth Symphony in E Minor, Op. 98, Copland's "Music for the Theater," Ravel's "Mother Goose" and Respight's "Pines of Rome."

On Thursday afternoon, August 11, the program will be given over entirely to Wagner, when the final scene from Act 1 from "Die Walkuere" will be sung by Beale Hober, soprano, as "Sieglinde," and Paul Althouse, tenor, as "Siegmund," and the Third Act from "Siegfried," with Norman Gordon as "Wotan," Anna Kaskas as "Erda," Paul Althouse as "Siegfried" and Beale Hober as "Bruennhilde."

Saturday evening's program on August 13 will include the "Angelus" section from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor—Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony.

The final concert, on Sunday afternoon, August 14, presents Schumann's First Symphony, Prokofieff's orchestral suite, "Lieutenant Kije" and Brahm's Second Symphony.

DUNKIRK, N. Y.
OBSERVER

AUG 3 - 1938

MUSICIANS GATHER FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 3—(UP)—More than 100 musicians and officials of the Boston symphony orchestra, headed by conductor Serge Koussevitzky, arrived here today for the opening tomorrow of the fifth annual Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

The festival, a non-commercial affair, consists this year of six concerts and four lectures. This year also marks the inaugural of the "music shed," built with funds contributed by music-lovers in all parts of the United States.

Concerts will be given on the evenings of Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 and on the afternoons of Aug. 7 and 14. The 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston and several soloists will appear with the orchestra at the opening concert.

Tanglewood, the permanent site of the festival, was the summer home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the place where he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book" and sketched "Tanglewood Tales."

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 2 - 1938

It is hard to tell which is the more active musical season in this region—winter or summer. Although a variety of concert stars and orchestras, and even an occasional ballet, come this way in winter, the summer months offer a steady series of concerts, especially in the increasingly popular field of chamber music. The summer season reaches its climax during the next two weeks, when in addition to the regular concerts at Cummington, South Mountain, and elsewhere, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival comes to Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, and offers six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky and four lectures by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times.

In five years the Berkshire festival has grown from a small series of outdoor concerts started by the late Dr. Henry Hadley to this year's series, which will be presented in a brand new music shell with a seating capacity of 5,000. It promises to develop into more than a few summer orchestral concerts, for the new shell has potentialities of operatic productions as well as symphonic and choral concerts, and future seasons may see the festival a musical center of increasing significance in the musical scene of this country.

The Boston Symphony orchestra is expected to arrive at Tanglewood tomorrow, and the Cecilia society chorus from Boston will arrive Thursday for the opening concert Thursday night, in which it will sing parts of the Bach cantata, "Ein Feste Burg ist unser Gott". Also on the opening program will be Concerto Grosso in D Minor, Opus 6, No. 10, by Handel. Other concerts will be given Saturday evening, August 6, Sunday afternoon, August 7, Thursday evening, August 11, Saturday evening, August 13, and Sunday afternoon, August 14.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give lectures at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the afternoon of August 4, 6, 11 and 13. At his first lecture, this Thursday afternoon, he will discuss the music to be played that night.

The opening concert Thursday night will be broadcast over a national network.

Othere attractions in the Berkshires during the two weeks of the festival will include the Berkshire County photographic exhibition under the auspices of the Berkshire Camera club of Pittsfield at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield and plays at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge. This week Jane Wyatt is appearing in "Stage Door", and the following week Violet Hemming will take the lead in "Susan and God." The later, an analysis of the Oxford Group movement, is particularly apropos in Stockbridge, where a large Oxford Group house party is held annually.

During the period of the festival the South Mountain Quartet concerts, usually given Sunday afternoons, will be given Friday afternoons, in Pittsfield. This Friday's program will be as follows:

Quartet in F. minor (Opus 10), for two violins, violin, and cello . . Paul Hindemith.

Passacaglia, for violin and cello . . . Handel-Halvorsen.

Quintet in F. minor, for two violins, viola, cello, and piano . . Johannes Brahms.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

AUG 3 - 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL WILL OPEN TOMORROW

The first concert of the Berkshire Music Festival season will be given tomorrow at "Tanglewood," by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Rebecca Hyde Rider, concert manager of the Dutchess County Musical Association, and Professor George S. Dickinson of the Vassar College Music Department, are members of the Festival's advisory board.

The program is to begin at 8 p. m. with the Cecilia society, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, assisting, in the choral sections of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," to be the principal composition of the evening. Compositions of Bach will also be included.

Soloists will be Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Paul Althouse, tenor; Anna Kaskas, contralto; and Norman Condon, bass.

Concerts of the Festival are planned August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1938

110 Members of Cecilia Chorus to Invade Berkshires by Bus

One hundred ten members of the Cecilia Chorus of Boston will board buses at Symphony hall Thursday morning and head west for "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge to participate with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic festival's new music shed that evening. The distance from Boston to "Tanglewood" is 140 miles.

Arriving at "Tanglewood" with the chorus will be the four soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse, who also will participate in the dedication. The orchestra will arrive in the Berkshires the day before, fresh from new triumphs at the Esplanade in Boston. Members of the chorus have been coming to Boston from widely scattered points for weeks to rehearse with the orchestra for the festival. The women members will use the main house at "Tanglewood" as headquarters. This house was included with the 200 acres given the orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline as a permanent home for the festival. The male members of the chorus will share the tuning room in back of the stage with the orchestra. The chorus will have dinner on the terrace of the Curtis hotel in Lenox and be transported the mile and quarter to "Tanglewood" in buses.

This afternoon members of the advisory board, whose membership includes representatives from Maine to California and Canada to Florida, were asked to make every effort to reach music lovers in their communities to make sure they are familiar with dirctions upon approaching "Tanglewood," and to sell subscriptions to help assure success of the event. The meeting was held on the stage of the new shed.

The festival office today again stressed the importance of action if music lovers prefer reserved seats. There are only a few reserved seats left. They are all good, however, because of the unique construction of the auditorium. There are plenty of unreserved seats. If there is an overflow, the unreserved sections will be extended to the colonnades where there are accommodations for 3000. The main part of the shed accommodates 5700.

The festival office also stressed the desirability of making room reservations and invited those who have not made plans to communicate with the office by telephone, mail, or in person. The office is located in Stockbridge, telephone 400.

Thursday night's program will begin promptly at 8.30 with the Bach chorus and choral from the cantata, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." The second half of the program will consist of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Olin Downes, New York critic, will give his first lecture Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Berkshire museum at Pittsfield. His first lecture will be devoted principally to the music to be played that evening. Tickets for the lectures may be obtained at the festival office or by communicating with Mrs W. Bradford West, 616 West street, Pittsfield.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 3 - 1938

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival enters a new phase of its distinguished career tomorrow night when the opening concert of the new music shell at Tanglewood will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. It is hard to believe that the festival is only five years old, for its success matches that of much older institutions. The first festival was a series of outdoor concerts given on a farm. Then a tent was acquired. Now, almost like Cinderella, the festival moves into new quarters and with a soundproof roof, a seating capacity of 5000, and a stage adaptable even to opera. Only the enthusiasm of hundreds of music-lovers could have effected this transition, and it should be a source of pride to residents of Western Massachusetts that this region is the home of so worthwhile a development. Although hundreds of people have made the growth of the festival an actuality, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is largely responsible for its now established status, for his interest lies in presenting good musical programs to as many people as possible, and if a festival succeeds in this, it succeeds in everything. It may be that with the new shell, other kinds of music will be included in the festival, but the Boston Symphony will always be its backbone. The Boston Symphony is what draws people from all parts of the country to devote six days to a musical festival. It creates an enthusiastic audience, and is an audience of that kind more than a small group of financial backers which promises the festival a long life and a merry one.

115

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Symphony And Leader Arrive Today

In Anticipation of Opening of Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Tomorrow Evening—Olin Downs Will Deliver First Lecture Tomorrow on Music of Opening Concert—No Elaborate Ceremony to Mark Dedication of New Music Shed.

One hundred members of the Boston Symphony orchestra headed by their eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, arrived in the Berkshires today in anticipation of the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" tomorrow evening at 8.30. The Festival's new shed, built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country will be inaugurated at the opening concert.

As a preliminary to the opening Olin Downes, New York critic, will deliver the first of a series of four lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. He will discuss the music to be played tomorrow evening.

No elaborate ceremony will mark the inaugural of the shed. It is Dr. Koussevitzky and the Festival's wish that emphasis be placed on the music. There will be brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, and Bentley Wirth Warren, of Williamstown and Boston, president of the orchestra. The concert will open with the chorale and chorus from "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by J. S. Bach. More than 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston, which has sung many times with the orchestra will participate in the opening as will Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse, soloists. Adding to the Festival spirit, the audience will be invited to join in singing one verse of the magnificent old Bach hymn. The chorus will arrive from Boston in buses tomorrow afternoon.

Orchestra members scattered to all parts of the Berkshires upon their arrival and then left their living quarters in time for their first rehearsal at the new shed at "Tanglewood."

Before the concert tomorrow night Miss Robinson Smith will entertain at dinner for Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, one of the donors of "Tanglewood," and Mr. Warren, president of the orchestra. Other guests will include Mr. Brooks, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. August Belmont of New York and Max Vivier of Paris and New York.

Mrs. Brooks has provided an inscription for the stone garden seat at "Tanglewood," which reads: "Given to the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, who lived here many years. 1937."

"Tanglewood" is where Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires and where he wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

The Festival management indicated today that there would be a sellout of all reserved seats for the opening concert. There will be plenty of unreserved seats since extra chairs can be moved into the colonade to the number of 3,000 if necessary.

Miss Robinson Smith today urged everyone attending the concert to arrive early since the concert will begin promptly. The gardens will be open to the public. Refreshments will be served.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1938

MUSIC

> "Were it not for music, we might in these days say that the beautiful is dead."—Disraeli.

News Note From France

The Fontainebleau School of Music reports an enrollment of 103 American students for its 18th summer session, with a faculty of distinguished French professors such as Nadia Boulanger, Marcel Dupre, Robert Casadesus, Boucherit and Lucien Muratore. On the evening of 'Basille day' July 14, a chorus of Americans, assembled on the famous steps, sang a program of familiar American songs to the countless French citizens in the court below, where in 1814, Napoleon said farewell to his army. The program concluded with the 'Star Spangled Banner' and 'La Marseillaise.'

Toward Richer Living

"What Does Steady Advance in Music Portend for the Nation?"

The question is asked by H. Howard Taubman, writing in the New York Times relative to the growth of music activity and notably the summer festivals increasing numbers.

Citing the richness of the American musical scene in summer, Mr. Taubman notes "a vast development is unfolding, and perhaps its most impressive aspect is the tremendous increase in the number of men, women and childrn who are taking part in our musical life, both as performers and listeners."

From Mr. Taubman's two-page article the following excerpts are revealing and interesting as: "There was a time when music in America was confined to a few metropolitan communities. The tours of a choice group of internationally famous virtuosos comprised virtually the sum and substance of American music. All that has changed, and the pace of the new development is quickening constantly."

"What has caused this immense flowering of music appreciation in this country? The answer is that good music has become easily available almost everywhere. People who used to think the master pieces of music literature were too recondite for their simple tastes have found that nothing was farther from the truth. For the essence of music is that it speaks the language of the emotions."

"Any one who has the capacity to feel joy and grief, anger and tenderness, fear and ardor has the wherewithal for the response to music. The opportunities for listening to good music are becoming limitless. A taste for good music is bred by listening to it and as the taste is cultivated by increasing numbers of our people, the demand becomes greater and greater."

"What does this steady advance in music portend for the nation? In other words, what does the average American derive from good music? His emotional and spiritual life becomes enriched. His perceptions become more sensitive. He discovers that the aspirations of humanity, of the common man in all places in all times, are not dissimilar. For music has not the barrier of strange and disparate tongues. The language of ordered sound is universal. The growth of music appreciation in the land means that the average American is living a fuller inner life. As the average American lives more fully, the national culture burgeons."

Berkshire Festival

First importance in the world of music this week attaches to the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival in Stockbridge at "Tanglewood," which will open Thursday night by the Boston Symphony orchestra under its distinguished leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in its recently completed permanent home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, never content with socially stratified audiences, views the Berkshire Symphonic festival in a broader sense than a summer entertainment for summer people. He sees it as a center of art for the nation.

The Hymn

"The words of a hymn are most important in the edification of worshippers; but it is the tunes which have made some words popular. It therefore becomes an important question; What constitutes a good tune or melody for a hymn?" Carl F. Hehyl, in The Christian World. E. B. F.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Symphony Ready For Opening of Festival

Many Members of Orchestra Have First Glimpse of New Shed at Tanglewood

Leaving the sweltering heat of the city behind them, but not unmindful of their recent triumphs at the Esplanade concerts, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in the more rarified Berkshires today, eager for the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tomorrow night.

Scattering to the various communities in the neighborhood of Tanglewood, members of the orchestra deposited their luggage, took quick lunch and then hurried to the new shed which has been completed for them by the Festival trustees, for a rehearsal under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

First Glimpse

For many of the orchestra members, this was their first glimpse of the new shed, the stage and tuning room and their eyes shone with amazement and pleasure. Dr. Koussevitzky rapped them all to attention promptly at the designated hour for rehearsal to put the finishing touches to numbers that will be played tomorrow evening. For their comfort during rehearsals and performance, Joseph Franz engineer designed a unique ventilating system whereby air is fed through openings in the panels of the shell and drawn through openings in the ceiling by the heat of the electric lamps. The lamps are not visible from the audience, being hidden from direct view by a series of shutters. The doors to the tuning room lead directly from the rear center of the stage. Dr. Koussevitzky's room is off the southeast side of the stage.

Rehearsals Supervised

Only members and patrons will be admitted to the rehearsals the two Saturdays of the Festival period and by ticket only. These rehearsals will be supervised as closely as a regular performance. The other rehearsals are closed and the public is requested not to ask permission to go to the shed during their progress. There will be attendants at the parking areas to invite visitors to stroll through the gardens instead of the shed during the rehearsal periods.

Members of the orchestra are living in Pittsfield, Lenox, Lee, Stockbridge, Richmond and Great Barrington. During their sojourn, the facilities at Stockbridge Bowl on the Tanglewood property will be turned over to them and their families through the courtesy of the Lenox Brotherhood Club.

The Cecilia Chorus, 110-strong, will arrive tomorrow afternoon and will have an early dinner on the terrace at the Curtis Hotel.

CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD - EXAMINER

AUG 3 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Opening

Tomorrow is double-starred on the social calendars of Chicagoans who summer in the Berkshires and along the exclusive North Shore sector of Massachusetts.

The Berkshire Music Festival opens with Serge Koussevisky, conductor of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the podium. Country clubs and inns for miles around have been booked solid for weeks.

Chicagoans with Summer places nearby have set the next two weeks aside to entertain guests with musical ears. Not only do they want to hear good music, but they want to pay tribute to a generous former Chicagoan whose check-book has been largely responsible for making the series possible. She is Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, now of Washington.

This year's concerts will be more than something to delight the ear. For the first time the festival will be presented in a weather-proof building Heretofore the committee has said it could afford only canvas, but last year when the big tent blew down in a thunderstorm, Mrs. Coolidge and her friends said something had to be done.

Prominent on this year's patron list are the John Alden Carpenters, who have a house at Beverly, Mass., for the season, but will journey to Stockbridge to hear the series.

Russell Tyson, whose farmhouse is not far distant from the concert hall, is another music sponsor who will be among those present when Koussevisky raises his baton.

Luckily for Mrs. Donald MacPherson, her Summer place is only six miles from the Music Temple's front row. One of the stanchest Ravinia supporters, she will find in the Kerkshire series a welcome interlude in the routine of remodeling the old West House, which she bought from her mother's estate.

Neighbor to her in Pittsfield this season is Mrs. John Hamline Jr., who is visiting her mother and father, the John Beebes. Another Pittsfield colonist and music lover is Mrs. Warren Salisbury, who has her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Kimball Sallisbury, visiting her and her granddaughter, Joy.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1938

CATHOLIC UNIT TO ATTEND CONCERT

Members of the Schenectady Catholic Youth League will attend the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., Sunday.

John Van Baak is chairman in charge of arrangements for the group. On the committee are Miss Anna Nardini, Miss Dorothy Goodwin, Miss Gerldine Gleason, Clarence Davies, James Hughes and H. A. Beaudoin. Members who plan to go may obtain tickets by calling members of the committee.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

AUG 3 - 1938

The Berkshire Festival.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's direction, opens tomorrow (Thursday) evening at 8.30 in the new music shed at Tanglewood Naturally, the promoters are hoping for fair weather. But if it should rain this year the audience will be well protected. The shed, seating 5700, has a sound-proof and weather-proof roof. In addition, a canvas covered walk will be provided through the stately Hawthorne pines straight to the building. It will have a link connecting with the unloading platform at the parking field. Another canopy will extend to the entrance to be used by boxholders.

The festival management once more urges music lovers to arrive early, to follow the signs and to obey traffic rules to avoid any possible confusion at the parking areas.

The program tomorrow night will open with "Angelus" from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B minor. And the program is dedicated to his memory as the first conductor of the festival. Mrs. Hadley is expected to be present.

The second concert is set for Saturday evening and the third for Sunday afternoon at 3.30. The subsequent programs will be on Thursday and Saturday evenings of next week and the final concert on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14.

S. R. F.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 3 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Thursday Evening

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—When Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra open the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock by playing J. S. Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," they will be reviving an old custom.

The audience, which it is estimated will fill the new shed to be inaugurated at this evening concert, will be invited to join with the chorus of the Cecilia Society of Boston in singing this magnificent hymn with the orchestra. Bach composed the music to be sung with the orchestra by the choir and congregation of his church. And now for the first time in many years concert goers will again have an opportunity to participate actively in the singing. The first concert will close with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, and Norman Cordon.

Music lovers, musicians and many well known people from all parts of America, Canada and even Europe will be on hand for the inaugural of the shed, which has a seating capacity of 5,700. Well known people in attendance will include Albert Spalding, eminent violinist; Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large and president of the National Red Cross; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival; Sir Ernest MacMillan, of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony orchestra trustees; Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra; Mrs. Edward Harkness, of New York; Bentley Wirt Warren and Ernest B. Dane, president and treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Miss Alice J. Clapp, of Washington; President Newbold Morris, of the New York city council; Miss Mabel Choate; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Owen Johnson; Congressman Allen T. Treadway; Mrs. Sumner Bird; and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Orchestra to Open Festival

Annual Berkshire Event Has Concerts, Lectures on Program

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (UP)—More than 100 musicians and officials of the Boston symphony orchestra, headed by Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, arrived here today for the opening tomorrow of the fifth annual Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

The festival, a non-commercial affair, consists this year of six concerts and four lectures. This year marks the inaugural of the "music shed." built with funds contributed by music-lovers in all parts of the United States.

100 PARTICIPATE

Concerts will be given on the evenings of Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 and on the afternoons of Aug. 7 and 14. The 100 members of the Cecilio chorus of Boston and several soloists will appear with the orchestra at the opening concert.

Tanglewood, the permanent site of the festival, was the summer home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the place where he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" an "The Wonder Book" and sketched "Tanglewood Tales."

115

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Symphony And Leader Arrive Today

In Anticipation of Opening of Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Tomorrow Evening—Olin Downs Will Deliver First Lecture Tomorrow on Music of Opening Concert—No Elaborate Ceremony to Mark Dedication of New Music Shed.

One hundred members of the Boston Symphony orchestra headed by their eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, arrived in the Berkshires today in anticipation of the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" tomorrow evening at 8.30. The Festival's new shed, built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country will be inaugurated at the opening concert.

As a preliminary to the opening Olin Downes, New York critic, will deliver the first of a series of four lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. He will discuss the music to be played tomorrow evening.

No elaborate ceremony will mark the inaugural of the shed. It is Dr. Koussevitzky and the Festival's wish that emphasis be placed on the music. There will be brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, and Bentley Wirth Warren, of Williamstown and Boston, president of the orchestra. The concert will open with the chorale and chorus from "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by J. S. Bach. More than 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston, which has sung many times with the orchestra will participate in the opening as will Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse, soloists. Adding to the Festival spirit, the audience will be invited to join in singing one verse of the magnificent old Bach hymn. The chorus will arrive from Boston in buses tomorrow afternoon.

Orchestra members scattered to all parts of the Berkshires upon their arrival and then left their living quarters in time for their first rehearsal at the new shed at "Tanglewood."

Before the concert tomorrow night Miss Robinson Smith will entertain at dinner for Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, one of the donors of "Tanglewood," and Mr. Warren, president of the orchestra. Other guests will include Mr. Brooks, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. August Belmont of New York and Max Vivier of Paris and New York.

Mrs. Brooks has provided an inscription for the stone garden seat at "Tanglewood," which reads: "Given to the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, who lived here many years. 1937."

"Tanglewood" is where Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires and where he wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

The Festival management indicated today that there would be a sell-out of all reserved seats for the opening concert. There will be plenty of unreserved seats since extra chairs can be moved into the colonade to the number of 3,000 if necessary.

Miss Robinson Smith today urged everyone attending the concert to arrive early since the concert will begin promptly. The gardens will be open to the public. Refreshments will be served.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1938

MUSIC

"Were it not for music, we might in these days say that the beautiful is dead."—Disraeli.

News Note From France

The Fontainebleau School of Music reports an enrollment of 103 American students for its 18th summer session, with a faculty of distinguished French professors such as Nadia Boulanger, Marcel Dupre, Robert Casadesus, Boucherit and Lucien Muratore. On the evening of 'Basille day' July 14, a chorus of Americans, assembled on the famous steps, sang a program of familiar American songs to the countless French citizens in the court below, where in 1814, Napoleon said farewell to his army. The program concluded with the 'Star Spangled Banner' and 'La Marseillaise.'

Toward Richer Living

"What Does Steady Advance in Music Portend for the Nation?"

The question is asked by H. Howard Taubman, writing in the New York Times relative to the growth of music activity and notably the summer festivals increasing numbers.

Citing the richness of the American musical scene in summer, Mr. Taubman notes "a vast development is unfolding, and perhaps its most impressive aspect is the tremendous increase in the number of men, women and childrn who are taking part in our musical life, both as performers and listeners."

From Mr. Taubman's two-page article the following excerpts are revealing and interesting as: "There was a time when music in America was confined to a few metropolitan communities. The tours of a choice group of internationally famous virtuosos comprised virtually the sum and substance of American music. All that has changed, and the pace of the new development is quickening constantly."

"What has caused this immense flowering of music appreciation in this country? The answer is that good music has become easily available almost everywhere. People who used to think the master pieces of music literature were too recondite for their simple tastes have found that nothing was farther from the truth. For the essence of music is that it speaks the language of the emotions."

"Any one who has the capacity to feel joy and grief, anger and tenderness, fear and ardor has the wherewithal for the response to music. The opportunities for listening to good music are becoming limitless. A taste for good music is bred by listening to it and as the taste is cultivated by increasing numbers of our people, the demand becomes greater and greater."

"What does this steady advance in music portend for the nation? In other words, what does the average American derive from good music? His emotional and spiritual life becomes enriched. His perceptions become more sensitive. He discovers that the aspirations of humanity, of the common man in all places in all times, are not dissimilar. For music has not the barrier of strange and disparate tongues. The language of ordered sound is universal. The growth of music appreciation in the land means that the average American is living a fuller inner life. As the average American lives more fully, the national culture burgeons."

Berkshire Festival

First importance in the world of music this week attaches to the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival in Stockbridge at "Tanglewood," which will open Thursday night by the Boston Symphony orchestra under its distinguished leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in its recently completed permanent home.

Dr. Koussevitzky, never content with socially stratified audiences, views the Berkshire Symphonic festival in a broader sense than a summer entertainment for summer people. He sees it as a center of art for the nation.

The Hymn

"The words of a hymn are most important in the edification of worshippers; but it is the tunes which have made some words popular. It therefore becomes an important question; What constitutes a good tune or melody for a hymn?" Carl F. Hahyl, in The Christian World.

E. B. F.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Symphony Ready For Opening of Festival

Many Members of Orchestra Have First Glimpse of New Shed at Tanglewood

Leaving the sweltering heat of the city behind them, but not unmindful of their recent triumphs at the Esplanade concerts, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra arrived in the more rarified Berkshires today, eager for the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tomorrow night.

Scattering to the various communities in the neighborhood of Tanglewood, members of the orchestra deposited their luggage, took quick lunch and then hurried to the new shed which has been completed for them by the Festival trustees, for a rehearsal under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

First Glimpse

For many of the orchestra members, this was their first glimpse of the new shed, the stage and tuning room and their eyes shone with amazement and pleasure. Dr. Koussevitzky rapped them all to attention promptly at the designated hour for rehearsal to put the finishing touches to numbers that will be played tomorrow evening. For their comfort during rehearsals and performance, Joseph Franz engineer designed a unique ventilating system whereby air is fed through openings in the panels of the shell and drawn through openings in the ceiling by the heat of the electric lamps. The lamps are not visible from the audience, being hidden from direct view by a series of shutters. The doors to the tuning room lead directly from the rear center of the stage. Dr. Koussevitzky's room is off the southeast side of the stage.

Rehearsals Supervised

Only members and patrons will be admitted to the rehearsals the two Saturdays of the Festival period and by ticket only. These rehearsals will be supervised as closely as a regular performance. The other rehearsals are closed and the public is requested not to ask permission to go to the shed during their progress. There will be attendants at the parking areas to invite visitors to stroll through the gardens instead of the shed during the rehearsal periods.

Members of the orchestra are living in Pittsfield, Lenox, Lee, Stockbridge, Richmond and Great Barrington. During their sojourn, the facilities at Stockbridge Bowl on the Tanglewood property will be turned over to them and their families through the courtesy of the Lenox Brotherhood Club.

The Cecilia Chorus, 110-strong, will arrive tomorrow afternoon and will have an early dinner on the terrace at the Curtis Hotel.

CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD - EXAMINER

AUG 3 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Opening

Tomorrow is double-starred on the social calendars of Chicagoans who summer in the Berkshires and along the exclusive North Shore sector of Massachusetts.

The Berkshire Music Festival opens with Serge Koussevisky, conductor of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the podium. Country clubs and inns for miles around have been booked solid for weeks.

Chicagoans with Summer places nearby have set the next two weeks aside to entertain guests with musical ears. Not only do they want to hear good music, but they want to pay tribute to a generous former Chicagoan whose check-book has been largely responsible for making the series possible. She is Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, now of Washington.

This year's concerts will be more than something to delight the ear. For the first time the festival will be presented in a weather-proof building Heretofore the committee has said it could afford only canvas, but last year when the big tent blew down in a thunderstorm, Mrs. Coolidge and her friends said something had to be done.

Prominent on this year's patron list are the John Alden Carpenters, who have a house at Beverly, Mass., for the season, but will journey to Stockbridge to hear the series.

Russell Tyson, whose farmhouse is not far distant from the concert hall, is another music sponsor who will be among those present when Koussevisky raises his baton.

Luckily for Mrs. Donald MacPherson, her Summer place is only six miles from the Music Temple's front row. One of the stanchest Ravinia supporters, she will find in the Kerkshire series a welcome interlude in the routine of remodeling the old West House, which she bought from her mother's estate.

Neighbor to her in Pittsfield this season is Mrs. John Hamline Jr., who is visiting her mother and father, the John Beebes. Another Pittsfield colonist and music lover is Mrs. Warren Salisbury, who has her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Kimball Salisbury, visiting her and her granddaughter, Joy.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 3 - 1938

CATHOLIC UNIT TO ATTEND CONCERT

Members of the Schenectady Catholic Youth League will attend the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., Sunday.

John Van Baak is chairman in charge of arrangements for the group. On the committee are Miss Anna Nardini, Miss Dorothy Goodwin, Miss Gerldine Glesson, Clarence Davies, James Hughes and H. A. Beaudoin. Members who plan to go may obtain tickets by calling members of the committee.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

AUG 3 - 1938

The Berkshire Festival.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's direction, opens tomorrow (Thursday) evening at 8.30 in the new music shed at Tanglewood Naturally, the promoters are hoping for fair weather. But if it should rain this year the audience will be well protected. The shed, seating 5700, has a sound-proof and weather-proof roof. In addition, a canvas covered walk will be provided through the stately Hawthorne pines straight to the building. It will have a link connecting with the unloading platform at the parking field. Another canopy will extend to the entrance to be used by boxholders.

The festival management once more urges music lovers to arrive early, to follow the signs and to obey traffic rules to avoid any possible confusion at the parking areas.

The program tomorrow night will open with "Angelus" from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B minor. And the program is dedicated to his memory as the first conductor of the festival. Mrs. Hadley is expected to be present.

The second concert is set for Saturday evening and the third for Sunday afternoon at 3.30. The subsequent programs will be on Thursday and Saturday evenings of next week and the final concert on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14.

S. R. F.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 3 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Thursday Evening

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—When Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra open the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock by playing J. S. Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," they will be reviving an old custom.

The audience, which it is estimated will fill the new shed to be inaugurated at this evening concert, will be invited to join with the chorus of the Cecilia Society of Boston in singing this magnificent hymn with the orchestra. Bach composed the music to be sung with the orchestra by the choir and congregation of his church. And now for the first time in many years concert goers will again have an opportunity to participate actively in the singing. The first concert will close with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, and Norman Cordon.

Music lovers, musicians and many well known people from all parts of America, Canada and even Europe will be on hand for the inaugural of the shed, which has a seating capacity of 5,700. Well known people in attendance will include Albert Spalding, eminent violinist; Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador at large and president of the National Red Cross; Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival; Sir Ernest MacMillan, of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony orchestra trustees; Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra; Mrs. Edward Harkness, of New York; Bentley Wirt Warren and Ernest B. Dane, president and treasurer of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Miss Alice J. Clapp, of Washington; President Newbold Morris, of the New York city council; Miss Mabel Choate; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Owen Johnson; Congressman Allen T. Treadway; Mrs. Sumner Bird; and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1938

Boston Orchestra to Open Festival

Annual Berkshire Event Has Concerts, Lectures on Program

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3 (UP)—More than 100 musicians and officials of the Boston symphony orchestra, headed by conductor Serge Koussevitzky, arrived here today for the opening tomorrow of the fifth annual Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

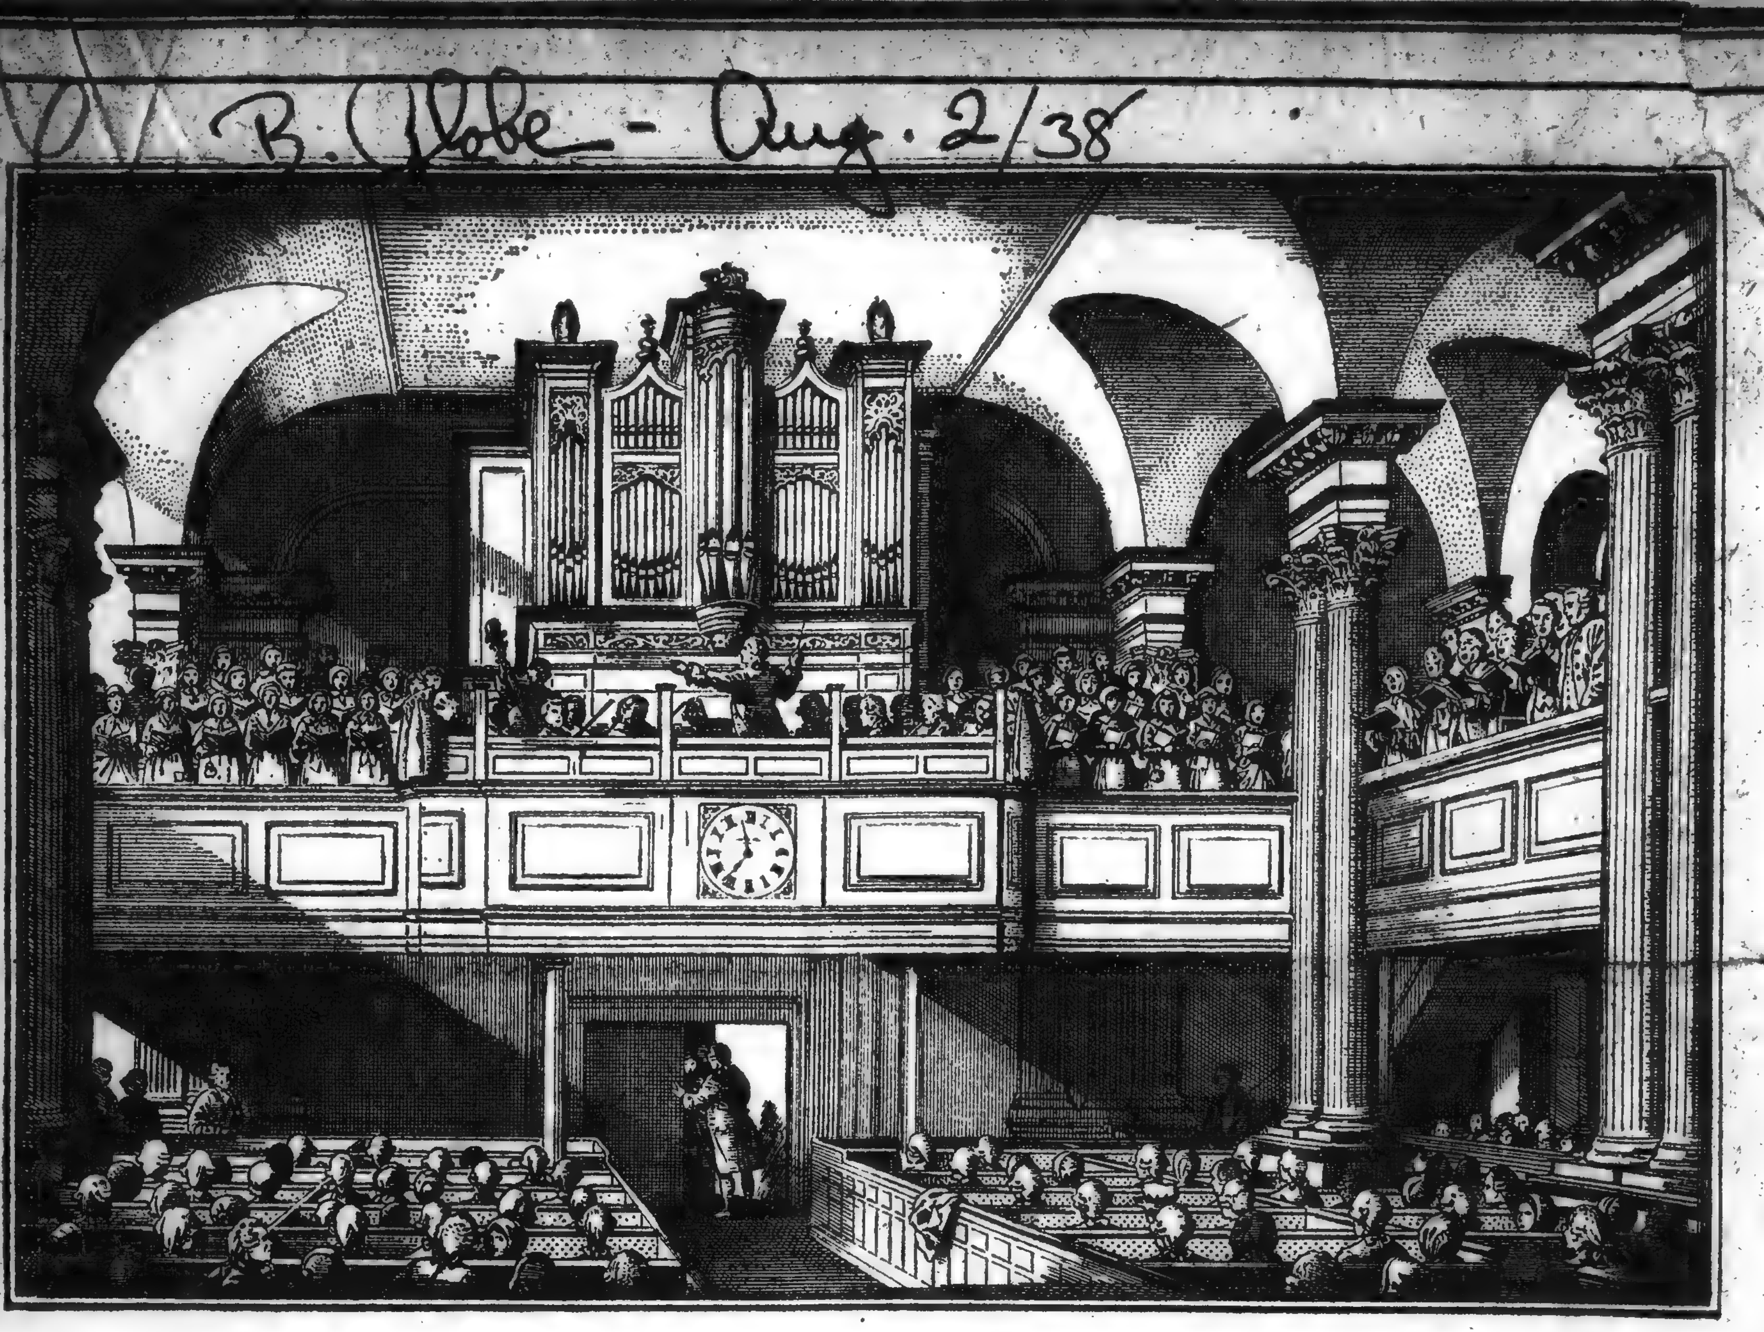
The festival, a non-commercial affair, consists this year of six concerts and four lectures. This year marks the inaugural of the "music shed," built with funds contributed by music-lovers in all parts of the United States.

100 PARTICIPATE

Concerts will be given on the evenings of Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 and on the afternoons of Aug. 7 and 14. The 100 members of the Cecilio chorus of Boston and several soloists will appear with the orchestra at the opening concert.

Tanglewood, the permanent site of the festival, was the summer home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the place where he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" an "The Wonder Book" and sketched "Tanglewood Tales."

B. Globe - Aug. 2/38



The BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL maintains a great musical tradition

Serge Koussevitsky, eminent conductor, composer and soloist . . . twice decorated by the Tsar and an officer of the Legion of Honour in France. Since September, 1924, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he has received the following honorary degrees in the United States: Brown University, Doctor of Music, 1926; Harvard University, Doctor of Laws, 1929; Rutgers University, Doctor of Music, 1937; Yale University, Doctor of Music, 1938.

ON a Tuesday morning in January, 1786, men, women and children gathered at King's Chapel to hear Boston's first musical festival. Inspired by the famous Händel commemoration in Westminster Abbey the year previous, William Selby, the Chapel organist, united Boston's choral and orchestral groups in an ambitious and highly successful recital. The Pennsylvania Herald, in reviewing the festival, remarked, "The whole was conducted with the greatest order and decorum, save a theatrical clap at the conclusion which can only be imputed to the pitch of the enthusiasm to which the excellent overture of Mr. Bach wound up the enraptured auditors."

During the first two week-ends in August the Boston Symphony Orchestra is carrying forward this great tradition at the Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. In the majestic surroundings of the Berkshire Hills, this event will be the mecca of music lovers throughout the nation.

The management of the Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are to be congratulated for their united contribution in presenting this great opportunity to New England.

The FIRST NATIONAL BANK of BOSTON
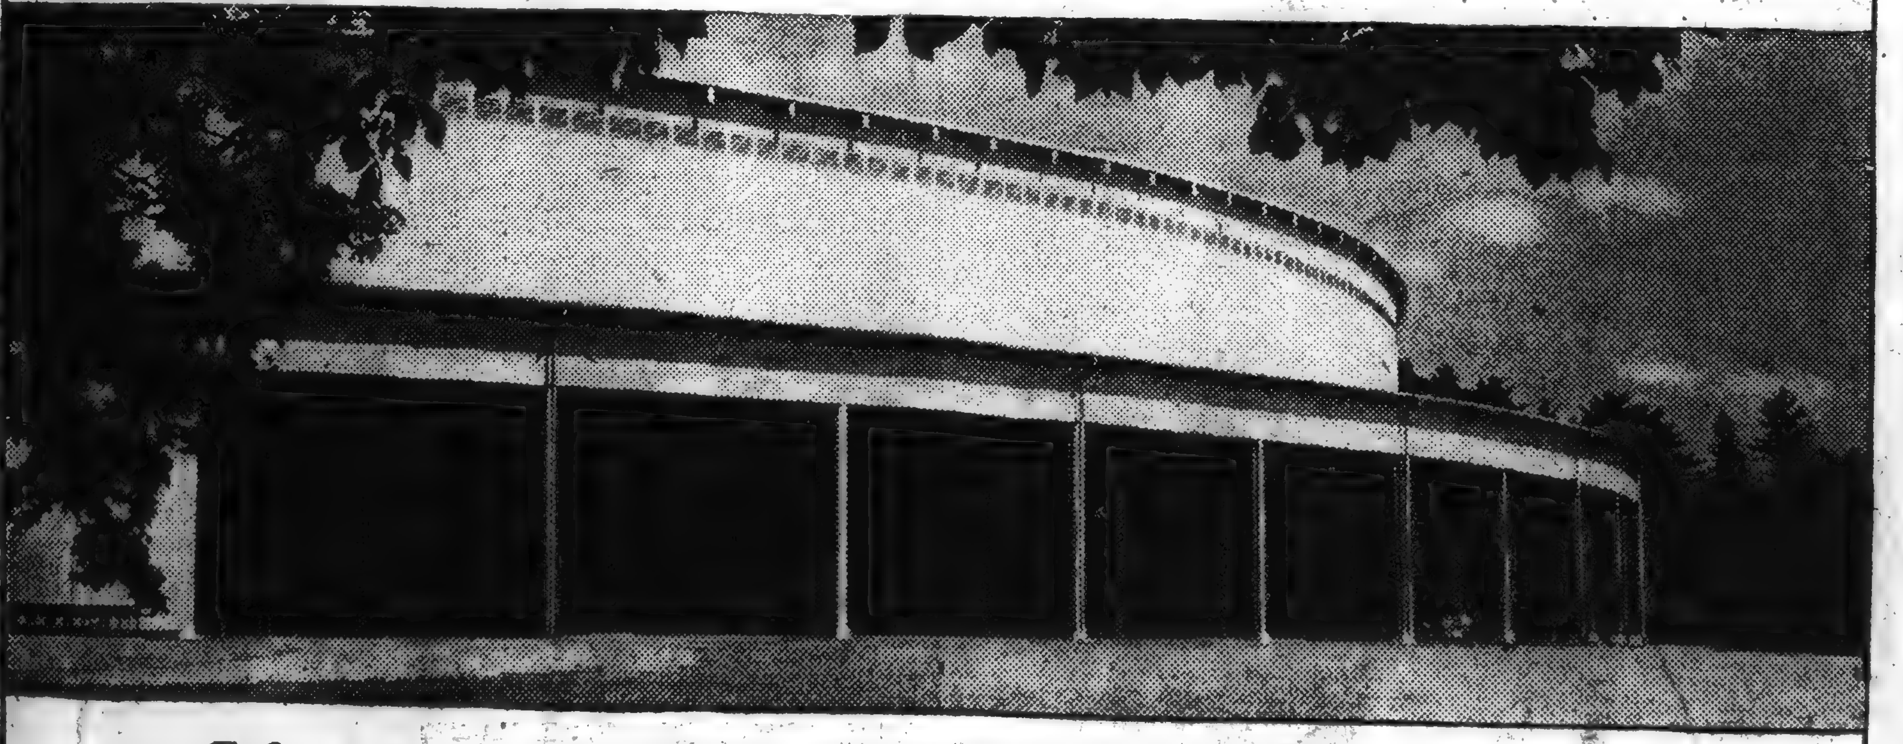
1784 ★ 1938

Member of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation



New England's Oldest and Largest Banking Institution

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OPENS THIS EVENING

Music Shed to Be Dedicated by the Boston Symphony

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3.—The Berkshire music festival's new $82,000 music shed will be formally dedicated tomorrow night with brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the corporation, and Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who is at his country place, Stonehill, Williamstown. Practically all of the 5,700 seats have been sold.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, Mrs. Koussevitzky and their niece, Miss Olga Naumoff, arrived today at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club in Lenox. Many of the 100 members of the orchestra are in tents on Lake Mahkeenac's shore. Tomorrow 100 members of the Boston Cecilia Chorus, who are to sing at the first concert, will dine on the terrace of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox.

Tanglewood Gardens will be illuminated each night of the festival. High Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield has charge of parking arrangements, with space for 5,000 cars. Fifty American Legion members will assist him. Williard M. Sistare, chief usher, has 135 volunteer aides. Traffic will be directed by State police under command of Lieutenant William Sullivan.

Tonight's program by the Boston Symphony will feature Beethoven's Ninth symphony, with Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon as soloists, and with the chorus of the Ceeilia Society of Boston. Bach's "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott" will open the program.

CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD - EXAMINER

AUG 4 - 1938

Behind the Mike

By Ulmer Turner,
Radio Editor.

Opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be heard via WLS-WENR tonight.

LENI RIEFENSTAHL.

Featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the radioed portion of the concert will begin at 8:30 p. m. and last two hours.

Two choruses from Bach's cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will constitute the program. The Cecelia Society Chorus of Boston will assist. Soloists will include Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, basso, whom Chicagoans will recall as a former radio popular song singer hereabouts.

* * *

An unfortunate circumstance attends this Berkshire Festival opening . . . Previously scheduled in the radio hours it will consume was a gala mike version of MARC CONNELLY'S "The Green Pastures." That Negro interpretation of the Bible was this week's vehicle in the series of NBC's Summer Prize Plays. Because other plays are contracted for in weeks to come, radio's "The Green Pastures" has been canceled entirely.

(To paraphrase a famous line in the play, "Gabriel, take down a complaint!")

Suggestion: That NBC prolong its series one week to include "Pastures."

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 4 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Starts Today

The fifth series of the Berkshire Festival starts today in its new, permanent shed at "Tanglewood" and will continue this weekend and next, Aug. 6 and 7; 11, 13 and 14. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

AUG 4 - 1938

LENOX, Aug. 4 (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra held its final rehearsal today for the opening concert of its six-day Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tonight.

Conductor Serge Koussevitzky will lead the full orchestra in its new music shed, covering an acre and a half and seating 5700 listeners.

The shed, not quite completed, replaces the makeshift resonating shell and circus tent used for the past two years.

For the opening event, the Cecilia Chorus will travel from Boston to sing with the orchestra two numbers from the Bach cantata, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," and the finale of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

117

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 4 - 1938

MUSIC NOTES.

A "Gala Irish Night" is to be the order of things at the Lewisohn Stadium tomorrow evening, when Douglas Corrigan, the transatlantic flier, will be the guest of honor. Mayor La Guardia will introduce Mr. Corrigan to the Stadium audience. Soloist on the program will be John Feeney, Irish tenor. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, directed by Alexander Smallens, will offer pieces by Balfe, Victor Herbert, Percy Grainger and Leo Sowerby.

John Feeney.

* * *

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival gets under way this evening at "Tanglewood," when the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the chorus of the Cecilia Society of Boston will join forces under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." The second half of the program will be taken up with the ninth symphony of Beethoven with the following soloists:—Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, mezzo soprano; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass.

* * *

Victor Granados, son of the late Spanish composer, Enrique Granados, is a visitor to this country, his mission being to conduct negotiations with the Metropolitan Opera Co. regarding the production of his father's opera, "Maria del Carmen." He also brings with him a number of works by modern Spanish composers which he will endeavor to make known in this country.

* * *

The Hippodrome Opera Co. weekend schedule at the two outdoor stadia offers "Aida" tomorrow evening and "Carmen" on Saturday evening at Jones Beach and "La Traviata" on Saturday evening and "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" on Sunday evening at Randalls Island.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 4 - 1938

Concert Tonight Opens Berkshire Music Fete

Capacity Audience Expected in New Tanglewood Shed

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3.—All signs point to a capacity audience for the first concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, tomorrow at 8:30 p. m. The new music shed has 5,700 seats, and several thousand unreserved tickets are available for the colonnade. On the opening night there will be brief dedication remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival Corporation, and Bentley Wirt Warren, of Boston, president of the Berkshire Symphony Orchestra, which is to give all the six concerts.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitzky arrived today at the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, Lenox. Arthur Fiedler, concertmeister, is at Red Lion Inn. One hundred members of the orchestra are already here. The Cecilia Chorus, of Boston, will arrive tomorrow night to sing at the opening concert.

Traffic arrangements at Tanglewood entrance on West and Hawthorne Streets are in charge of Lieutenant William Sullivan, of the Massachusetts State Police. Parking is under direction of High Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre of Berkshire County, with fifty American Legion members assisting. There are 135 volunteer ushers and program girls under the direction of Willard M. Sistare, of Pittsfield. Tanglewood Gardens will be illuminated.

Among those who have made reservations at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, for the festival are Mr. and Mrs. Carter Randolph Leidy, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Schuyler Schieffelin, Mrs. Edgar M. Williams, Dr. and Mrs. Miles Sturtevant, the Misses Mary Halsted and Theresa Cunningham, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Mills Saville, of New Haven, Conn.; Mrs. Herbert Knox Smith, of Farmington, Conn.; Dr. and Mrs. Edwin Behrend, of Washington.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1938

First Lecture by Downes On Festival Music Tomorrow

Critic To Speak at Berkshire Museum Preliminary to the First Concert at Tanglewood

Olin Downes, eminent music critic of New York, will give the first of a series of four lectures at the Berkshire Museum tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, preliminary to the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tomorrow evening.

Mrs. West Chairman

Mrs. W. Bradford West, of this city, chairman of arrangements for the Downes lectures, reports that advance sales indicate a well filled hall for all four lectures. Arrangements for tickets may be made with her or at the festival office in Stockbridge, the festival booths in Lenox and Pittsfield. The Pittsfield booth is directly across South Street from the Museum. It will also be possible to obtain tickets at the door up to the seating capacity of the hall. Mr. Downes will give his second lecture Saturday afternoon at 3. His first lecture will deal with the music to be played at the opening concert.

Members of the orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, arrived in the Berkshires this afternoon and scattered to their various rooming places about the county. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky have reservations at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club in Lenox.

Brief Ceremonies

Only brief ceremonies will mark the inangural of the new music shed at Tanglewood tomorrow night. There will be remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra. To add to the festival spirit, the audience will be invited to join with the Cecilia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of the magnificent Bach hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." (A mighty fortress is our God.")

Both the orchestra and festival management today repeated the appeal to the public, to refrain from visiting the music shed during the rehearsals. Saturday of this week and next, the rehearsals will be open to members and patrons only.

OLIN DOWNES
To Open Lectures Series for Festival

Tickets at Tanglewood

All tickets will be transferred to Tanglewood from the Stockbridge office at 6.30 tomorrow and Saturday evenings and early Sunday afternoon. Reservations tomorrow and Saturday after 6.30 may be made by calling Lenox 51, the box office number.

Busses will leave City Hall Park and the center of Stockbridge tomorrow night at 7.30. The Pittsfield bus will pick up passengers at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, also.

There were only a few remaining reserved seats left today for the opening concert. If there is an overflow in the unreserved sections of the shed it will be taken care of in extra benches in the rear and on the sides of the colonnade.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

AUG 4 - 1938

BOSTON CONDUCTOR WILL LEAD SAN DIEGO SYMPHONY TOMORROW

Tomorrow night's concert by the San Diego Symphony orchestra and the Federal Music project brings an interesting personality in the conductor, Russell Ames Cook.

There is said to be a refreshing directness in the conducting of Russell Ames Cook. Coming from an old New England family, enriched by travel and study in the musical centers of America and Europe, matured and seasoned as a conductor with many orchestras over the United States, Cook has a broad and authoritative musical outlook.

For eight years he has been conductor of "The Symphonic Ensemble" of Boston, a chamber music ensemble composed only of players from the Boston Symphony orchestra. He also lectures on music at the Graduate School of Education, Harvard university, and is conductor of the Portland (Me.) Symphony.

The "St. Paul's Suite" (Holst), programmed for tomorrow night, was first played in this country by Cook in 1923. He is keenly interested in bringing out new works.

Lyell Barbour, distinguished pianist, who will be the guest soloist, playing Chopin's Piano concerto in F-Minor, has appeared in this country and Europe with all the leading orchestras.

The London Daily Telegraph said of his appearance in that city: "To be blessed by the gods with an ardent, romantic temperament has been the fortune of the American pianist, Lyell Barbour." Each time Mr. Barbour has appeared either with the San Diego Symphony orchestra or the Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestra he has scored a brilliant success. He will be fine in the Chopin Concerto.—S. B. M.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

AUG 4 - 1938

The Berkshire Festival

Entering into its fifth season with tonight's concert, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, started modestly as an interesting experiment, bids fair to become a permanent institution. The tent in which the performances were given last year at least suggested a nomadic venture. The weather-proof music shed in which the audience will assemble tonight suggests permanency.

Rightly, the first conductor of the festival, the late Henry Hadley is to be memorialized in the opening program. But it will be agreed that the entrance of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra into the enterprise will add greatly to the prestige of the festival.

It has been shown that in the summer and in the beautiful setting at Tanglewood there is a public for such a festival. It is to be expected that its scope will be developed and expanded. Dr. Koussevitzky, one may be sure, will not be content with anything in the nature of a dull routine. All the signs are that an important musical development is in the making.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 4 - 1938

Comment

AGAIN AT STOCKBRIDGE

(Boston Herald)

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin its fifth season of concerts tomorrow. The record for so short a period has been remarkable. It originated as more or less of a scratch affair on a farm where the audience sat in the open. Two years of this made the sponsors realize that, although there was a public for summer symphony concerts, that public could best be encouraged by a more elaborate project.

Consequently the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky were engaged, and the Festival became self-supporting. A serious traffic problem had to be faced at the 1936 concerts; but this was partly obviated and partly solved ingeniously at the concerts on Tanglewood, the estate so generously donated to the cause by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. Now, with the solid assurance of wide public support, the Festival authorities have had built a permanent shed with a stage that can be turned to other purposes than merely for symphonic music.

Such is the story of the Festival to date, and as such it is a creditable record, showing above all that the concerts have reflected a genuine public demand. Whether that demand will spread to opera, oratorio and other musical activities is not yet certain. At the moment the Festival is limiting itself to six concerts of the symphonic repertoire familiar to any one who is a regular subscriber to one of our large orchestras. It is not yet time to talk of a second Salzburg and similar far-fetched comparisons, for those wiles of press, agentry do a deal of harm. The Berkshire Festival, which, unlike the European Festivals, is not aided by the state, must work out its own salvation in terms that are congenial to its atmosphere.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 4 - 1938

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra held its final rehearsal today for the opening concert of its six-day Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood in Lenox tonight. Conductor Serge Koussevitzky will lead the full orchestra in its new music shed, covering an acre and a half and seating 5700 listeners. The shed, not quite completed, replaces the makeshift resonating shell and circus tent used for the past two years. For the opening event, the Cecila chorus will travel from Boston to sing with the orchestra two numbers from the Bach Cantata, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" and the finale of B symphony.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat - Chronicle

AUG 4 - 1938

Festival Opens In Berkshires Today

LENOX, Mass.—(UP)—More than 100 musicians and officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, headed by Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, arrived here yesterday for the opening today of the fifth annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

The festival, a non-commercial affair, consists this year of six concerts and four lectures. This year also marks the inaugural of the "music shed," built with funds contributed by music devotees in all parts of the United States.

Concerts will be given on the evenings of Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 and on the afternoons of Aug. 7 and 14. The 100 members of the Cecilia Chorus of Boston and several soloists will appear with the orchestra at the opening concert.

Tanglewood, the permanent site of the festival, was the summer home of Nathaniel Hawthorne and the place where he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book" and sketched "Tanglewood Tales."

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

AUG 4 - 1938

Boston Symphony To Give Opening Festival Concert In Berkshires Tonight

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—(U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra held its final rehearsal today for the opening concert of its six-day Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood tonight.

Conductor Serge Koussevitzky will lead the full orchestra in its new music shed, covering an acre and a half and seating 5,700 listeners.

The shed, not quite completed, replaces the makeshift resonating shell and circus tent used for the past two years.

For the opening event, the Cecila Chorus will travel from Boston to sing with the orchestra two numbers from the Bach Cantata, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" and the final of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 4 - 1938

6000 to Attend Opening Of Berkshire Festival Today

Boston Symphony Orchestra Has First Rehearsal in New Tanglewood Music Shed

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 3 — By train, automobile and bus, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra poured into Berkshire today preparatory to the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tomorrow night at 8.30.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived during the morning and went directly to the new shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, where at 4 this afternoon he waved his baton over the first rehearsal of of the orchestra in its new summer quarters.

There was little in the rehearsal of early season roughness, for the orchestra has just come from fresh triumphs on the Esplanade at Boston. The Cecelia Choir of Boston, which will take part in the opening concert, will arrive tomorrow.

Nearly 6000 persons from all parts of the nation and many foreign countries will be in the audience when the festival opens with the playing and singing of the Bach cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." In fact the audience will be asked to revive an old custom and join in the singing. The first program will be completed with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Dedication exercises for the huge shed will be simple. Mrs. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival, will say a few words and Bentley W. Warren of Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will speak. That will be all.

The largest audience ever to attend a musical event in Berkshire is expected. Practically every one of the 3000 reserved seats has been sold, and more than 100 boxes which stretch across the huge building have been engaged. Unreserved seats are also nearly gone. The building seats 5700 but many more can be admitted by adding extra chairs.

The second concert will be Saturday night and the third in the first series Sunday afternon. The following week on the same days the second series will be given.

Rain Protection

Fair weather is predicted for the inaugural of the new music shed. But should it rain at Tanglewood, music lovers need have no apprehension. First of all, the shed, provides a soundproof and weatherproof roof. Secondly, a canvas covered walk will be provided through the stately Hawthorne Pines, right to the building. It will have a link connecting with the unloading platform at the parking field. Another canopy will extend to the entrance to be used by boxholders.

Well-known people in attendance will include Albert Spalding, eminent violinist; Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large and president of the National Red Cross; Sir Ernest MacMillan of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra trustees; Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Mrs. Edward Harkness, of New York; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Miss Alice J. Clapp, of Washington; Newbold Morris, president of the New York City Council; Miss Mabel Choate; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Owen Johnson; Rep. Allen T. Treadway; Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird; and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

Air View of Berkshire Festival Music Shed

Berkshire Eagle Photo

Airplane view of the Berkshire Festival music shed and surrounding country. The photo, taken from above the Lenox-Interlaken Road, shows in the center the new music shed, surrounded by the Tanglewood estate. In the far distance are Laurel Lake and the Hoosac range of mountains which slope down, on the farther side, toward the Connecticut Valley.

GRAPHIC
Newton, Mass

AUG 5 - 1938

Waban

—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Came and Mr. and Mrs. George L. Reynolds are spending this week-end in the Berkshires where they will attend the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 4 - 1938

NEW MUSIC SHED TO BE FORMALLY DEDICATED TONIGHT

Practically All of 5700 Seats Sold for First of Berkshire Music Festival Concerts

Special Dispatch to The Republican.

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 3—The Berkshire Music Festival's new $82,000 music shed will be formally dedicated tomorrow night at 8.30 with brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the corporation, and Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is at his country place, Stonehill, Williamstown. Practically all of the 5700 seats have been sold with tickets available only in the unreserved collonnade section.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs Koussevitzky, with their niece, Miss Olga Naumoff, arrived today at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox. A number of the 100 members of the orchestra are in tents on Lake Mahkeenac shore. Arthur Fiedler, concertmeister, is at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge. Tomorrow 100 members of the Boston Cecilia chorus, who are to sing at the first concert, will dine on the Curtis hotel terrace.

Tanglewood gardens will be illuminated each night of the festival. High Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield has charge of parking arrangements with space for 500 cars. Fifty American Legion members will assist him. Willard M. Sistare, chief usher, has 135 volunteer aids. Traffic will be directed by state police under command of Lieut William Sullivan.

Heaton Hall reservations at Stockbridge for the festival include Dr and Mrs Miles Sturtevant, Mrs Schuyler Schieffelin, Mrs Edgar M. Williams, Misses Mary Halsted and Theresa Cunningham of New York; Mrs Herbert Knox Smith of Farmington, Ct.; Mr and Mrs Caleb Mills Saville of New Haven, Ct.; Mr and Mrs Carter Randolph Leidy of Philadelphia, Dr and Mrs Edwin Behrend of Washington, D. C.

Mrs Cycus Mace was a garden party hostess this afternoon on the grounds at the Pierson homestead at Richmond built in 1789. At the tea tables were Mrs Raymond Leslie Buell, Mrs E. Pomeroy Cutler and Mrs Paul Koechl. Visitors inspected the house, with the original wallpaper, imported from France in the lower hall and one room. The furnishings are early American. Proceeds were for benefit of the Congregational church.

Newcomers at the Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, include Mr and Mrs Joseph D. Meredith, Douglas Meredith, Mr and Mrs John Miles Thompson, Mr and Mrs Benjamin A. Matthews of New York; Mrs Robert H. Hatch of Bronxville, Miss Marion K. Sard of Albany, Rev Dr and Mrs Gibson Bell of Wynnewood, Pa.; Mr and Mrs William M. Scott of Radnor, Pa.; Lieut-Col Donald Curtis of Washington.

Mrs Nina L. Duryea is back at the Mill, Stockbridge, from Bar Harbor and has Mr and Mrs Walter Tuckerman of Washington as guests.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 4 - 1938

Boston Orchestra May Arrive For Annual Festival

Concert at Stockbridge, Mass., Tonight Will Open New Music Shed

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—(Special.)—One hundred members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, headed by their conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, arrived in the Berkshires today in anticipation of the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," Thursday night at 8:30 p. m.

The festival's new shed, built with funds contributed by music-lovers from all over the country, will be inaugurated at the opening concert. No ceremonies will mark the inauguration, as it is Dr. Koussevitzky's and the Festival's wish that the emphasis be placed on the music. There will be brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, president of the Festival, and by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Orchestra.

The concert will open with the chorale and first chorus from "Tin Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by Bach, and then proceed to the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. More than 100 members of the Cecelia Chorus of Boston will sing, while soloists will be Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, basso.

As a preliminary to the concert, Olin Downes, New York critic, will deliver the first of a series of lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. He will discuss the evening's program.

Concerts will also be given on Saturday evening, August 6, Sunday afternoon, August 7, Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 11 and 13, and Sunday afternoon, August 14. Evening concerts are at 8:30 and afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

COLUMBIA, MO.
TRIBUNE

AUG 5 - 1938

Adairs Leave for East

James Adair, conductor of the Stephens College Symphony, left today for New York and Massachusetts where he will attend concerts of the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the next two weeks. Adair will also attend the Bennington Dance Festival next week where his wife, Mary Standring Adair, will appear in Hanya Holm's group in the current production in Bennington. Mrs. Adair is instructor in modern dane at Stephens and this is her third summer at Bennington. They will return September 1.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 5 - 1938

SYMPHONIC FETE CALLED SUCCESS

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5.—AP—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Betthoven's long and sometimes tortuous ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for 10 minutes.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 4 - 1938

6000 to Attend Opening Of Berkshire Festival Today

Boston Symphony Orchestra Has First Rehearsal in New Tanglewood Music Shed

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 3. — By train, automobile and bus, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra poured into Berkshire today preparatory to the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tomorrow night at 8.30.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived during the morning and went directly to the new shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, where at 4 this afternoon he waved his baton over the first rehearsal of of the orchestra in its new summer quarters.

There was little in the rehearsal of early season roughness, for the orchestra has just come from fresh triumphs on the Esplanade at Boston. The Cecelia Choir of Boston, which will take part in the opening concert, will arrive tomorrow.

Nearly 6000 persons from all parts of the nation and many foreign countries will be in the audience when the festival opens with the playing and singing of the Bach cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." In fact the audience will be asked to revive an old custom and join in the singing. The first program will be completed with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Dedication exercises for the huge shed will be simple. Mrs. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival, will say a few words and Bentley W. Warren of Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will speak. That will be all.

The largest audience ever to attend a musical event in Berkshire is expected. Practically every one of the 3000 reserved seats has been sold, and more than 100 boxes which stretch across the huge building have been engaged. Unreserved seats are also nearly gone. The building seats 5700 but many more can be admitted by adding extra chairs.

The second concert will be Saturday night and the third in the first series Sunday afternoon. The following week on the same days the second series will be given.

Rain Protection

Fair weather is predicted for the inaugural of the new music shed. But should it rain at Tanglewood, music lovers need have no apprehension. First of all, the shed provides a soundproof and weatherproof roof. Secondly, a canvas covered walk will be provided through the stately Hawthorne Pines, right to the building. It will have a link connecting with the unloading platform at the parking field. Another canopy will extend to the entrance to be used by boxholders.

Well-known people in attendance will include Albert Spalding, eminent violinist; Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large and president of the National Red Cross; Sir Ernest MacMillan of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra trustees; Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Mrs. Edward Harkness, of New York; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Miss Alice J. Clapp, of Washington; Newbold Morris, president of the New York City Council; Miss Mabel Choate; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Owen Johnson; Rep. Allen T. Treadway; Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird; and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

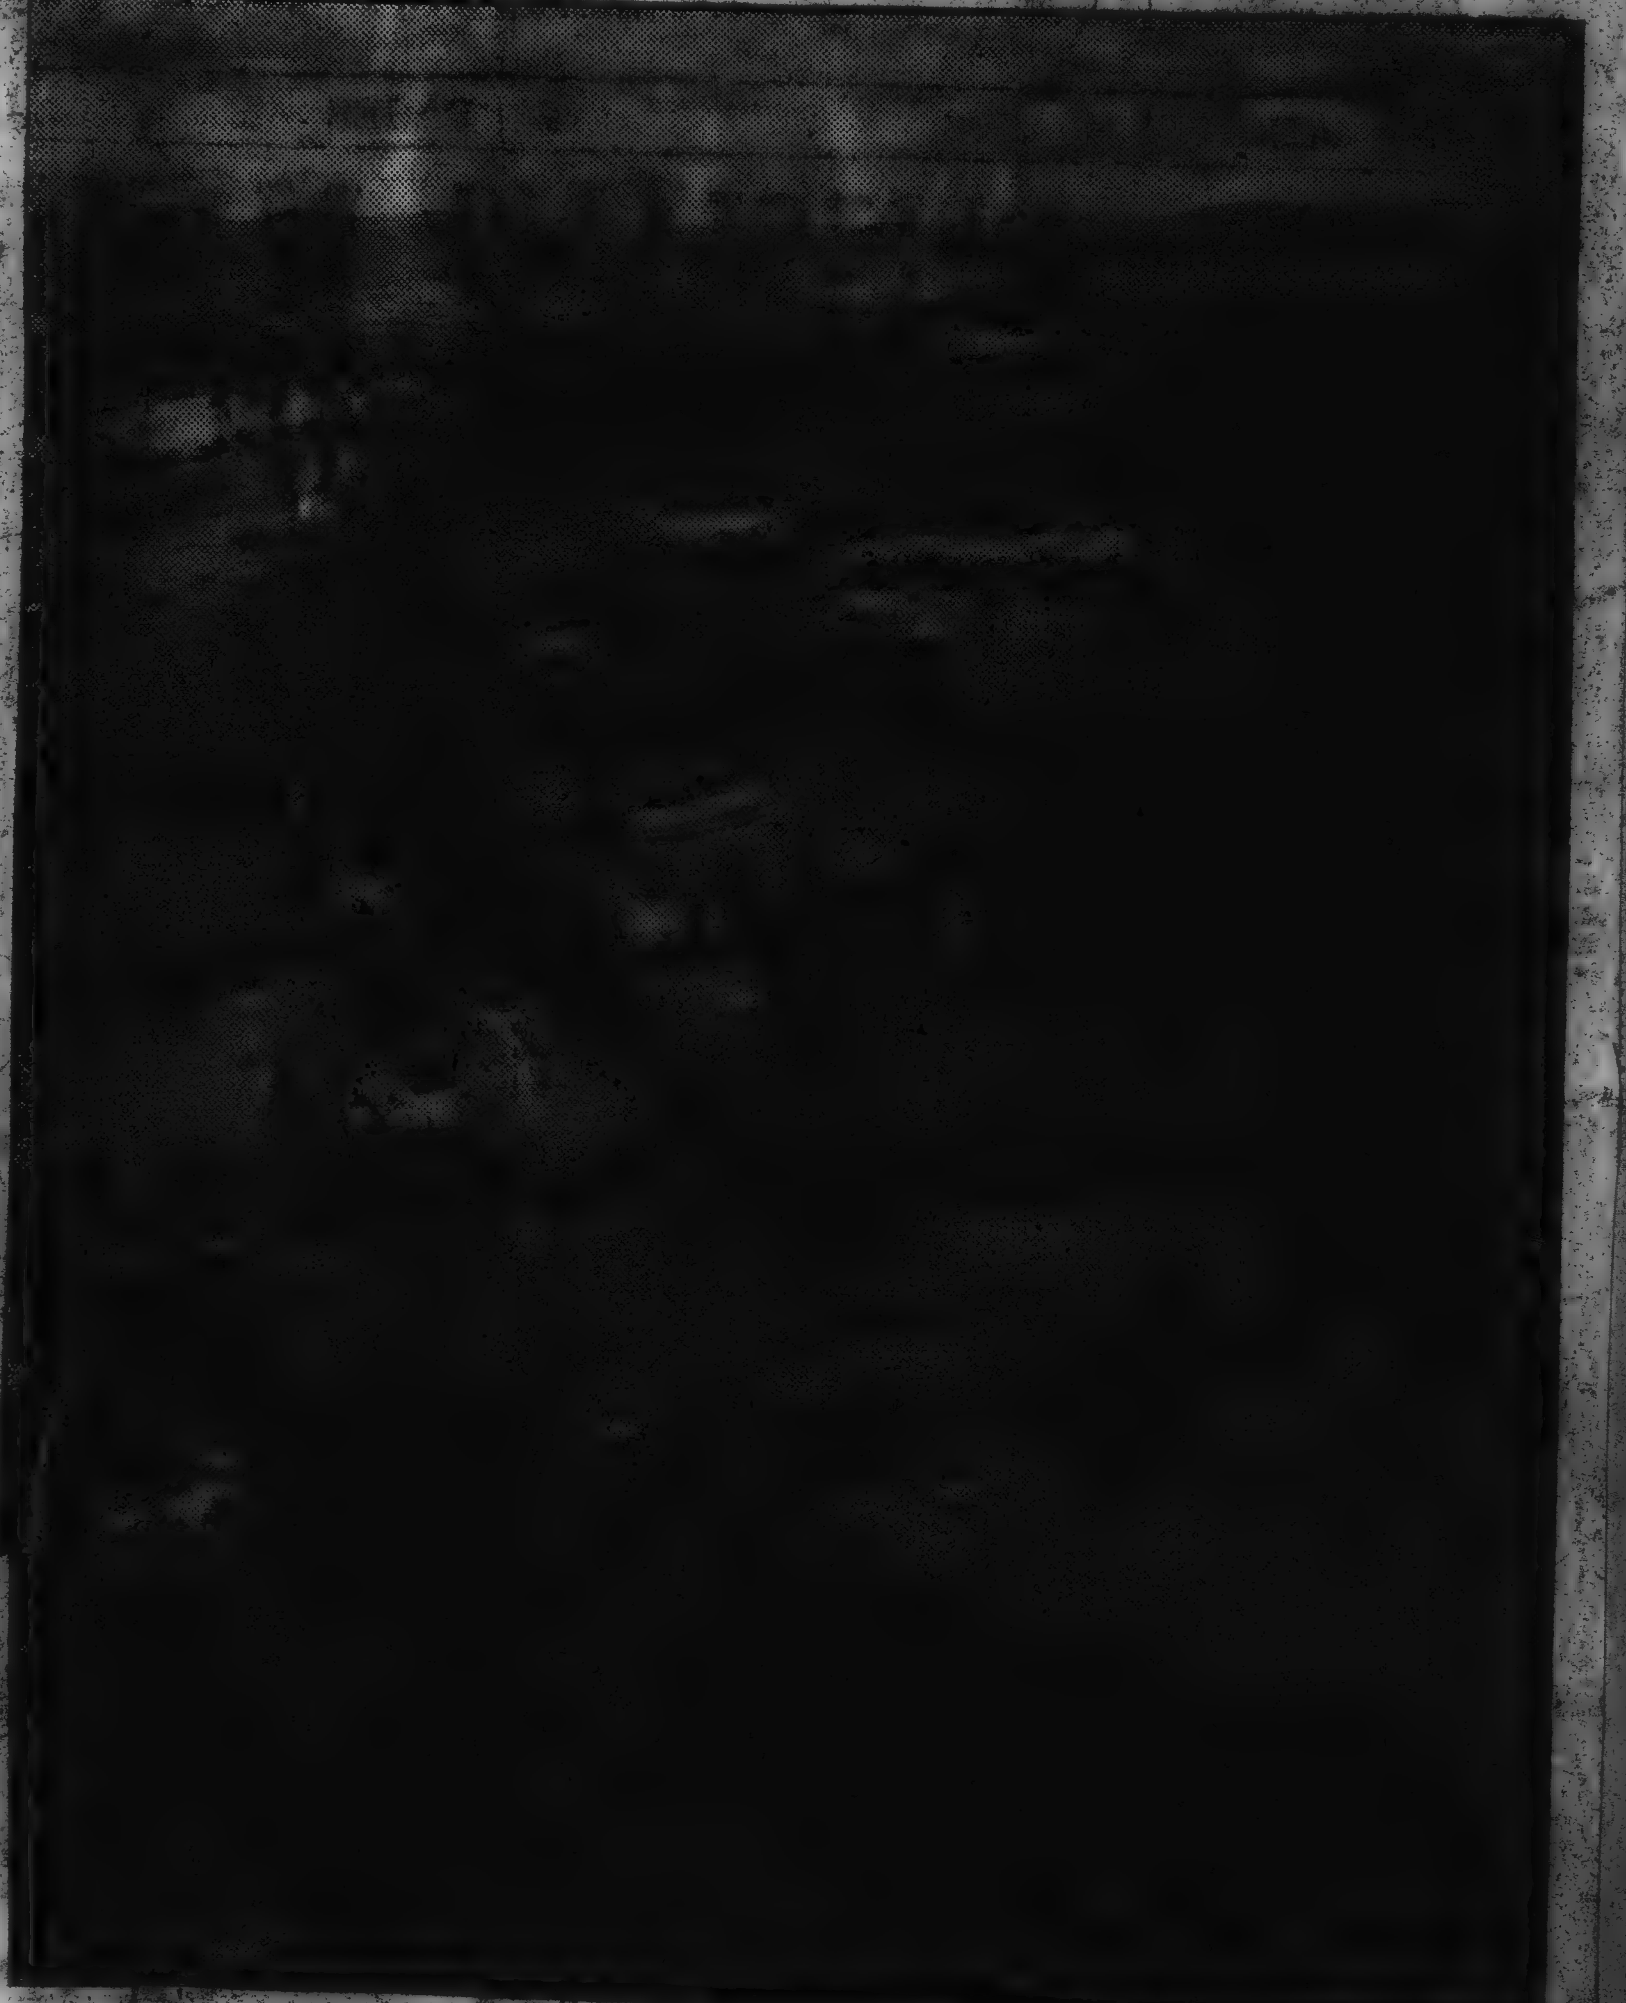
GRAPHIC
Newton, Mass

AUG 5 - 1938

Waban

—Mr. and Mrs. Harry Came and Mr. and Mrs. George L. Reynolds are spending this week-end in the Berkshires where they will attend the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Air View of Berkshire Festival Music Shed



Berkshire Eagle Photo

Airplane view of the Berkshire Festival music shed and surrounding country. The photo, taken from above the Lenox-Interlaken Road, shows in the center the new music shed, surrounded by the Tanglewood estate. In the far distance are Laurel Lake and the Hoosac range of mountains which slope down, on the farther side, toward the Connecticut Valley.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 4 - 1938

NEW MUSIC SHED TO BE FORMALLY DEDICATED TONIGHT

Practically All of 5700 Seats Sold for First of Berkshire Music Festival Concerts

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 3—The Berkshire Music Festival's new $82,000 music shed will be formally dedicated tomorrow night at 8.30 with brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the corporation, and Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who is at his country place, Stonehill, Williamstown. Practically all of the 5700 seats have been sold with tickets available only in the unreserved collonnade section.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, and Mrs Koussevitzky, with their niece, Miss Olga Naumoff, arrived today at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox. A number of the 100 members of the orchestra are in tents on Lake Mahkeenac shore. Arthur Fiedler, concertmeister, is at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge. Tomorrow 100 members of the Boston Cecilia chorus, who are to sing at the first concert, will dine on the Curtis hotel terrace.

Tanglewood gardens will be illuminated each night of the festival. High Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield has charge of parking arrangements with space for 500 cars. Fifty American Legion members will assist him. Willard M. Sistare, chief usher, has 135 volunteer aids. Traffic will be directed by state police under command of Lieut William Sullivan.

Heaton Hall reservations at Stockbridge for the festival include Dr and Mrs Miles Sturtevant, Mrs Schuyler Schieffelin, Mrs Edgar M. Williams, Misses Mary Halsted and Theresa Cunningham of New York; Mrs Herbert Knox Smith of Farmington, Ct.; Mr and Mrs Caleb Mills Saville of New Haven, Ct.; Mr and Mrs Carter Randolph Leidy of Philadelphia, Dr and Mrs Edwin Behrend of Washington, D. C.

Mrs Cyrus Mace was a garden party hostess this afternoon on the grounds at the Pierson homestead at Richmond built in 1789. At the tea tables were Mrs Raymond Leslie Buell, Mrs E. Pomeroy Cutler and Mrs Paul Koechl. Visitors inspected the house, with the original wallpaper, imported from France in the lower hall and one room. The furnishings are early American. Proceeds were for benefit of the Congregational church.

Newcomers at the Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, include Mr and Mrs Joseph D. Meredith, Douglas Meredith, Mr and Mrs John Miles Thompson, Mr and Mrs Benjamin A. Matthews of New York; Mrs Robert H. Hatch of Bronxville, Miss Marion K. Sard of Albany, Rev Dr and Mrs Gibson Bell of Wynnewood, Pa.; Mr and Mrs William M. Scott of Radnor, Pa.; Lieut-Col Donald Curtis of Washington.

Mrs Nina L. Duryea is back at the Mill, Stockbridge, from Bar Harbor and has Mr and Mrs Walter Tuckerman of Washington as guests.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 4 - 1938

Boston Orchestra May Arrive For Annual Festival

Concert at Stockbridge, Mass., Tonight Will Open New Music Shed

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—(Special.)—One hundred members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, headed by their conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, arrived in the Berkshires today in anticipation of the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," Thursday night at 8:30 p. m.

The festival's new shed, built with funds contributed by music-lovers from all over the country, will be inaugurated at the opening concert. No ceremonies will mark the inauguration, as it is Dr. Koussevitzky's and the Festival's wish that the emphasis be placed on the music. There will be brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York, president of the Festival, and by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Orchestra.

The concert will open with the chorale and first chorus from "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by Bach, and then proceed to the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. More than 100 members of the Cecelia Chorus of Boston will sing, while soloists will be Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, basso.

As a preliminary to the concert, Olin Downes, New York critic, will deliver the first of a series of lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. He will discuss the evening's program.

Concerts will also be given on Saturday evening, August 6, Sunday afternoon, August 7, Thursday and Saturday evenings, August 11 and 13, and Sunday afternoon, August 14. Evening concerts are a[illegible] and afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

COLUMBIA, MO.
TRIBUNE

AUG 5 - 1938

Adairs Leave for East

James Adair, conductor of the Stephens College Symphony, left today for New York and Massachusetts where he will attend concerts of the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the next two weeks. Adair will also attend the Bennington Dance Festival next week where his wife, Mary Standring Adair, will appear in Hanya Holm's group in the current production in Bennington. Mrs. Adair is instructor in modern dane at Stephens and this is her third summer at Bennington. They will return September 1.

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 5 - 1938

SYMPHONIC FETE CALLED SUCCESS

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5.—AP—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Betthoven's long and sometimes, tortuous ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for 10 minutes.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 4 - 1938

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS TONIGHT IN STOCKBRIDGE

Audience of 6000 Expected to Hear Boston Symphony Orchestra

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 4 — By train, automobile and bus members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra poured into Berkshire yesterday preparatory to the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at 8.30.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived during the morning and went directly to the new shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, where late in the afternoon he waved his baton over the first rehearsal of of the orchestra in its new summer quarters.

There was little in the rehearsal of early season roughness, for the orchestra has just come from fresh triumphs on the Esplanade at Boston. The Cecelia Choir of Boston, which will take part in the opening concert, arrived today.

Nearly 6000 persons from all parts of the nation and many foreign countries will be in the audience when the festival opens with the playing and singing of the Bach cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." In fact the audience will be asked to revive an old custom and join in the singing. The first program will be completed with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Dedication exercises for the huge shed will be simple. Mrs. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Festival, will say a few words and Bentley W. Warren of Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will speak. That will be all.

The largest audience ever to attend a musical event in Berkshire is expected. Practically every one of the 3000 reserved seats has been sold, and more than 100 boxes which stretch across the huge building have been engaged. Unreserved seats are also nearly gone. The building seats 5700 but many more can be admitted by adding extra chairs.

The second concert will be Saturday night and the third in the first series Sunday afternon. The following week on the same days the second series will be given.

Rain Protection

Fair weather is predicted for the inaugural of the new music shed. But should it rain at Tanglewood, music lovers need have no apprehension. First of all, the shed, provides a soundproof and weatherproof roof. Secondly, a canvas covered walk will be provided through the stately Hawthorne Pines, right to the building. It will have a link connecting with the unloading platform at the parking field. Another canopy will extend to the entrance to be used by boxholders.

Well-known people in attendance will include Albert Spalding, eminent violinist; Norman H. Davis, America's ambassador-at-large and president of the National Red Cross; Sir Ernest MacMillan of Toronto, Canada; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra trustees; Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Mrs. Edward Harkness, of New York; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Miss Alice J. Clapp, of Washington; Newbold Morris, president of the New York City Council; Miss Mabel Choate; Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Owen Johnson; Rep. Allen T. Treadway; Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird; and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 4 - 1938

Berkshire Festival to Open Tonight

TANGLEWOOD-IN-THE-BERKSHIRES—One hundred members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra headed by their eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, arrived in the Berkshires in anticipation of the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" this evening at 8:30. The festival's new shed, built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country will be inaugurated at the opening concert.

As a preliminary to the opening, Olin Downes, New York critic, will deliver the first of a series of four lectures at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield this afternoon.

No elaborate ceremony will mark the inaugural of the shed. It is Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival's wish that the emphasis be placed on music. There will be brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival, and Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the orchestra. The concert will open with the chorale and chorus from "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by J. S. Bach. More than 100 members of the Cecilia Chorus of Boston which has sung many times with the orchestra will participate in the opening as well Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse, soloists. Adding to the festival spirit, the audience will be invited to join in singing one verse of the magnificent old Bach hymn.

Before the concert, Miss Robinson Smith will entertain at dinner for Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, one of the donors of "Tanglewood," and Mr. Warren, president of the orchestra. Other guests will include Mr. Brooks, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. August Belmont of New York, and Max Vivier of Paris and New York.

Mrs. Brooks has provided an inscription for the stone garden seat at "Tanglewood," which reads: "Given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamund Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, who lived here many years. 1937."

"Tanglewood" is where Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires and where he wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

The festival management indicated today that there would be a sell out of all reserved seats for the opening concert. There will be plenty of unreserved seats since extra chairs can be moved into the colonnade to the number of 3,000, if necessary.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1938

Audience Invited To Join Singing At Berkshire Festival

When Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood Thursday evening at 8:30 by playing J. S. Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," they will be reviving an old custom.

The audience estimated to fill the new shed to be inaugurated at this opening concert, will be invited to join with the chorus of the Cecilia Society of Boston in singing this hymn.

Bach composed the music to be sung with the orchestra by the choir and congregation of his church. And now for the first time in many years, concert goers will have an apportunity to participate actively in the singing. The first concert will close with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon.

Visitors From Many Points

Music lovers, musicians and many well-known people from all parts of America, Canada and Europe will be on hand for the inaugural of the shed, which has a seating capacity of 5,700. Those in attendance will include Albert Spalding, Norman H. Davis, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival; Sir Ernest MacMillan, Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra trustees; Charles O'Connell, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra; Mrs. Edward Harkness, Bentley Wirt Warren, Ernest B. Dane, Newbold Morris, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice; Owen Johnson; Congressman Allen T. Treadway and Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

Parking Arrangements

New parking arrangements will be in effect. All but boxholders and invalids will use the West St. (Lenox-Route 183) entrances. American Legion men under Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield will direct cars to the large parking areas. There is an unloading platform for the convenience of those wishing to use it. Boxholders and invalids will be permitted to drive to the southwest corner of the building. Their entrance will be by way of Hawthorne St.

The Thursday Morning Club will be in charge of the refreshment tent west of the shed, and not far from the entrance to the gardens.

All tickets will be removed from the Stockbridge office to the box office at Tanglewood at 6:30 p. m. Thursday evening. Reservations may be made before 6:30 by telephoning Stockbridge 400. After 6:30, reservations may be made by telephoning Lenox 51. They will be held until 8 p. m.

Fair weather is predicted but should it rain, the shed provides a sound-proof and weather-proof roof. Also, a canvas covered walk will be provided through the Hawthorne Pine to the building.

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD - NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

Over 6,000 Attended Recital At Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 5, (UP)—More than 6,000 persons attended the dedication of the new music shed at the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood last night.

Though not yet completed, musicians and engineers said the shed was remarkable for its acoustics. It is open on three sides, covers 1½ acres and seats 5,700.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsk conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Beethoven and Bach with interludes by the Cecilia Society Chorus.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1938

Tanglewood Tale

The elevation of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a high place of importance in the country's cultural life is the result of a process of growth and careful planning, rather than of faddish and sudden popularity. The series that opened at Tanglewood last night, provided in a way the climax of a movement that has crystalized in the foundation of the festival as a great musical spectacle that may be compared to that of Salzburg.

It has been pointed out that the affair at Lenox cannot truly be termed an American Salzburg, since the Continental program is underwritten by the state, whereas the one in the Berkshires is a private enterprise. In the distinction, however, lies the true qualification of the festival as "American."

The great symphony orchestras in this country, the opera, and other adventures into public music have traditionally depended on private subscription or other forms of private financial support. The American state has been hesitant in fostering the arts, with the exception of latter-day excursions into their province. Barring isolated exceptions, the arts have not suffered thereby, but rather have flourished more fully because of their more sympathetic attachments.

The spirit of the festival was rededicated last night with the dedication of the music shed at Tanglewood. (What, incidentally, could be more appropriate to the Americanism of the fete than the designation of its new mansion as a "music shed?") The program originated fittingly as music played for music lovers and the first series was almost extemporaneous, with the audience sitting in the open air on a Berkshire farm. It established the fact that a particular public wanted summer symphonic music, and the more ambitious plan of a symphonic fixture followed that demand.

This fifth series re-emphasizes the original intent of the festival—music played for music lovers. No world's fair or other highly publicized celebration brought Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony to Tanglewood. No extraneous influences contribute to the success of the festival; it is self-supporting and self-sufficient. Deserved congratulations are extended to the sponsors who envisioned it as an illustrious phase in the musical life of the Nation.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 4 - 1938

Society Folk Engage Boxes For Berkshire Music Fete

A GROUP of leading society folk and music lovers have taken boxes for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which will open tonight at Tanglewood with a program by the Boston Symphony Odchestra. Among the boxholders are Norman H. Davis, Mrs. Edward Harkness, Newbold Morris, Bentley W. Warren, Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Ernest B. Dane and Miss Mabel Choate.

Grenville L. Winthrop, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Owen Johnson, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs. W. E. S. Griswold, Edward A. Taft, Albert Spaulding, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. John S. Newberry, Miss Anna Alexandre, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane Jr., Heaton Ives Treadway, Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Paul D. Cravath, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Girard Foster and Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia.

Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Miss Mary Parsons, Philip Marshall Brown, Mrs. Norval H. Busey Jr., Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, Mrs. Edward Davis, Mrs. Stanley Denton, Mrs. Edward A. Jones, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Miss Ellen Bullard, Mrs. David T. Dana, Mrs. William Knapp and Henry D. Sawyer.

Mrs. A. D. Budd, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller, Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Bernhard Hoffman, Mrs. E. E. Whitney, Mrs. George H. Davenport, Mrs. Evelyn Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs and Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Flick.

Laurence R. Conner, John Sheppard Jr., Mrs. Harry Adams, Mrs. Marshall Bullitt, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. J. Graham Parsons, Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet, Alfred Granger, Mrs. Donald Weston, Miss Gertrude Walker, Mrs. Henry Ivison Parsons, Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers and Dr. Robert Metz and MLrs. Metz.

Mrs. George Rockwood, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur H. Lippincott, Daniel England, Edward H. Cranwell, James E. Leath, Miss Alice J. Clapp, Mrs. John Walters, Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald Warner, Mrs. Rodney Procter, Mr. and Mrs. Alan M. Limburg, Mrs. John A. Topping, Mrs. Frank C. Smith, Mrs. Edwards Spencer, David McAlpin, Mrs. Walter Jennings, Mrs. John C. Breckinridge and Mrs. Arnold Whitridge.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR

AUG 4 - 1938

MUSIC

By JON BYRON

An all-Tchaikovsky program will be presented at tne Stadium tonight with Mischa Elman playing the famous Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto..."Les Preludes", as recorded by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, merits a place in your musical library.

The Andre Kostelanetzes (she's Lily Pons, you know) now concert-izing in South America, are expected back late next month... The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., begins this evening. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program including Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with chorus and soloists.

Richard Bonelli, Met. baritone, is vacationing at his home in Lake Tahoe, Nev., between operatic engagements..."If you get terribly angry over something, go home and pound the piano," says Joseph Calleia, currently featured in "Algiers." As Mr. Calleia is an accomplished pianist and singer, perhaps he knows whereof he speaks. "Good music on the radio" is a second-best antidote.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.
SUN

AUG 4 - 1938

New Guest Conductor For S. D. Symphony Stirs Enthusiasm

CONSTANCE HERRESHOFF

The orchestra and all of the citizenry who have so far met Russell Ames Cook, of Boston, are enthusiastic about his likeable personality and his musical fitness for conducting tomorrow night's symphony concert in Ford Bowl.

"Is that the new conductor?" people asked when he appeared at a symphony party after Tuesday's concert. "Don't tell me that a man who looks like a polo player or something wealthy in mines is really a learned musician and conductor? The man laughs, too. From Boston, you say? Yet he doesn't look like Ralph Waldo Emerson."

Publicity sent out for Mr. Cook states that he comes from an old New England family and that "there is a certain refreshing directness in his conducting." Here, at last, is a handout that rings true. Mr. Cook radiated "refreshing directness" at the symphony party and at yesterday's rehearsal. The orchestra gave him a big hand afterward—another good sign.

Russell Ames Cook has had wide conducting experience in this country and in Europe. For the past eight years he has conducted the Symphonic Ensemble of Boston, composed entirely of members of the Boston Symphony. He lectures on music in Harvard's Graduate School of Education. He also conducts the Portland Symphony Orchestra.

120

ng Eagle
City Edition
2 P. M. Quotations
938. Aug. 4/38 32 Pages— Price Three Cents

Festival Opens Tonight at 8.30

Sellout Crowd Of 6000 Expected At Tanglewood

Unreserved Seats Available— Dr. Koussevitzky and Orchestra Rehearse With Chorus

A sellout for the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at 8.30 at Tanglewood was indicated this afternoon as community chairmen from far-flung areas and the general public telephoned, telegraphed and called in person at the office in Stockbridge and the booths in Pittsfield, Lenox and Great Barrington for tickets.

6000 Expected

It was estimated that close to 6000 people will be in the new shed when Serge Koussevitzky mounts the podium to give members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the signal to begin.

Reserved Seats Scarce

Although it will be difficult to buy two reserved seats together for tonight's concert, there will be plenty of unreserved seats. The Festival management has a great many extra benches available because of the purchase this year of individual chairs that have been placed in the front section and the boxes. These extra benches will be lined up near the building for use if needed.

Koussevitzky Pleased

Members of the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky were pleased beyond words at the close of the two and a half hour rehearsal yesterday afternoon. Prof. Richard Fay, acoustics consultant, was sitting in various parts of the shed as were members of the Festival and orchestra boards of trustees. The acoustics they said were "amazing." There was another rehearsal this afternoon with the Cecilia Chorus and the soloists who appear tonight. Like yesterday afternoon's rehearsal, the one this afternoon was closed to the public.

Willard M. Sistare and Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings in charge of the ushering and parking crew, said they were prepared to handle the crowd no matter how large it may be.

Box Office Moved

The box office of the Festival will move to Tanglewood at 6.30 tonight. After that hour all reserved seats and unreserved seats will be for sale there instead of at the Stockbridge office. Reservations also may be made through the Lenox, Pittsfield and Great Barrington booths.

TOLEDO, O.
BLADE

AUG 15 1938

BETWEEN FRIENDS

BY RUTH ELGUTTER

I REGRET not having been able to hear the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra but I am glad that during my few days in Boston recently I was able to hear two Esplanade concerts on the peaceful banks of the Charles River by some members of the same world-famed orchestra . . . These concerts, given annually on hot summer nights, are something to hear—and not only because of the excellence of the music . . . A shell for the musicians is the only structure. The audience sits on chairs rented for 10 cents a piece for the evening or stands for an hour and a half to hear the finest music it is possible to hear. Do Bostonians and visitors take advantage of this treat? One of the two nights I was there the crowd was estimated at more than 20,000. On the next night it threatened rain but the audience was at least half of that number. Shortly after the program opened rain began to fall. But few persons left. Some who had come prepared opened their umbrellas and put on their rain coats and sat on. Others just sat in the rain, apparently heedless of any discomfort, in the pleasure they were getting out of the music. To the left was the smoothly-flowing Charles River; to the right the aristocratic Back Bay section of the historic city, but ahead of them was music and whether there were stars or clouds overhead seemed to matter little.

* * *

The audience itself was interesting. In it were seen just about every type of person from the cultured student of music to the collarless laboring man—and the latter seemed to predominate. Mothers came with small children but there were no disturbances. Boys came whose conversation showed greater familiarity with the swing of Benny Goodman than with the classics of Arthur Feidler, but they remained through the program. Some faces betrayed recent coming to this country; others looked as if their ancestors were among those who had come early to these shores to prepare the way for later seekers of freedom. But all were united in their enjoyment of the music offered in ideal setting free for all who would hear.

---

handled by a detail of State Police headed by Lieut. John Sullivan, of the Northampton barracks.

the colonnade were turned on and off, thus succeeding in reaching the furthest wanderers.

120

ng Eagle

City Edition
2 P. M. Quotations

938. Aug. 4/38 32 Pages— Price Three Cents

Festival Opens Tonight at 8.30

Sellout Crowd Of 6000 Expected At Tanglewood

Unreserved Seats Available— Dr. Koussevitzky and Orchestra Rehearse With Chorus

A sellout for the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at 8.30 at Tanglewood was indicated this afternoon as community chairmen from far-flung areas and the general public telephoned, telegraphed and called in person at the office in Stockbridge and the booths in Pittsfield, Lenox and Great Barrington for tickets.

6000 Expected

It was estimated that close to 6000 people will be in the new shed when Serge Koussevitzky mounts the podium to give members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the signal to begin.

Reserved Seats Scarce

Although it will be difficult to buy two reserved seats together for tonight's concert, there will be plenty of unreserved seats. The Festival management has a great many extra benches available because of the purchase this year of individual chairs that have been placed in the front section and the boxes. These extra benches will be lined up near the building for use if needed.

Koussevitzky Pleased

Members of the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky were pleased beyond words at the close of the two and a half hour rehearsal yesterday afternoon. Prof. Richard Fay, acoustics consultant, was sitting in various parts of the shed as were members of the Festival and orchestra boards of trustees. The acoustics they said were "amazing." There was another rehearsal this afternoon with the Cecilia Chorus and the soloists who appear tonight. Like yesterday afternoon's rehearsal, the one this afternoon was closed to the public.

Willard M. Sistare and Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings in charge of the ushering and parking crew, said they were prepared to handle the crowd no matter how large it may be.

Box Office Moved

The box office of the Festival will move to Tanglewood at 6.30 tonight. After that hour all reserved seats and unreserved seats will be for sale there instead of at the Stockbridge office. Reservations also may be made through the Lenox, Pittsfield and Great Barrington booths.

---

handled by a detail of State Police, headed by Lieut. John Sullivan, of the Northampton barracks.

the colonnade were turned on and off, thus succeeding in reaching the furthest wanderers.

TOLEDO, O.
BLADE

AUG 15 1938

BETWEEN FRIENDS

—BY RUTH ELGUTTER—

I REGRET not having been able to hear the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra but I am glad that during my few days in Boston recently I was able to hear two Esplanade concerts on the peaceful banks of the Charles River by some members of the same world-famed orchestra . . . These concerts, given annually on hot summer nights, are something to hear—and not only because of the excellence of the music . . . A shell for the musicians is the only structure. The audience sits on chairs rented for 10 cents a piece for the evening or stands for an hour and a half to hear the finest music it is possible to hear. Do Bostonians and visitors take advantage of this treat? One of the two nights I was there the crowd was estimated at more than 20,000. On the next night it threatened rain but the audience was at least half of that number. Shortly after the program opened rain began to fall. But few persons left. Some who had come prepared opened their umbrellas and put on their rain coats and sat on. Others just sat in the rain, apparently heedless of any discomfort, in the pleasure they were getting out of the music. To the left was the smoothly-flowing Charles River; to the right the aristocratic Back Bay section of the historic city, but ahead of them was music and whether there were stars or clouds overhead seemed to matter little.

* * *

The audience itself was interesting. In it were seen just about every type of person from the cultured student of music to the collarless laboring man—and the latter seemed to predominate. Mothers came with small children but there were no disturbances. Boys came whose conversation showed greater familiarity with the swing of Benny Goodman than with the classics of Arthur Feidler, but they remained through the program. Some faces betrayed recent coming to this country; others looked as if their ancestors were among those who had come early to these shores to prepare the way for later seekers of freedom. But all were united in their enjoyment of the music offered in ideal setting free for all who would hear.

(121)

Today's News Today
Tonight—Cloudy, Cooler
Tomorrow—Partly Cloudy
Full Report Page 1, Second Section
Radio Programs on Last Page

The Berkshire Evening Eagle

State Edition
11.30 A. M. Quotations

Volume 45—No. 66
Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Friday, August 5, 1938.
22 Pages— Price Three Cents

6000 People Attend Festival Opening

3000 Cars Jammed Into Tanglewood Parking Areas

SOR Sign Hung Out Half Hour Before Concert Time—Crowd Overcoatless

Six thousand people in three thousand cars came from Massachusetts and Michigan, Connecticut and California, New York and Nevada to hear Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood last night.

(Cont. above left. *)

Stirring Concert

They left the echoes of twelve thousand clapping hands in the girders of the new music shed; they left a thousand pop bottles on the lawn, a thousand rumpled programs on the hard dirt floor, a thousand ruts in the sand of the roads and the mud of the fields. And left with the six thousand was the memory of a stirring concert by Dr. Koussevitzky and his white-coated musicians; the memory of one hundred men and women becoming for the moment, "Schiller's great voice calling all nations to brotherhood"; the memory of the sharp hum of six thousand voices between movements of the Beethoven Ninth, of six thousand people rising to their feet when Dr. Koussevitzky made his first entrance.

Moon in Harmony

There were a few empty chairs under the cavernous roof of the music shed, but there were more than enough to fill them outside on the benches under the sky or stretched on the lawn between the shed and the house, 200 yards away. The moon did its best to co-operate and for the earlier part of the evening succeeded in silver-plating Stockbridge Bowl off to the south, but the clouds won in the end.

Cont. above left.

No record was kept of the arrival of the first car, but by 7 o'clock, just an hour and a half before Dr. Koussevitzky entered the stage, about a hundred cars were being parked by Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and his 45 hardworking Legionnaires.

It developed that the crowd was practically overcoatless. Out of 6000 people, just six availed themselves of the coat-checking facilities provided at each of the outer corners of the shed. Though not overburdened with extra clothing, the 6000 worked up a thirst which taxed the linear capacity of the refreshment stand conducted by the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington with the aid of a corps of volunteer ice-cream-servers and bottle-openers.

First Aid Service

Fortunately Miss Marion Woodbury, director of nursing service for the Berkshire Health District, didn't have much business in the first aid station set up in the former Tappen home. She had one request for aspirin, which she denied and offered baking soda as a substitute; and one appeal for treatment from a woman who had burned her hand when a box of matches caught fire. One man, Charles C. Dailey, 25, of Lenox, was overcome by the heat and was carried out on the lawn where he was treated by Dr. Alexander Young of Pittsfield. He was later taken home by friends. The two wheelchairs provided for emergency use were taken over, when it appeared they would not be needed, by two unidentified, healthy young women.

Continued on 10th Page

Record Crowd Attends 1938 Festival Opening

Continued From First Page

Sheriff McIntyre, his assistant, Deputy Sheriff Fred N. Cummings, and their squad of volunteer traffic officers from the Pittsfield, Dalton, Stockbridge, and Lee Legion posts, did yeoman work when the crowd poured out of the shed at the close of the concert. Mud in several of the parking areas mired hundreds of cars. The tractor of the town of Stockbridge chugged busily about, pulling out one load after another, but countless other cars were pushed out to hard ground by the Legionnaires.

Traffic on West Street was handled by a detail of State Police headed by Lieut. John Sullivan, of the Northampton barracks.

Anxiety for Fourth Estate

Press headquarters in the Tappan house had a bad few moments just before the concert started when the delivery car carrying the typewriters was caught in a traffic jam and the copy paper failed to arrive. Both necessities arrived in time for use by those of the 91 newspapermen attending who had to file stories for the morning papers. Western Union had four code operators on hand to send out the yards of copy pulled out of the clicking typewriters.

The SRO sign at the ticket windows was hung out half an hour before concert-time and a special rate made for standing room.

Willard M. Sistare of Pittsfield and his army of ushers kept traffic moving rapidly inside the shed so that when the lights were dimmed for the start of the concert almost the entire audience had been seated. Those arriving after the Bach Chorus were asked not to take their seats until the break.

As a signal for the end of the 15-minute intermission, the lights in the colonnade were turned on and off, thus succeeding in reaching the furthest wanderers.

122

Magnificent Concert Opens Festival Home

Berkshire Eagle - Aug. 5/38

Inaugural Performance Augurs Well for Useful Future of Tanglewood Building

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival's impressive new home was dedicated last night when for the opening concert of this—the fifth annual festival—Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of perfect appropriateness, the Chorus and Chorale from the Bach Cantata "Ein' feste burg is unser Gott" and the Beethoven ninth symphony. The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. The chorus was the Cecilia Society of Boston of which Arthur Fiedler is conductor.

Magnificent Performance

If the magnificence of the performance is any indication, it augurs well for the useful future of the structure which was conceived and built since the close of last year's festival, the first on the magnificent estate which Mrs. Gorham Brooks gave to the Boston Symphony Society.

The history of the Berkshire Festival is short but packed with thrills in its swift progress from the first under-the-moon concerts to the present programs being given in the steel-framed shed, beautiful in its austere lines and stark proportions. With money raised by a far-seeing art-welcoming populace the new edifice has been prepared to seat and accommodate the steadily increasing numbers of people who have been attracted by the artistic standards which have been maintained. There has been no lack of coordination, for the zeal and energy of the founders and the workers has found Koussevitzky and the orchestra on the artistic side equally eager and ambitious.

Merited Reward

The culmination last night of a year spent in vigorously active effort was a merited reward for the Festival's officers and co-workers. When Koussevitzky raised his baton for the first note of the Bach chorus, some 6000 people came to an expectant hush. The hugest audience ever to attend a Festival concert had started arriving early, but the numbers of cars quite overwhelmed the plans the parking committee had worked out and in desperation the last hundred cars was shunted off to a section of the terrain which had last year served as the site of the tent, a section which no one had anticipated being obliged to use. This will undoubtedly be remedied before Saturday evening's concert, but the last few to arrive were deprived of a part of the Bach.

The building is in the shape of a huge fan. The ribs of the steel girders of the roof irradiate from a point above and behind the stage which is in effect a large sounding board. Mid-way on the parterre is a crescent of boxes which divides the seating classifications. The tremendous crowd was loath to take their seats, however. They milled to and fro, glamorous personages mixing with the proletariat, to explore the grounds and the new building with curiosity and to search the crowds inquisitively.

Once the lights over the audience were extinguished Koussevitsky appeared to lead his men and the chorus in the Bach Chorale, but his entrance was the signal for a demonstration which, for exuberance, was only exceeded by the ovation he received at the final note of the symphony. As he stepped up on the podium, Richard Burgin, the concertmaster of the orchestra, came to his feet and he was immediately joined by all the other men of ths orchestra and the chorus and then in turn, the audience. It was both a tribute to the man and the orchestra he has developed to its enviable position and to the spirit of the occasion. The Berkshire Festivals are no longer local ventures, if they ever were. They are outstanding events in the world of music, not alone of their uniquely beautiful setting, but because the artistic standards have constantly been raised until they represent now an exalted position in the field of music.

Orchestra's Third Year

This is the third year the Boston orchestra has played here with their peerless leader, and the programs of last night's concert and of the five still to come represent no compromise with the surroundings nor the season. Indeed the actual existence of the awe-inspiring new shelter proves that the conditions have been altered to meet the requirements of the artistic achievements and so last night's program marks the paradoxical realization of two parallel forces working in perfect concord and understanding of purpose to arrive at a common goal.

For the "Weihe des Hauses" Koussevitsky turned to the scriptures of music, Johann Sebastian Bach's Chorales, and we think it was a profoundly touching moment when Koussevitsky turned to face the audience and indicated to them that they should join their voices with those of the chorus on the stage for the consecration of the hall. The music itself was not particularly moving, but the occasion could not have failed to impress anyone in the audience. It was one of those moments when music takes command of its natural empire, the noblest emotions of men, and if music does have the power to raise a mortal to the skies or draw the angels down, it was exerting all its magic then.

The virile melody "Ein fest Burg," if reminiscent of Gregorian material, is generally attributed to Martin Luther, who stands preeminent among the writers whose work enriched evangelical hymnody. The Reformation introduced congregational singing a century before Bach's day.

"Calling All Nations"

Between the two parts from the Bach Cantata Gertrude Robinson Smith, the president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra read short papers on the dedication of the Shed, but the short sentence which Koussevitsky added, seemingly without pre-arrangement, was a dramatic interpolation. He shouted, in no uncertain terms nor in weak voice "I have selected Beethoven's ninth symphony, not only because it is the greatest masterpiece in musical literature, but because I wanted to hear the voice of Tanglewood singing Schiller's words calling all nations to the brotherhood of man."

The symphony was played after intermission, and we can think of nothing more in agreement with the spirit of the occasion. The majesty of the music and the poise and breadth with which Koussevitsky took the first movement was marvellously in keeping with the colossal scope of the work and the dignity of the evening. It also served to emphasize the success of the acoustic properties of the hall. The dynamic variations of the flexible orchestra were heard with perfect sensitiveness. In the last movement the cello theme played with unbelievable restraint carried to all parts of the auditorium with glorious effect, and in the fortissimo climax of the whole orchestra which comes to such an abrupt stop just before the initial entrance of the baritone solo, there was absolutely no suspicion of an echo. Two more severe tests could not have been devised.

Although Beethoven worked on this symphony for many years it was his intention to make it completely instrumental as were all his others. It was only after it was practically completed that he decided to use the Schiller "Ode to Joy." As a matter of fact his notebooks show that at one time he contemplated using some lines from the Ode as the basis for an overture, but he now discarded the original finale and inserted the one which made use of voices. He could know at the time that he was writing his last symphony. His hearing had become so bad when it was first performed, in 1824, that the famous incident occurred in which someone had to tap him on the shoulder to indicate that he should turn around to acknowledge the applause of the audience.

The London Philharmonic Society had commissioned a symphony from Beethoven and had even advanced a sum of money as an earnest of their order. The fact that the performance took place in Vienna has always been a point in the composer's career which did not bear too close scrutiny.

Great Dramatic Finale

The virtuosity of the orchestra permitted the conductor to take the scherzo at a genuine vivace pace without sacrificing clarity and crispness, and when the lovely trio arrived he brought in the 'celli with astoundingly contrasting singing legato. The slow movement showed off the sustained tone of which the orchestra is capable, and here, too, the tonal balance was conspicuously beautiful. The great Finale is one of music's high points. The proclamation of the 'celli after a short phrase by the brass is as dramatic as if the words were being enunciated, and then, after short phrases, reminiscent of the themes of the preceding movements, comes the principal theme, again given to the eloquent 'celli and basses in unison. This theme is driven home with several repetitions and then, after a tumultuous episode by the whole orchestra, comes an ominous silence, whereupon the baritone, Norman Cordon, is heard repeating the earlier proclamation of the 'celli. "O friends," he cries with his powerful, fine voice, "these tones no longer, raise your voices and sing in glad free measure," which is the real beginning of the choral movement. Beethoven does not use the complete Freudenlied, but he provides so many varied settings for the text, all within the confines of this unbroken movement, that, emotionally, he seems to exhaust the possibilities of the theme. Miss Vreeland's experience and familiarity with the score was very evident, and her splendid voice was heard to excellent advantage. The chorus made its entrances decisively, its attacks clean, and its pitch was uniformly true. Its tone showed wide variations both of dynamics and of expressiveness. The mighty conclusion of this movement and of the symphony evoked surges of applause which continual reappearances of Koussevitzky, both alone and with the soloists, and once with Mr. Fiedler, would not satisfy, and it was only after a gesture indicating a plea for mercy that the audience started to leave.

A Glance at the Future

This fifth year of the Berkshire Festival marks the achievement of a goal of strides in seven-league boots. The new hall, still very much al fresco is as good, for all practical summer purposes, as a closed building. The new structure is a bit to the south of the site used last year for the erection of the canvas shelter. What the future holds is not yet divulged, but plans are not lacking, nor is courage or foresight or inspiration. With the present equipment and any developments which may seem necessary, there is no limit to the possibilities, and so long as the present artistic level is maintained there is every justification for progress, for public approval and support is assured.

B. Globe - Aug. 5/38

6000 at Opening Concert Of Fifth Berkshire Festival

Special Dispatch to the Globe

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—An audience said to number more than 6000 attended the first concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood estate tonigiht, when the newly erected music shed was dedicated.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program that assembled the first chorus and a chorale from the church cantata, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," by J. S. Bach, and the ninth symphony of Beethoven. The choral finale of the symphony, a setting of Schiller's poetic "Ode To Joy," was sung by the Cecilia Society of Boston, Arthur Fiedler conductor. The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Athone, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass.

Nearly every state in the union was represented in the audience, and there were visitors from outside the United States. The huge throng gathered early at Tanglewood and walked about observing the beauties of the grounds, which overlook Lake Makheenac. The weather, though hot and sultry during the day, was nicely cool by the time the concert began.

Tribute Paid Hadley

After the chorus from Bach's cantata had been sung, there were dedicatory speeches by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Smith paid tribute to the late Henry Hadley, the musician who, she said, had a dream of the Berkshires as "an ideal spot for symphonic music," under the moon and stars. She briefly summarized the history of previous festivals here, and said that the new music shed is not complete in some details of ornamentation. She added that the festival needs $58,000 to carry out plans for landscaping the grounds, for various decorative work and other purposes. Miss Smith paid tribute, also, to the conductor, trustees and personnel of the Boston Symphony, and to Mr. Warren, whom she introduced.

Warren Hopes for School

"With such a result of only three years of cooperation between the two organizations," said Mr. Warren in the course of his address, "who can predict how great may be the contribution of Berkshire to the musical culture of America.

"It is the hope of our conductor—a hope, I am happy to say, shared by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra—that the annual festival may be suplemented by a school or academy holding annual session, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and separate instrumentalists. Tanglewood is the ideal location for such a school."

Mr. Warren called upon Dr Koussevitzky to speak. The conductor graciously responded.

"On a day of such significance in musical life, I select to give the ninth symphony not only because it is the greatest masterpiece in musical literature, but also so we may hear the voice of Schiller inviting nations to brotherhood."

Audience Sings

At the conclusion of the speeches, the audience was invited to sing, with the orchestra, the marvelous chorals from Bach's cantata, a chorale now familiar to many as a church hymn. The sound of the great gathering as they sang, was one of the impressive points of the evening.

The new shed, open at the sides, has been remarked upon by musicians and acoustical experts for the excellence of its acoustics. In appearance, its light buff structure against the blue of sky and green of trees provides an attractive spectacle.

Once again Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the music of Bach and Beethoven with that depth, intensity and perfection of detail that are so amiliar to audiences who hear him and his peerless orchestra elsewhere.

Lenox and the surrounding towns are filled with visitors. Many citizens of this locality are assisting the Festival association.

A sorrowful touch marred the evening in the sudden death of John J. Kiley, for five years a selectman of Lenox. Mr. Kiley, who was to have occupied a box with his fellow office holders as guests of the Festival, dropped dead, reportedly from effects of the hot weather, as he was preparing to leave for Tanglewood.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 5 - 1938

MUSIC FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES DRAWS 6,000

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Thrilling Program as Annual Event Opens at Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Bethoven's long and sometimes tortuous ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for ten minutes.

The performance, was, however, only the logical outcome of an unusual policy, rigidly adhered to.

For one thing, Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony Hall, Boston, through the winter.

For another, he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts. Each is prepared with the greatest care. There are no soloists glittering with Hollywood fame and short on musical gift, and no traps for the tourist.

Fine Acoustics

And there is no amplification, because the acoustics of the new shed carry the lightest tone to the remotest corner.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

The festival resumes Saturday night with a Haydn-DeBussy-Sibelius program. When the first half closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

The only soloists to be heard throughout the festival are the quartet which sang the Ninth Symphony last night: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; and Norman Gordon, bass. These proved themselves excellent, rising with the Cecilia Society's chorus of Boston to the heights inhabited by Dr. Koussevitzky.

BOSTONIANS ARRIVE EARLY FOR FESTIVAL

Estate Donor Included in Notable Audience

By MARJORY WATTS

SOUTHBRIDGE, Aug. 4—More than 40 acres of ticket holders made a memorable opening audience for the 5th annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight, gathering by moonlight and Kleig light to christen the great fan-shaped $82,000 music shed that looks like a preview of a world's fair building, its sleek stream-lined crescent set off by the famed Tanglewood pines that still mark the Higginson and Bullard boundaries of the great estate given the Festival last year by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline.

Mrs. Brooks and her daughter Daphine were among the many prompt Boston arrivals tonight, Mrs. Brooks in a good looking confetti colored print, her pretty dark haired daughter back after an unsuccessful afternoon attempt to visit the new shed.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane drove over just behind Dr. and Mrs. Kousesevitsky from the Berkshire Hunt and Country Club, where a score of early dinners marked the important first night of the Festival. Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreyfus were also among the Boston colony driving over from the big rambling club house. Mrs. Dreyfus trailing a decorative flower-printed taffeta through the fire-fly lighted grass which soaked many a fragile silver slipper.

Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller was among the Boston hostesses at dinner in the handsome high ceilinged dining room of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, pink and white peas at the shoulder of her royal blue chiffon gown, diamonds in her beautiful high piled hair. Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs was among her dinner guests, coming on to share Mrs. Fuller's festival box, her corsage also of sweet peas pinned to a cool eyelet organdie of ice blue.

Mr. Bentley W. Warren, president of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony, had in his box party his son-in-law, Danforth Geer, and a smal grandson, and another large box party was that of Mr. Edward A. Taft, who entertained Mr. and Mrs. James Dean, Miss Dorothea Dean and Mr. and Mrs. Edward MacNichol and Mr. Robert Parkinson. Mrs. Dean wore a necklace of magnificent emeralds with her lovely grey lace gown, and Miss Dean's purple maribou cape set off a suave chartreuse color crepe. Mrs. MacNichol wore backless pleated white.

NEW YORK TIMES, FRIDAY, AUGUST 5

BERKSHIRES OPEN MUSIC FESTIVAL

6,000 at Tanglewood Hear the Beethoven Ninth Symphony Played by Boston Group

NEW SHED IS DEDICATED

Serge Koussevitzky Directs the Initial Performance of Series of Six Concerts

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—With Beethoven's Ninth Symphony sounding its tremendous theme of joy and the brotherhood of man, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its fifth year here at Tanglewood tonight. The prevailing mood was a blend of realization and aspiration; realization because one of America's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony, headed by Serge Koussevitzky, was here once again, this time to dedicate the new music shed, and aspiration because the hope and the auguries point to growth of national significance.

More than ever the festival appeared to have caught the public's imagination. Hours before concert time every one of the 5,600-odd seats under the new shed was sold and hundreds of additional chairs had to be placed under the colonnade that circles the shed, in all more than 6,000. The perfect evening, soft and with a gentle breeze, helped to bring the crowd. The temper of the audience, moreover, was festive, as befits a Summer festival. Here was great music superlatively played in verdant surroundings that could only intensify the emotional impact.

Music Shed Dedicated

Tonight's program was more than a launching of the series of six concerts that are to be presented here this week-end and next. It was a dedication of the music shed; it was a celebration of immense but solid progress made in five years; it was a glimpe into a future that may make this festival the peer of famous European contemporaries.

Dr. Koussevitzky built tonight's program so that it would match the excitement of the occasion. It began with the first chorus from the Bach cantata, "Ein-Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

After dedicatory remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival Corporation; by Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra, and by Dr. Koussevitzky, the audience was invited to join in the singing of the chorale from the Bach cantata.

Then came the symphony, with Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass, as the soloists, and with the Cecilia Society of Boston, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, providing the chorus.

History of Fete Given

Miss Robinson Smith sketched briefly the history of the festival, from its inception under the late Henry Hadley's direction in 1934; through the first participation by the Boston symphony and Mr. Koussevitzky in 1936; the frist use of Tanglewood, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks as a permanent home last year; to the dedication of the shed tonight.

She pointed out that the festival sought to aid "culture by individual patronage and support" and that the "operation of the concerts is self-sustaining through the sale of tickets." She added, however, that $58,000 was still needed to carry out immediate plans—for beautifying the grounds, covering steel pillars with fluted columns, providing permanent lighting of the parking fields, installing iron roll curtatins for the sides of the shed and other needs.

Mr. Warren stressed the hope for the future. Citing the result of three years of cooperation between festival and orchestra groups, he asked, "who can predict how great may be the contribution of Berkshire to the musical culture of America?"

He observed that it was the hope of Dr. Koussevitzky, a hope shared by festival and orchestra, that the annual festival "may become a music center of the first importance and that it may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and separate instrumentalists."

School May Open in 1940

Mr. Warren indicated that detailed arrangements for the school may be completed in time to hold a first session in 1940. He suggested that the greatest need will be for scholarships, "indispensable because many of the most promising students are themselves without the means to pay the cost of the higher and specialized instruction for which their talents will qualify them."

"The opportunity," Mr. Warren ended, "transcends by far any local limits of Boston and the Berkshires. Happily the music lovers assembled here constitute no merely local audience. Surely many will agree with Dr. Koussevitzky as to the national value of the musical enterprise that he envisions. May not Tanglewood concerts become historic, as forerunners of a great artistic and educational reality—the establishment of an outstanding Summer musical center for this country."

Dr. Koussevitzky was not expected to speak. But he greeted the audience, then gave two reasons why Beethoven's Ninth had been chosen. First, "because it is the greatest work in musical literature"; second, "because Tanglewood could, through Schiller's ode to joy, call all nations to brotherhood."

As for the new music shed, it may be pronounced an unmitigated success. It has grace and lightness. The sides are open and from every seat one can look out on trees, grass, hills and sky. In the distance are the hills that lifted up the heart of Hawthorne who lived and worked at Tanglewood for a time.

Acoustics Are Praised

As a concert auditorium, it may be pronounced after one hearing, a complete success. The acoustics, through the work of Architect Eliel Saarinen and Engineers Joseph Franz and Richard F. Fay and through the [illegible] of chance, are perfect. The finest grained pianissimo of the strings was heard with clarity and balance of tone in the rear, at the sides and even under the colonnade.

The fan-shaped structure, which covers an acre and a half of ground and which seats more than 5,600 persons with an additional 3,000 under the colonnades, was cannily designed so that it has an air of intimacy.

The simplicity of the building with its bare, beautiful steel framework commended it to tonight's assemblage.

The shed, moreover, is built so that expansion, especially backstage, is possible. For Dr. Koussevitzky hopes to bring opera into the festival orbit. The present stage has the same size and shape as the one in Symphony Hall, Boston, but there is ample room for construction of all that is needed for opera. Of the opening performances there will be space and time to comment in another dispatch. More important tonight was the brilliance of the new start, the manner in which the public rallied to the festival and the excitement in the Berkshires, exemplified by the taking up of all available tourist space in a radius of more than twenty-five miles.

Finally, there was no need to fear a repetition of last year's holocaust when a terrific storm wrought havoc with Wagner's elemental music. The shed guaranteed protection from sun and rain. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men could guarantee the rest.

QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

AUG 5 - 1938

LENOX, Aug. 5 (UP)—More than 6000 persons attended the dedication of the new music shed at the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood last night.

Though not yet completed, musicians and engineers said the shed was remarkable for its acoustics. It is open on three sides, covers 1½ acres and seats 5700.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in a [illegible] of Beethoven and Bach with vocal interludes by the Cecilia Society chorus.

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 5 - 1938

FIRST CONCERT HELD

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—(UP)—More than 6,000 persons attended the dedication of the new music shed at the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood last night.

Though not yet completed, musicians and engineers said the shed was remarkable for its acoustics. It is open on three sides, covers 1 1-2 acres and seats 5,700.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston symphony orchestra in a program of Beethoven and Bach with vocal interludes by the Cecilia Society chorus.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
Aug. 5/38

MUSIC PRAISED IN TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Leads Fine Orchestra in New, Permanent Shed

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

The moon and stars that hung over fabled Tanglewood Estates last evening moved closer down to hear great music that made the night more perfect.

It was Beethoven's mighty Ninth that pulsed out from under the shell of the gigantic bivalve-shaped music shed which was being dedicated as the fifth season of the Berkshire Music Festival was begun under the scrupulous and flawless leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

The placid village of Lenox, Mass., had taken on the air of the famed art centers of Europe as myrads of music lovers from near and far overran the picturesque environs. Automobile parking on the fields adjacent to the newly completed music shed became a problem, and the audience, estimated at near 6,000, overflowed by that extent the 5,000 odd seating capacity.

First of Six Programs

The first of the six concert programs constituting the 1938 festival was as much a spectacle as it was an event of pure musical grandeur. The listeners hitherto accustomed to a tented auditorium if they had attended previous Berkshire festivals, were acclimating themselves to the spacious new permanent shelter.

The orchestra and chorus occupied the white sound-box at the apex and the audience spread out fanwise in front. The sides were open to the night, and this airy aspect, coupled with the bare steel framework overhead, gave the semblance of a huge airplane hangar.

Immediately the opening strains of Bach were intoned, it became apparent that the Tanglewood Music Shed was ideally engineered from an acoustical viewpoint. The softest muted strings sent their message clearly into the far reaches of the auditorium.

Choral Complement

The full Boston Orchestra was complemented by its choral subsidiary, the Cecilia Society, whose conductor is Arthur Fieldler. Besides the magnificent blending of vocal and instrumental music in the fourth movement of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony, the superbly trained chorus assisted in the two Bach excerpts which embodied the first half of the program. These were the first chorus and chorale from the cantata, "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott." At the spoken invitation of Dr. Koussevitzky, the audience joined in singing the familiar chorale, thereby producing a massive cathedral effect.

Beethoven's culminating symphony, the only one to combine choral music with instrumentation, seemed to borrow scope from its surroundings. Through such a tree-clad landscape might the immortal Ludwig have strolled, deaf and moody, while composing the masterwork.

Perfect Unity Attained

Seldom has such perfect unity been attained between voices, strings, wind and percussion instruments, as flowed under the baton of Koussevitzky. Solo and quartet passages were fluently rendered by Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, baritone.

Dedicatory remarks were made by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival; Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky. Miss Smith skwetched in brief the five-year history of the festival, terming it the realization of a dream conceived by the late Henry Hadley. The furious storm which last year ruined one of the concerts under the makeshif music tent was actually a "blessing in disguise," she asserted, because it speeded plans for a permanent shelter to defy the elements. She called attention to the fact that the festival organization is still in need of donations totalling $58,000 to complete its development plans for the immediate future.

Numerous Albany license plates were on the parking lot last night, testifying to the magnetic hold this annual event has obtained upon music fanciers of the Capital District.

The second concert, tomorrow night at 8:30, will include Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No. 99; Debussy's symphonic sketches, "La Mer," and the first Sibelius symphony. Subsequent concerts will be given Sunday afternoon at 2:30, next Thursday and Saturday evenings, and the following Sunday afternoon.

THRONG TO BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Front Page

Music Lovers Attend Opening Concert at "Tanglewood"

B. Post — Aug. 5/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—One came away from this evening's opening concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival singing the praises not only of Dr. Koussevitzky, Bach and Beethoven, but of three men of science who made it possible for an audience of 6000 to realize to the fullest what these musicians and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Cecilia Society chorus, and the four solo singers had done and were doing for them.

These men of science, the real heroes of the occasion, are the fashioners of the new music shed: Eliel Saarinen, who drew the tentative plans; Joseph Franz, who made the detailed drawing, and Professor Fay of M. I. T., who had charge of the acoustics.

We have been hearing a lot of music in the open these later years and never to complete satisfaction. With amplifiers there is distortion, without them there are loud spots here and fadeouts there.

Reviewers of music have protested that indoors and indoors alone may symphonic music be heard as its composers intended it should be heard, with nothing exaggerated and nothing lost.

But the new music shed at Tanglewood, the symphony orchestra's summer home, near Stockbridge, seems to be different. As Dr. Koussevitzky and his players were beginning the first movement of Beethoven's ninth symphony, this observer stod in the centre of the collonnade which surrounds the fan-shaped shed, at a spot said to be 160 feet from the stage, and the orchestral tone was as satisfying as it had proved during two numbers from Bach's cantata, "A mughty Fortress Is Our God," as heard from a seat in a particularly choce location.

Sounds as It Should

And while walking away from the shed toward the parking space for the hundreds, if not thousands, of cars, Beethoven's music still sounding very much as it should continued to fill the air.

There was incident aplenty this evening. After the singing of the first chorous from Bachs' Cantata, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc.; Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, and finally Dr. Koussevitzky himself made dedicatory remarks.

Alhough the new shed seems quite satisfactory as it stands, there is much yet to be done, and Miss Smith states that another $58,000 would be necessary to complete the work.

For example, while it is intended that the shed will remain open at the sides to give the illusion of music heard out of doors, the projected iron roll curtains, to be dropped in case of storm, are still missing. It is to be hoped, then, that this evening's pleasant weather will be on hand for the remaining five concerts.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

AUG 5 - 1938

123

5th Berkshire Festival at 'Tanglewood'

Symphonic Program Opens, with Music and Equipment Unique Among American Summer Ventures

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4. (AP).—Before more than a capacity crowd of music lovers, the fifth Berkshire symphonic festival opened tonight at "Tanglewood" near here with music and equipment unique among all American summer music ventures.

Serge Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, led that unexcelled body of musicians through a program consisting of two works of J. S. Bach and Beethoven's great choral symphony, which ends with a setting of Schiller's "Ode of Joy."

The "Ode of Joy" seemed especially appropriate with the performances close to perfection in the new "music shed."

Thanks to a combination of scientific planning and good luck the "shed's acoustics were amazing. The lightest piannissimo could be heard, undistorted, in the farthest reaches. One could sit on the stone of the "mansion house"—300 yards away—and hear perfectly. No amplification was needed.

The $800,000 shed was opened with a chorus from Bach's cantata "Ein Fest Ist Unser Gott," the singers being the Cecilia society of Boston.

The choral from the same cantata followed and after an intermission came the Beethoven ninth symphony with the Cecelia society and Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anne Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, bass, as soloists.

"Tanglewood," home of the concerts, is th gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony, and its setting is probably the handsomest owned by any festival in the country. Except for the "shed" and parking provisions, the 210 acres, including the gardens, have been left undisturbed.

It was here that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," "The Wonder Books" and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

Bentley W. Warren, president of the symphony, tonight suggested to the audience that in future seasons the purely orchestral character of the festival might be changed to include an orchestra school.

There will be other concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon and on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of next week.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1938

SYMPHONY IN FIRST CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Brings Crowd Of 6000 To Its Feet

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

Cont. above right

An audience of 6000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for 10 minutes.

The performance was, however, only the logical outcome of an unusual policy, rigidly adhered to.

For one thing, Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony hall, Boston, through the winter.

For another, he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts. Each is prepared with the greatest care. There are no soloists glittering with Hollywood fame and short on musical gift, and no traps for the tourist.

And there is no amplification, because the acoustics of the new shed carry the lightest tone to the remotest corner.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

The festival will resume Saturday night with a Haydn-DeBussey-Sibelius program. When the first hall closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

The only soloists to be heard throughout the festival are the quartet which sang the ninth symphony last night: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; and Norman Cordon, bass. These proved themselves excellent, rising with the Cecilia society's chorus of Boston to the heights inhabited by Dr. Koussevitzky.

INCORRECT PAGINATION

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1938

Five Years

It seemed only yesterday that a crowd of 2500 was gathered for "Music Under the Moon" at the Hanna Farm in Interlaken. Over the audience shone the moon, as advertised, but as the dusk sank into full fledged darkness even the vigorous bowing of the string section of the 65-piece orchestra could not dispel the clammy dew as it settled over the horse show ring. For the first concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with Henry Hadley conducting was held that year in the latter part of August and Berkshire nights after the first week in August have a way of giving the first faint signs of approaching autumn.

It was a pleasant occasion, this first series of concerts, with a light program and neighborly sociability the motif rather than high art. The distant hound that bayed at the moon and the F sharp beep of a limousine horn under a dozing chaffeur's elbow were episodes which brought tolerant smiles rather than smirks of disgust. The crisp rebound of the echoes of the brass section off the turreted stable was benignly excused through the necessary shortcomings of a symphony concert out of doors.

The next year, 1935, likewise at the Hanna Farm, saw the orchestra augmented slightly for the three concerts, the Berkshire Musical Association chorus given a part in one program, and a Beethoven concerto played brilliantly by Rudolph Ganz who had generously donated his services to this budding musical effort. The crowd had increased somewhat but, in the main, it still was a Berkshire audience, nothwithstanding the presence of the President's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the Governor of Rhode Island and Massachusetts' own Governor, James Michael Curley who blessed the event with a "promise" of a $5000 subsidy from State funds and read a curious telegram of good wishes purporting to come straight from Salzburg's Max Reinhardt.

It was the obvious occasion when the Festival would either choose to putter along as a mildly interesting local musical gathering puffed into seeming importance by adept press agentry, whose slight deficits would be made up by Berkshire musical patriots, or would suspend from lack of artistic momentum. But it was precisely at this point that Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were enlisted for the three concerts of the 1936 season. Wisely choosing a more expansive site at Mrs. Margaret Emerson's vacant Holmwood in nearby Lenox, the choice was fortunate because audiences averaging 5000 crowded each concert. License tags and advance reservations for the first time indicated that the Festival had widened the periphery of its appeal and the huge circus tent, which had supplanted "music under the moon," rang with the bravos of an excited audience as the series concluded.

Festival stock was bullish what with unheard of symphonic black ink and the general realization that the enterprise was out of its swaddling clothes. The succeeding of success formula then came into play with a rapid series of developments such as the gift of neighboring Tanglewood by Mrs. Gorham Brooks as a permanent home for the Festival, the expansion of the program to six concerts, the increasing audience from a widening area, an importune cloudburst at ing the all Wagner program during the 1937 series which focused attention on the imperative need of a permanent structure to house the now lusty, walking infant.

The need was gloriously met by subscriptions of $82,000 to a building fund and the vast music shed which was dedicated last night by more than 6000 wildly cheering auditors is the fruition of a vision of the original sponsoring directors which in the speed of its fulfillment is breathtaking.

Five years ago with the moon and stars alone for inspiration; today physically a huge enterprise and artistically one of national importance. From a materialistic standpoint the Festival is a challenge that initiative, hard work and long range vision still have a place in the scheme of things. Certainly the concluding ovation for the consummate artistry of the orchestra, the chorus and the artists was meant to be equally shared by the trustees of the Berkshire Festival who in five years have wrought such a noble monument.

ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

AUG 5 - 1938

FIFTH SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL OPENS

6,000 Hear Brilliant Rendition of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for ten minutes.

The performance was, however, only the logical outcome of an unusual policy, rigidly adhered to.

For one thing Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony hall, Boston, through the winter.

For another, he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts. Each is prepared with the greatest care. There are no soloists glittering with Hollywood fame and short on musical gift, and no traps for the tourist.

And there is on amplification, because the acoustics of the new shed carry the lightest tone to the remotest corner.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

The festival resumes Saturday night with a Haydn-Debussy-Sibelius program. When the first half closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

The only soloists to be heard throughout the festival are the quartet which sang the Ninth Symphony last night: Jeannet Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; and Norman Cordon, bass. These proved themselves excellent, rising with the Cecilia society's chorus of Boston to the heights inhabited by Dr Koussevitzky.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 5 - 1938

5th Symphonic Festival Opens at Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4, (AP)—Before more than a capacity

(Etc. as above)

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 5 - 1938

Music and The Drama

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL OPENS AT TANGLEWOOD TO CAPACITY CROWDS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4 -AP-Before more than a capacity crowd of music lovers, the fifth Berkshire symphonic festival opened tonight at "Tanglewood" near here with music and equipment unique among all American Summer music ventures.

Serge Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led that unexcelled body of musicians through a program consisting of two works of J. S. Bach and Beethoven's great choral symphony which ends with a setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

The "Ode to Joy" seemed especially appropriate with the performances close to perfection in the new "music shed."

Thanks to a combination of scientific planning and good luck, the "shed's acoustics were amazing. The lightest piannissimo could be heard, undistorted, in the farthest reaches. One could sit on the stone of the "mansion house"—300 yards away—and hear perfectly. No amplification was needed.

The $800,000 shed was opened with a chorus from Bach's cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," the singers being the Cecilia Society of Boston.

The choral from the same cantata followed and after an intermission came the Beethoven Ninth Symphony with the Cecilia Society and Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anne Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, bass, as soloists.

"Tanglewood," home of the concerts, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony, and its setting is probably the handsomest owned by any festival in the country. Except for the "shed" and parking provisions, the 210 acres, including the gardens, have been left undisturbed.

It was here that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," "The Wonder Books" and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

Bentley W. Warren, president of the symphony, tonight suggested to the audience that in future seasons the purely orchestral character of the festival might be changed to include an orchestral school.

There will be other concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon and on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of next week.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 5 - 1938

Crowd Hears Opening of Fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4 (AP)—Before more than a capacity crowd of music lovers, the Fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened tonight at "Tanglewood" near here with music and equipment unique among all American Summer music ventures.

Serge Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, led that unexcelled body of musicians through a program consisting of two works of J. S. Bach and Beethoven's great choral symphony which ends with a setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

The "Ode to Joy" seemed especially appropriate with the performances close to perfection in the new "Music Shed."

Thanks to a combination of scientific planning and good luck, the "Shed's" acoustics were amazing. The lightest piannissimo could be heard, undistorted, in the farthest reaches. One could sit on the "Mansion House"—300 yards away—and hear perfectly. No amplification was needed.

The $800,00 shed was opened with a chorus from Bach's contata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," the singers being the Cecilia Society of Boston.

The choral from the same contata followed and after an intermission came the Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Cecilia Society and Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anne Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, bass, as soloists.

"Tanglewood," home of the concerts, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony, and its setting is probably the handsomest owned by any festival in the country. Except for the "Shed" and parking provisions, the 210 acres, including the gardens have been left undisturbed.

It was here that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," "The Wonder Books" and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

Bentley W. Warren, president of the Symphony, tonight suggested to the audience that in future seasons the purely orchestral character of the festival might be changed to include an orchestral school.

There will be other concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon and on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of next week.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

Ovation Given Music Event at Tanglewood

STOCKBRIDGE. Mass., August 5 (A.P.)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at Tanglewood, the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have taken place in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long, and sometimes tortuous Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet and remained cheering and applauding for ten minutes.

The hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" today to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow and the Berkshire Playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stag Woor."

ALEXANDRIA, LA.
TOWN-TALK

AUG 5 - 1938

6,000 FILL 'MUSIC SHED'

Labor of 600 Volunteer Workers Justified

BY JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5—(By A. P.)—The labor of 600

(Etc. as above)

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1938

Northampton People Attend Concert at Tanglewood 'Shed'

Opening Program of Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphony Festival Attracts a Large Audience

As Serge Koussevitsky, brilliant, wise-visioned conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, walked provocatively upon the stage of the new music shed at Tanglewood, in Stockbridge, last evening before a waiting audience of about 6000, there was electric excitement in the atmosphere.

This was the opening concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival—always an exhilarating occasion—but more than that it marked the dedication of the huge shed, a splendid symbol of the festival's cultural attainments. There were, too, lively expectations aroused by a program which included Beethoven's Ninth symphony, by the present achievements of a great orchestra, and finally by the vast audience, in itself a joyous and heartening spectacle.

Throughout the performance of the Ninth symphony (which Dr. Koussevitsky himself regards as the greatest work in symphonic literature) the orchestra, leader, chorus and soloists were at the top of their form. To say that the conveyance of Beethoven's music was worthy of the score itself is to give it the maximum of praise. The distinguished soloists, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, basso, sang magnificently, while the performance of the Cecilia chorus of Boston was one that could scarcely be matched for beauty and clarity.

(Continued from Page 1)

The program opened with a thrilling performance of the opening chorus and chorale of Bach's cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and the audience was given an opportunity to take an active part in the dedication by joining in singing the glorious chorale.

Among those from Northampton and vicinity who attended last evening's concert were: John R. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Beastall, Stanford C. Blish and party, Miss Dorothy M. Bement, principal of the Northampton School for Girls, and party of girls Mrs. Brooks Emerson, Miss Mildred Koerber, Mrs. Joseph M. Lyman, Frank Natali, Miss Elsa Parshley, Miss Harriet Strong, Miss Cara L. Walker, Mrs. H. E. Wells and Miss Helen Wieland, all of this city; Prof. and Mrs. Vincent Morgan of Amherst, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Russell of Hadley, and Mr. and Mrs. B. E. McBee of Goshen.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1938

Johnson Holds Reception for Mayor Putnam

Following the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood, last night, Owen Johnson of Stockbridge held a reception at his home, Ingleside, in compliment to Mayor Roger L. Putnam of Springfield who was his guest at the festival.

Among those who attended the reception were Ambassador-at-Large Norman H. Davis of Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle Jr. of Great Barrington, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Miss Mabel Choate of Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Carter of Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond L. Buell of Richmond and Mr. and Mrs. John D. Kennedy of Lenox.

Friday, August 5, 1938. Berkshire Eagle

Toronto Symphony Leader Lauds Berkshire Festival

Sir Ernest MacMillan, in Rotary Address, Urges Strong Public Support for Tanglewood Venture

Sir Ernest MacMillan, conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, paid tribute to the "superb surroundings and musical forces" of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in an address before 50 members of the Rotary Club of Pittsfield at their weekly luncheon in the Hotel Wendell yesterday.

The distinguished Canadian musician, in the Berkshires to hear his first Festival series, described the Berkshire Festival as an important factor in the movement toward a widespread summer musical schedule throughout North America.

Urges Public Support

The combination of musical education through the radio and the decline in European music because of the political situation there, Sir Ernest considers a major cause for the tremendous gains in the popularity of good music in Canada and the United States. He congratulated the Berkshires on being the scene of "a great institution." He also urged strong public support for the Festival, not only because "it brings great music, but because its effects upon the community go far beyond this."

"The Festival must be," he said, "a tremendous stimulus to business. And even beyond this important economic factor, its value to the surrounding area should be recognized even by those who have no particular interest in music. Furthermore, it cannot be the success it should be without the unflagging interest of the public."

Club Guests

Sir Ernest was introduced by Jay C. Rosenfeld, music critic for The Eagle. J. Howard Fryer, president of the club, presided. Among the guests at the head table was George W. Edman of Pittsfield, clerk of the Festival.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ATTRACTS BIG CROWD

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4—(AP)—Before more than a capacity crowd of music lovers, the Fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened tonight at "Tanklewood" near here with music and equipment unique among all American summer music ventures.

Serge Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, led that unexcelled body of musicians through a program consisting of two works of J. S. Bach and Beethoven's Great Choral Symphony which ends with a setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

The "Ode to Joy," seemed especially appropriate with the performances close to perfection in the new "Music Shed."

Thanks to a combination of scientic planning and good luck, the "Shed's" acoustics were amazing. The lightest piannissimo could be heard, undistorted, in the farthest reaches. One could sit on the stone of the "Mansion House"—300 yards away—and hear perfectly. No amplication is needed.

The $800,000 shed was opened with a chorus from Bach's contata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," the singers being the Cecilia Society of Boston.

The choral from the same contata followed and after an intermission came the Beethoven Ninth Symphony with the Cecilia Society and Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anne Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, bass, as soloists.

"Tanglewood," home of the concerts, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony, and its setting is probably the handsomest owned by any festival in the country. Except for the "shed," and parking provisions, the 210 acres, including the gardens, have been left undisturbed.

It was here that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," "The Wonder Books" and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

Bentley W. Warren, president of the symphony, tonight suggested to the audience that in future seasons the purely orchestral character of the festival might be changed to include an orchestral school.

There will be other concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon and on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of next week.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1938

BIG HAND FOR KOUSSEVITZKY AT BERKSHIRE

6,000 Cheer for 10 Minutes at Conclusion of Beethoven's 9th Symphony

FILL "MUSIC SHED"

Festival Will Run for Two Weeks But There Will Be Only Six Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5-AP-The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for ten minutes.

The performance was, however, only the logical outcome of an unusual policy, rigidly adhered to.

For one thing, Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony hall, Boston, thru the winter.

For another, he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Altho the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts. Each is prepared with the greatest care. There are no soloists glittering with Hollywood fame and short on musical gift, and no traps for the tourist.

And there is no amplification, because the acoustics of the new shed carry the lightest tone to the remotest corner.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire Playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

The festival resumes Saturday night with a Haydn-Debussy-Sibelius program. When the first hall closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

The only soloists to be heard thruout the festival are the quartet which sang the ninth symphony last night: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; and Norman Cordon, bass. These proved themselves excellent, rising with the Cecilia Society's Chorus of Boston to the heights inhabited by Dr. Koussevitzky.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1938

Overflow Throng Hears First Concert In New Berkshire Festival Music Shed

Festival Program Likely to Be Extended to Provide School for Advanced Musicians, Mr. Warren Says

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4 — With Bach's great chorale, "A mighty fortress is our God" ringing out from 6000 throats and backed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, got under way tonight. The occasion for the audience joining in this ancient hymn of praise was the dedication of the festival's new shed at Tanglewood, the huge estate beside the Stockbridge Bowl given to the Boston orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline for its summer home.

No Doubt of Success

There was no doubt tonight that the festival is a success, a venture here to stay. "Standing room only" was the sign hung out on the box offices scattered about the grounds as early as 8 o'clock, and the concert not to begin for another half hour. By 6, music lovers began to trickle through the gates and within an hour they poured through from every direction.

Last year, under a tent, the festival was thronged, and 2000 seats were added when the shed was constructed this summer. Built without any particular aim of great beauty, it has however, particularly when crowded as it was tonight, a beauty of its own. Steel and wood cover the auditorium, one great expanse unbroken by beam or post.

Kiley Drops Dead

There was only one note to mar the event. John J. Kiley, 48, a member of the Lenox Board of Selectmen, who has aided the festival officials in their plans, and who was to be a guest of the management tonight, dropped dead at his home as he was dressing. Heat was the cause of his death, it was said at his home.

But in the audience and on the great stage there was no note for sadness, only joy and great satisfaction for a tremendous job accomplished. Both Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith,

(Continued on Twenty-sixth Page)

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1938

6000 at Festival in Stockbridge Shed

LENOX, Mass. Aug. 5 (UP)—More than 6000 persons attended the dedication of the new music shed at the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood last night.

Though not yet completed, musicians and engineers said the shed was remarkable for its acoustics. It is open on three sides, covers 1½ acres and seats 5700.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in a program of Beethoven and Bach with vocal interludes by the Cecilia Society chorus.

Broadcast Halted By Transformer Failure

BOSTON, Aug. 5 (AP) — The Berkshire festival's new $80,000 music shed guards the Boston Symphony from the weather at Stockbridge, but nothing could prevent the orchestra from being silenced on the air last night when a power line transformer failed at Walpole and station WJZ's Millis transformer, carrying the festival concert, was silenced for almost a hour. The accident also deprive parts of Norwood, Walpole an Millis of lights.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 5 - 1938

Stockbridge Music Shed Inaugurated

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and Boston Symphony Open Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4.—(Special.)—Almost a year in building, the new Music Shed of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was inaugurated here tonight when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the first of the six concerts comprising this year's program.

While for five seasons these concerts have been held under canvas, this year's audience sat under a roof covering more than an acre and a half of ground, and providing protection against the elements for a potential 6000 persons. The fan-shaped structure, designed by Eliel Saarinen, friend of Dr. Koussevitzky, was engineered by Joseph Franz, while the acoustical studies were made by Professor Richard D. Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. It was completed about a month go.

In addition to the orchestral stage, and the floor, where about half the audience can sit on chairs, there is a tuning room for the musicians, and a private suite for Dr. Koussevitzky.

The new Shed is the outcome of the spite of last season's elements, which practically rained out one of the concerts, and the cooperate efforts of Festival fanciers all over the country, who contributed the amount necessary for its building.

Further Work Contemplated.

That further work on the Shed is contemplated was made known tonight by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, who in a brief talk, stated that about $58.000 more is needed to carry out immediate plans. These call for beautifying the grounds by planting trees and shrubs, funds for covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, for permanent lighting of the parking field, for iron roll curtains to close the auditorium against the elements, for permanent chairs for the audiences, and similar needs. The operation of the concerts is self supporting through sale of tickets, but the additional funds for the Shed, like those which built it, will have to come from private contributions, Miss Smith said.

Conducting School Planned.

Further activities to grow around the Festival were outlined by Bentley Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was the other speaker in the non-ceremonial inauguration of the Shed. In a year or two, Mr. Warren said, it is hoped to launch a school for orchestral conducting, which would be held preceding the Festival itself, and which will make use of the Shed and the personnel of the Boston Symphony. The suggestion is Dr. Koussevitzky's, Mr. Warren declared, saying in part:

"It is the hope of the Conductor—A hope I am happy to say shared by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra—that the annual Festivals may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and separate instrumentalists. Tanglewood is the ideal location for such a school. The mansion house and other buildings in Mrs. Gorham Brooks's gift will furnish the facilities immediately needed. This auditorium cannot be excelled as a place for the instruction of prospective orchestra conductors, with a small but adequate orchestra of some members of the Boston Symphony itself, augmented by students attending the school for instruction for the use of their special instruments."

The Festival concerts were originally conducted by Dr. Henry Hadley, but upon his becoming ill, they were taken over by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra in 1936. That year they were held on the old Westinghouse Estate, on the Stockbridge-Lenox highway. During the last two years they have been given at anglewood. which Mrs. Brooks gave to the Festival a permanent gift, in memory of her parents. The estate is a few miles northwest of Stockbridge.

Program of Concert.

Tonight's concert included performances or the Chorale and First Chorus of "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by J. S. Bach, and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. The choral sectoins were sung by the Cecilia Club of Boston, of more than 100 voices, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, and four soloists, including Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, soprano, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon bass.

Programs will also be played Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and again on the evenings of Thursday and Saturday, August 11 and 13, and Sunday afternoon, August 14.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR - ENTERPRISE

AUG 5 - 1938

6,000 at Tanglewood To Hear First Concert

Six thousand attended the opening program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," near Lenox, Mass., last night when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, headed by Serge Koussevitzky. It marked the launching of a series of six concerts to be presented this weekend and next and also the dedication of the music shed. The program began with the first chorus from the Bach cantata, "Ein' Feste Burg ist unser Gott." After dedicatory remarks by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival corporation; by Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra, and by Dr. Koussevitzky, the audience was invited to join in the singing of the chorale from the Bach cantata.

Miss Smith traced the history of the festival from its inception under the late Henry Hadley's direction in 1934, through the first participation by the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky in 1936, the first use of Tanglewood, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, as permanent home last year, to the dedication of the shed last night.

BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL

AUG 5 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Opens Fifth Season At Stockbridge

Serge Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony Group In Notable Concert

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer work-

ETC.

125

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 5 - 1938

Berkshire Fete Begins in New Music Shelter

Capacity Audience Hears Boston Symphony in 1st of Six Concerts; Singers of Metropolitan Appear

By Francis D. Perkins

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—The Music Shed on the Tanglewood Estate between Stockbridge and Lenox was formally dedicated tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the six concerts of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The program, heard by an audience of nearly 6,000, consisted of a chorus and chorale from Bach's Eightieth Cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Ist unser Gott," and Beethoven's ninth symphony.

The Cecilia Society of Boston, trained by Arthur Fiedler, sang the Bach music and the choral finale of the symphony, in which the soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, and three Metropolitan Opera singers: Anna Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, basso.

Unlike the circumstances of the first concert and several of the others in the 1937 festival, the weather was favorable at the start of tonight's program, and long lines of cars were approaching from Pittsfield, Lenox, Stockbridge and remoter points an hour before Dr. Koussevitzky mounted the podium. The few remaining reserved seats were sold rapidly, and standing room only was available during the final half hour before the concert. What with the acoustic sonority of the new building and the orchestra shell, the amount of standing room available was virtually unlimited.

"An Inspiring Reality"

In view of the exceptional importance of the occasion in the history of the festival, with which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been associated since 1936, short dedicatory speeches were made after the first Bach chorus by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival since its organization; Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony's board of trustees, and Dr. Koussevitzky.

"Had a clairvoyant," said Miss Robinson Smith, "predicted five years ago that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be inaugurating this great music shed, no one would have paid the least attention. It is, however, an inspiring reality."

She outlined the history of the festival, crediting the original idea of summer symphonic music in the Berkshires to the late Henry Hadley, who conducted the first two festivals outdoors. After his resignation because of ill health, the festival trustees approached Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, whose first series of three concerts was held in a huge tent at Holmwood, in Lenox. It was then realized that the festival had taken on national importance, and that a permanent home was necessary.

This problem was solved when Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston, gave the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony for this festival. Dr. Koussevitzky realized the need of a permanent building, and his friend, Eliel Saarinen, was asked to submit tentative plans. The six concerts of the 1937 festival were held in a huge tent. One night last summer when the elements and Wagner got into conflict proved a blessing in disguise, as immediately afterward the board of trustees decided to begin a campaign for money to build the music shed.

More Help Suggested

Today, Miss Robinson Smith added, the concerts were self-sustaining through ticket sales, but the building had been made possible through private contributions, and further improvements must come the same way. She considered a fund of $58,000 was necessary for immediate plans, such as planting trees and shrubs near the building, covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, lighting the parking fields, providing iron roll curtains to close the auditorium against storms, and permanent chairs for the audience.

Mr. Warren praised the festival committee for its "foresight, energy and success in making available this adequate and admirable auditorium." He told of the broadening of the Boston Symphony's activities since its foundation in 1881 by Major Henry L. Higginson. Dr. Koussevizky, he said, who had now become an American citizen, had long cherished a vision of a music center of first importance, and was convinced that America was ready for it. He said he hopes that the annual festival may be supplemented by an academy holding annual sessions before the concerts and devoted to cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and instrumentalists. With an adequate initial plant already in existence, Mr. Warren, added, the greatest need would be for money for scholarships. He expected arrangements for the projected school could be completed in time for the summer of 1940.

Dr. Koussevitzky was warmly applauded as he began his short speech, which had not been announced in the program. On this significant day in his musical life, he said, he had chosen the ninth symphony not only because he ranked it as the greatest masterpiece of musical literature but also in order to hear the chorus singing Schiller's words inviting all nations to brotherhood. This met with even more ardent applause, and the conductor invited the audience to join in singing the Bach chorale. The audience responded heartily.

Wide Interest in Tilt

Advance interest in the festival has been widespread, to an even greater extent than last summer, and it was reported early in the afternoon at the festival office in Stockbridge that there has been a heavy sale of reservations for the remaining concerts, while there has been great demand for accommodations in hotels, boarding houses, tourist homes and private houses throughout the Berkshire area. Many patrons living at considerable distances from here are making one-day trips to hear one or more concerts by one of the country's foremost orchestras under its regular leader.

Dr. Koussevizky and the orchestra arrived yesterday and held their first rehearsal in the afternoon. The Cecilia Chorus reached here from Boston by bus this morning and took part in a final rehearsal of the ninth symphony in the afternoon. This gave an advance opportunity for acquaintance with the acoustic conditions of the new building which, judging by the first impression, merit the highest praise for sonority and for faithfulness in conveying fine details of the score.

The music could be heard with notable clarity and volume, not only in the outermost rows of seats in the vast fan-shaped structure, whose depth is virtually the same as that of Boston's Symphony Hall and whose width is considerably greater, but also for a good distance outside the building, which is open at the back and sides.

Like Symphony Hall Stage

The orchestra stage is said to be similar in size and shape to that of Symphony Hall, apart from differences in height corresponding to those of the two auditoriums. At the rear there is a well equipped dressing room for the conductor, and a special building for the musicians, who, with Dr. Koussevitzky, are living in the neighborhood for the festival fortnight. About a dozen musicians, as they did last summer, are camping in tents on the Lake Shore below Tanglewood. The shed, unlike last year's tent, which was immediately to the north of the old house on the estate, is about 150 yards to the east of it, at the opposite end of the lawn. From the rear the spectators are offered an appealing view of the Stockbridge Bowl.

In the matter of repertoire, the orchestra and the festival committee are continuing to observe what might be called progressive conservatism. The programs, as before, are taken mainly from those of the Boston Symphony's regular season and based mostly on the standard list, but the addition of a chorus and the presentation of acts and scenes from Wagner's "Ring," scheduled for next Thursday, are innovations. There has been no talk of opera, but it has been pointed out that the necessary stage expansion and additional equipment for such a purpose can be added without the need of extensive reconstruction of the building as it stands.

The second concert, with a program of Haydn and Sibelius symphonies and Debussy's "La Mer," will be held Saturday night, the third next Sunday afternoon. The second half of the festival takes place on the following Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, August 11, 13 and 14.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES ✓

AUG 4 - 1938

BOOKS OF THE TIMES

By RALPH THOMPSON

ALMOST any one who enjoys so-called serious music ought to enjoy "The Orchestra Speaks,"* by Bernard Shore, first viola of the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Shore writes informally of various conductors under whom he has played—Beecham, Mengelberg, Casals, Harty, Goossens, Barbirolli, Harrison, Wood, Toscanini, Koussevitzky, Coates, Sargent, Boult and about a dozen others. Some of the names will be unfamiliar to American readers, but the comments are no less interesting because of that. Mr. Shore writes well and is never merely adulatory.

Toscanini

Toscanini, he says, is the one living conductor of whom all orchestra members seem to approve—although some of them deplore his fondness for second-rate Italian music. He works his players very hard and on occasion flies into fits of rage, twisting scores in his hands and throwing his baton to the ground, but he expects no more than he himself is prepared to give.

During rehearsals, Toscanini is intense in mood, rapt to the point that he will not even approach the platform if there is the slightest sound of tuning. When complete silence has been established he appears, glances quickly through the score (the sheet held close to his nose, as he is extremely near-sighted), gives such special directions as may be necessary and then stands in deep reflection for a moment or two, "in a characteristic attitude—head slightly bent down, the baton held upright close to his body, its tip just touching his chin."

"Then," Mr. Shore continues, "with his preparatory words in three languages: 'Bien—bitte—allora!' he taps his desk sharply with the baton and immediately plays as far as possible, not stopping for minor details, but saving them up in his head for either an enforced stop or the end of the exposition of the movement. Most of the incorrect minor details are reflected by his expression, or by a click of his tongue. If all goes well, to his thinking, he does not play it again—he repeats nothing that is not absolutely necessary."

Coates and Others

Albert Coates is far more exuberant. "Smash it, boy!" he may shout to the timpani, "hit everything you can see. Don't be afraid of it! Brass, I want a burst of sound!" During rehearsals Coates perspires as freely as two other conductors combined, dubs his players with nicknames, flails his arms about, whoops with excitement. Sir Adrian Boult, on the contrary, stands almost still on the rostrum. Willem Mengelberg spouts an endless stream of instruction, sometimes launching upon a long sermon with his arms raised in the air at the "ready." His rehearsals go on and on and on, as if clocks had never been invented.

Mengelberg is meticulous about tuning and has spent as much as two hours getting a pitch that suits him. With him the A comes always from the oboe, the player of which must obediently stand and pipe in one direction after the other. Sir Henry Wood's ritual is but slightly less elaborate; Sir Henry appears with a tuning fork marked 439 and whacks it near the ear of string player after string player, listening to the resultant A and saying in nine cases out of ten, "Too sharp!" He goes through a similar ceremony with the wood-winds, using a flatter tuning fork to allow for the cold instruments.

Mr. Shore's remarks on Sir Henry, who is now in his fiftieth year as a conductor, are particularly amusing. What he has to say about Beecham and the works of Delius, about Koussevitzky's "tyrannical" attitude, and about such composer-conductors as Vaughan Williams, Elgar, Kodály and Prokofieff, will probably prove of greatest interest to professionals. But his book as a whole should please a host of professionals and laymen alike.

---

*THE ORCHESTRA SPEAKS. By Bernard Shore. 218 pages. Longmans, Green. $2.50.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN - TELEGRAPH

AUG 5 - 1938

6,000 Cheer Symphony Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP.)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky.

An audience of 6,000 literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for 10 minutes.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire Playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 5 - 1938

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS

5000 Hear Koussevitzky Dedicate New Temple.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—America's newest temple of the musical arts was dedicated here last night with the opening at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival directed by Serge Koussevitzky. It is a temple truly in the modern mode that the supervisors of the festival have erected on the Tanglewood estate to take the place of the tent and other impromptu structures of previous years. Gently streamlined, opened to the winds on three of its four sides (the capacious stage is the only closed portion of the building) it successfully retains an illusion of the outdoors while providing shelter from sun and rain.

The 5,000 odd seats were wholly filled by an audience that came from the ends of the country to hear this inaugural concert by Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. Following the dedicatory Bach choral "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" in which the standing audience vocally joined with the orchestra, Mr. Koussevitzky directed vigorously an eloquent performance of the choral symphony of Beethoven. As the conductor verbally explained to the audience, this work in celebration of the "Brotherhood of Man" was deliberately chosen to idealize the conception that motivated the building of the festival's permanent home.

It provided, incidentally, an exacting test of the acoustical properties of the fan-shaped shed, a test which was survived with exceptional credit to its designers, Eliel Saarinen and Joseph Franz.

Both the faint pianissimos of the adagio and the thundering proclamations of the choral finale were carried to the most distant listener without distortion and with fidelity to the legendary excellencies of the Boston orchestra.

Aiding in Mr. Koussevitzky's performance were the Cecilia chorus of Boston and an excellent quartet of soloists whose members were Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, baritone; Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; and Anna Kaskas, contralto. The long continued applause and cheers were in this instance honestly earned, carrying with them an anticipation of the music to come in the five remaining concerts.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens New Permanent Home With 6000 Music Lovers Present

Stockbirdge, Aug. 5—The new permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood was impressively dedicated last night before a crowd of approximately 6000 music lovers, upon the occasion of the first concert in this summer's series, given by Dr Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. The novelty of the gigantic shell, covering an acre and a half of ground, undoubtedly drew many to the spot, but the fervent chorale and chorus from Bach "Ein' Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," and the sublime Ninth symphony of Beethoven, culminating in Schiller's "Ode to Joy" thrilled the socially and artistically curious alike.

It was the largest crowd that has ever attended a concert since the festival started what then seemed to be a precarious existence in a tent on the Hanna farm, less than five years ago. Now in steel and wood, yet with the beauty of the Berkshires visible all around through the open sides of the shell, the dream has become a reality, and the enthralled thousands last night realized that the acoustics were as perfect in a filled auditorium as Professor Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology found them to be when the shell was empty.

Last night's program, as Olin Downes pointed out in the first of his lectures which are as much a part of the festival as the music itself, in reality starred three composers, Bach, Beethoven and Luther. Only a strong faith, he declared, could bring forth such music that reaches toward the Infinite, and he blamed a lack of faith, in the larger sense, for the sterility of much of today's music. The bond of faith between Bach and Beethoven gave last night's program an unusual and gratifying sort of unity.

The orchestra was assisted last night in excellent fashion by the Cecelia society of Boston, 110 strong, who had been prepared by Arthur Fiedler, and an imposing quartet, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, Bass. The chorus was vocally magnificent, although to expect meticulous diction throughout the cruel tessitura assigned by Beethoven to vocalists is perhaps asking too much. The words came through well in the Bach, although in the Beethoven, the chorus was, and perhaps more properly, a vocal instrument, lending human coloring to the paeans of the orchestra.

To the serviceable bass voice of Norman Cordon fell the difficult recitatives and solos in the "Ode" portions of the symphony which concludes with one of the most grateful of all symphonic themes. Paul Althouse had a few solo passages, too few for his many friends in the audience, while the soprano and the contralto in highly satisfactory fashion negotiated the trying passages they are expected to sing. Miss Vreeland's singing without notes made her performance all the more effective.

A welcome revival of an old festival habit was the singing by the six thousand present of the final chorus of the Bach chorale. Koussevitzsky, deviating from his usual custom of not speaking during concerts, explained, as if explanation were needed, that he had chosen the program because of the necessity of uniting man in one large brotherhood. The ovation he received at the beginning of the concert and at the end was as earsplitting as the rain which all but ruined the festival in the tent last year.

Musically, Doctor Koussevitzky has great plans for the festival, and this is as it should be. A school for advanced musicians, and an opportunity for other conductors is a project worth working for. Much has been done with the eighty odd thousands of dollars already voluntarily subscribed. From now on concentration should be centered on the more material needs of good parking spaces and ready access and egress from the grounds. The concert was held up last night at the start to allow for the untangling of a parking snarl, and many of those attending were at least an hour in getting from the grounds. For those who have to travel far, an hour's delay at that hour of the night is a discouraging one, and might well prevent from attending some souls who would rather listen to the symphony over the dynamically handicapped radio. Symphonies must be heard in person to get the thrill intended by a composer, and seemingly small trifles like poor traffic handling may keep away those whose support is needed.

The concert was broadcast in its entirety by the WJZ network of the National Broadcasting company. About 3000 theater seats were occupied by blue ticket holders and other outside the boxes used the settees as in other years.

The festival corporation is asking for additional contributions which total $57,342. The officers of the association want $22,000 for iron curtain to close in the shed against storm, $13,500 for chairs, $5000 for permanent lighting of the parking field and grounds, $3000 for landscaping, $2500 to complete the stage and shell, $4220 to cover, panel and paint inside walls and $2000 to encase the steel columns. The second concert of the series will be given Saturday night.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., at the music festival dedication tonight, said in part: "Had a clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be inaugurating this great music shed, no one would have paid the least atention. It is, however, an inspiring realty. But nothing worth an inspiring reality. But nothing worth while ever happens without someone having dreamed a dream. It was the late Henry Hadley who had this dream, feeling as he did that the Berkshires were an ideal spot for symphonic music 'under the moon and stars.' The residents of the Berkshires became intrigued with this idea of an out of door musical festival and put their shoulders to the wheel to make it a success. After two summer festivals, Dr Hadley resigned because of his failing health and the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival approached Dr Koussevitzky and his great orchestra, the Boston symphony.

"Words cannot express the enthusiasm that greeted his acceptance nor the inspiration that his vision for the development of a great musical center gave to everyone with his understanding of the hunger for music in the summer of a large and music-loving public.

"Most of you know what happened one night last summer when the elements and Wagner got into conflict. This seemingly tragic event proved a blessing in disguise for immediately after it the board of trustees decided to start a campaign for money to build this music shed. Many of you responded most generously and a month ago, thanks to Joseph Franz, the engineer, the shed was ready for the 1938 festival. Mr Saarinen's conception was the basis for this music shed which we are this evening so happily dedicating. This does not mean that it is entirely completed—there is still much to do to make it as beautiful and perfect as it should be for the perfection Dr Koussevitzky and his orchestra are entitled to. It is true that a fine roof covers one acre and a half of land, thus permitting nearly 6000 people to sit within the building proper; that half of the public can sit on chairs; that the musicians have a fine tuning room, and that Dr Koussevitzky has his own suite. But still more important is the excellent study on the acoustics made by Prof Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"In these recent years of financial strain when the federal government has spent tremendous sums of money in an attempt to support the hard-hit sphere of culture, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has followed the older American tradition of aiding culture by individual patronage and support. It has been a struggle but the results achieved thus far have justified the effort. Today the operation of the concerts is self-sustaining through the sale of tickets. But the building has come from private contributions and future improvements must come the same way. At the present moment we are in need of $58,000 to carry out immediate plans—funds for beautifying the grounds by the planting of trees and shrubs near the building, funds for covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, for permanent lighting of the parking fields, for iron roll curtains to close in the auditorium against storms, for permanent chairs for the audience, and similar needs. It is our conviction that individual persons who believe in the old American tradition of individual support of culture in America will help us in the future and help us now.

"The trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival work in the closest cooperation and Dr Koussevitzky is always an inspiration. His orchestra is too much loved throughout the land for it to be necessary to eulogize them.

"There is, however, behind the scenes of the Boston Symphony orchestra, a great lawyer who is its guilding spirit, a summer resident of the Berkshires and a true friend of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It is my privilege to present the president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, a distinguished man and a loyal friend of distinguished music in America, Mr Bentley Warren."

Many From Springfield

Springfield was well represented at the performance tonight. More than 200 subscriptions were sold by the local committe, many of these being subscriptions for both series of concerts. Among those attending the festival were: Mrs. Richard S. Bettes, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hooker, Mrs. Mason Lawrence, Dr. and Mrs. George Schadt, Howard Atwater, Joseph Szanto, Mrs. Phelps Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds G. Clark, H. Gratton Dockrell, Mrs. John W. McNair, Dr. and Mrs. Azel P. Barney, Miss Florence Birks, Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Doolittle, Miss Ruby Budd, Mrs. Paul Samson, Mrs. M. C. Barnes, Miss Edith Sandstrom, Ernest Kendrick, Mrs. K. E. Edwards, Charles Frazer, Dr. and Mrs. James A. Seaman, Rev. Daniel Daley, Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Moore Carlisle, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Brown, Dr. and Mrs. Laurence L. Doggett, Miss Elizabeth Easson, Mrs. Samuel Green, Prof. and Mrs. Harry Kellogg, Miss Alice Loynes, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller, Miss Ruth Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde W. Young, Miss Fanny Bemis, Mrs. Sally Fenelon Young and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fuller.

Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, inc., said in part: "The Boston Symphony orchestra rejoices in this opportunity to bring its tribute of appreciation and praise to the Berkshire Symphonc festival for its foresight, energy and success in making available this adequate and admirable auditorium. With such a result of only three years of cooperation between the two organizations, who can predict how great may be the contribution of Berkshire to the musical culture of America?

"In 1881, a beloved citizen of Boston founded its Symphony orchestra. Alone and unaided he promoted and supervised its activities and met its annual deficit for 37 years. His objective was not merely to enrich the musical culture of his own city; he wished also to further the appreciation and enjoyment of the universal language of music throughout the country. At the age of 82 he retired from this most fruitful work. Since then the present corporation organized under his direction, has, with the financial support of generous patrons of the concerts, continued his purposes and polcies. The number of excellent orchestras now in America, yearly furnishing music of the highest merit from the Atlantic to the Pacific, proves the soundness of his confidence that the American people were eager for a national music culture.

"Throughout its existence the orchestra has constantly broadened its field of activities. At the beginning there were only 24 concerts a year, all in Boston. Both locally and over the country this number has been greatly multiplied. Instead of appealing to local audiences only, the Berkshire Festival is now offered to a national public.

"The gift of the beautiful Tanglewood estate by Mrs Gorham Brooks, in memory of her parents, has provided a perfect setting for these concerts. It has also opened a wide vista of increasing usefulness. Our distinguished conductor, after 14 years in this country of his adoption—for he has now become an American citizen—has long cherished a vision of a music center of the first importance. He is convinced that America is now ripe for it. Here he believes it is possible to develop orchestral conductors as accomplished as any that Europe can provide. The personnel of the orchestra contains artists unexcelled anywhere as teachers of advanced pupils in the use of the various instruments. After experience with many amateur choruses, Dr Koussevitzky believes that the possibilities of choral and community singing are almost unlimited if properly trained leaders are made available. What does all this suggest?

"It is the hope of our conductor—a hope, I am happy to say, shared by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival corporation and the Boston Symphony orchestra—that the annual festival may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders, and separate instrumentalists. Tanglewood is the ideal location for such a school. The mansion house and other buildings included in Mrs Brooks's gift will furnish the facilities immediately needed. This auditorium cannot be excelled as a place for the instruction of prospective orchestra conductors with a small but adequate orchestra of some of the members of the Boston Symphony itself, augmented by students attending the school for instruction in the use of their special instruments.

We all believe that here stands such an opportunity as Mr Higginson seized when he founded the Boston Symphony orchestra, and as Miss Robinson Smith and her associates have realized in the establsihment of these Berkshire concerts. The opportunity transcends by far any local limits of Boston and the Berkshires. Happily the music lovers assembled here constitute no merely local audience. Surely many will agree with Dr Koussevitzky as to the national value of the musical enterprise that he envisions. May not the Tanglewood concerts become historic, as forerunners of a great artistic and educational reality—the establishment of an outstanding summer musical center for this country!"

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1938

Excellent Performance Given By Boston Symphony and Singers; Dr. Koussevitzky Gets Warm Tribute

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—The opening exercises tonight of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood centered about the dedication of the huge new music shed which henceforth will shelter the performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and constitute the permanent home of this festival.

Tribute to Leader

It seemed fitting that the two major works played tonight should be the chorale and opening chorus of Bach's Cantata, "Ein feste Burg its unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, for in this day of strife and turmoil the Lutheran text and the "Ode to Joy" by Schiller, which makes up the finale of the symphony, served to remind the vast audience that here is one country where liberty and democracy still exist and art remains unfettered.

Dr. Koussevitzky received a very personal tribute from the audience when he appeared on the stage, and it was also a tribute to the men and women who have worked so hard to bring the festival to its present state. Nearly 6000 persons were present tonight and equally large audiences are indicated for the remaining five concerts, all of which must be very gratifying to the sponsors and to Dr. Koussevitzky, whose plans for the festival do not stop with six concerts, but which embrace other kinds of musical and dramatic performances and a school for advanced musicians and conductors of proved talent. In other words, he sees this festival as a power in the cultural life of the nation. Public support given the festival in recent years justifies such a vision.

During the last two seasons, the festival has been self-supporting and now with its permanent home and magnificent shed, future growth seems limitless.

That much thought has been given to the future of the festival was indicated by the brief remarks of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Excellent Performance

The performance of the Ninth Symphony revealed the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky at the peak of their power. Inspired no doubt by the huge audience and the occasion, the Cecilia Chorus of Boston sang superbly and their efforts were matched by the distinguished soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, basso It will be remembered that Vreeland and Kaskas sang this spring in Springfield under the direction of Miss Hazel Clark. Althouse has not been heard in Springfield for many years but his is one of the great voices of the present day.

Mr. Gordon has a voice of sufficient depth and brilliance to do justice to the opening solo. As one listened to the music of the "Ode" one was tempted to agree with Mme. Unger, who sang the first performance of the work, that Beethoven was a "tyrant over all the vocal organs." Perhaps Mmes. Vreeland and Kaskas were better singers than Mmes. Unger and Soger, for they seemed to have no difficulty with the music and sang superbly.

It has been said "He who drapes his mantle into large folds cannot bestow his attention upon every stitch therein," so it may not be high treason to feel for those sopranos, tortured for so many bars with an inexorable high C.

However, one must remember that the Ninth Symphony was not first designed as a choral symphony and realize that even without the choral finale the Ninth Symphony would still be the greatest production of symphonic art It presents a picture of the titanic strivings of a solitary soul after highest happiness, and the final acquisition on the soul's part of supreme joy in the experience of a universal life of mankind.

The program proper opened with a stunning performance of the opening chorus to the Bach Cantata "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott." The Cecilia Chorus sang with notable clarity and gave to the full its remarkable vocal resources.

Following this chorus the dedicatory remarks were made by Miss Smith and Mr. Warren.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who seldom speaks in public, made a last-minute decision to address the huge gathering and said that he had chosen the Ninth Symphony, not only because it was great music but because it was a challenge to bring the nations of the world together.

Reviving an old festival custom, the audience was asked to join in singing the chorale from the "Ein feste Burg" contata and they voiced the noble phrases of Luther magnificently.

It was evident during the addresses that those in charge of the amplifying system were not wholly conversant with the mechanism. However, the music came over in splendid fashion and it was evident that the acoustics of the new shed were all that could be desired.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

126 AUG 5. - 1938

Society Fills Boxes At First Concert of Berkshire Festival

Gertrude Robinson Smith Gives Dinner for Mrs. August Belmont at Stockbridge

Special to the Herald Tribune

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—Society of New York, Boston and other cities was well represented at the first Berkshire Music Festival concert tonight at Tanglewood, Stockbridge. All of the eighty boxes were occupied. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation, gave a dinner at her Stockbridge home for her week-end guest, Mrs. August Belmont. Others in the company were Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren and Mr. and Mrs. Corham Brooks, Boston; Miss Miriam Oliver, Mr. Malcolm Vaughan, New York, and Mr. Max Vivier, Paris. Mr. Warren is president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Brooks, with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave Tanglewood to the organization.

Miss Mabel Choate had in her box at the concert Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Platt, Mrs. Randall Morgan and Mr. Chester H. Aldrich.

With Miss Mary Parsons in the box section were Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay, Mrs. Montgomery Hare and Mrs. Laurence F. Rainsford.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff were Mrs. Philip S. Sears, Mrs. Francis B. Crowninshield and Miss Virginia Latrobe.

Mrs. John Henry Hammond was with Mr. and Mrs. Helm George Wilde and Mrs. Thomas Frederick Davies had Mrs. John E. Thayer as a guest.

Mr. Beekman Winthrop was with his brother, Mr. Grenville Lindall Winthrop, and Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis had Mr. and Mrs. J. Paschall Davis.

With Mrs. George Baty Blake were the Misses Jane B. and Elizabeth Hunnewell, of Boston, and Mary Louisa and Julia O. Boit, of Paris.

At the Lenox Club for the festival are Mr. Albert Eugene Gallatin, New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. MacNicol, Mrs. James Dean, Miss Dorothea Dean and Mr. Edward A. Taft, Boston.

Among others noted tonight were Mrs. Chumasero McAvoy, Chicago, with Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn; Mrs. Edward S. Avery, New York, with Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett; Mrs. George Cook Kimball and Miss Marjorie S. Kimball, Lake Forest, Ill., with Mrs. Louis Sherman Taylor; Miss Carol Cook, Mr. John Finch and Mr. Gordon Allen, Boston, with Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard jr., of Palm Beach, Fla., were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shepard, Providence. Mrs. Horatio Parker, of New York, was with Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Rice.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

Thousands Acclaim Berkshire Concert

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American Summer music than the performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remaining cheering and applauding for 10 minutes.

Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony Hall, Boston, through the Winter.

He refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts.

There is no amplification ,because the acoustics of the new shed carry the lightest tone to the remotest corner.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 5 - 1938

127

Great Music Center at Tanglewoo

Plan Revealed As Shrine To Music Has Dedication

Opening of $80,000 Music Shed of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Marked by Brilliant Concert and Disclosure That Dr. Koussevitzky Proposes to Establish Academy in Connection With Festival for Advanced Instruction in Musical Leadership —6,000 Hear Boston Symphony and Cecilia Society Perform Bach Chorales and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Passing another significant milestone in its already historic development as 6,000 people helped it dedicate a great new shrine to music in America at the first concert in its immense $80,000 auditorium at Tanglewood on the Lenox-Stockbridge road, the Berkshire Symphonic festival, opening its fifth season, last night revealed plans for a greater and more useful future.

Plan for Music Center Unfolded

In a dedicatory speech during an interlude in the brilliant concert program given under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky by his Boston symphony orchestra assisted by the Cecilia society of Boston and a quartet of distinguished soloists, Bentley Wirt Warren of Williamstown and Boston, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra corporation, disclosed a plan of Dr. Koussevitzky to supplement the annual festival concerts with "a school or academy, holding annual sessions preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and separate instrumentalists," and added the expectation that the first session would be held in connection with the festival concert series two years hence.

Such an academy, operating along with the festival and employing the almost unlimited resources which that institution and the Boston symphony together possess, can create at Tanglewood, Mr. Warren said, "a music center of the first importance," long envisioned by the distinguished conductor whose first appearance with his superb orchestra at the Berkshire festival two years ago had raised it to a position among the musical institutions of first-rank significance in this country.

Announcement's Major Significance

Upon most of the vast audience of approximately 6,000, shattering all previous records, which had assembled for a first view of the great music shed and for the first concert of Dr. Koussevitzky's 1938 series—and was completely gratified by both—the significance of Mr. Warren's announcement with all its implications for Berkshire county as an outstanding center of musical culture on the American continent, was lost. The amplifying system improvised for the dedicatory speeches of its proportions it may prove to be inadequate on nights when the elements make the use of the surrounding grounds for the accommodation of the overflow impossible.)

Shed's Acoustics Perfect

There was not a point within the vast fan-shaped shed, covering an acre and a half of ground, measuring 176 feet from the stage to the last row of seats and sprawling the length of two city blocks along its outer curve, where the softest measures of the music could not be heard with perfect clarity, or where the most sonorous passages were marred by echo or distortion.

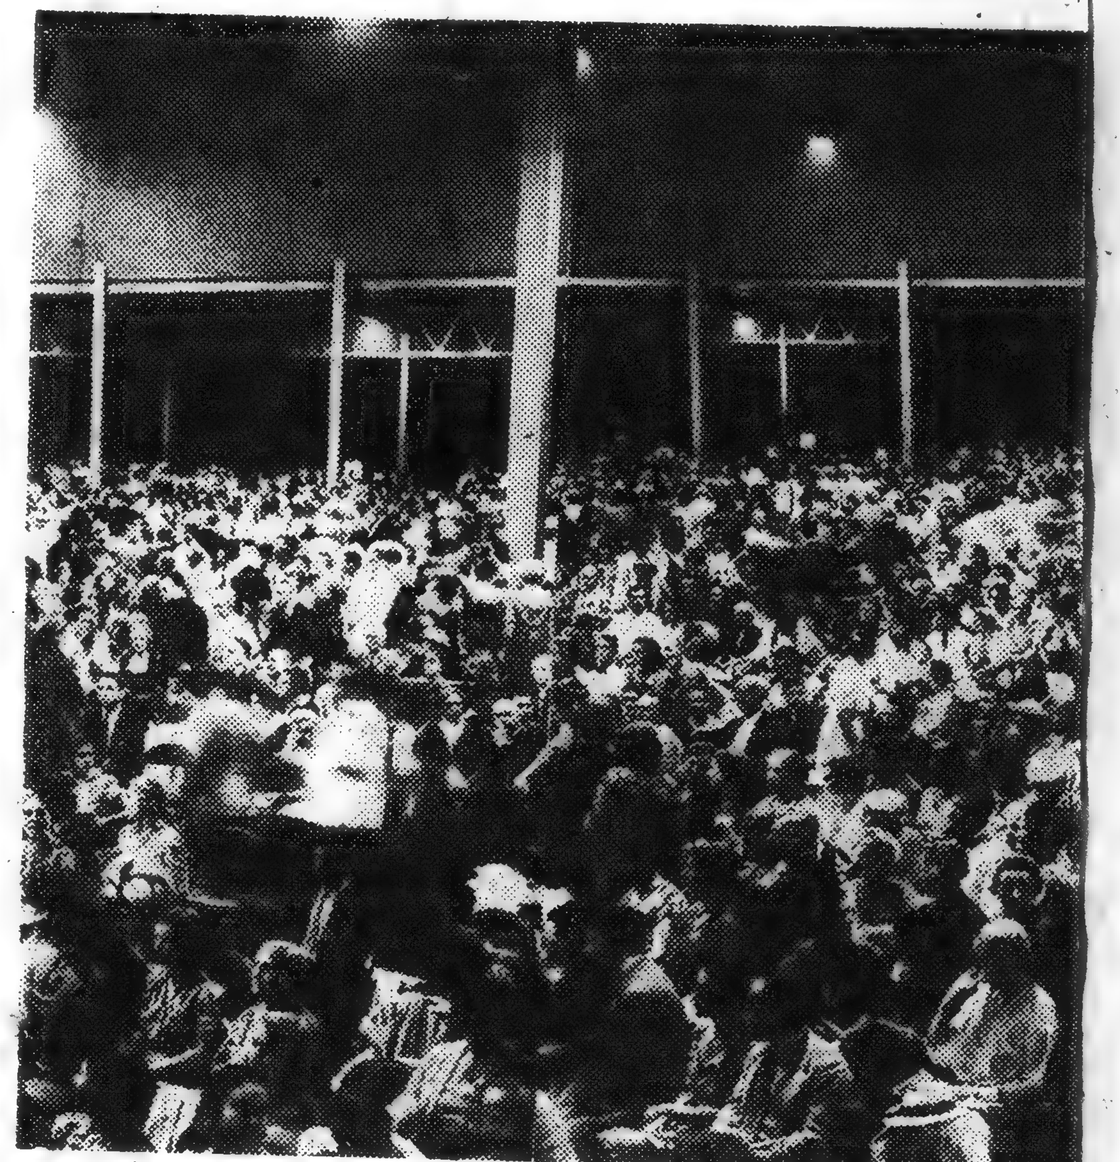
There would probably have been no difficulty hearing the two speakers, Miss Robinson Smith and Mr. Warren, if they had not purposely spoken softly, putting reliance on an amplifying system which was rigged up for their use but failed to do its part. Dr. Koussevitzky, in a brief address to the audience explaining why he had chosen Beethoven's ninth symphony for performance on this important occasion, made himself heard throughout the great auditorium without going to the extent of shouting. He had discovered that the amplifiers were not working well and so he raised his voice a little. It carried to the last benches.

Building Blends With Setting

Despite its gargantuan dimensions, the music shed gives no impression of extravagant size as one approaches it, nor does it intrude upon the beauty of the magnificent estate which Mrs. Gorham Brooks gave to the orchestra last year as its permanent Berkshire festival home. The building is more than 40 feet high, but the surrounding 20-foot colonnade breaks that height to the eye, and the neutral colors of the building merge into the charming background of trees and distant hills. Although the landscaping is one of the details left for the future, there is still enough of a growth of trees and shrubs about the property to cover great distances of the structure seen from the outside.

Within the heavy steel girders, the solid square supporting columns, and the upper walls—the structure is open to the out-of-doors to the height of the colonade roof—are still to be covered and painted. Ultimately a floor may be laid over the sloping ground on which the chairs and benches now rest. The lack of

Some Of 6000 At



Part of the audience which packed the tremendous new music shed at Lenox and Stockbridge, at opening concert by Boston Symphony or was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. Orchestra will give five more

Tourists And Music Lovers Exhaust Down County Lodgings

Hotel and rooming house accommodations were at a premium throughout central and southern Berkshire today as a belated influx of summer vacationists together with throngs of music lovers drawn from all parts of the country by the opening last night of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, descended on the county.

A checkup made this morning by the Berkshire Hills Conference revealed that in Stockbridge, Lenox, Lee, Pittsfield and even Great Barrington and Dalton practically all accommodations had been taken, with hotel proprietors reporting that the festival trade this year was setting a new record but that simultaneously the year's vacation business, discouraging last month, had taken a boom as the hot weather had started many on trips which they postponed because of rain in July. Northern Berkshire hotels were too far away from Tanglewood to feel the direct effects of the influx of festival crowds, but they reported a better vacation transient trade and were expected to pick up more of it because of the exhaustion of accommodations in southern and central Berkshire.

er was perfect. A faint moon shone down out of almost cloudless skies, and there was an occasional light breeze to fight off the heat and humidity that the day had left.

A Musically Superb Evening

Musically the evening was superb. The full orchestra has never done a more magnificent job nor one which more fully satisfied Dr. Koussevitzky's standards. The Cecilia society brought from Boston to join with the orchestra in the performance of the Bach "Ein' feste Burg" excerpts and the Beethoven ninth which comprised the program, rose their feet several times while he stepped aside and let the applause go to them. But the greatest tribute of all came from the hands and the throats of the audience when Dr. Koussevitzky alone stood before it and inclined his head in what must have been a genuinely felt appreciation of so marvelous a reception.

The first chorus from the "Ein' feste Burg" cantata opened the program with the orchestra and the Cecilia society performing that work with a beauty and understanding which struck the keynote for the entire concert.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 5 - 1938

Symphonic Festival Is Opened

Koussevitzky Directs Orchestra Before 6,000

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP).—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous ninth symphony by the Boston symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitky.

An audence of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "Music Shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for ten minutes.

The performance was, however, only the logical outcome of an unusual policy, rigidly adhered to.

For one thing, Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony Hall, Boston, through the winter.

For another, he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts. Each is prepared with the greatest care. There are no soloists glittering with Hollywood fame and short on musical gift and no traps for the tourist.

And there is no amplification, because the acoustics of the new shed carry the lightest tone to the remotest corner.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released' to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire Playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

The festival resumes Saturday night with a Haydn-Debussy-Sibelius program. When the first hall closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

The only soloists to be heard throughout the festival are the quartet which sang the ninth symphony last night: Jeannette Vreeland soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; and Norman Cordon, bass. These proved themselves excellent, rising with the Cecilia society's chorus of Boston to the heights inhabited by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The festival is drawing from all parts of the country—registration plates from thirty-odd states were counted in the parking fields. It draws every sort of person. At yesterdays rehearsal there were even a few young men in swimming trunks fresh from a dip in the lake just below the 210-acre Tanglewood estate, where Nathaniel Hawthorne once worked.

Even before the first concert enough tickets had been sold to pay all expenses. About two thirds are held by "members" of the festival association, which thus forms a semi-permanent base for the work.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 5 - 1938

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL OPENS IN NEW MUSIC SHED

It was the realization of a dream, the opening last night of the vast and impressive new music shed at "Tanglewood," the beautiful estate between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and its concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

And appreciation of that "dream come true" was evidenced by the fact that the huge auditorium was filled to overflowing with music lovers, musicians, music critics and other well known people from all over this country and from many sections of Canada. Brief and simple ceremonies only marked the inaugural of the new music shed. There were a few words from Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of Stockbridge, Mass., and New York city, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and from its inception five years ago, its moving spirit; and from Bentley Wirt Warren, of Boston, Mass., president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Then Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, raised his baton and the Festival became a living, breathing thing. The first number on the program was the Bach Chorus and Chorale from the Cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80 and reviving an old custom, the audience was invited to join with the one hundred voices of the Cecilia Society and Chorus of Boston, Mass., in singing the second verse of Johann Sebastian Bach's tremendous old hymn, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." The effect was magnificent. Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Opus 125, was gloriously done, Dr. Koussevitsky and his musicians receiving an ovation for their perfect work.

This city and Columbia county in general were well represented at the first concert and will be throughout the entire series which will come to a close on Sunday afternoon, August 14.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 5 - 1938

6000 at Opening of Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Aug. 5.—(UP)—More than 6000 persons attended the dedication of the new music shed at the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood Thursday night.

Though not yet completed, musicians and engineers said the shed was remarkable for its acoustics. It is open on three sides, covers one and one-half acres, and seats 5700.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in a programme of Beethoven and Bach with vocal interludes by the Cecilia Society chorus.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 5 - 1938

Great Music Center at Tanglewood Foreseen as Fifth Festival Opens

Plan Revealed As Shrine To Music Has Dedication

Opening of $80,000 Music Shed of Berkshire Symphonic Festival Marked by Brilliant Concert and Disclosure That Dr. Koussevitzky Proposes to Establish Academy in Connection With Festival for Advanced Instruction in Musical Leadership—6,000 Hear Boston Symphony and Cecilia Society Perform Bach Chorales and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Passing another significant milestone in its already historic development as 6,000 people helped it dedicate a great new shrine to music in America at the first concert in its immense $80,000 auditorium at Tanglewood on the Lenox-Stockbridge road, the Berkshire Symphonic festival, opening its fifth season, last night revealed plans for a greater and more useful future.

Plan for Music Center Unfolded

In a dedicatory speech during an interlude in the brilliant concert program given under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky by his Boston symphony orchestra assisted by the Cecilia society of Boston and a quartet of distinguished soloists, Bentley Wirt Warren of Williamstown and Boston, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra corporation, disclosed a plan of Dr. Koussevitzky to supplement the annual festival concerts with "a school or academy, holding annual sessions preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and separate instrumentalists," and added the expectation that the first session would be held in connection with the festival concert series two years hence.

Such an academy, operating along with the festival and employing the almost unlimited resources which that institution and the Boston symphony together possess, can create at Tanglewood, Mr. Warren said, "a music center of the first importance," long envisioned by the distinguished conductor whose first appearance with his superb orchestra at the Berkshire festival two years ago had raised it to a position among the musical institutions of first-rank significance in this country.

Announcement's Major Significance

Upon most of the vast audience of approximately 6,000, shattering all previous records, which had assembled for a first view of the great music shed and for the first concert of Dr. Koussevitzky's 1938 series—and was completely gratified by both—the significance of Mr. Warren's announcement with all its implications for Berkshire county as an outstanding center of musical culture on the American continent, was lost. The amplifying system improvised for the dedicatory speeches which he and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, the festival corporation president, were scheduled to give, failed to carry his voice from the stage beyond the first few rows.

But those who did hear it and those who knew of the momentous announcement which his address contained, realized that it forecast a development equal in importance and significance to the formulation of the arrangement which first linked the Berkshire festival and the Boston symphony orchestra together in 1934, and to the creation of the great and wholly unique music shed that gives tangible expression at last to the permanence of the musical institution which in five years has been developed in Berkshire county.

Memorable Night for 6,000

Those who had to wait until today to learn the importance of what Mr. Warren had foretold, still had a memorable experience last night in their participation in the dedication of that great building and in their enjoyment of a concert which, in many respects, surpassed anything that has ever before been heard in this county.

The music shed, unfinished though it is—Miss Robinson Smith in her dedicatory address called for further public subscriptions of $58,000 to permit the completion of the details which had to be omitted from the original building program to keep within the actual cash available—demonstrated its complete and perfect adequacy as a concert auditorium (although the fact that virtually every seat was taken and the throng spread out to the surrounding lawns suggested that despite the magnitude of its proportions it may prove to be inadequate on nights when the elements make the use of the surrounding grounds for the accommodation of the overflow impossible.)

Shed's Acoustics Perfect

There was not a point within the vast fan-shaped shed, covering an acre and a half of ground, measuring 176 feet from the stage to the last row of seats and sprawling the length of two city blocks along its outer curve, where the softest measures of the music could not be heard with perfect clarity, or where the most sonorous passages were marred by echo or distortion.

There would probably have been no difficulty hearing the two speakers, Miss Robinson Smith and Mr. Warren, if they had not purposely spoken softly, putting reliance on an amplifying system which was rigged up for their use but failed to do its part. Dr. Koussevitzky, in a brief address to the audience explaining why he had chosen Beethoven's ninth symphony for performance on this important occasion, made himself heard throughout the great auditorium without going to the extent of shouting. He had discovered that the amplifiers were not working well and so he raised his voice a little. It carried to the last benches.

Building Blends With Setting

Despite its gargantuan dimensions, the music shed gives no impression of extravagant size as one approaches it, nor does it intrude upon the beauty of the magnificent estate which Mrs. Gorham Brooks gave to the orchestra last year as its permanent Berkshire festival home. The building is more than 40 feet high, but the surrounding 20-foot colonnade breaks that height to the eye, and the neutral colors of the building merge into the charming background of trees and distant hills. Although the landscaping is one of the details left for the future, there is still enough of a growth of trees and shrubs about the property to cover great distances of the structure seen from the outside.

Within the heavy steel girders, the solid square supporting columns, and the upper walls—the structure is open to the out-of-doors to the height of the colonade roof—are still to be covered and painted. Ultimately a floor may be laid over the sloping ground on which the chairs and benches now rest. The lack of these refinements last night did not detract from the fact that the structure achieves perfectly its primary purpose—to shelter the audience without in any way detracting from its enjoyment of the music.

Traffic Jams Delay Many

It is to be hoped that ultimately, when more money is available, it will be possible for the festival organization to provide more and better roads from the main highway into the estate so that the parking of cars may be handled more expeditiously and there may be less of a jam when they try to leave the grounds. Last night some of the guests who thought they had started in ample time not only to hear the opening notes but to have an opportunity to stroll about the grounds and observe the developments of the past year before the concert, were so long delayed in getting onto the grounds that Dr. Koussevitzky had finished the first selection before they reached their seats. It required fully an hour for the parking fields to empty after the concert.

It was, of course, no fault of anybody that the ground in the parking lots and along some of the paths to the music shed was soggy; that was the result of the summer's persistent rains and, indeed, the festival organization had done its best to cover the muddier spots with gravel. The walk from the road nearest the shed to its entrance was canopied, moreover, so that in the event of rain, people might go from their cars to the auditorium without being exposed. But last night's weather was perfect. A faint moon shone down out of almost cloudless skies, and there was an occasional light breeze to fight off the heat and humidity that the day had left.

A Musically Superb Evening

Musically the evening was superb. The full orchestra has never done a more magnificent job nor one which more fully satisfied Dr. Koussevitzky's standards. The Cecilia society brought from Boston to join with the orchestra in the performance of the Bach "Ein' feste Burg" excerpts and the Beethoven ninth which comprised the program, rose to inspired heights.

If the singing of some of the four soloists imported for the concert was slightly disappointing it was probably not so much because of vocal inadequacy on their part as because of a disadvantage which they suffered in trying to sing from behind the orchestra of more than 100 members. Miss Jeannette Vreeland, the soprano, seemed to surmount this difficulty most successfully. Her splendid voice rang out sharp and clear in her solo passages Paul Althouse, the tenor, and Norman Cordon, the basso, were slightly less successful. When they, with Miss Anna Kaskas, contralto, joined their voices in the quartet passages of the Beethoven work, the results were very close to perfect.

Great Ovation Given

The slight deficiencies in the solo passages did not dampen the enthusiasm of the great audience and when the performance of the Ninth had ended in a brilliant, overpowering climax, Dr. Koussevitzky was called back again and again until he had emerged from his suite at the side of the stage and had mounted the podium to acknowledge the great spontaneous tribute eight times. He graciously shared honors with the soloists, his orchestra, the chorus and its conductor, Arthur Fiedler. Several times he led Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon to the front of the platform, shaking hands cordially with each of them as the audience poured its applause upon them. He led out Mr. Fiedler and turned the applause to him with a gracious gesture. He lifted the orchestra and the chorus members to their feet several times while he stepped aside and let the applause go to them. But the greatest tribute of all came from the hands and the throats of the audience when Dr. Koussevitzky alone stood before it and inclined his head in what must have been a genuinely felt appreciation of so marvelous a reception.

The first chorus from the "Ein' teste Burg" cantata opened the program with the orchestra and the Cecilia society performing that work with a beauty and understanding which struck the keynote for the entire concert.

Koussevitzky Addresses Audience

Then came the interlude during which Miss Robinson Smith and Mr. Warren gave their brief addresses dedicating the immense auditorium. Before Dr. Koussevitzky opened the score of his next selection he turned to the audience and in one of his rare utterances from the podium said "On this significant day of musical life, I have selected the Ninth Symphony not only because it is a great musical masterpiece, but also to hear the voices of the chorus repeat Schiller's ode, calling all nations to brotherhood."

As Dr. Koussevitzky finished that simple statement with a wide and inclusive gesture of his arms the audience burst forth with a thunder of applause which reflected its understanding of and sympathy with the special significance he found in the work he was to perform.

Before the Beethoven score was approached, however, the orchestra and the chorus did the familiar chorale from the Bach "Ein' feste Burg," known commonly in hymnology as "A Mighty Fortress," and as they dropped its last note, Dr. Koussevitzky turned to the audience and its 6,000 voices joined the chorus and the orchestra in the repetition of the work, giving the audience participation in the significant program of dedication.

Beethoven's Ninth Performed

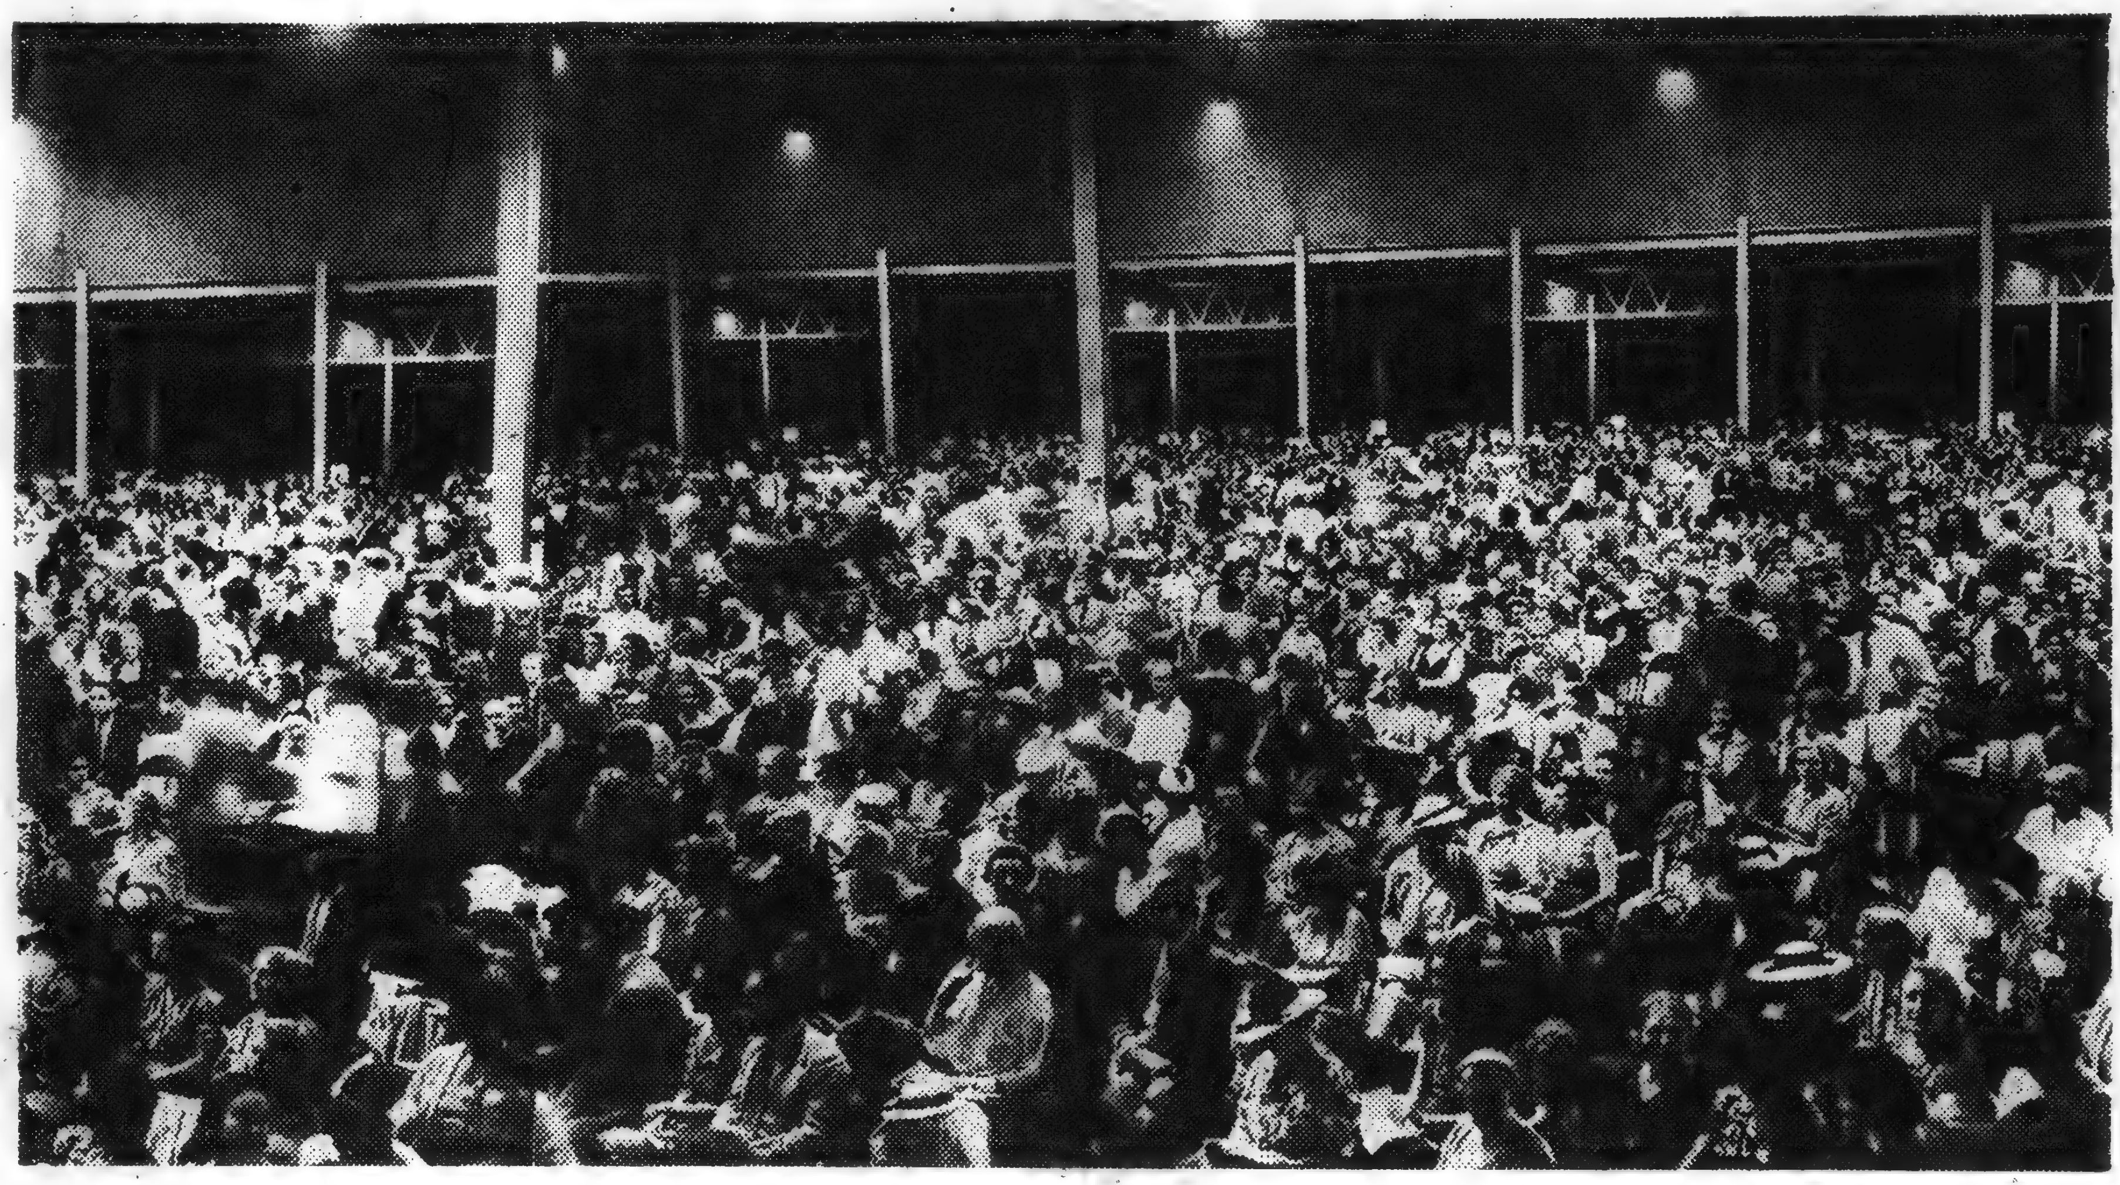
The elaborate grace and polished opulence of the Beethoven work have seldom found more gratifying expression than Dr. Kouzzevitzky and his musicians gave to them last evening. Through the first three movements and into the fourth the orchestra under the great conductor's sensitive leadership worked up to the magnificent climax in which the voices of the soloists, the quartet and the chorus join with the strings, the reeds and the brasses of the orchestra to speak in some of the most majestic musical phrases of all time, those which Beethoven transcribed from Schiller's Ode to Joy.

Even to those passages of the work which some readers find tortuous, artificial and lacking in meaning, Dr. Koussevitzky gave rich musical significance. To full and resonant life under his baton came the movements that contain the full flavor of Beethoven's genius and the climax as the orchestra and the chorus spoke together in the words of the ode was overwhelming in its emotional power and beauty. Surely a more gratifying program to mark the dedication of the festival's permanent home could not have been created.

Future Programs

The second concert in the series is set for Saturday evening at 8.30 o'clock when the orchestra will perform Hayden's E-flat symphony, Debussy's three symphonic sketches combined under the title, "La Mer," and the Sibelius E-minor symphony. The first series ends on Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock when works of Mozart, Brahms, Copland, Ravel and Respighi will be performed. The second series of concerts is set for Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon of the following week.

Some Of 6000 At Opening Concert



Part of the audience which packed the tremendous new music shed at Tanglewood, permanent home of Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge, at opening concert by Boston Symphony orchestra and Metropolitan Opera soloists last evening. Glorious program was conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. Orchestra will give five more concerts as part of Festival.

Tourists And Music Lovers Exhaust Down County Lodgings

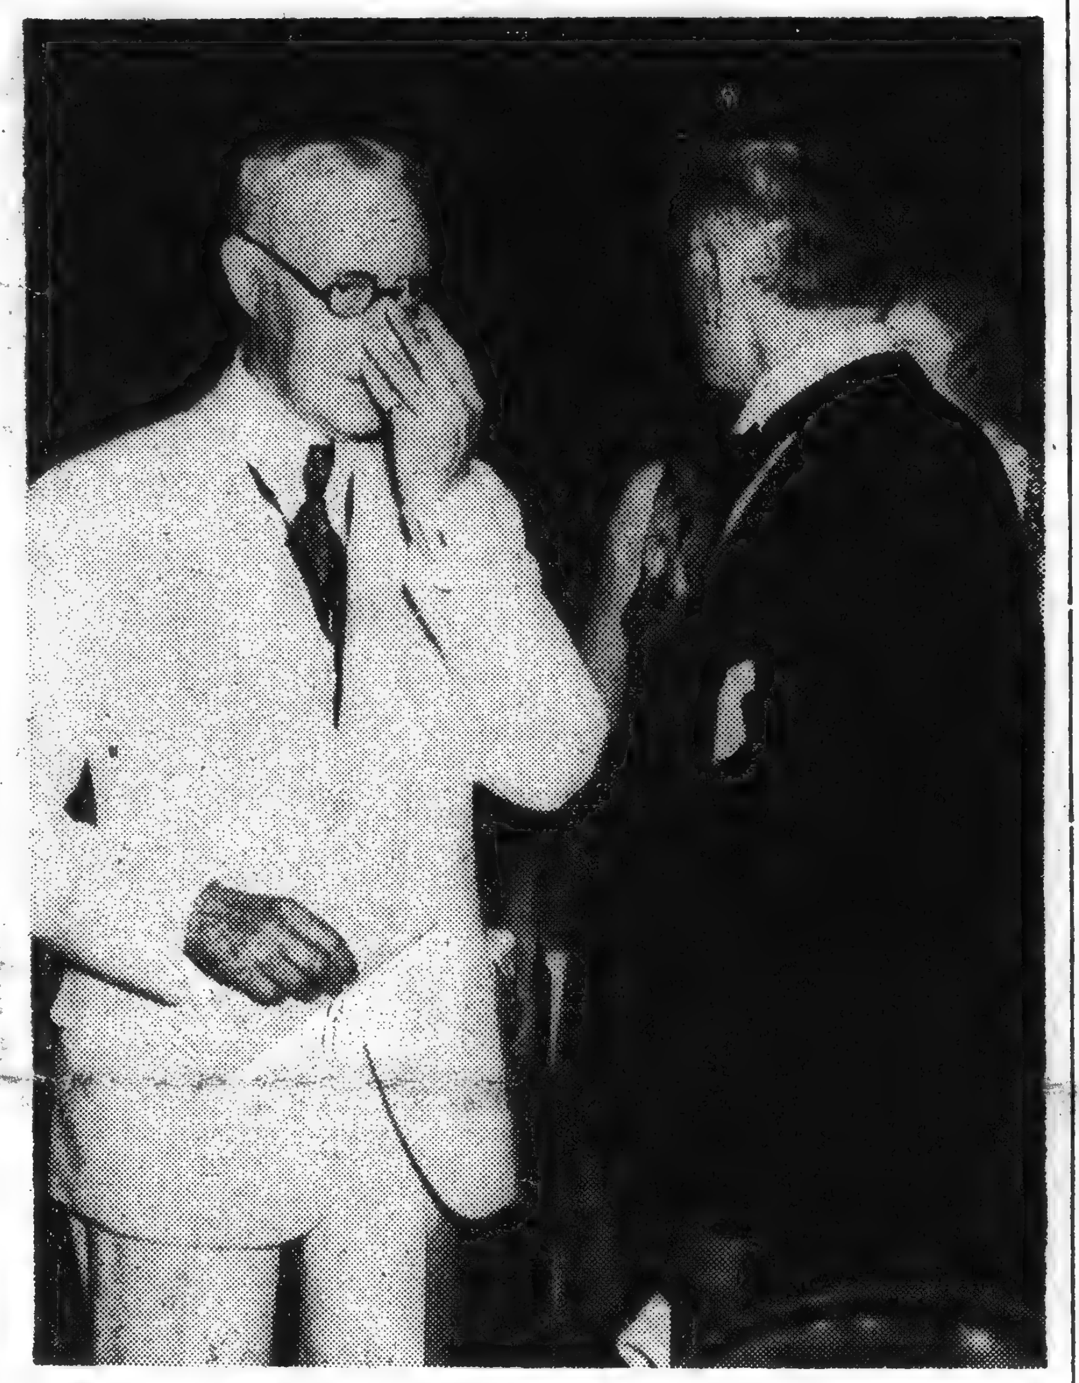
Hotel and rooming house accommodations were at a premium throughout central and southern Berkshire today as a belated influx of summer vacationists together with throngs of music lovers drawn from all parts of the country by the opening last night of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, descended on the county.

A checkup made this morning by the Berkshire Hills Conference revealed that in Stockbridge, Lenox, Lee, Pittsfield and even Great Barrington and Dalton practically all accommodations had been taken, with hotel proprietors reporting that the festival trade this year was setting a new record but that simultaneously the year's vacation business, discouraging last month, had taken a boom as the hot weather had started many on trips which they postponed because of rain in July. Northern Berkshire hotels were too far away from Tanglewood to feel the direct effects of the influx of festival crowds, but they reported a better vacation transient trade and were expected to pick up more of it because of the exhaustion of accommodations in southern and central Berkshire.

Broadcast Marred

Boston, Aug. 5 (AP)—The Berkshire Festival's new $80,000 Music Shed guards the Boston Symphony from the weather at Stockbridge, but nothing could prevent the orchestra from being silenced on the air last night when a power line transformer failed at Walpole and Station WJZ's Millis transformer, carrying the Festival concert, was silenced for almost an hour. The accident also deprived parts of Norwood, Walpole and Millis of lights.

During Intermission



Caught by cameraman in informal pose, Bentley Wirt Warren of Williamstown and Boston, president of Boston Symphony orchestra, talks over success of opening concert of Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood last evening with Professor Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown.

Orchestra And Festival Heads Reveal Future Hopes And Plans

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge and New York city, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and Bentley Wirt Warren of Williamstown and Boston, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Corporation, told of plans for the completion of the permanent Tanglewood development and for the creation of an advanced academy for music students which will make this a musical center of first importance, in addresses dedicating the festival's new music shed at its first concert of 1938 season last night.

Miss Robinson Smith specifically appealed for private contributions of $58,000 to permit the installation of rolling iron curtains to close in the shed, to cover, panel and paint its inner walls, to encase the steel columns, complete the stage and shell, landscape the grounds, replace the benches in the unreserved sections with chairs and illuminate the parking field. Mr. Warren disclosed Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's plan for an academy for advanced students in music to be operated in connection with the festival.

Miss Robinson Smith

Miss Robinson Smith said:

"Had a clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic festival would be inaugurating this great music shed, no one would have paid the least attention. It is, however, an inspiring reality.

"But nothing worth while ever happens without someone having dreamed a dream. It was the late Henry Hadley who had this dream, feeling as he did that the Berkshires were an ideal spot for symphonic music 'under the moon and stars'. The residents of the Berkshires became intrigued with this idea of an out of door musical festival and put their shoulders to the wheel to make it a success. After two summer festivals, Dr. Hadley resigned because of his failing health and the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic festival approached Dr. Koussevitzky and his great orchestra, the Boston symphony.

"Words cannot express the enthusiasm that greeted his acceptance nor the inspiration that his vision for the development of a great musical center gave to everyone with his understanding of the hunger for music in the summer of a large and music-loving public.

"Dr. Koussevitzky's first festival, of three concerts, was given in 1936 in a huge tent at Holmwood, Lenox. People flocked there from all parts of the country and it was soon realized that what had started as a comparatively small affair had now taken on national importance. A permanent home was necessary. Various places were visited, and then Mrs. Gorham Brooks solved the problem by giving to the Boston Symphony orchestra her beautiful property, 'Tanglewood,' overlooking the lovely Stockbridge bowl.

"Dr. Koussevitzky realized from the beginning the importance of a permanent building and his friend, the well-known architect, Eliel Saarinen, was consulted and was asked to draft tentative plans. It was impossible, however, to complete the construction in time for the 1937 Festival and so the six concerts were again held in a huge tent.

"Most of you know what happened one night last summer when the elements and Wagner got into conflict. This seemingly tragic event proved a blessing in disguise for immediately after it the board of trustees decided to start a campaign for money to build this music shed. Many of you responded most generously and a month ago, thanks to Mr. Joseph Franz, the engineer, the shed was ready for the 1938 festival. Mr. Saarinen's conception was the basis for this music shed which we are this evening so happily dedicating.

"This does not mean that it is entirely completed—there is still much to do to make it as beautiful and perfect as it should be for the perfection Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra are entitled to. It is true that a fine roof covers one acre and a half of land, thus permitting nearly six thousand people to sit within the building proper; that half of the public can sit on chairs; that the musicians have a fine tuning room; and that Dr. Koussevitzky has his own suite. But still more important is the excellent study on the acoustics made by Professor Richard D. Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"In these recent years of financial strain when the federal government has spent tremendous sums of money in an attempt to support the hard-hit sphere of culture, the Berkshire Symphonic festival has followed the older American tradition of aiding culture by individual patronage and support. It has been a struggle but the results achieved thus far have justified the effort Today the operation of the concerts is self-supporting through the sale of tickets. But the building has come from private contributions and future improvements must come the same way. At the present moment we are in need of $58,000 to carry out immediate plans—funds for beautifying the grounds by the planting of trees and shrubs near the building, funds for covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, for permanent lighting of the parking fields, for iron roll curtains to close in the auditorium against storms, for permanent chairs for the audience, and similar needs. It is our conviction that individual persons who believe in the old American tradition of individual support of culture in America will help us in the future and help us now.

"The trustees of the Boston symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic festival work in the closest cooperation and Dr. Koussevitzky is always an inspiration. His orchestra is too much loved throughout the land for it to be necessary to eulogize them.

"There is, however, behind the scenes of the Boston symphony orchestra, a great lawyer who is its guiding spirit, a summer resident of the Berkshires and a true friend of the Berkshire Symphonic festival. It is my privilege to present the president of the Boston symphonic orchestra, a distinguished man and a loyal friend of distinguished music in America, Mr. Bentley Warren."

Mr. Warren's Address

Mr. Warren spoke as follows:

"The Boston Symphony orchestra rejoices in this opportunity to bring its tribute of appreciation and praise to the Berkshire Symphonic festival for its foresight, energy and success in making available this adequate and admirable auditorium. With such a result of only three years of co-operation between the two organizations, who can predict how great may be the contribution of Berkshire to the musical culture of America?

"In 1881, a beloved citizen of Boston founded its symphony orchestra. Alone and unaided he promoted and supervised its activities and met its annual deficit for 37 years. His objective was not merely to enrich the musical culture of his own city; he wished also to further the appreciation and enjoyment of the universal language of music throughout the country. At the age of 82 he retired from this most fruitful work. Since then the present corporation organized under his direction, has, with the financial support of generous patrons of the concerts, continued his purposes and policies. The number of excellent orchestras now in America, yearly furnishing music of the highest merit from the Atlantic to the Pacific, proves the soundness of his confidence that the American people were eager for a national music culture.

"Throughout its existence the orchestra has constantly broadened its field of activities. At the beginning there were only 24 concerts a year, all in Boston. Both locally and over the country this number has been greatly multiplied. Instead of appealing to local audiences only, the Berkshire Festival is now offered to a national public.

"The gift of the beautiful Tanglewood estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, in memory of her parents, has provided a perfect setting for these concerts. It has also opened a wide vista of increasing usefulness. Our distinguished conductor, after 14 years in this country of his adoption—for he has now become an American citizen—has long cherished a vision of a music center of the first importance. He is convinced that America is now ripe for it. Here he believes it is possible to develop orchestra conductors as accomplished as any that Europe can provide. The personnel of the orchestra contains artists unexcelled anywhere as teachers of advanced pupils in the use of the various instruments. After experience with many amateur choruses, Dr. Koussevitzky believes that the possibilities of choral and community singing are almost unlimited if properly trained leaders are made available. What does all this suggest?

"It is the hope of our conductor—a hope, I am happy to say, shared by the Berkshire Symphonic festival corporation and the Boston symphony orchestra—that the annual festival may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders, and separate instrumentalists. Tanglewood is the ideal location for such a school. The mansion house and other buildings included in Mrs. Brooks' gifts will furnish the facilities immediately needed. This auditorium cannot be excelled as a place for the instruction of prospective orchestra conductors with a small but adequate orchestra of some of the members of the Boston Symphony itself, augmented by students attending the school for instruction in the use of their special instruments.

"This fortunate combination of circumstances, and the existence of an adequate initial plant, will greatly reduce the amount of money needed to realize the conductor's program. Indeed, the greatest need will be for scholarships. These will be indispensable because many of the most promising students are themselves without the means to pay the cost of the higher and specialized instruction for which their talents will qualify them. No one can doubt that from some source the necessary funds will be forthcoming; and it is expected that the detailed arrangements for the school can be completed so that its first session may preceded the Berkshire festival of 1940.

"We all believe that here stands such an opportunity as Mr. Higginson seized when he founded the Boston Symphony orchestra, and as Miss Robinson Smith and her associates have realized in the establishment of these Berkshire concerts.

"The opportunity transcends by far any local limits of Boston and the Berkshires. Happily the music-lovers assembled here constitute no merely local audience. Surely many will agree with Dr. Koussevitzky as to the national value of the musical enterprise that he envisons. May not the Tanglewood concerts become historic, as forerunners of a great artistic and educational reality—the establishment of an outstanding summer musical center for this country!"

Noted Conductor Congratulated

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Syymphony orchestra, receives greetings of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at opening concert at Tanglewood, permanent home of Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge, last evening. Bentley Wirt Warren of Williamstown and Boston, president of the orchestra, looks on as orchestra members applaud.

Orchestra In New Tanglewood Shed

View of Boston Symphony orchestra on stage of new shed at Tanglewood, home of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at opening concert last evening. Shed replaces tent of former years and seats 5,700 persons with additional room for 3,000 standees in colonnades. Audience last night was delighted with perfect acoustics

3

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1938

Copland Work Is Performed at Berkshire Fete

Koussevitsky Gives First of Two American Compositions; Record 20,000 Attend Three Concerts

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—The first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the new music shed on the Tanglewood Estate here closed this afternoon when the third concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under [redacted]tzky's direction, was heard by an apparently capacity audience which, as on Thursday and Saturday nights, gave the conductor and his talented musicians fervent and extensive applause.

After showers in the early morning and an unsettled weather outlook later, the weather cleared and the audience of more than 6,000 was thought to be the largest in this series thus far. A preliminary estimate for the first three concerts gave a total of not far from 20,000, marking a Berkshire record.

With the considerateness of the weather in avoiding rain during a performance, there has not yet been an opportunity to estimate the capacity of the roof deadening the sounds of rain and thunder, although much is expected of it in this regard. If, what with the prevalent temperature and humidity, it was hardly cool in the shed, it was considerably less warm than it had been in the tent used for the corresponding concert in a day of similar temperature last August.

Dr. Koussevitzky began his program with familiar music, Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" and Brahms's Fourth Symphony, and then presented the first of the two American works scheduled for a hearing in this festival, Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater." The other, "The Angelus," from Henry Hadley's Third Symphony, will be played Saturday night in memory of its composer, who conducted the first two Berkshire festivals. Music by Ravel followed, "Mother Goose" and the suite from "Daphnis and Chloe," the latter substituted for the originally announced "Pines of Rome" of Respighi. Mr. Copland played the piano part in his own work, which was composed in Boston and first played there under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1925.

It has been heard in New York, but not recently. The title, according to the composer, indicates no specific play, but simply implies that at times this music has a quality which is suggestive of the theater. Such an implication can readily be found in the five contrasted sections of the music. Thirteen years after its premiere it can be praised for its skillful and effective instrumentation, its often vivid suggestion of varied and changing moods.

Various features of the work, such as its indulgence in dissonant harmonies and the occasional influence of the spirit rather than the actual rhythms of jazz and of two or three prominent composers from Russia and France, can be regarded as more or less typical of music by the more radically minded young American composers of the post-war decade, and of this Mr. Copland's "Music for the Theater" can be ranked as a shining example. It seems, indeed, a little long at times—the appealing lyricism of the interlude is somewhat overdrawn out—but yet it merits occasional revival and a performance such as the one bestowed upon it by the Boston Symphony. Mr. Copland, who has treated the piano part as woven into the ensemble rather than in a solo role, was well applauded.

Laudable playing also characterized the other works in a program which, for reasons of time rather than musical value, might have been abridged by the omission of one of the Ravel works. The Brahms symphony had a brilliant and expressive interpretation of opulent tone. During a few measures it seemed that the wind instruments were in slightly undue prominence as compared with the strings in the musical picture, and some might have relished a shade more of deliberation in the second movement, but in general this was an imposing performance of music of seldom surpassed eloquence.

The well contrasted program played last night, including Haydn's Symphony in E flat, Op. 99, Debussy's "La Mer" and Sibelius's First Symphony, illustrated advantageously both the seldom paralleled quality and technical virtuosity of the orchestra and the superior acoustic conditions provided by the music shed—a title which might be considered rather too unassuming for a building of such spacious dimensions. In its revelation of the composer's creative imagination in some of the most potent moments of its expression, Arturo Toscanini's interpretation has set a standard which, for some of us, has not been duplicated, but the performance under Dr. Koussevitzky gave an exceptionally persuasive realization of the imaginative and emotional appeal of the score, as well as the mastery of its instrumentation with memorable color, clarity and sonority.

The attendance fell slightly below Thursday's figure, but yet was believed to have reached the 6,000 mark.

In regard to the hall's acoustics, a statement made today by Professor Richard D. Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said that a critical survey made during the first two performances had realized the most optimistic predictions.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who will entertain the orchestra at a picnic tomorrow, will hold rehearsals during the next three days. The fourth festival concert next Thursday night will have a Wagner program, with five vocal soloists. The Sixth Symphony of Beethoven, a Tchaikovsky work and the Hadley excerpts will be heard next Saturday night, and music by Schumann, Prokoviev and Brahms is scheduled for the last program next Sunday afternoon.

Muddy spots due to wet weather had caused a few delays for patrons' cars on Thursday, but conditions in regard to ease of arrival, parking and departure were greatly improved by the time of last night's concert, thanks to the work of festical officials and their collaborators.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1938

Training School for American Conductors Visioned in Dedication of 'Tanglewood'

Berkshire Festival Succeeds Without Federal Aid

Stockbridge, Mass.—The realization of an $80,000 cultural project without federal assistance and the enlargement of the Berkshire Festival to include an academy for the training of orchestral conductors were voiced in the dedicatory addresses at the new music shed at "Tanglewood" last night.

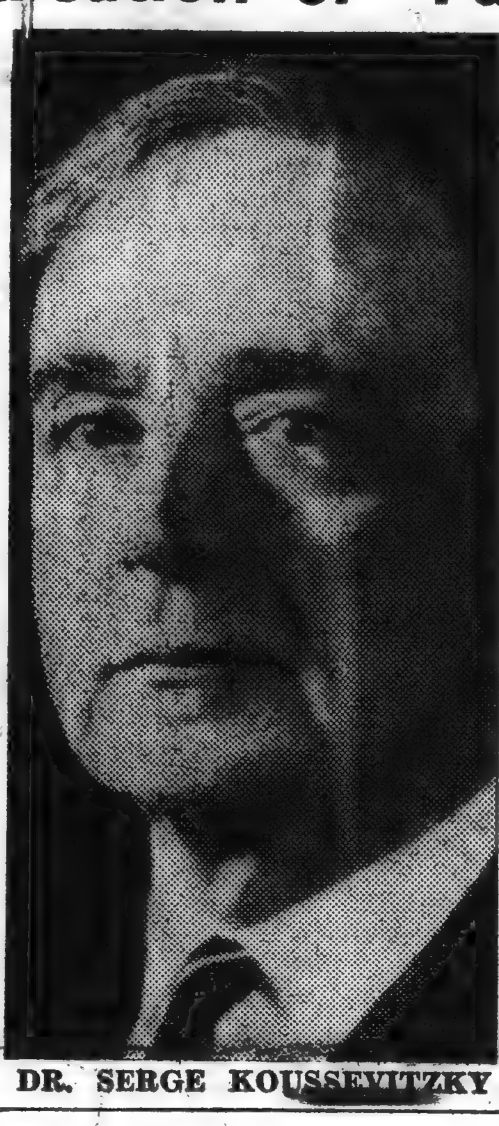
"In these recent years of financial strain when the Federal government has spent tremendous sums of money in an attempt to support the hard-hit sphere of culture, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has followed the older American tradition of aiding culture by individual patronage and support," said Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival.

"It has been a struggle but the results achieved thus far have justified the effort. Today the operation of the concerts is self-sustaining through the sale of tickets. But the building has come from private contributions and future improvements must come the same way. At the present moment we are in need of $58,000 to carry out immediate plans—funds for beautifying the grounds, for covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, for permanent lighting of the parking fields, for iron roll curtains to close in the auditorium against storms, for permanent chairs in the audience, and similar needs.

"Had a clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be inaugurating this great Music Shed, no one would have paid the least attention. It is, however, an inspiring reality."

Miss Smith reviewed the history of the Festival from its beginnings under the leadership of the late Henry Hadley and of its various removals from one Stockbridge estate to another until Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood to the Boston Orchestra last year.

"Dr. Koussevitzky realized from the beginning the importance of a permanent building and his friend, the well-known architect, Eliel Saarinen, was consulted and was asked to draft tentative plans. It was impossible, however, to complete the construction in time for the 1937 Festival, and so the six concerts were again held in a huge tent.



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

"Most of you know what happened one night last summer when the elements and Wagner got into conflict. This seemingly tragic event proved a blessing in disguise for immediately after the Board of Trustees decided to start a campaign for money to build this music shed."

She introduced Bently W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who recalled the service of Henry Lee Higginson, its founder, and who for 37 years met the orchestra's annual deficits.

"Throughout its existence," he said, "the orchestra has constantly broadened its field of activities. At the beginning there were only 24 concerts a year, all in Boston. Both locally and over the country this number has been greatly multiplied. Instead of appeal to local audiences only, the Berkshire Festival is now offered to a national public.

"The gift of the beautiful Tanglewood estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, in memory of her parents, has provided a perfect setting for these concerts. It has also opened a wide vista of increasing usefulness. Our distinguished conductor, after 14 years in this country of his adoption—for he has now become an American citizen—has long cherished a vision of a music center of the first importance. He is convinced that America is now ripe for it.

Here he believes it is possible to develop orchestral conductors as accomplished as any that Europe can provide. The personnel of the orchestra contains artists unexcelled anywhere as teachers of advanced pupils in the use of the various instruments. After experience with many amateur choruses, Dr. Koussevitzky believes that the possibilities of choral and community singing are almost unlimited if properly trained leaders are made available. What does all this suggest:

"It is the hope of our Conductor—a hope, I am happy to say, shared by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra—that the annual Festival may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestra conductors, choral leaders, and separate instrumentalists. Tanglewood is the ideal location for such a school.

The mansion house and other buildings included in Mrs. Brooks' gift will furnish the facilities immediately needed. This auditorium cannot be excelled as a place for the instruction of prospective orchestra conductors with a small but adequate orchestra of some of the members of tthe Boston Symphony itself, augmented by students attending the school for instruction in the use of their special instruments.

"This fortunate combination of circumstances, and the existence of an adequate initial plant, will greatly reduce the amount of money needed to realize the Conductor's program. Indeed, the greatest need will be for scholarships. These will be indispensible because many of the most promising students are themselves without the means to pay the cost of the higher and specialized instruction for which their talents will qualify them. No one can doubt that from some source the necessary funds will be forthcoming; and it is expected that the detailed arrangements for the school can be completed so that its first session may precede the Berkshire Festival of 1940."

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

128

AUG 5 - 1938

MUSIC FESTIVAL HEARD BY 6,000

Autos From Over 30 States At Berkshire Opening; Is An Assured Success

(By JOHN SELBY)
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) — The labor of 600 volunteer workers ETC.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER

AUG 5 - 1938

Berskshire Music Festival Hailed As Huge Success

By JOHN SELBY
(Aassociated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5—The ETC.

OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 5 - 1938

Koussevitzky Opens Festival Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth sea- ETC (as below)

BATON ROUGE, LA.
STATE - TIMES

AUG 5 - 1938

Fifth Season of Berkshire Symphony Festical Hailed by Cheering Throng

By John Selby
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP)—The Labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous ninth symphony by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for ten minutes.

The performance was, however, only the logical outcome of an unusual policy, rigidly adhered to.

For one thing, Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony hall, Boston, through the winter.

For another, he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts. Each is prepared with the greatest care. There are no soloists glittering with Hollywood fame and short on musical gift, and no traps for the tourist.

And there is no amplification, because the acoustics of the new shed carry the lightest tone to the remotest corner.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

The festival resumes Saturday night with a Haydn-Debussy-Sibelius program. When the first half closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

The only soloists to be heard throughout the festival are the quartet which sang the ninth symphony last night: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; and Norman Cordon, bass. These proved themselves excellent, rising with the Cecilia society's chorus of Boston to the heights inhabited by Dr. Koussevitzky.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1938

Boston Symphony Scores In Festival's Opening

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival was justified by Friday night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphonic orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for 10 minutes.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

AUG 5 - 1938

BOSTON, Aug. 5.—(A.P.) — The Berkshire festival's new $80,000 music shed guards the Boston Symphony from the weather at Stockbridge, but nothing could prevent the orchestra from being silenced on the air last night when a power line transformer failed at Walpole and station WJZ's Millis transformer, carrying the festival concert, was silenced for almost an hour. The accident also deprived parts of Norwood, Walpole and Millis of lights.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

129

AUG 5 - 1938

Dr. Koussevitzky And 'The Ninth' Stir Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Stockbridge—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky faced more than 5,000 people in the new music pavilion at "Tanglewood" last night and directed the mass singing of Bach's chorale "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott."

There was probably no one who didn't sing or try to for the tremendous outpouring of triumphant, reverential song had been ignited by the magistral baton and countenance to which it is usually the privilege of only the peerless Boston Symphony Orchestra to make itself subject. The great man was not beating time as is supposed to be the only way to lead a singing audience; he was producing living music which transcended the very instrument which made it. The audience collectively seemed surprised at itself.

Koussevitzky is like that. Strings and horns acquire incredible timbres which the ear orientates with difficulty; the trumpets in the Bach cantata, which takes its name from the abovementioned chorale, had the piercing brilliance that imagination associates with the antique clarion of Bach's day. The musicians must fairly be astonished at themselves under Koussevitzky's spell. For the listeners certainly there was the eternal surprise that comes with the recreation of such a work as the Ninth Symphony.

It was Koussevitzky's hour—this first concert of the fifth season of the Berkshire Festival. He tried to make it appear otherwise by his insistence that the ovations be accepted by the soloists, our own Anna Kaskas, Jeanette Vreeland, who sang her parts in the Ninth without score, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon, by the Cecilia Society of Boston and its conductor, Arthur Fiedler, and by his own players. But the audience knew its hero, applauded him thunderously at every opportunity. Upon his first appearance all arose with an acclaim that seemingly would have gone on without end had he not shut it off with a wave of the hand.

After dedicatory addresses by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Orchestra, to be found in another column, Dr. Koussevitzky said: "I want to tell you why the Ninth Symphony was chosen for this program. I give it to you not only because it is the greatest masterpiece of all musical literature but also because of Schiller's words calling all nations to brotherhood."

Toward the end that the message might be the better understood, the words were sung in English although there are probably more millions who would recognize, by musical association at least, "Seid umschlungen, Millionen!" than "O embrace now, all ye millions!" But we have enough of that argument when it comes to opera. The words do not matter in the least anyway since they would be unintelligible in any language. Because Beethoven was writing for the voices in orchestral terms, the tones themselves, as everyone knows, are all but impossible to sing.

All the more credit then to the Cecilia Society and to the soloists for a masterly performance. The unmercifully high tessitura was gallantly handled by the chorus, which also achieved a beautiful legato in the opening chorus from Bach's cantata No. 80. The quartets, in which Anna Kaskas supplied the alto, were expertly managed and the solos left nothing to be desired.

When Dr. Koussevitzky, without any reservations whatsoever, named the Ninth as the greatest of all masterpieces he may have reasoned the matter in two ways. "It has faults; I will make the listener unaware of them." Or in this wise: "It has faults; but when, in spite of them, it can be such compelling music, I shall call it the greatest." Faults it certainly has; Beethoven knew that a choral symphony was a contradiction of terms; he despised program music and yet he himself borrowed from the poet a program for the final movement of his last symphony.

It is not pure music, but last night it was magnificent music. The choral movement had a glory such as nothing that ever happened before. In spite of its quotation from the preceding movements it seemed to stand apart as a separate composition. The scuttling, turbulent scherzo, the rarefied adagio, and the first movement, which this time seemed so short, were posed each one against the others in as engrossing a way as only Koussevitzky can do it.

Had it not been for the sure knowledge that with music reviewers superlatives are dangerous playthings, this opinion would have included the statement, which took shape half way through the concert, that Koussevitzky is the greatest of all conductors. The Boston leader did not hedge in his remark about the Ninth Symphony and this reviewer so far yields to temptation as to say that he would rather defend his own superlative than the amazing Doctor's.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 6 - 1938

Tanglewood's Future

On the night that the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Dr. Koussevitzky played its first concert at the Berkshire Symphonic festival, that novel enterprise became a national institution.

At that moment it ascended musically to a peak of perfection at which it has remained and, we are sure, will remain, as long as the present affiliation continues. It is possible to broaden the scope of the programs, as Dr. Koussevitzky proposes through the ultimate introduction of full operatic works. It is quite impossible to make the festival finer than it has already become.

The stature it has thus attained has completely justified the ambitious physical development that has been admirably begun, and that will unquestionably be finished in the course of another year or so.

At this point one would say that, with the completion of this development already projected, the moving spirits of the institution might feel that there was nothing more to plan and hope for except the continuance of the festival as the very fine thing it is.

But Dr. Koussevitzky's restless imagination has conceived a new direction in which it may usefully work. His plans, as they were revealed by Mr Warren in his address dedicating the new auditorium on Thursday evening, envision a further development which will give the festival increasing usefulness by providing the place and the means for the stimulation and development of new leadership in the field of fine music.

This will not make the festival better. It will, however, constitute a sort of guarantee of its own continuance down through the years by cultivating the talent that must be developed if such an institution is to have long life, while contributing substantially to the general artistic wealth of the nation. This undertaking could have no happier nor more appropriate locale than Tanglewood. And it will, as Mr. Warren said, vastly increase the importance and significance of that place as a great musical center in America.

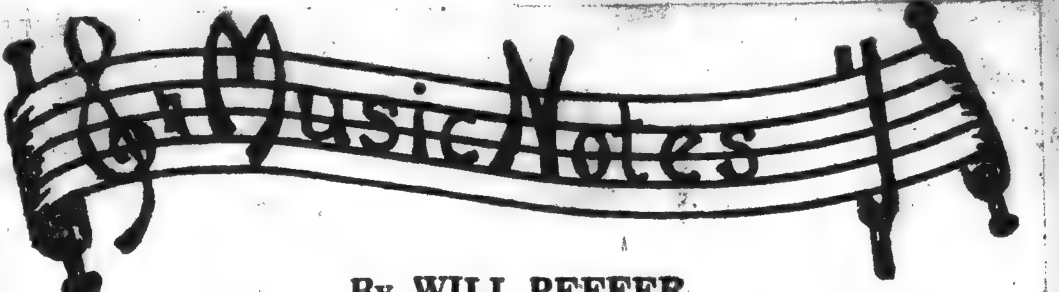
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 5 - 1938

MORE than 6000 persons attended the dedication of the new music shed at the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, last night. Though not yet completed, musicians and engineers said the shed was remarkable for its acoustics. It is open on three sides, covers one and a half acres and seats 5700. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston symphony orchestra in a program of Beethoven and Bach with vocal interludes by the Cecilia Society chorus.

ERIE, PA.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1938



By WILL PEFFER

TODAY, the opening concert of America's summer music festival will be brought to the radio audience, when Boston Symphony inaugurates its Fifth Annual Berkshire Festival. The complete two-hour program starts at 8:30 p. m.

Will Peffer

Two choruses from Bach's cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, will comprise the program, and the Boston Symphony, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, will be assisted by Boston's noted Cecilia Society Chorus. Olin Downes, music commentator for the New York Times, will discuss the Beethoven work during intermission.

Gertrude Smith, president of the Berkshire Musical Festival, and Bentley Warren, president of the Boston Symphony, will give brief addresses dedicating the new open-air auditorium just completed to house this annual festival.

The auditorium, built on the historic farm where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," nestles beside a lake in the picturesque Berkshire, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., and accomodates an audience of more than five thousand. The four previous festivals were performed under canvas on Tanglewood Farm, which last year was deeded to the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent site for this annual summer series, which is rapidly becoming the American rival of Europe's Salzburg Music Festivals.

* * *

FOR the second time in the short space of two months the bars have been dropped at the National Music camp at Interlochen, Mich., to allow the enrollment of non-music students. The first occasion was the decision of the directors to add a course in radio workshop. The second, announced a short time ago, was the affiliation of the famous camp with the Meinzinger Foundatios Art school of Detroit.

Thus, the National School of Music camp and the Grand Traverse Region of Michigan, moved one step nearer its goal as a fine arts center of the United States.

In the new radio course it is possible for a student to study engineering, script and continuity writing, station management, stage setting for radio, and any number of things that are necessary in the work. It all came about as an outgrowth of the ruling by the Federal Communications commission that sets aside a wave length for educational broadcasts and made it possible for 1500 school systems to set up their own stations.

NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

AUG 5 - 1938

Walpole Power Break Retires Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—The new $80,000 music ship guards the Boston symphony from the weather at sea but nothing could prevent the symphony from being retired from the air last night when a power line transformer failed at Walpole over Station WBZ's Millis transformer carrying the festival concert was silenced for almost an hour. It deprived part of Norwood, Millis and Walpole from listening.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 5 - 1938

5,000 Cheer Opening Of Symphonic Festival

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

An audience of 5000 music lovers cheered to the echo the conclusion of the first concert of the 1938 season of the Berkshire Symphonic festival last night at Tanglewood. permanent home of America's most unique summer concert institution. Leaders in the social, professional and artistic circles of America, so far forgot their conservative reserve as to stand on chairs and attest their complete approbation of the whole affair. The attraction was the Boston Symphony orchestra and the magnet, the virile conductor, Serge Koussevitzky looking as fit as the fiddle of the able concertmaster, Richard Burgin after a holiday abroad.

Two Bach chorales opened the program with the assistance of the Cecilia Society of Boston, demonstrating the musical qualities instilled by the regular conductor, Arthur Fiedler. Dr. Koussevitsky stepped out of his role of conductor, momentarily, to invite the audience to join in the final stanza of "Ein' feste Burg" which it did with commendable regard for his baton.

Following the intermission, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, greatest of all collaborations between human and instrumental voices was played. Needless to state, Dr. Koussevitsky gave a spirited reading of the entire work which ranks with the finest traditions of contemporary conductors. A quartet composed of Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althaus and Norman Cordon sang the unvocal music of the final movement with a fortitude born of their inspirational conductor's enthusiasm.

The second concert on Saturday night will include works by Haydn, Debussy and Sibelius.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

AUG 5 - 1938

6,000 Patrons at Symphonic Festival in Berkshire Hills

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5—(A. P.)—The labor of 600 volunteer adequately. Although the festival

ETC.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 5 - 1938

Opening of Boston Symphony Festival Is Declared Success

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here. ETC

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

Beethoven's Ninth Opens Fifth Berkshire Festival

By John Selby
(Associated Press Arts Editor.)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP).—The labor of 600 volunteer ETC.

EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

AUG 5 - 1938

6000 MUSIC LOVERS APPLAUD SYMPHONY

Berkshire Fete Under Way at Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was justified by last night's opening concert at Tanglewood, the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American Summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes torturous Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly dedicated "music shed," literally pumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for ten minutes.

Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, and he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts.

Today the hundreds staying the two weeks in the neighborhood were "released" to visit numerous other performances nearby—the Coolidge concerts at South Mountain, Ted Shawn's programs of dances at Jacob's Pillow, the Berkshire Playhouse where Jane Wyatt is playing "Stage Door."

The festival will resume tomorrow night with a Haydn-Debussy-Sibelius program. When the first half closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

Six Thousand Cheer 10 Minutes At Symphony in 'Music Shed'

BY JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berk-

ETC. as above

130

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

MUSIC FESTIVAL OPENS AMID GLORY

Audience Thrills To Concert By Boston Symphony At "Tanglewood"

BY JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was justified by last night's opening concert at "Tanglewood," the festival home here.

Few more exciting musical events have occurred in American Summer music than the performance of Beethoven's long and sometimes tortuous Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

An audience of 6,000, which more than filled the newly-dedicated "Music Shed," literally jumped to its feet, and remained cheering and applauding for 10 minutes.

The performance was, however, only the logical outcome of an unusual policy, rigidly adhered to.

For one thing, Koussevitzky insists on having with him at the festival his entire orchestra, just as it plays in Symphony Hall, Boston, through the Winter.

For another, he refuses to conduct more concerts than he can rehearse adequately. Although the festival runs two weeks, there are but six concerts. Each is prepared with the greatest care. There are no soloists glittering with Hollywood fame and short on musical gift, and no traps for the tourist.

The festival resumes Saturday night with a Haydn-Debussy-Sibelius program. When the first half closes Sunday afternoon, concerts will not be resumed until next Thursday.

KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

AUG - 1938

BOSTON'S SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA RENDERS BEETHOVEN PROGRAM

Serge Koussevitzky Directs Concert Before an Audience of 6,000

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)
Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5, (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers

---

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

AUG 5 - 1938

SUMMER CONCERT CLICKS

6,000 Cheer Boston Symphony Orchestra for 10 Minutes

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer work-

---

LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

AUG 5 - 1938

Koussevitzky Triumphs at the Berkshire Festival

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Attraction for 6000 Music Lovers at Stockbridge

By JOHN SELBY.
STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5, 1938.—(AP)—The labor of 600 volun-

---

CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot

AUG 5 - 1938

Cheers Pour On Koussevitzky For Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who created the fifth season of the

---

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1938

Labor of 600 Volunteers In Symphony Is Justified

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer

PHOENIX, ARIZ.
GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1938

Boston Symphony Orchestra Inspires 'Riot' At Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5—(AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer

READING, PA.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1938

Symphony Win Plaudits In 'Music Shed' Concert

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers who

---

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 5 - 1938

Audience Cheers Boston Symphony, Koussevitsky at Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP) The labor of 600 volunteer

WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL

AUG 5 - 1938

Concert By Koussevitzky Acclaimed By Music Followers At Stockbridge

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor
STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., Aug. 5 (AP) — The labor of 600 volunteer

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

AUG 5 - 1938

6000 Hail Concert At Music Fete

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens Berkshire Festival

(By The Associated Press)
STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5.—The labor of 600 volunteer workers

---

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 5 - 1938

Concert Wins Highest Praise at Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Festival Opens Before 6,000 for Fifth Season

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer work-

---

BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1938

AUDIENCE OF 6,000 APPLAUDS "NINTH" FOR TEN MINUTES

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony in Beethoven Masterpiece at Berkshire Music Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5. (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer

BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER

AUG 5 - 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY OPENS FESTIVAL

6,000 at First Concert at Stockbridge Cheer 10 Minutes

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5 (AP)—The labor of 600 volunteer workers

---

STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

AUG 5 - 1938

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony Hailed At Berkshire Fete

Stockbridge, Mass., August 5. (AP)—The labor of 600 volun-

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1938

Capacity Crowd Hears Berkshire Music Opening

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4—(AP)—Before more than a capacity crowd

---

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 5 - 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ATTRACTS BIG CROWD

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4—(AP)—Before more than a capacity crowd of music lovers, the Fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened tonight at "Tanklewood" near here with music and equipment unique among all American summer music ventures.

Serge Koussevitzky, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, led that unexcelled body of musicians through a program consisting of two works of J. S. Bach and Beethoven's Great Choral Symphony which ends with a setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy."

The "Ode to Joy," seemed especially appropriate with the performances close to perfection in the new "Music Shed."

Thanks to a combination of scientic planning and good luck, the "Shed's" acoustics were amazing. The lightest piannissimo could be heard, undistorted, in the farthest reaches. One could sit on the stone of the "Mansion House"—300 yards away—and hear perfectly. No amplication is needed.

The $800,000 shed was opened with a chorus from Bach's contata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," the singers being the Cecilia Society of Boston.

The choral from the same contata followed and after an intermission came the Beethoven Ninth Symphony with the Cecilia Society and Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anne Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, bass, as soloists.

"Tanglewood," home of the concerts, is the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony, and its setting is probably the handsomest owned by any festival in the country. Except for the "shed," and parking provisions, the 210 acres, including the gardens, have been left undisturbed.

It was here that Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," "The Wonder Books" and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

Bentley W. Warren, president of the symphony, tonight suggested to the audience that in future seasons the purely orchestral character of the festival might be changed to include an orchestral school.

There will be other concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon and on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday of next week.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1938

THRONG ATTENDS MUSIC FESTIVAL

Fifth Berkshire Symphonic Series Opens in $800,000 "Shed" at Stockbridge.

ACOUSTICS PROVE PERFECT

Offerings of Artists Are Heard Plainly 300 Yards from Stage; Koussevitzky Leads Orchestra

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4.—(AP)—Before more than a capacity

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

Aug. 5, 1938 19

ers Appl d phonic Festival

Fifth Series Opens at Tanglewood With Boston Orchestra, Choral Society.

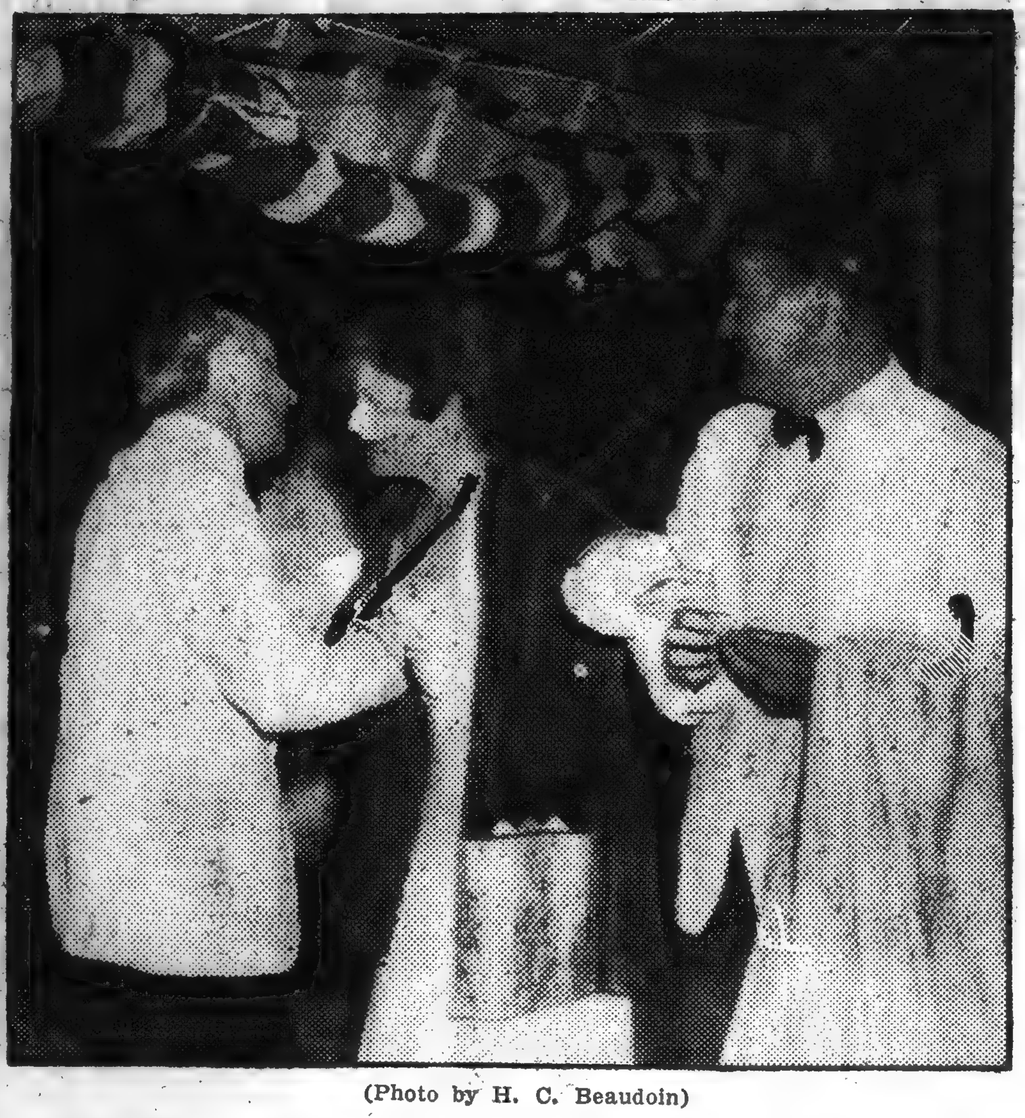
BY JOHN SELBY
STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—(AP) Before more than a capacity

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

131

AUG 5 - 1938

A Maestro's Greeting



(Photo by H. C. Beaudoin)

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, greets Mrs Albert Spalding at the opening night of the fifth Berkshire Music festival at Stockbridge. Looking on is Rev Clyde H. Roddy.

Symphonic Festival Opening Attracts More Than 6000

New Music Shed Is Dedicated In Initial Concert

Dr Koussevitzky Given Ovation by First Night Audience at Stockbridge Symphonic Event

Stockbridge, Aug. 4—More than 6000 persons assembled tonight at Tanglewood, and helped to dedicate the new music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic circle. It was a night of triumph for Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation, and for Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, whose conductor, Dr Serge Koussevitkzy, was given a tremendous ovation.

Every seat in the new shed was taken and hundreds were standing in the colonnade or were seated still farther out out on the lawn. It was an ideal summer night. The dedicatory exercises took place after the first Bach composition. The crowd was the largest that has even attended any of the concerts in the Berkshire festival in the past five years. At the conclusion of the final number which was the Beethoven symphony No 9, Dr Koussevitzky was recalled to the stage eight times.

Traffic Jam Delays Many

There was a traffic jam which delayed the arrival of several hundred patrons of the concert. When the conductor opened the first Bach number, at least 500 persons were lined up at the red ticket gate, trying to get their "passports." At the conclusion, there was another traffic jam, but it was soon straightened out by the state police under the direction of Lieut William Sullivan and High Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre who had charge of traffic arrangements. A part of the field intended for parking could not be used because recent rains had made it a swamp. The awning-covered paths leading from the platform where passengers alighted from cars direct to the music shed were a new feature and much appreciated. The Western Union had four special wires leading from the Tanglewood cottage to Pittsfield and about 40 newspapermen were using the typewriters and telephones.

The concert was broadcast in its entirely by the WJZ network of the National Broadcasting company. About 3000 theater seats were occupied by blue ticket holders and other outside the boxes used the settees as in other years.

The festival corporation is asking for additional contributions which total $57,342. The officers of the association want $22,000 for iron curtain to close in the shed against storm, $13,500 for chairs, $5000 for permanent lighting of the parking field and grounds, $3000 for landscaping, $2500 to complete the stage and shell, $4220 to cover, panel and paint inside walls and $2000 to encase the steel columns. The second concert of the series will be given Saturday night.

Cecilia Chorus And Orchestra Divide Program

Audience Invited to Join in Bach Hymn—Boston Symphony Presents Beethoven's Ninth

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 4—The Berkshire Symphonic festival opened impressively tonight with a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Cecilia chorus of Boston and a group of solo singers, under the direction of Dr Serge Koussevitzky. This was the dedication of the orchestra's great music shed which has transformed the festival from a tent show to a more substantial and dignified basis, and the program was well chosen to celebrate this notable event.

First came the stately hymn from Bach's cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," in which the audience in a revival of the old custom, was invited to join. The second part o the concert was a noble performanc of Beethoven's ninth symphony, wit Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas Paul Althouse and Norman Cordo as soloists.

(Continued from First Page)

Interest Divided

It was inevitable that interest o the opening night should be divide between the music and the ne temple of music which the Bosto Symphony orchestra has erecte among the Berkshire hills. Many o those present had vivid memories o the tremendous rain a year ag which demonstrated the unwisdom of asking the muse of classical music to go and join the raggle-taggle gypsies, Oh.

That ferocious storm not only settled the tent question but was a sharp reminder that in building a music shed the drumming of rain on the roof could not be ignored. The sturdy building, which has been completed in essentials just in time for the festival, is roofed with two-inch planks guaranteed to withstand Berkshire's midwinter snows, and a heavy layer of felt is expected to shut out the sound of rain and even of hail. Music has been taken indoors, but not at all in a citified way. Even in its somewhat rough and unfinished state the new shed fits its environment well and the open sides retain contact with Nature.

A more elaborate design provided by a famous specialist in buildings for music was regretfully rejected because of the cost, but the cheaper design substituted is acoustically satisfactory and presents several points of novelty and interest. To meet the needs of the festival it had to be large, and, in fact, it covers an acre and a half and seats 5700 people, with the possibility of providing for 3000 more if that should become necessary.

Yet the hall, shaped like a half-opened fan with the stage at the narrow end, does not seem extravagantly large, and does not dwarf the music as vast auditoriums are likely to do—one of Theodore Thomas's troubles in Chicago was in getting a hall of the right size to give symphonic music its proper dynamic and emotional effect.

This festival, by its very nature, involves some expansion from the scale of the winter season, but fortunately both the Boston Symphony orchestra and its eminent conductor have reserves that can be drawn upon for what almost any occasion can require. This superb body of instrumentalists is now at the hight of its power and virtuosity, with a fineness capable of the most delicate beauty of detail, yet with massiveness, too, and no fear of letting out the tone when grand effects are called for.

Plans On Large Scale

Mr Koussevitzky is no niggler; without neglecting refinements he plans on a large scale and seems to draw inspiration from great masses, in the audience as well as in the orchestra. These qualities are invaluable in a festival of this kind, drawing not only music lovers from distant places but bringing together great numbers of residents and summer visitors of Massachusetts and neighboring states, many of whom have had little experience of symphonic music. Under Mr Koussevitzky the Boston Symphony orchestra always makes them feel that the journey to Tanglewood has been worth while.

In the brief word which he added to the addresses of dedication Mr Koussevitzky explained that he had chosen Beethoven's ninth symphony for the occasion, not because it was the greatest musical work ever composed but because of Beethoven's use of Schiller's "Ode to Joy," adjuring all nations to embrace.

His interpretation of the whole symphony may be viewed as a splendid building up to that climax. Seldom is the measured development of the opening allegro out of next to nothing into thrilling power made so bold and exciting. Rare is so brilliant and flawless a performance of the amazing scherzo with its wealth of humor and creative power, and the orchestra almost surpassed itself in the deep and moving adagio.

Thus the audience was brought to just the right mood for the great emotional climax of the choral finale, and both the soloists and the Cecilia chorus deserve unstinted praise for their singing of this difficult and usually rather ungrateful music in which the symphonic form came to the verge and passed over.

This movement is crucial, and sometimes it mars a fine production of the symphony, but tonight it was possible to realize why Beethoven felt it necessary to cross the dividing line. All of the singers collaborated with full appreciation of the greatness of the music and of their task, and a deep impression was made on the immense audience.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 7 - 1938

Boston Orchestra Gives 2d Berkshire Concert

Program Offers Symphonies by Haydn and Sibelius

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the second concert of the fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the new music shed on the Tanglewood estate here, offering a well contrasted program including Haydn's symphony in E flat op. 99 Debussy's La Mer and the First Symphony of Sibelius. The audience was estimated as equal or superior in size to that of Thursday's opening concert, which, judging by the number of programs distributed was about 6,700. There were threats of showers and an actual mild shower before the concert, but up to the intermission no downpour had yet tested the rainproof properties of the music shed during a performance.

Arrangements for improving the facilities for arrival and departure of cars and parking had been extensively studied yesterday and today by Joseph Franz, engineer and superintendent of the grounds for the festival; George W. Edman, clerk and chairman of the co-ordinating committee and other festival executives and the arrival and parking of the more than 2,000 cars was reported to be much swifter than on Thursday.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 6 - 1938

Berkshire Hills Society to Attend Concert Tonight in New Music Shed

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 6.—Berkshire roads these days lead to Tanglewood at Stockbridge, where the second concert of the music festival is being given tonight by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Practically all of the 5,700 seats in the new $82,000 music shed have been sold and it is expected the assemblage in size will be second only to the record-breaking audience of the first night. Tanglewood gardens, fresh as in early spring from copious rains, will be illuminated.

Mrs. August Belmont is remaining over the week end as the guest of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith at her Stockbridge log cabin.

A number of hostesses are having small dinner or supper parties for festival guests. One is Miss Mabel Choate, who has at Naumkeag, Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Platt of New York, Mrs. Randall Morgan of Philadelphia and Chester H. Aldrich of Rome. Mrs. Platt is the former Miss Helen Choate, niece of Miss Choate.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bigelow Jackson of Belmont, Mass., are to be with Mrs. Jackson's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Helm George Wilde, at High Lawn Farm, Lenox, for a portion of the second series.

Many Box Parties Planned.

With Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly at Glen Crannie Farm, Richmond, for the second series starting next Thursday, will be Mr. and Mrs. William Barclay Parsons Jr. of New York, Mrs. Lawrence K. Lunt and Miss Hilary T. Lunt of Concord, Mass.

In Miss Mary Parsons's festival box party tonight will be her sister, Mrs. Montgomery Hare; Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay of New York and Mrs. Laurence F. Rainsford of Mount Kisco, N. Y. Mrs. Jay is the former Miss Louisa S. Barlow, daughter of the late Mrs. Francis C. Barlow, who for more than fifty years was a summer resident of Lenox.

Mrs. Schuyler Schieffelin, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Princess Diana Eristavi and Mrs. Edward Harkness are among others who will be in tonight's box division.

Wyantenuck Country Club at Great Barrington will have several of its highlight events of the summer next week. On Tuesday the men's Western New England tennis championships will start a five-days' tournament with dinner at the club on Friday night for players and the annual costume ball on Saturday night.

This afternoon's Wyantenuck tea is in charge of Mrs. Frances Sayre Starbuck and among those assisting are Mrs. Charles E. Bayliss Jr., Mrs. Hugh Peters, Mrs. Dwight Partridge, Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Mrs. Henry R. Powell, Mrs. Herbert N. Bradley.

Golf Tourney to Start.

Pittsfield's leading golf tournament is starting at the Country Club next Friday for three days, with the annual tournament ball next Saturday night. A. Park Shaw is general chairman and among others on the committee are Dr. George S. Reynolds, Dr. Thomas Flournoy, Monroe B. England, Daniel England Jr. and W. Prince Smith, president of the club.

Williamstown Garden Club is to hold its annual one-day flower show in Lasell gymnasium on Tuesday, with seventy-one classes scheduled. Mrs. George Alfred Cluett is giving a trophy to the winner of the highest score in the decorative classes and the club is to give a prize in the horticultural division.

At the Berkshire Garden Center, in Stockbridge, on Tuesday the Lenox Garden Club Council will hear a report by A. Kenneth Simpson, horticulturalist, on the trial gardens at the Center and the experiments that have been tried out there. Mrs. Owen Johnson is president of the club.

Mrs. George Grenville Merrill, who has been at her cottage on Yale Hill, Stockbridge, for several weeks, is to sail on the seventeenth for a year's sojourn abroad. She and Mrs. Nicholas Brown, who is now in France, will pass September with their sister, Viscountess d'Osmoy, in England.

Stockbridge art exhibition is to be held at the Playhouse for two weeks from Friday, September 9, when the varnishing day reception will be held.

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

AUG 5 - 1938

First Berkshire Festival Concert Held Last Night

Music Lovers And Society Well Represented At First Affair

Music lovers and society folk from all over the country were represented at the first Berkshire Music Festival concert last night at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass. All of the eighty boxes were occupied, and the first offering was a great success.

With Beethoven's Ninth Symphony sounding its tremendous theme of joy and the brotherhood of man, the Festival was off to its fifth year. That great orchestra the Boston Symphony, was conducted by that greater leader Serge Koussevitsky.

The music shed was dedicated by Miss Gertrude R. Smith, president of the Festival Corporation and in so doing she described the history of the Festival, and praised its struggles and purposes. The audience was then invited to join in the chorale from the Bach Cantata.

Miss Smith gave a dinner at her Stockbridge home for her weekend guest, Mrs. August Belmont. Others in the company were Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren and Mr. and Mrs. Corham Brooks, Boston; Miss Miriam Oliver, Mr. Malcolm Vaughan, New York, and Mr. Max Vivier, Paris. Mr. Warren is president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Brooks, with er aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall 'appan, gave Tanglewood to the rganization.

Miss Mabel Choate had in her ox at the concert Mr. and Mrs. eoffrey Platt, Mrs. Randall Moran and Mr. Chester H. Aldrich.

With Miss Mary Parsons in the ox section were Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay, Mrs. Montgomery Hare and Mrs. Laurence F. Rainsord.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. le Gersdorff were Mrs. Philip S. Sears, Mrs. Francis B. Crowinshield and Miss Virginia Latrobe.

Mrs. John Henry Hammond was with Mr. and Mrs. Helm George Wilde and Mrs. Thomas Frederick Davies had Mrs. John E. Thayer as a guest.

Mr. Beckman Winthrop was with his brother, Mr. Grenville Lindall Winthrop, and Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis had Mr. and Mrs. J. Paschall Davis.

With Mrs. George Baty Blake were the Misses Jane B. and Elizabeth Hunnewell, of Boston, and Mary Louisa and Julia O. Boit, of Paris.

At the Lenox Club for the festival are Mr. Albert Eugene Gallatin, New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. MacNicol, Mrs. James Dean, Miss Dorothea Dean, and Mr. Edward A. Taft, Boston.

Among others seen last night were Mrs. Chumasero McAvoy, Chicago, with Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn; Mrs. Edward S. Avery, New York, with Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett; Mrs. George Cook Kimball and Miss Marjorie S. Kimball, Lake Forest, Ill., with Carol Cook, Mr. John Finch and Mrs. Louis Sherman Taylor; Miss Mr. Gordon Allen, Boston, with Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., of Palm Beach, Fla., were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shepard, Providence, Mrs. Horatio Parker, of New York, was with Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Rice.

132

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

AUG 5 - 1938

Colorful Dedicatory Ceremonies Mark Opening of Berkshire Music Festival

Traditional Way Of Aiding Culture Used

Speaker Prefers Individual Patronage to Government's Plan of Spending Huge Sums

By Samuel T. Wilson

(Dispatch Music Editor attending festival)

LENOX, MASS., AUG. 5.—With some 6000 persons in attendance the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened its fifth season of concerts Thursday night in the recently constructed music shed at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

Appropriately enough the dedicatory ceremonies were primarily musical and opened with a deeply moving performance of the first chorus and final chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Is Unser Gott," by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and the Cecelia Choral society of Boston. The audience joined with the chorus in the singing of the second verse of the chorale.

Two short addresses were given by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.

In speaking of the achievement of the Berkshire group in bringing the annual festivals to their present state of emminence and in having successfully financed the building of the music shed, Miss Smith said:

"In these recent years of financial strain when the federal government has spent tremendous sums of money in an attempt to support the hard-hit sphere of culture, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has followed the older tradition of aiding culture by individual patronage and support."

MR. WARREN called attention to the fact that the aim of the festival is wider than that of the mere giving of a series of annual concerts.

It would be impossible to imagine a more beautiful setting for festival concerts than that provided by Tanglewood in the heart of the Berkshire hills and the new music shed.

Its open sides looking out over vistas of lawns and gardens sloping down to the crest of a hill overlooking the lake in Stockbridge bowl, is an ideal auditorium for the performance and hearing of great music.

The vast, accustically perfect edifice covering an acre and a half of ground will later be provided with rolling curtains of steel for use in stormy weather and decorative masking devices will be devised to cover the structural steel, the roof supports and hearing pillars.

The inaugural concert of the festival's fifth season was in every respect a magnificent one. Following the Bach music and the intermission came a performance of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony. The final movement was sung by the Cecelia chorus and a solo quartet composed of Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kansas, Paul Aultohouse and Norman Cordon.

Leading Figures as Music Festival Opened

Springfield Republican - Aug. 5/38

(Photos by H. C. Beaudoin)

Left, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Music festival, opens the dedication ceremonies at the festival's new music shed at Stockbridge. Right, Olin Downs, eminent music critic, and Edward Stillman-Kelley, noted composer, talk things over before the opening concert.

Speaker Pays Tribute To Late Henry Hadley

Stockbridge, Aug. 4—Miss Gertrude Robbinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., at the music festival dedication tonight, said in part: "Had a clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be inaugurating this great music shed, no one would have paid the least attention. It is, however, an inspiring reality. But nothing worth while ever happens without someone having dreamed a dream. It was the late Henry Hadley who had this dream, feeling as he did that the Berkshires were an ideal spot for symphonic music 'under the moon and stars.' The residents of the Berkshires became intrigued with this idea of an out of door musical festival and put their shoulders to the wheel to make it a success. After two summer festivals, Dr Hadley resigned because of his failing health and the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival approached Dr Koussevitzky and his great orchestra, the Boston symphony.

"Words cannot express the enthusiasm that greeted his acceptance nor the inspiration that his vision for the development of a great musical center gave to everyone with his understanding of the hunger for music in the summer of a large and music-loving public.

"Most of you know what happened one night last summer when the elements and Wagner got into conflict. This seemingly tragic event proved a blessing in disguise for immediately after it the board of trustees decided to start a campaign for money to build this music shed. Many of you responded most generously and a month ago, thanks to Joseph Franz, the engineer, the shed was ready for the 1938 festival. Mr Saarinen's conception was the basis for this music shed which we are this evening so happily dedicating. This does not mean that it is entirely completed—there is still much to do to make it as beautiful and perfect as it should be for the perfection Dr Koussevitzky and his orchestra are entitled to. It is true that a fine roof covers one acre and a half of land, thus permitting nearly 6000 people to sit within the building proper; that half of the public can sit on chairs; that the musicians have a fine tuning room, and that Dr Koussevitzky has his own suite. But still more important is the excellent study on the acoustics made by Prof Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"In these recent years of financial strain when the federal government has spent tremendous sums of money in an attempt to support the hard-hit sphere of culture, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has followed the older American tradition of aiding culture by individual patronage and support. It has been a struggle but the results achieved thus far have justified the effort. Today the operation of the concerts is self-sustaining through the sale of tickets. But the building has come from private contributions and future improvements must come the same way. At the present moment we are in need of $58,000 to carry out immediate plans —funds for beautifying the grounds by the planting of trees and shrubs near the building, funds for covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, for permanent lighting of the parking fields, for iron roll curtains to close in the auditorium against storms, for permanent chairs for the audience, and similar needs. It is our conviction that individual persons who believe in the old American tradition of individual support of culture in America will help us in the future and help us now.

"The trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival work in the closest cooperation and Dr Koussevitzky is always an inspiration. His orchestra is too much loved throughout the land for it to be necessary to eulogize them.

"There is, however, behind the scenes of the Boston Symphony orchestra, a great lawyer who is its guilding spirit, a summer resident of the Berkshires and a true friend of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. It is my privilege to present the president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, a distinguished man and a loyal friend of distinguished music in America, Mr Bentley Warren."

Orchestra President Praises the Festival

Stockbridge, Aug. 4—Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony, Orchestra, inc., said in part: "The Boston Symphony orchestra rejoices in this opportunity to bring its tribute of appreciation and praise to the Berkshire Symphonic festival for its foresight, energy, and success in making available this adequate and admirable auditorium. With such a result of only three years of coop-eration between the two organiza-tions, who can predict how great may be the contribution of Berkshire to the musical culture of America?

"In 1881, a beloved citizen of Bos-ton founded its Symphony orchestra. Alone and unaided he promoted and supervised its activities and met its annual deficit for 37 years. His ob-jective was not merely to enrich the musical culture of his own city; he wished also to further the apprecia-tion and enjoyment of the universal language of music throughout the country. At the age of 82 he retired from this most fruitful work. Since then the present corporation organ-ized under his direction, has, with the financial support of generous patrons of the concerts, continued his pur-poses and polcies. The number of ex-cellent orchestras now in America, yearly furnishing music of the high-est merit from the Atlantic to the Pacific, proves the soundness of his confidence that the American people were eager for a national music cul-ture.

"Throughout its existence the or-chestra has constantly broadened its field of activities. At the beginning there were only 24 concerts a year, all in Boston. Both locally and over the country this number has been greatly multiplied. Instead of ap-pealing to local audiences only, the Berkshire Festival is now offered to a national public.

"The gift of the beautiful Tangle-wood estate by Mrs Gorham Brooks, in memory of her parents, has pro-vided a perfect setting for these con-certs. It has also opened a wide vista of increasing usefulness. Our dis-tinguished conductor, after 14 years in this country of his adoption—for he has now become an American citizen —has long cherished a vision of a music center of the first importance. He is convinced that America is now ripe for it. Here he believes it is possible to develop orchestral conduc-tors as accomplished as any that Eu-rope can provide. The personnel of the orchestra contains artists unex-celled anywhere as teachers of ad-vanced pupils in the use of the vari-ous instruments. After experience with many amateur choruses, Dr Koussevitzky believes that the possi-bilities of choral and community sing-ing are almost unlimited if properly trained leaders are made available. What does all this suggest?

"It is the hope of our conductor— a hope, I am happy to say, shared by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival cor-poration and the Boston Symphony orchestra—that the annual festival may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, pre-ceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the high-est standards in the work of orches-tral conductors, choral leaders, and separate instrumentalists. Tangle-wood is the ideal location for such a school. The mansion house and other buildings included in Mrs Brooks's gift will furnish the facilities imme-diately needed. This auditorium can-not be excelled as a place for the instruction of prospective orchestra conductors with a small but adequate orchestra of some of the members of the Boston Symphony itself, aug-mented by students attending the school for instruction in the use of their special instruments.

We all believe that here stands such an opportunity as Mr Higginson seized when he founded the Boston Sym-phony orchestra, and as Miss Robin-son Smith and her associates have realized in the establsihment of these Berkshire concerts. The opportunity transcends by far any local limits of Boston and the Berkshires. Happily the music lovers assembled here con-stitute no merely local audience. Surely many will agree with Dr Koussevitzky as to the national value of the musical enterprise that he en-visions. May not the Tanglewood concerts become historic, as forerun-ners of a great artistic and educa-tional reality—the establishment of an outstanding summer musical center for this country!"

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 5 - 1938

The Oracle

ATHEIST'S ADMISSION
There must be something else
Besides a sanded wave of shore
With tangled shells and seaweed,
There must be something more.

A tree with icy lacquer,
That catches last moon-strains,
Is not its own creator.

A band of crimson sunset,
Which streaks the limpid sky,
Flames only for a moment
Before the colors die.

There must be something else
Besides a rainbow sprung from sod,
A thing that wills this beauty;
I think men call it—God.
—Gladys Zulauf in The New Hampshire Student Writer for 1938.

☼ ☼

Have you watched the moon these nights and observed the intense yellowish color? It is a "hot" moon all right.

☼ ☼

Another note on the Berkshire symphony—Jeannette Vreeland who sang in the quartet at last night's concert, was one of the soloists in "Elijah," which the Holyoke Oratorio society presented here in 1923.

☼ ☼

Serge Koussevitsky was himself an ode to joy last night when he conducted the Cecilia society chorus, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, Norman Cordon, and the Boston Symphony orchestra in the final chorus of Beethoven's Ninth symphony. His face wore a roseate beam, and when the whole assemblage joined together in unison he leaned forward in the rostrum and mouthed the notes of the chorus with an enthusiasm that lifted the whole group to the level of his own excitement. It's exciting to watch Koussevitsky conduct anyway, especially if you are sitting where you can see his face. His mouth moves as if he were singing, but if a very soft passage comes sometimes you can hear that it is more whispering than singing. His face takes on a hundred expressions a minute—he frowns, scolds, beams, and his face is calm, pleased, excited, all in accordance with the music. A motion picture of his face alone might tell you what he is conducting. And his hands call forth the music with even more fascinating variety. He strikes single notes with his forefinger, he wiggles short melodic passages out of the horns with the same commanding finger. He worries some of the music forth, and then with a broad gesture he smooths out an adagio. It almost seems as if he could pull a symphony from a row of instruments on a music store shelf, but when you look around at the orchestra you see the finest musicians in this country and you know better.

Berkshire Music Festival Attracts Audience Of 6000

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival dedicated its new music shed at Tanglewood last night with a stirring program in which the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Cecelia society chorus of Boston, four soloists, and even an audience of almost 6000, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, took part. A number from this city attended.

The occasion was one of triumph for the achievement of the Festival, which was started only five years ago by the late Dr. Henry Hadley as a three concert affair held in a horse show ring, and the program was auspiciously chosen.

The program began with the first chorus and the chorale from Bach's "Rin Feste Burg ist unser Gott," and rose to a climax with Beethoven's Ninth symphony with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy." Dr. Koussevitsky said during the dedicatory remarks in an intermission that he had chosen the Ninth symphony, not only because it is "the greatest masterpiece in musical literature," but also because it repeats Schiller's words calling all nations to brotherhood.

Following an old festival custom, Dr. Koussevitsky invited the audience to join in the chorus of the Bach cantata, and after the chorus and orchestra had first performed it, he faced the audience and led the entire assembly in the impressive Lutheran hymn.

The Ninth symphony, growing from the first light notes to a majestic outpouring, was a thrilling experience, and seemed by that single performance to be the justification for the festival's whole career. Its wealth of melodic threads and of dynamic variety, its surge onward to the final chorus were performed in a matchless interpretation. The quartet and chorus gave themselves to the fullest appreciation of this final stage in the symphony, which the composer felt had to pass the limits set by insruments. The end of the concert left the audience in a spirit of exaltation which was a tribute to Dr. Koussevitsky and to all who had made the concert possible.

The new shed, with seating accommodations for 5700, was filled last night and an overflow audience stood in the arcade and even on the lawn outside. Constructed like a half-open fan, the shed is built with a stage as large as that of Symphony hall in Boston, and with a huge auditorium uninterrupted by beams or posts. The sides are entirely open.

In spie of its size, the ched does not dwarf the orchestra, and the full value of the symphonic concert was appreciated as well from the last row as from any other. Although some of last night's speakers were hard to hear because of their unfamiliarity with the workings of the amplifying system, perfect acoustics made Dr. Koussevitsky's short speech and the whole concert audible with undiminished effect in all parts of the shed.

So large was the crowd last night that hundreds of people were not able to get into their seats until after the concert had begun. Three-quarters of an hour before the concert started, the auditorium was filling up, and a steady line of traffic from Lenox crawled into the grounds. Parking was hampered by the fact that some of the ground allotted for parking had become marshy from recent rains. The difficulty was straightened out by the state police, however.

Dedicatory speeches were made during an intermission in the concert by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, and by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Both praised the late Dr. Hadley and Dr. Koussevitsky for their leadership in the festival's development. Mr. Warren spoke of the desire of the orchestra and the Festival to have a school for advanced musicians and student conductors connected with the festival and centered at Tanglewood.

Miss Robinson said in part:

"Had a clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be inaugurating this great music shed, no one would have paid the least attention. It is, however, an inspiring reality."

"But nothing worth while ever happens without someone having dreamed a dream. It was the late Henry Hadley who had this dream, feeling as he did that the Berkshires were an ideal spot for symphonic music 'under the moon and stars.'

"Most of you know what happened one night last summer when the elements and Wagner got into conflict. This seemingly tragic event proved a blessing in disguise for immedately after it the board of trustees decided to start a campaign for money to build this music shed. Many of you responded most generously and a month ago, thanks to Mr. Joseph Franz, the engineer, the shed was ready for the 1938 festival. Mr. Saarlinen's conception was the basis for this music shed which we are this evening so happily dedicating.

"In these recent years of financal strain when the federal government has spent tremendous sums of money in an atempt to support the hard-hit sphere of culture, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has followed the older American tradition of aiding culture by individual patronage and support. It has been a struggle but the results achieved thus far have justified the effort. Today the operation of the concerts is self-sustaining thru the sale of tickets. But the building has come from private contributions and future improvements must come the same way. At the present moment we are in need of $58,000 to carry out immediate plans—funds for beautifying the grounds by the planting of trees and shrubs near the building, funds for covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, for permanent lighting of the parking field, for iron roll curtains to close in the auditorium against storms, for permanent chairs for the audience, and similar needs. It is our conviction that individual persons who believe in the old American tradition of individual support of culture in America will help us in the future and help us now."

The entire concert was broadcast

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 5 - 1938

FIRST CONCERT DEDICATES NEW BERKSHIRE SHED

Nearly 6,000 Fill Huge Structure As Festival Gets Under Way

(Special to The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4—Music spoke for itself here tonight in the dedication of the new music shed in Tanglewood of the Berkshire Festival when the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of its distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, gave the first of a series of six concerts before a capacity audience.

No elaborate ceremony marked the inaugural of the huge music shed, seating 5,700. There were brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival and by Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the orchestra. It was the wish of Dr. Koussevitsky and the festival that the emphasis be placed on the music. And on the music it was placed with eloquence that thrilled the thousands who attended.

The concert opened with the chorale and chorus from "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by J. S. Bach, with the orchestra and more than 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston participating. Four soloists, Anna Kaskas of Hartford, Conn., Jeannette Vreeland, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse participated as additions to the festival entertainers this year. The audience was invited to join in the festival atmosphere and joined in singing one verse of the magnificent old Bach hymn.

The playing of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" with the soloists and Cecilia chorus joining in singing the famous Schiller's "Ode to Joy" was one of the high marks of the concert.

The new $800,000 music shed, dedicated here tonight, was built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country. Designed so that every one can hear well regardless of where their seats may be the new shed is expected to become the home of musical activities for many years to come. The new roof is made so that the sound of rain falling on it will not disturb the audience or the musicians. Improvements were made in the music shell to make it more comfortable for the musicians and to eliminate the glare from lights on the stage which annoyed both musicians and audience in previous years. Lights in the main part of the shed itself have been placed high so that the audience would not be annoyed by glare. New and more comfortable chairs were installed and further improvements have been scheduled for the near future.

The sides of the huge shed are open so that the audience can look out and enjoy the breezes that come in from the beautiful gardens about the estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires. During the intermission and after members of the audience were able to enjoy the beautiful grounds and to walk through the gardens where Hawthorne wandered while he was writing "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

Traffic facilities were considerably improved this year over previous years and as in the past were handled by the American Legion. There are new walks from the parking places to the shed itself and covered walks to safeguard the members of the audience in case of rain during the concert season.

The next concerts of the first series will be at 8:30 p. m. Saturday and at 3:30 p. m. on Sunday.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 6 - 1938

Week-ends & Vacations

THIS is the season when l'Art goes on the air in a big way. Wherever you go in the country you'll stumble over playhouses and rub elbows with players.

At Lakewood, near Skowhegan, Maine, which is practically miles from anywhere, you make a night of it and stay on until after breakfast the next day. When you arrive, a boy hops on the running board of your car with keys and ice water, takes you to your guest house, and lights your open fire.

At dinner in the main lodge you may sit next to Daniel Frohman or across the board from a famous actress. Lakewood is pioneer stock in the summer theater world and if you are vacationing in that section, don't miss it. You'll see a good show and interesting people. Lakewood is 80 miles from Isleboro and Dark Harbour and about 120 miles from Ogunquit and Kennebunkport. The overnight rates are from $2.

Near home you have a wide choice of arts at Silvermine, Norwalk, Conn. (Don't choose Terpsichore—that's about all they're out of.) From Thursday to Sunday, August 18th to 21st, the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra will give three concerts with Eugene Ormandy and José Iturbi conducting.

The concerts will be lovely to look at as well as to listen to, for the music will come to you across the star-lit waters of a pool and a full moon will take its bow above the tops of the trees. On Thursday and Friday morning, August 18th and 19th, there will be Chamber music concerts by the Roth String Quartet. Also on Friday morning, Richardson Wright will lecture on "Appreciation of the Arts", and Charles O'Connell's talk on Music Appreciation will be worth hearing. Saturday morning you can leave the children at the Junior Symphony Concert and go off for golf and a swim. But while you're at Silvermine, don't miss the art exhibit. The paintings, etc., will be in the Guild Hall but the sculpture will be shown out-of-doors. Also, the summer theater at Westport nearby is very good.

The nearest place to stay and one of the nicest is the Silvermine Tavern where the daily rates are $4 and $5 single, and $8 and $10 double for a room with bath and breakfast, other meals extra. If eating interests you as well as art, the Outpost Inn at Ridgefield is not too far away and it's worth the extra mileage, for Outpost food and drink are something special and the Inn is one of the most delightful in Southern New England. The daily rates are $4 single, $7 double, European plan. For the week-end, Friday dinner to Sunday dinner, it's $18 single and $35 double.

To reach Silvermine, take the Hutchinson River Parkway and Merritt Highway to Norwalk. From there on signs will show the way. The Outpost Inn is on Route 33 (you take No. 7 out of Norwalk and turn left on 33). For the Longshore Club you take Route 1 when you leave the Merritt Highway at Norwalk and continue to Westport. The road isn't marked, so ask the traffic officer to call the turn.

For a vacation set to such master music as you might well hear at Salzburg, stop off at Lenox. The Berkshire Symphony Festival begins this week, so you will miss the first concert on August 4th. The others will be on the 6th, 7th, 11th, 13th, and 14th, and the programs are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Lovers of music, both famous and humble, will be there. Between concerts you'll have time for the nearby summer theaters and art shows.

For accommodations there are the famous Berkshire hotels—The Red Lion of Stockbridge (daily rates from $7). The Curtis House of Lenox ($6 to $9), and the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington (6 to $9 single), all American plan. There are also the Jug End Barn and the Olde Egremont Tavern, which we wrote about in May (CUE, May 28th).

—PAMELA PRATT FORBES

Editorial Note: To make sure of accommodations, make reservations ahead and send references. Many inns and hotels require them. Or make your reservations through your travel bureau.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

AUG 6 - 1938

Society Attends Music Festival

Mrs. James R. Mann Is Among Those at Event in Berkshires.

Mrs. James R. Mann, widow of Representative Mann, is among the many in Stockbridge, Mass., who are now attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the fifth annual music season at Stockbridge Thursday.

A number of social events centered about the opening program, chief among which was the dinner given by Mrs. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival Corporation. Her guests were Mrs. August Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Bently Wirt Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Miss Miriam Oliver, Malcolm Vaughan and Max Vivier.

Miss Mary Parsons had as guests in her box at the concert her sister, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay and Mrs. Laurence F. Rainsford.

With Miss Mabel Choats were Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Platt, Mrs. Randal Morgan and Chester H. Aldrich. Mr. and Mrs. Helm George Wilde had Mrs. John Henry Hammond in their box, while Mr. and Mrs. Andre A. Beaumont, jr., were with Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre.

Among many others at the concert were Albert Eugene Gallatin, Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. MacNicol, Mrs. James Dean, Miss Dorothea Dean, Edward A. Taft, Mr. and Mrs. J. Paschall Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mrs. Chumasero McAvoy, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, jr., Mrs. George Cook Kimball and Miss Marjorie S. Kimball.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT

AUG 6 - 1938

The Passing Show

PERSONAL NOMINATION FOR WFBC's greatest program in many a moon, the NBC airing of the Bershire Symphony festival for a hour and a half Thursday night as the Boston symphony played Beethoven's Ninth Symphony . . . Rich-

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

133

AUG 5 - 1938

The Oracle

ATHEIST'S ADMISSION

There must be something else
Besides a sanded wave of shore
With tangled shells and seaweed,
There must be something more.

A tree with icy lacquer,
That catches last moon-strains,
Is not its own creator.

A band of crimson sunset,
Which streaks the limpid sky,
Flames only for a moment
Before the colors die.

There must be something else
Besides a rainbow sprung from sod,
A thing that wills this beauty;
I think men call it—God.
—Gladys Zulauf in The New Hampshire Student Writer for 1938.

✿ ✿

Have you watched the moon these nights and observed the intense yellowish color? It is a "hot" moon all right.

✿ ✿

Another note on the Berkshire symphony—Jeannette Vreeland who sang in the quartet at last night's concert, was one of the soloists in "Elijah," which the Holyoke Oratorio society presented here in 1923.

✿ ✿

Serge Koussevitsky was himself an ode to joy last night when he conducted the Cecilia society chorus, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, Norman Cordon, and the Boston Symphony orchestra in the final cho[illegible] Beethoven's Ninth symphony. His face wore a roseate beam, and when the whole assemblage joined together in unison he leaned forward in the rostrum and mouthed the notes of the chorus with an enthusiasm that lifted the whole group to the level of his own excitement. It's exciting to watch Koussevitsky conduct anyway, especially if you are sitting where you can see his face. His mouth moves as if he were singing, but if a very soft passage comes sometimes you can hear that it is more whispering than singing. His face takes on a hundred expressions a minute—he frowns, scolds, beams, and his face is calm, pleased, excited, all in accordance with the music. A motion picture of his face alone might tell you what he is conducting. And his hands call forth the music with even more fascinating variety. He strikes single notes with his forefinger, he wiggles short melodic passages out of the horns with the same commanding finger. He worries some of the music forth, and then with a broad gesture he smooths out an adagio. It almost seems as if he could pull a symphony from a row of instruments on a music store shelf, but when you look around at the orchestra you see the finest musicians in this country and you know better.

Berkshire Music Festival Attracts Audience Of 6000

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival dedicated its new music shed at Tanglewood last night with a stirring program in which the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Cecelia society chorus of Boston, four soloists, and even an audience of almost 6000, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, took part. A number from this city attended.

The occasion was one of triumph for the achievement of the Festival, which was started only five years ago by the late Dr. Henry Hadley as a three concert affair held in a horse show ring, and the program was auspiciously chosen.

The program began with the first chorus and the chorale from Bach's "Rin Feste Burg ist unser Gott," and rose to a climax with Beethoven's Ninth symphony with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy." Dr. Koussevitsky said during the dedicatory remarks in an intermission that he had chosen the Ninth symphony, not only because it is "the greatest masterpiece in musical literature," but also because it repeats Schiller's words calling all nations to brotherhood.

Following an old festival custom, Dr. Koussevitsky invited the audience to join in the chorus of the Bach cantata, and after the chorus and orchestra had first performed it, he faced the audience and led the entire assembly in the impressive Lutheran hymn.

The Ninth symphony, growing from the first light notes to a majestic outpouring, was a thrilling experience, and seemed by that single performance to be the justification for the festival's whole career. Its wealth of melodic threads and of dynamic variety, its surge onward to the final chorus were performed in a matchless interpretation. The quartet and chorus gave themselves to the fullest appreciation of this final stage in the symphony, which the composer felt had to pass the limits set by insruments. The end of the concert left the audience in a spirit of exaltation which was a tribute to Dr. Koussevitsky and to all who had made the concert possible.

The new shed, with seating accommodations for 5700, was filled last night and an overflow audience stood in the arcade and even on the lawn outside. Constructed like a half-open fan, the shed is built with a stage as large as that of Symphony hall in Boston, and with a huge auditorium uninterrupted by beams or posts. The sides are entirely open.

In spie of its size, the ched does not dwarf the orchestra, and the full value of the symphonic concert was appreciated as well from the last row as from any other. Although some of last night's speakers were hard to hear because of their unfamiliarity with the workings of the amplifying system, perfect acoustics made Dr. Koussevitsky's short speech and the whole concert audible with undiminished effect in all parts of the shed.

So large was the crowd last night that hundreds of people were not able to get into their seats until after the concert had begun. Three-quarters of an hour before the concert started, the auditorium was filling up, and a steady line of traffic from Lenox crawled into the grounds. Parking was hampered by the fact that some of the ground allotted for parking had become marshy from recent rains. The difficulty was straightened out by the state police, however.

Dedicatory speeches were made during an intermission in the concert by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, and by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Both praised the late Dr. Hadley and Dr. Koussevitsky for their leadership in the festival's development. Mr. Warren spoke of the desire of the orchestra and the Festival, to have a school for advanced musicians and student conductors connected with the festival and centered at Tanglewood.

Miss Robinson said in part:

"Had a clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be inaugurating this great music shed, no one would have paid the least attention. It is, however, an inspiring reality."

"But nothing worth while ever happens without someone having dreamed a dream. It was the late Henry Hadley who had this dream, feeling as he did that the Berkshires were an ideal spot for symphonic music 'under the moon and stars.'

"Most of you know what happened one night last summer when the elements and Wagner got into conflict. This seemingly tragic event proved a blessing in disguise for immediately after it the board of trustees decided to start a campaign for money to build this music shed. Many of you responded most generously and a month ago, thanks to Mr. Joseph Franz, the engineer, the shed was ready for the 1938 festival. Mr. Saarlinen's conception was the basis for this music shed which we are this evening so happily dedicating.

"In these recent years of financal strain when the federal government has spent tremendous sums of money in an atempt to support the hard-hit sphere of culture, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has followed the older American tradition of aiding culture by individual patronage and support. It has been a struggle but the results achieved thus far have justified the effort. Today the operation of the concerts is self-sustaining thru the sale of tickets. But the building has come from private contributions and future improvements must come the same way. At the present moment we are in need of $58,000 to carry out immediate plans—funds for beautifying the grounds by the planting of trees and shrubs near the building, funds for covering the steel pillars with fluted columns, for permanent lighting of the parking field, for iron roll curtains to close in the auditorium against storms, for permanent chairs for the audience, and similar needs. It is our conviction that individual persons who believe in the old American tradition of individual support of culture in America will help us in the future and help us now."

The entire concert was broadcast

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 5 - 1938

FIRST CONCERT DEDICATES NEW BERKSHIRE SHED

Nearly 6,000 Fill Huge Structure As Festival Gets Under Way

(Special to The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4—Music spoke for itself here tonight in the dedication of the new music shed in Tanglewood of the Berkshire Festival when the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of its distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, gave the first of a series of six concerts before a capacity audience.

No elaborate ceremony marked the inaugural of the huge music shed, seating 5,700. There were brief remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival and by Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the orchestra. It was the wish of Dr. Koussevitsky and the festival that the emphasis be placed on the music. And on the music it was placed with eloquence that thrilled the thousands who attended.

The concert opened with the chorale and chorus from "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," by J. S. Bach, with the orchestra and more than 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston participating. Four soloists, Anna Kaskas of Hartford, Conn., Jeannette Vreeland, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse participated as additions to the festival entertainers this year. The audience was invited to join in the festival atmosphere and joined in singing one verse of the magnificent old Bach hymn.

The playing of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" with the soloists and Cecilia chorus joining in singing the famous Schiller's "Ode to Joy" was one of the high marks of the concert.

The new $800,000 music shed, dedicated here tonight, was built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country. Designed so that every one can hear well regardless of where their seats may be the new shed is expected to become the home of musical activities for many years to come. The new roof is made so that the sound of rain falling on it will not disturb the audience or the musicians. Improvements were made in the music shell to make it more comfortable for the musicians and to eliminate the glare from lights on the stage which annoyed both musicians and audience in previous years. Lights in the main part of the shed itself have been placed high so that the audiance would not be annoyed by glare. New and more comfortable chairs were installed and further improvements have been scheduled for the near future.

The sides of the huge shed are open so that the audience can look out and enjoy the breezes that come in from the beautiful gardens about the estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires. During the intermission and after members of the audience were able to enjoy the beautiful grounds and to walk through the gardens where Hawthorne wandered while he was writing "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book," and sketched his "Tanglewood Tales."

Traffic facilities were considerably improved this year over previous years and as in the past were handled by the American Legion. There are new walks from the parking places to the shed itself and covered walks to safeguard the members of the audience in case of rain during the concert season.

The next concerts of the first series will be at 8:30 p. m. Saturday and at 3:30 p. m. on Sunday.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 6 - 1938

Week-ends & Vacations

THIS is the season when l'Art goes on the air in a big way. Wherever you go in the country you'll stumble over playhouses and rub elbows with players.

At Lakewood, near Skowhegan, Maine, which is practically miles from anywhere, you make a night of it and stay on until after breakfast the next day. When you arrive, a boy hops on the running board of your car with keys and ice water, takes you to your guest house, and lights your open fire.

At dinner in the main lodge you may sit next to Daniel Frohman or across the board from a famous actress. Lakewood is pioneer stock in the summer theater world and if you are vacationing in that section, don't miss it. You'll see a good show and interesting people. Lakewood is 80 miles from Isleboro and Dark Harbour and about 120 miles from Ogunquit and Kennebunkport. The overnight rates are from $2.

Near home you have a wide choice of arts at Silvermine, Norwalk, Conn. (Don't choose Terpsichore—that's about all they're out of.) From Thursday to Sunday, August 18th to 21st, the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra will give three concerts with Eugene Ormandy and José Iturbi conducting.

The concerts will be lovely to look at as well as to listen to, for the music will come to you across the star-lit waters of a pool and a full moon will take its bow above the tops of the trees. On Thursday and Friday morning, August 18th and 19th, there will be Chamber music concerts by the Roth String Quartet. Also on Friday morning, Richardson Wright will lecture on "Appreciation of the Arts", and Charles O'Connell's talk on Music Appreciation will be worth hearing. Saturday morning you can leave the children at the Junior Symphony Concert and go off for golf and a swim. But while you're at Silvermine, don't miss the art exhibit. The paintings, etc., will be in the Guild Hall but the sculpture will be shown out-of-doors. Also, the summer theater at Westport nearby is very good.

The nearest place to stay and one of the nicest is the Silvermine Tavern where the daily rates are $4 and $5 single, and $8 and $10 double for a room with bath and breakfast, other meals extra. If eating interests you as well as art, the Outpost Inn at Ridgefield is not too far away and it's worth the extra mileage, for Outpost food and drink are something special and the Inn is one of the most delightful in Southern New England. The daily rates are $4 single, $7 double, European plan. For the week-end, Friday dinner to Sunday dinner, it's $18 single and $35 double.

To reach Silvermine, take the Hutchinson River Parkway and Merritt Highway to Norwalk. From there on signs will show the way. The Outpost Inn is on Route 33 (you take No. 7 out of Norwalk and turn left on 33). For the Longshore Club you take Route 1 when you leave the Merritt Highway at Norwalk and continue to Westport. The road isn't marked, so ask the traffic officer to call the turn.

For a vacation set to such master music as you might well hear at Salzburg, stop off at Lenox. The Berkshire Symphony Festival begins this week, so you will miss the first concert on August 4th. The others will be on the 6th, 7th, 11th, 13th, and 14th, and the programs are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Lovers of music, both famous and humble, will be there. Between concerts you'll have time for the nearby summer theaters and art shows.

For accommodations there are the famous Berkshire hotels—The Red Lion of Stockbridge (daily rates from $7). The Curtis House of Lenox ($6 to $9), and the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington (6 to $9 single), all American plan. There are also the Jug End Barn and the Olde Egremont Tavern, which we wrote about in May (CUE, May 28th).

—PAMELA PRATT FORBES

Editorial Note: To make sure of accommodations, make reservations ahead and send references. Many inns and hotels require them. Or make your reservations through your travel bureau.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

AUG 6 - 1938

Society Attends Music Festival

Mrs. James R. Mann Is Among Those at Event in Berkshires.

Mrs. James R. Mann, widow of Representative Mann, is among the many in Stockbridge, Mass., who are now attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the fifth annual music season at Stockbridge Thursday.

A number of social events centered about the opening program, chief among which was the dinner given by Mrs. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival Corporation. Her guests were Mrs. August Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Bently Wirt Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Miss Miriam Oliver, Malcolm Vaughan and Max Vivier.

Miss Mary Parsons had as guests in her box at the concert her sister, Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay and Mrs. Laurence F. Rainsford.

With Miss Mabel Choate were Mr. and Mrs. Geoffrey Platt, Mrs. Randal Morgan and Chester H. Aldrich. Mr. and Mrs. Helm George Wilde had Mrs. John Henry Hammond in their box, while Mr. and Mrs. Andre A. Beaumont, jr., were with Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre.

Among many others at the concert were Albert Eugene Gallatin, Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. MacNicol, Mrs. James Dean, Miss Dorothea Dean, Edward A. Taft, Mr. and Mrs. J. Paschall Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mrs. Chumasero McAvoy, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, jr., Mrs. George Cook Kimball and Miss Marjorie S. Kimball.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
PIEDMONT

AUG 6 - 1938

The Passing Show

PERSONAL NOMINATION FOR WFBC's greatest program in many a moon, the NBC airing of the Bershire Symphony festival for a hour and a half Thursday night as the Boston symphony played Beethoven's Ninth Symphony . . . Rich-

134

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 6 - 1938

Second Concert Slated Tonight In Berkshires

Boston Orchestra Will Play Works by Haydn, Debussy and Sibelius, Beethoven 9th Opens the Festival

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—The second concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in [illegible] annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the new music shed on the Tanglewood estate here will take place tomorrow night with a program including Haydn's symphony in E flat, No. 99; Debussy's "La Mer" and Sibelius's first symphony.

For the third concert on Sunday afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky has made a change in the last number, substituting Ravel's second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite for Respighi's "Pines of Rome." Other numbers as already announced will be Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Brahms's fourth symphony and Copland's music for the theater.

There was no festival concert today, but the orchestra passed the morning in a long rehearsal at Tanglewood. Meanwhile, festival officials expressed great satisfaction over the musical results of last night's opening program, the first concert in the music shed, and the general public interest and enthusiasm. Immediately after the appeal made by Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, during the concert for $58,000 to finance completion of plans for the building and grounds, donations of $1,000 each were made by Mrs. Alonzo Sexton, of New York and Stockbridge, and John Snepard jr., of Palm Beach and Lenox. Another contribution was made this morning by J. C. Freeman, of Stockbridge.

Handel Work Withdrawn

The dedicatory character of the occasion undoubtedly influenced Dr. Koussevitzky's choice of program for the first festival concert last night, when the Cecilia Society of Boston sang with the orchestra in the opening chorus and closing chorale from Bach's Cantata, "Ein Feste Burg," and Beethoven's ninth symphony. Handel's concerto in D minor, op. 6, No. 10, had been announced in the advance lists, but was withdrawn probably for reasons of time, considering the length of the Beethoven symphony. In his brief speech after the addresses by Miss Robinson Smith and Bentley W. Warren, presidents of the Berkshire symphonic festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky gave two more reasons for offering the ninth symphony, its eminence as a musical masterpiece and the call for brotherhood among nations made by Schiller in his "Ode to Joy," the text of the Choral Finale.

The sentiments expressed by the conductor in his speech found realization in the performance of the symphony, which was perhaps the most eloquent interpretation of one of Beethoven's major works under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction which this reviewer has heard thus far. As compared with the performance of the same work by the Boston Symphony at Carnegie Hall in November, 1935, there was the difference between a good and a memorable interpretation. Last night brought a more convincing realization of the lyric meditative serenity of the third movement, and a communicative expression of the emotional heights of the finale—heights which, what with the technical difficulties of the movement, are not always reached. The broader tempi adopted by the conductor for the two latter movements, as compared with the New York performances of 1935, contributed to this result, and there was little found for cavil from an interpretative point of view, except that the subtle pianissimo adopted for the first statement of the main heme of the finale in the lower strings, while effective, was not altogether according to the indications in the score.

Choral Sung in English

The orchestra maintained the high standards which mark its work in the regular winter season, playing with sympathetic responsiveness to the conductor's interpretative wishes. The chorus, trained by Arthur Fiedler, also merited praise on [illegible] and expressive grounds, singing with a generally well blended and balanced quality of tone, notable volume and spirit and faithfulness to pitch. The soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaska, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon, coped laudably with what generally proves to be the least grateful feature of the symphony, although the familiar impression of difficulty in this taxing music was stiill noticeable. Mr. Cordon sang his opening solo with satisfying sonority and distinctness, if not with an unruffled tonal surface.

Schiller's verse was sung in English, in a translation of average merit. But since few if any English versions of the hymn to joy have proved entirely adequate, and not all the words are necessarily heard by the audience in concerted passages, it might have been better to adhere to the German original.

Applaud for Five Minutes

In the opening Bach chorus the vigorous vocal volume sometimes overwhelmed the orchestral tone unduly, except for a penetrant high trumpet, and there was a certain lack of clarity of detail. That this was not due to acoustic condition in the music shed was shown by what followed, especially by the performance of the symphony, which confirmed the highly favorable initial impression gathered from the afternoon's rehearsal. The often incomparable quality of this orchestral tone was heard to entire advantage, with full sonority and distinctness of fine points of instrumental detail, even at a considerable distance behind the structure. At the close there were five minutes of continuous applause for the conductor and his collaborators.

Dr. Koussevitzky's invitation to the audience to join the singing of the Bach chorale received a hearty response, and also the audience deserved praise for prompt arrival. Although many came from considerable distances, the proportion of latecomers was small, despite the fact that the arrival and parking of more than 2,000 cars require considerable time under the best conditions. Members of American Legion posts co-operated with the police in parking arrangements, which were accomplished with relatively little delay.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
AUG 8 - 1938

40,000 WILL ATTEND FESTIVAL

First Half Of Berkshire Program At Stockbridge Attracts 19,000

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) — Directors of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, basing their estimate on concerts already held, today said they expected the total attendance would reach 40,000 when the program concludes next Sunday.

Three concerts, which comprised the first half of the program, concluded yesterday, attracted 19,000 music lovers. The concerts, resuming Thursday night, will be repeated Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The first three concerts attracted audiences from every section of the United States, Canada and many parts of Europe, including children in camp uniforms and many of the nation's social leaders.

Their numbers were so great that extra chairs had to be added to the regular seating capacity of 5,628 at two of the Boston Symphony's three programs. At every break in the concerts, Serge Koussevitzky, director, was obliged to respond to bravos and cheers.

The new, fan-shaped "music shed," used this summer for the first time, proved perfect acoustically and everyone, from those in the lowest priced to the most expensive seats, heard every note of three beautifully chosen programs.

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME
AUG 6 - 1938

Bernie Yudain:

Taking the Ether

THE MALE BAG

Dear B. Y.:

You were muttering the other day about the scarcity of good programs on the air during the summer months. No doubt you were referring to the lamentable absence of Fred Allen, Jack Benny and other top-notchers from the air during the hot weather. Listeners who like that type of program are left high and dry now, but in another field of broadcasting there has been no let-down just because the mercury soars.

I refer to symphonic music, of which I am a devotee. Now, I know hot weather and "serious" music aren't supposed to be compatible but that's a lot of piffle—as the networks now realize. I have never understood why a person shouldn't like to hear Wagner, if he likes Wagner, as much in July and August as in November and December. The answer of course is that he does. The belief that "heavy" music is fit only for sub-zero weather is as silly as the equally-prevalent belief that everybody wants light, fluffy fiction in the summer, no matter if they read nothing but Shakespeare and Milton the rest of the year.

All the networks are doing right well by the symphonic addicts nowadays during the hottest as well as the coldest weather. You can hear almost as much good music any week now as you can during the winter. The Philadelphia Orchestra has been holding forth at Robin Hood Dell in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, and a goodly number of these concerts have been broadcast. The Boston Symphony is being heard from the Berkshire Festival. The New York Philharmonic is being heard from the Lewisohn Stadium in New York. The Toronto Symphony is on the air every week. Alfred Wallenstein's concert orchestra goes right ahead with its excellent broadcasts, maugre the heat.

That was a magnificent opening concert by the Boston Symphony last week at the dedication of the new music shed of the Berkshire Festival. Bach choral selections and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony — great music played by a great orchestra that was as enjoyable on a hotter than hot night as it would be in drear-nighted December (particularly if you happened to have a couple of bottles of beer beside your chair.)

Returning for a moment to the time-and-season angle of listening to symphonic music, it has been amply demonstrated that people who like it will listen to it in all kinds of weather and at practically any time of day, if they're near a radio. For instance, one of the smaller New York stations—WQXR if I remember correctly—experimented recently with a recorded "Breakfast Symphony" program, and it made an instant hit. You wouldn't think offhand that people would want Beethoven and Brahms with their toast and marmalade but there you are. Facts is facts. Well, when you get right down to it, most people are more in the mood for music early in the morning than they are for silly chatter on the radio.

These recorded-music stations are a boon to the listener. Everybody knows by now that WQXR presents several hours of good recorded music daily, plus some uncanned concerts. WNYC's Masterwork Hour (at 9 a. m. and 7 p. m.) is another program that is always good. WEVD and some others are catching on and doing their bit in this direction.

Oh, yes—the Columbia Symphony on Sunday afternoon (filling, or partly so, the spot held by the N. Y. Philharmonic during the winter and spring) is a first-rate program. Furthermore, it has a progressive director who doesn't stick to the heavily-traveled roads of music but branches out now and then, giving American composers of today a break and also introducing less-familiar but excellent works from the recent musical literature of other lands.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH
AUG 6 - 1938

Classic Themes Well Handled In New Records

By FRANCES BOARDMAN

Victor's co-operation with the New Friends of Music, to the end that the beautiful performances staged for that organization may be shared by listeners everywhere, and not alone by the members of the New York organization, has been greatly appreciated, one must believe, by all lovers of expert and unusual chamber music.

Among the releases resulting from the liaison is the Mozart Divertimento No. 15, in B-flat major (K.287) as played by the ensemble known as Arthur Fiedler's Sinfonietta, under the baton of Mr. Fiedler, who is perhaps best known as conductor of the Boston "Pops" orchestra. It is scored for two violins, two horns, viola and bass, the first violinist of the executive group being Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This is delightful music, skillfully played, and offered without the slightest affectation or concert-stage pretentiousness, and it comes in a set of five discs, four of them in the ten-inch size.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1938

* * *

The Venezuelan government has recently issued a stamp bearing the likeness of Teresa Carreno, eminent pianist, commemorating the repatriation of her ashes which were brought to her native land last February.

Mme. Claire Croiza, in a recent recital at the Salle Chopin, Paris, sang four totally unknown Debussy songs, namely, "Jane," "Serenade," "Sounait" and "O Floraison Divine des Lilas." These are still in manuscript and await permission by the composer's heirs for publication. The owner is M. Pierre Schneider.

The date of composition is uncertain, except for "O Floraison," which is marked April 20, 1882. The poem for "Jane" was written by Leconte de Lisle, while Th. de Banville is the author of the others.

The Boston Symphony recently issued a volume of concert programs presented during its past (57th) season. John N. Burk is responsible for all historical and descriptive data.

Dr. H. C. Colles is editing a new edition of Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians," which is being prepared by the Macmillan Company. The third edition of five volumes, published 10 years ago, is being revised. A sixth volume is being added which will contain new articles.

All Acclaim Sound Reception in Shed

Mercury New Bedford

Auditorium at Tanglewood Works Magic on Ninth Symphony

Aug. 6 1938

On the way home through those nearer green rock-studded and far blue hazed Berkshire hills and peaceful valleys, the effort has been made to formulate some impressions of the jubilant first day of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood. Even the phlox cried out in joy of brilliant bloom from every garden. It was a day of triumph for the Festival organization and the hero of the hour bore the coveted name "perfect acoustics." Stockbridge will be visited by builders of the future to study the secret of its open air auditorium.

The "shed" at Tanglewood had been tried out by a first night capacity audience for the Thursday dedicatory program and found not only sufficient, but amazingly refining, supporting, glamoring, in its sound acceptance. As one who has heard the Beethoven Ninth Symphony many times in Symphony Hall, Boston, by the same body of orchestral virtuosos who were happily conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on the stage of the new Tanglewood building, we protest that Thursday we felt it was being heard for the first time in full realization of its inherent thrills and poetic beauties.

Dr. Koussevitzky's sensitive imaginative musicianship demanded a pace in the vivace and received it in clarity and fire. His well known gift of subtlety in phrasing, always visualized in his hands, seemed almost afloat in a benison of gratified old Ludwig throughout the adagio. That supremely silken gold of the Boston Symphony string section exceeded in a refinement so magically lovely that one said, "Surely these men have put aside for the occasion their sufficiently fine instruments and have had loaned them the rarest treasures of Strad and Guarnerius collections." It might have been a 'cello from fairyland upon which Jean Bedetti played his brief pianissimo.

Here for the first time one had the experience of listening to human voices chorally interwoven with orchestral passages without any sense of incongruity in their easefully taken staccati. The four soloists: Vreeland, Kaskas, Althouse and Cordon, met all requirements without strain; the sections of the Cecilia Society came out in resonant enrichment. The whole fourth movement was like a brilliant opera performance.

The stout old Luther chorale that opened the program we met halfway by hearing it with eyes closed and mind transferred to its original locale, some early 18th century German church where congregations sang out nobly "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott" and trumpets echoed their proclamation of faith. When Eva meets Walter von Stolzing in "Die Meistersinger" it is in just such a setting.

Manager Judd, looking as pleased as Punch over the success, hailed yesterday morning on Stockbridge's main street, explained that the omission of the late addition, a Handel Concerto Grosso, was because of the length of the speeches.

It was an audience too content to complain that laughed cheerfully at each other as, evening gowns lifted high, the multitude ploughed through freshly made pathways under kindly canopies of snakelike lengths. Heels of dress shoes sank in the developing mire; their wearers tottered, lurched, pulled out and struggled on, to stumble, had they impatiently gone under the ropes, over short stumpy ground. Cars in the parking lots had to be towed out; one bus was immovable for 40 minutes.

A little elderly Canadian lady who came alone to Stockbridge for the six concerts and four Olin Downes lectures was delighted to drive out the five miles with us in comparative safety. She typified the interest in our American Salzburg from all parts of the country.

A. C. R.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER
AUG 8 - 1938

+ + +

Miss Carrie Winslow, Miss Ruth L. Jessup and Gerald S. Bliss of this city, Mrs. J. Sanderson Hand and son, George Hand, of Stuyvesant Falls, and Mrs. Pauline Avery of West Taghkanic, attended the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducted Saturday at the music shed at "Tanglewood."

135

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
AUG 6 - 1938

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge (Tanglewood), Mass., Aug. 6—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its fifth season Thursday night, inaugurating the new 5,700-capacity shed with an audience of 6,000 persons. Standing-room-only and extra seats in the collonade accommodated the overflow crowd, however, so that all could have been under the roof had the weather made it imperative. Many, however, were content to remain outside on the grass, and audibility there within an extensive range of the shed was good.

As early as 6 o'clock traffic lines were formed on the various highways approaching Tanglewood, and by 8 o'clock traffic was jammed and remained so, moving but slowly, until long after the concert had begun. For the most part patrons, police, Legionnaire volunteers from Pittsfield, and Festival officials remained in good humor, and those forced to be late realized the circumstances were unavoidable.

Beethoven's great Ninth Symphony was held largely responsible for the unprecedented turnout. Of course many were curious to see the much publicized shed, but many more are expected to arrive for the week-end performances.

The shed did not disappoint in the excellence of its predicted acoustics. I was able to listen only from one point, but apparently patrons in all sections were pleased.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in dark trousers and white jackets. Although it was admittedly warm, the musicians and conductor did not have the excuse they did last year, under the tent, to remove their coats.

It may seem a bit trite to say that the Ninth Symphony was tremendous. It always is. This performance was particularly so, nevertheless. Dr. Koussevitzky, a little ponderous in his Beethoven, sometimes, I think, drove this dynamic work to its limits in power. On a hot night, of all times. The first and last movements are to be remembered most. Punctuation in the first was with heat-defying energy, perhaps the scherzo lacked a little of that unnamed kind of mirth of Beethoven's; perhaps the lack of necessity to drive in the adagio permitted that movement to go into a little too much relapse. The last movement rose to all even to more than it seemed possible for its potentialities. Climaxes, contrasts, pauses were all in the truest of Beethoven vigor. Personally, I do not recall ever having heard bass viols played at such pianissimo, as when they were called upon to introduce, in unison, the "Ode to Joy" theme. The building-up here to the full orchestra was unusually impressive.

Soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. As soloists and in quartet they filled their great demands excellently. The chorus, the Cecilia Society of Boston, also did well. The balance between these vocal ensembles and the orchestra was as good its ever been my experience to hear.

As for the first part of the program, I must confess that although I was within a quarter of a mile from the Tanglewood gates forty minutes before the concert was to begin, I was unable to get under the shed in time. Sights of the shed and surroundings were therefore nocturnal for me.

The first half consisted, however, of two Bach chorales from the "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" cantata, No. 80. The audience participated.

Dedicatory remarks were made by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, between the first chorus and the chorale. Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky also spoke.

Miss Smith said in art: " Had clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be in auguring this great music shed, no one would have paid the least atention. It is, however, an inspiring reality. But nothing worthwhile ever happens without someone having dreamed a dream." Miss Robinson gave a brief resume of the festival's history.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 7 - 1938

Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, have been engaged to play Mozart's concerto in E flat with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on [redacted].

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY DIRECTS THIRD BERKSHIRE CONCERT

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 7 — Amid natural splendor of Berkshire Hills, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted Boston Symphony Orchestra in impeccable performance this afternoon in third concert of Berkshire Symphonic festival.

It was found necessary to change the last number on the program, Ravel's Suite No. 2 from Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe" being substituted for "Pines of Rome" by Respighi. The two Ravel compositions, Ballet and his "Mother Goose" suite were characterized by their delicacy of interpretations.

Feature of second half of program was Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre" with composer playing piano part. Amateur critics in audience, commenting on it, said "Gershwin does it better."

Program began with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," played in precise fashion best suiting Mozart.

Highlight of afternoon was Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, which drew prolonged applause.

Globe Aug 8

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1938

Huge Stockbridge 'Shed' Blends Symphony Notes

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4—Serge Koussevitsky chose Bach and Beethoven for the dedication of the music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood. More than 6000 listeners were thrilled as they heard the great Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cecilia Society of Boston give the First Chorus and Chorale from the Bach cantata Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott, No. 80 and the Beethoven symphony No. 9 with the final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, op. 125.

Koussevitsky was given a tremendous ovation as he appeared on the stage, the audience rising instantly. The atmosphere was tense as the time came to test the acoustics of this huge fan-like structure. The box stage is the size and shape of that in Symphony Hall and the seats radiate from the stage in a widening semi-circle. A vaulted roof covers the audience from the sky but the sides of the shed are open. As all but the starlights were dimmed, the green lawns edged by tall trees were visible in the moonlight, suggesting the eerie atmosphere of another world.

Only the occasional flash of news cameras brought back the realization that this event was real and of great importance in the world of music. Koussevitsky said "On this significant day in musical life, I have selected the Beethoven 9th not only because it is the greatest masterpiece in musical literature but also to hear the voice of Tanglewood repeat it calling all nations to brotherhood."

It was on this high note that the entire program was given and it was an exhilarating moment when Dr. Koussevitsky turned and invited the audience to join the orchestra and chorus in singing "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." The playing of the orchestra was excellent as usual, and the chorus, trained by Arthur Fiedler, was very fine. Soloists in the Beethoven were Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto, Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Gordon, bass.

The shed is remarkably sensitive to every detail of shading and the softest tone was heard perfectly. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, outlined plans for future festivals at Tanglewood. These include a school for training orchestral and choral directors and eventually the production of opera there. The Berkshire Festival is assuming national importance and it is expected that it will become a musical center the equal of any of the festival centers of Europe.

Rhode Islanders noted in the huge opening throng were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Allen of Providence (Mrs. Allen is Martha Baird who was soloist in Providence last season with the orchestra) Miss Kathleen Miller, also of Providence, Miss Louise B. Fish and Theodore E. Dexter of Central Falls and Mrs. Henrietta Staton of Barrington.

R. T.

KOUSSEVITZKY PLANS TANGLEWOOD SCHOOL

10 Promising Conductors to Study Under Him

B. Globe Aug. 7/38

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6 (A. P.)—A unique music school, unlike any other in the United States, is the aspiration of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which tonight heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

The audience, which filled the new music shed at "Tanglewood" in spite of preliminary showers for the second of the current concerts, heard a superbly played program from three masters of different periods—Hayden, Debussey and Sibelius.

And most of those attending had a sense of participating in the new undertaking—the school which the festival group expects to be an actuality in the Summer of 1940.

The school is a dream of Dr. Koussevitzky's. Its inception was announced Thursday night by Bentley Mirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony.

A very small group will live at "Tanglewood," the estate given the Boston Symphony in December, 1936, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, which is the permanent home of the Berkshire Festival. This group, probably not more than 10, will be made up of the most promising young orchestra conductors to be found.

Another, and larger group will study choral conducting and choral music. Koussevitzky will supervise the work of the orchestral conductors. No musician has been designated for choral music, but Archibald Davidson of Boston is considered a likely choice.

In addition, there will be a group of talented young instrumentalists who will work through the Summer with Boston Symphony musicians, participate in programs and sit in on rehearsals for the festival proper.

A chorus of major ability will probably emerge as well.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1938

HAYDN ON PROGRAM OF BERKSHIRE FETE

E Flat Symphony and 'La Mer' by Debussy Are on List of Tonight's Offerings

SIBELIUS MUSIC IS ON BILL

500 Attend South Mountain String Quartet Concert Given at Pittsfield

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—The Berkshire symphonic festival continues tomorrow night, and if the weather remains good, a larger crowd than attended the opening night is expected. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a substantial program: Haydn's Symphony in E flat No. 99, Debussy's "La Mer" and Sibelius's First Symphony.

If today was an open date as far as the symphonic festival proper was concerned, it was not bereft of other musical attractions. Various chamber music organizations in the vicinity which ordinarily, present Saturday or Sunday programs, shifted their concerts to Friday. Among these was the South Mountain String Quartet, which gives a series of eight Summer programs on South Mountain in Pittsfield.

Concert on Mountain Top

About 500 persons drove up to the top of South Mountain to hear this afternoon's concerts. The church-like temple of music, with its pews instead of chairs, was filled and some listeners sat on benches out-of-doors. The South Mountain Quartet was founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, who has deservedly been called "the fairy godmother of chamber music." She also established the center on South Mountain, and next month there will be a chamber music festival observing the twentieth anniversary of the founding of this shrine of a subtle and ennobling art.

The South Mountain Quartet consists of Katherine Parlow, first violin; Edwin Edeler, second violin; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, 'cello, and has Gunnar Johansen, pianist, as resident collaborator. He joined with the quartet in the Brahms F minor piano quintet. The program began with Hindemith's F minor quartet, Op. 10. Then followed Handel-Halvoren's "Passacaglia," played by Miss Parlow and Mr. Willeke.

The most striking quality of the quartet's playing is its masculine vigor. This is especially impressive, since a woman is the leader. But the explanation is precisely Miss Parlow. She plays with a generous, full-bodied tone and with an emotional urgency that can only be the harvest of experience as a solo artist and of deep musical conviction.

Hindemith Quartet Discussed

The Hindemith Quartet, his first, is perhaps the most grateful to ears accustomed to old-fashioned musical fabric. There is a rich melodic flow, seasoned, of course, by some peppery harmonies. It seemed rather long winded, in spite of cuts in the last movement. But it demands playing of bite and crispness, and these attributes it had. The quintet was most effective in its stirring fortissimo pages, such as those in the scherzo.

But to return to the Berkshire symphonic festival and last night's program. The Bach chorus from "Ein' Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" had weight and impressiveness and in the chorale the audience joined with a will. What if it reminded one of the dear dead days when the organist in the movie house played the tune and a dancing ball on the screen told you what word to sing?

Dr. Koussevitzky and his men have seldom given a more dramatic interpretation of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. There was grandeur and exaltation in his conception. And how the orchestra played. Can it be that the surroundings and the time of the year have something to do with it? Can it be that conductor and men are especially fresh and keen for the job?

Quartet Is Praised

In any event, the first movement went with irresistible fire and majestic sweep. The second had an Olympian jocosity, and the third was matchless in its purity and serenity. The chorale movement was made to belong to the work. The quartet of singers, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon. At least one of them, Mr. Cordon, was singing this music for the first time—was well balanced and sang the cruel music with assurance. The chorus of the Cecilia Society, trained by Arthur Fiedler, sang with impressive sonority. At the end the response was thunderous.

In response to the dedicatory remarks of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, wherein she invited contributions to a fund of $58,000 needed to complete the music shed and the grounds around it, two gifts of $1,000 each were made immediately after the concert.

Tomorrow afternoon Olin Downes will give the second of his series of four lectures discussing the music of the festival programs at the Pittsfield Museum.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
AUG 6 - 1938

About the Town and County

By BETSY

Berkshire Festival

A number from this section were thrilled by the opening performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Be[redacted]Music Festival, "Tanglewood," Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday and others will attend subsequent performances throughout the season. Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, views the Berkshire Festival not as an entertainment for Summer people but as a center of art for the nation. Eighty thousand dollars has been subscribed for the new music shed. Three hundred and eight tons of steel and 150,000 feet of lumber have gone into its making. The opening performance served to remind the audience that there is a country today where liberty and democracy still exist and where art may unite its citizens in a faith that embraces present and future.

Sunday, Aug. 7, 3:30 p. m.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra (K. No. 525) .. .. Mozart
Symphony in E minor, No. 4, Op. 98 .. .. Brahms
Music for the Theatre ...... Copland
(Composer, piano soloist)
"Ma Mere l'Oye"—Five Children's Pieces .... Ravel
Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome" .. .. Respighi

Series B

Thursday, Aug. 11, 8:30 p. m.

Final scene from Act I, Wagner's "Die Walkuere":
Siegmund .... Paul Althouse
Sieglinde .... Beal Hober
Act III, Wagner's "Siegfried":
The Wanderer (Wotan) .... Norman Cordon
Erda .... Anna Kaskas
Siegfried .... Paul Althouse
Bruennhilde .... Beal Hober

Saturday, Aug. 13, 8:30 p. m.

"Angelus." from Symphony No. 3, in B minor, Op. 60 .... Hadley
Symphony No. 6, in F, Op. 68, "Pastoral" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetique", Op. 74 ...... Tschaikowsky

Sunday, Aug. 14, 3:30 p. m.

Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38 ... . Schumann
"Lieutenant Kije", Orchestral Suite" Op. 60 .... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, in D, Op. 73 .... Brahms

Lectures by Olin Downes will be given in conjunction with the above concerts, at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Aug. 6, 11 and 13, at 3 p. m.

RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 8 - 1938

John F. McNamara, program director of WBZ, journeyed to Stockbridge, Mass., to announce over an NBC-Blue network the inaugural concert of the Fifth Annual Bershire Symphonic Festival given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mayor Childs of Newton, Mass., has been made a member of the WORL Flat Foot Floogie Club, and receives his morning "get-up" call along with other members.

Once every year for the past ten years, Ben Hadfield, oldest WNAC announcer in point of service, has been receiving a huge bouquet of flowers from a Mrs. Churchill of Somerville, Mass. Many years ago. Ben was the emcee of "The Smilers' Club." Mrs. Churchill still sends her flowers and still signs herself "a smiler."

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
AUG 6 - 1938

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge (Tanglewood), Mass., Aug. 6—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its fifth season Thursday night, inaugurating the new 5,700-capacity shed with an audience of 6,000 persons. Standing-room-only and extra seats in the collonade accommodated the overflow crowd, however, so that all could have been under the roof had the weather made it imperative. Many, however, were content to remain outside on the grass, and audibility there within an extensive range of the shed was good.

As early as 6 o'clock traffic lines were formed on the various highways approaching Tanglewood, and by 8 o'clock traffic was jammed and remained so, moving but slowly, until long after the concert had begun. For the most part patrons, police, Legionnaire volunteers from Pittsfield, and Festival officials remained in good humor, and those forced to be late realized the circumstances were unavoidable.

Beethoven's great Ninth Symphony was held largely responsible for the unprecedented turnout. Of course many were curious to see the much publicized shed, but many more are expected to arrive for the week-end performances.

The shed did not disappoint in the excellence of its predicted acoustics. I was able to listen only from one point, but apparently patrons in all sections were pleased.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its celebrated conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, appeared in dark trousers and white jackets. Although it was admittedly warm, the musicians and conductor did not have the excuse they did last year, under the tent, to remove their coats.

It may seem a bit trite to say that the Ninth Symphony was tremendous. It always is. This performance was particularly so, nevertheless. Dr. Koussevitzky, a little ponderous in his Beethoven, sometimes, I think, drove this dynamic work to its limits in power. On a hot night, of all times. The first and last movements are to be remembered most. Punctuation in the first was with heat-defying energy, perhaps the scherzo lacked a little of that unnamed kind of mirth of Beethoven's; perhaps the lack of necessity to drive in the adagio permitted that movement to go into a little too much relapse. The last movement rose to all even to more than it seemed possible for its potentialities. Climaxes, contrasts, pauses were all in the truest of Beethoven vigor. Personally, I do not recall ever having heard bass viols played at such pianissimo, as when they were called upon to introduce, in unison, the "Ode to Joy" theme. The building-up here to the full orchestra was unusually impressive.

Soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. As soloists and in quartet they filled their great demands excellently. The chorus, the Cecilia Society of Boston, also did well. The balance between these vocal ensembles and the orchestra was as good its ever been my experience to hear.

As for the first part of the program, I must confess that although I was within a quarter of a mile from the Tanglewood gates forty minutes before the concert was to begin, I was unable to get under the shed in time. Sights of the shed and surroundings were therefore nocturnal for me.

The first half consisted, however, of two Bach chorales from the "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" cantata, No. 80. The audience participated.

Dedicatory remarks were made by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, between the first chorus and the chorale. Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky also spoke.

Miss Smith said in art: "Had a clairvoyant predicted five years ago that today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would be inaugurating this great music shed, no one would have paid the least atention. It is, however, an inspiring reality. But nothing worthwhile ever happens without someone having dreamed a dream." Miss Robinson gave a brief resume of the festival's history.

DR. KO[illegible] [illegible]CTS THIRD [illegible] CONCERT

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 7 — Amid natural splendor of Berkshire Hills, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted Boston Symphony Orchestra in impeccable performance this afternoon in third concert of Berkshire Symphonic festival.

It was found necessary to change the last number on the program, Ravel's Suite No. 2 from Ballet "Daphnis and Chloe" being substituted for "Pines of Rome" by Respighi. The two Ravel compositions, Ballet and his "Mother Goose" suite were characterized by their delicacy of interpretations.

Feature of second half of program was Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre" with composer playing piano part. Amateur critics in audience, commenting on it, said "Gershwin does it better."

Program began with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," played in precise fashion best suiting Mozart.

Highlight of afternoon was Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, which drew prolonged applause.

Globe Aug 8

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1938

Huge Stockbridge 'Shed' Blends Symphony Notes

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4—Serge Koussevitsky chose Bach and Beethoven for the dedication of the music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood. More than 6000 listeners were thrilled as they heard the great Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Cecilia Society of Boston give the First Chorus and Chorale from the Bach cantata Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott, No. 80 and the Beethoven symphony No. 9 with the final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, op. 125.

Koussevitsky was given a tremendous ovation as he appeared on the stage, the audience rising instantly. The atmosphere was tense as the time came to test the acoustics of this huge fan-like structure. The box stage is the size and shape of that in Symphony Hall and the seats radiate from the stage in a widening semi-circle. A vaulted roof covers the audience from the sky but the sides of the shed are open. As all but the starlights were dimmed, the green lawns edged by tall trees were visible in the moonlight, suggesting the eerie atmosphere of another world.

Only the occasional flash of news cameras brought back the realization that this event was real and of great importance in the world of music. Koussevitsky said "On this significant day in musical life, I have selected the Beethoven 9th not only because it is the greatest masterpiece in musical literature but also to hear the voice of Tanglewood repeat it calling all nations to brotherhood."

It was on this high note that the entire program was given and it was an exhilarating moment when Dr. Koussevitsky turned and invited the audience to join the orchestra and chorus in singing "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." The playing of the orchestra was excellent as usual, and the chorus, trained by Arthur Fiedler, was very fine. Soloists in the Beethoven were Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor and Norman Gordon, bass.

The shed is remarkably sensitive to every detail of shading and the softest tone was heard perfectly. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, outlined plans for future festivals at Tanglewood. These include a school for training orchestral and choral directors and eventually the production of opera there. The Berkshire Festival is assuming national importance and it is expected that it will become a musical center the equal of any of the festival centers of Europe.

Rhode Islanders noted in the huge opening throng were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Allen of Providence (Mrs. Allen is Martha Baird who was soloist in Providence last season with the orchestra) Miss Kathleen Miller, also of Providence, Miss Louise B. Fish and Theodore E. Dexter of Central Falls and Mrs. Henrietta Staton of Barrington.

R. T.

KOUSSEVITZKY PLANS TANGLEWOOD SCHOOL

10 Promising Conductors to Study Under Him

B. Globe Aug. 7/38

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6 (A. P.)—A unique music school, unlike any other in the United States, is the aspiration of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which tonight heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

The audience, which filled the new music shed at "Tanglewood" in spite of preliminary showers for the second of the current concerts, heard a superbly played program from three masters of different periods—Hayden, Debussey and Sibelius.

And most of those attending had a sense of participating in the new undertaking—the school which the festival group expects to be an actuality in the Summer of 1940.

The school is a dream of Dr. Koussevitzky's. Its inception was announced Thursday night by Bentley Mirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony.

A very small group will live at "Tanglewood," the estate given the Boston Symphony in December, 1936, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, which is the permanent home of the Berkshire Festival. This group, probably not more than 10, will be made up of the most promising young orchestra conductors to be found.

Another, and larger group will study choral conducting and choral music. Koussevitzky will supervise the work of the orchestral conductors. No musician has been designated for choral music, but Archibald Davidson of Boston is considered a likely choice.

In addition, there will be a group of talented young instrumentalists who will work through the Summer with Boston Symphony musicians, participate in programs and sit in on rehearsals for the festival proper.

A chorus of major ability will probably emerge as well.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 7 - 1938

Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, have been engaged to play Mozart's concerto in E flat with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on [redacted].

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1938

HAYDN ON PROGRAM OF BERKSHIRE FETE

E Flat Symphony and 'La Mer' by Debussy Are on List of Tonight's Offerings

SIBELIUS MUSIC IS ON BILL

500 Attend South Mountain String Quartet Concert Given at Pittsfield

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—The Berkshire symphonic festival continues tomorrow night, and if the weather remains good, a larger crowd than attended the opening night is expected. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play a substantial program: Haydn's Symphony in E flat No. 99, Debussy's "La Mer" and Sibelius's First Symphony.

If today was an open date as far as the symphonic festival proper was concerned, it was not bereft of other musical attractions. Various chamber music organizations in the vicinity which ordinarily present Saturday or Sunday programs, shifted their concerts to Friday. Among these was the South Mountain String Quartet, which gives a series of eight Summer programs on South Mountain in Pittsfield.

Concert on Mountain Top

About 500 persons drove up to the top of South Mountain to hear this afternoon's concerts. The churchlike temple of music, with its pews instead of chairs, was filled and some listeners sat on benches out-of-doors. The South Mountain Quartet was founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, who has deservedly been called "the fairy godmother of chamber music." She also established the center on South Mountain, and next month there will be a chamber music festival observing the twentieth anniversary of the founding of this shrine of a subtle and ennobling art.

The South Mountain Quartet consists of Katherine Parlow, first violin; Edwin Edeler, second violin; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, 'cello, and has Gunnar Johansen, pianist, as resident collaborator. He joined with the quartet in the Brahms F minor piano quintet. The program began with Hindemith's F minor quartet, Op. 10. Then followed Handel-Halvoren's "Passacaglia," played by Miss Parlow and Mr. Willeke.

The most striking quality of the quartet's playing is its masculine vigor. This is especially impressive, since a woman is the leader. But the explanation is precisely Miss Parlow. She plays with a generous, full-bodied tone and with an emotional urgency that can only be the harvest of experiance as a solo artist and of deep musical conviction.

Hindemith Quartet Discussed

The Hindemith Quartet, his first, is perhaps the most grateful to ears accustomed to old-fashioned musical fabric. There is a rich melodic flow, seasoned, of course, by some peppery harmonies. It seemed rather long winded, in spite of cuts in the last movement. But it demands playing of bite and crispness, and these attributes it had. The quintet was most effective in its stirring fortissimo pages, such as those in the scherzo.

But to return to the Berkshire symphonic festival and last night's program. The Bach chorus from "Ein' Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" had weight and impressiveness and in the chorale the audience joined with a will. What if it reminded one of the dear dead days when the organist in the movie house played the tune and a dancing ball on the screen told you what word to sing?

Dr. Koussevitsky and his men have seldom given a more dramatic interpretation of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. There was grandeur and exaltation in his conception. And how the orchestra played. Can it be that the surroundings and the time of the year have something to do with it? Can it be that conductor and men are especially fresh and keen for the job?

Quartet Is Praised

In any event, the first movement went with irresistible fire and majestic sweep. The second had an Olympian jocosity, and the third was matchless in its purity and serenity. The chorale movement was made to belong to the work. The quartet of singers, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon. At least one of them, Mr. Cordon, was singing this music for the first time—was well balanced and sang the cruel music with assurance. The chorus of the Cecilia Society, trained by Arthur Fiedler, sang with impressive sonority. At the end the response was thunderous.

In response to the dedicatory remarks of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, wherein she invited contributions to a fund of $58,000 needed to complete the music shed and the grounds around it, two gifts of $1,000 each were made immediately after the concert.

Tomorrow afternoon Olin Downes will give the second of his series of four lectures discussing the music of the festival programs at the Pittsfield Museum.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
AUG 6 - 1938

About the Town and County

By BETSY

Berkshire Festival

A number from this section were thrilled by the opening performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Be[illegible] Music Festival, "Tanglewood," Stockbridge, Mass., on Thursday and others will attend subsequent performances throughout the season. Dr. Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, views the Berkshire Festival not as an entertainment for Summer people but as a center of art for the nation. Eighty thousand dollars has been subscribed for the new music shed. Three hundred and eight tons of steel and 150,000 feet of lumber have gone into its making. The opening performance served to remind the audience that there is a country today where liberty and democracy still exist and where art may unite its citizens in a faith that embraces present and future.

Sunday, Aug. 7, 3:30 p. m.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra (K. No. 525)	Mozart
Symphony in E minor, No. 4, Op. 98	Brahms
Music for the Theatre (Composer, piano soloist)	Copland
"Ma Mere l'Oye"—Five Children's Pieces	Ravel
Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome"	Respighi

Series B

Thursday, Aug. 11, 8:30 p. m.

Final scene from Act I, Wagner's "Die Walkuere":
Siegmund	Paul Althouse
Sieglinde	Beal Hober
Act III, Wagner's "Siegfried":
The Wanderer (Wotan)	Norman Cordon
Erda	Anna Kaskas
Siegfried	Paul Althouse
Bruennhilde	Beal Hober

Saturday, Aug. 13, 8:30 p. m.

"Angelus," from Symphony No. 3, in B minor, Op. 60	Hadley
Symphony No. 6, in F, Op. 68, "Pastoral"	Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetique", Op. 74	Tschaikowsky

Sunday, Aug. 14, 3:30 p. m.

Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38	Schumann
"Lieutenant Kije", Orchestral Suite" Op. 60	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, in D, Op. 73	Brahms

Lectures by Olin Downes will be given in conjunction with the above concerts, at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Aug. 6, 11 and 13, at 3 p. m.

RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 8 - 1938

John F. McNamara, program director of WBZ, journeyed to Stockbridge, Mass., to announce over an NBC-Blue network the inaugural concert of the Fifth Annual Bershire Symphonic Festival given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mayor Childs of Newton, Mass., has been made a member of the WORL Flat Foot Floogie Club, and receives his morning "get-up" call along with other members.

Once every year for the past ten years, Ben Hadfield, oldest WNAC announcer in point of service, has been receiving a huge bouquet of flowers from a Mrs. Churchill of Somerville, Mass. Many years ago, Ben was the emcee of "The Smilers' Club." Mrs. Churchill still sends her flowers and still signs herself "a smiler."

[illegible] Aug. 7/38

THE LIVING LYRE

Nathaniel Hawthorne had a good deal to say about ghosts. If his own could see today the "Tanglewood" where he lived and wrote, it would gape. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is in full career. No longer under canvas at the mercy of weather, it is housed in its new Music Shed—as that acoustically flawless auditorium is quaintly termed in fidelity to New Englanders' inveterate preference for the unpretentious.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has been making news enough—not to say history. It is one of the few institutions that have not slackened pace since the world-mortgage was foreclosed. On the contrary, it has lengthened out its stride. Dr. Koussevitzky's conviction has been that the orchestra should go forward, giving more and more, and he has been justified of his faith.—Give, and it shall be given unto you; that you may give the more—Not only does the orchestra give more Winter concerts, it has taken over the free public concerts on the Esplanade in July, and in August going to the Berkshires it goes in some sort to the nation, which is the intent, and one to be fulfilled by still more ambitious plans in that quarter for a Summer school of creative arts at "Tanglewood." In return, it has been given that manorial estate and, next, a legacy for the erection of an adequate concert platform on the Esplanade.

Have we any institution which carries Boston's repute as a cultural center farther or wider than does the Symphony Orchestra? Its closest competitor is Harvard University. The cash value of such reputation to the city is known to the Governor when he allocates a fund of $5000 to the orchestra on behalf of the Commonwealth. In the presence of neighbors from New York and Philadelphia it may not be polite to say what is now the fact, but among ourselves there can be no harm in coming out with it: the fact is that within the past half-dozen years the Boston Symphony Orchestra has regained the position it held in the first decade of the present century; and that position is the top.

* * *

Not an end, but a beginning, this achievement is national, and wider. The fortune of America in what remains of the 20th century would be presumptuous to tell; but one of its few clear trends is that we are headed full tilt for a vigorous musical culture. Much of it is still fumbling; but we are on our way. Noticeable fifteen years ago, in the last ten the tempo has accelerated. Our ship of State may be rocking like the rest of them; but if she stays right side up, be sure of this: we shall have music aboard.

Moreover, we have played in luck. One of the most dramatic inventions in history has dropped an artistic treasure-trove in our laps exactly when it was most needed. Only those who as children were brought up on good music before the days of radio can fully realize what this means. It means that great classics which we were then fortunate if we heard once in two-to-ten years can now be heard sometimes as often as twice a week; it means that one of the largest mints of human genius (here, for once, that word is used in its true sense) is pouring its gold coinage daily into the houses of poor and rich alike. Nor is "gold" mere metaphor. Those who know the cash value of concert tickets can hardly look themselves in the face as night after night they twist the dials of [illegible] mounts weekly to at least $25 worth of music free. Even as recently as two years ago, Summer in music meant a long dry spell; unless you made it yourself or went to Bayreuth or Salzburg, you kissed orchestra and opera goodby from April to October. But within two years the aerial garden of radio has bloomed with Summer concerts of good music thick as phlox and as fragrant.

The miracle of all this is so happy that one can scarcely write of it without excitement. As these classics of music now come flooding by radio alike into drawing room and hall bedroom it is as though the masterpieces of Greek and Elizabethan drama were being performed in our houses several times a week by television. It is even better than that. For in all the literatures of the spoken word (an authority says) there are not more than twenty-five tragic dramas of the first rank, not enough to keep a repertory theatre going; and tragic dramas, even the best, will not bear as frequent repetition as will their musical equivalents. No one wants to hear "Hamlet" or "Oedipus Rex" night after night for two weeks; plenty of persons like to hear a symphony by Brahms or Sibelius as often as that or oftener—indeed must if they would learn to know it well. . . . To all of which, as climax, let it be said that the literature of good music is enormous: the free gold is plentiful; in the strict sense of that devout expression, there is "any God's quantity."

* * *

Whether these riches are being dumped into our laps before we are qualified to appreciate them at their true value is a question; but at all events, ours they are. We are in flood-tide of a golden age. It is doubtful whether anything quite like it ever happened before. One can even imagine people in the future looking back at us of today and saying:

"Those lucky brutes in the early twentieth century! when the musical classics, which are seldom if ever played today in our barbarized twenty-first century, were played constantly till they were as familiar as hymn tunes. Did those people realize what they had?"

To prevent the twenty-first century from being barbarized, music may be one of the agents. Its potential is high. But potential the word will have to be, for no miracle, not even radio, can do for man that which he can only do for himself. All hangs on the use that is made of it. Nothing may come of all this: the clear spring water of the classics may be overflowed by the foul deluge of fouler music. In the fifteenth century when the printing press was new and none but the classics were printed, men's hopes were high: they did not foresee that the press could also be an open sewer of trash. On the other hand, much may come of this clear current from the springs of musical genius: its pure water does educate taste.

In this historic moment the Boston Symphony Orchestra holds a key position. It had the advantage of a head start; it has the advantage of being, under Dr. Koussevitzky, in another of its great ages. Boston is a community whose people are prone to take good work as a matter of course. This has its virtue: it stiffens the pace and keeps it stiff. But occasionally it is well to speak out and remind ourselves, and them, that we have in our midst certain institutions which are as good as any of their kind anywhere, and one or two that are better. For more than half a century our orchestra has, like a Druid oak, been sinking its roots deep in the soil of one of the most highly cultivated musical publics in existence, until now, only at the beginning of its prime, this great bardic harp shouts and sings to every wind of genius, a living lyre that fills the land with music.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY AUDIENCE GROWS ON SECOND NIGHT

Dr Koussevitzky Receives Ovation After Each Number and He's Recalled Five Times at Close

Pittsfield, Aug. 6—An audience even larger than the dedication night of the new music shed at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, greeted the Boston Symphony orchestra at the second concert of the fifth annual music festival tonight. Many unreserved settees were placed outside the colounade and Joseph Franz, architect of the building ,estimated the number present as 6500. Every seat throughout the great structure, including all of the 80 boxes, was taken.

The boundless enthusiasm of the assemblage was fully equal to that of the opening night. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, received an ovation after each number and at the close he was recalled five times.

It was a perfect midsummer evening and during the intermission hundreds visited the Tnglewood garden. Parking conditions were improved over Thursday night and there was no delay in reaching the parking areas.

There was some delay in getting away, which could not be avoided with more than 3000 drivers trying to leave the field at the same time. A battalion of state police under Lieut William Sullivan did excellent work in directing traffic. Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre worked out and improved parking scheme which will be in effect at the four remaining concerts.

The third one of the series will be held tomorrow at 3.30 p. m. It is expected from the advance sale of tickets that tomorrow's audience will be even larger than for the two preceding concerts.

Koussevitzky Dreams Of Unique Music School

Stockbridge, Aug. 6 — (AP) — A unique music school, unlike any other in the United States, is the aspiration of the Berkshire Symphonic festival which tonight heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

The audience, which filled the new music shed at Tanglewood in spite of preliminary showers for the second of the current concerts, heard a superbly played program from three masters of different periods — Haydn, Debussy and Sibelius.

And most of those attending had a sense of participating in the new undertaking—the sohool which the festival group expects to be an actuality in the summer of 1940.

The school is a dream of Dr Koussevitzky's. Its inception was announced Thursday night by Bentley Mirt Warren, president of the Boston symphony.

A very small group will live at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston symphony in December, 1936, by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline, which is the permanent home of the Berkshire festival. This group, probably not more than 10, will be made up of the most promising young orchestra conductors to be found.

Choral Classes, Also

Another, and larger, group will study choral conducting and choral music. Koussevitzky will supervise the work of the orchestral conductors. No musician has been designated for choral music, but Archibald Davidson of Boston is considered a likely choice.

In addition, there will be a group of talented young instrumentalists who will work through the summer with Boston symphony musicians, participate in programs and sit in on rehearsals for the festival proper.

A chorus of major ability will probably emerge as well. This fall a questionnaire will be sent all former Harvard and Radcliffe chorus members, asking whether they would be interested in a course of study in the Berkshires, to be interspersed with programs and climaxed with appearances at the Berkshire festival.

It is expected also that an effort will be made to interest lay musiciansin the school's program, and probably a course in musicology will be offered as well. Olin Downes, who is prefacing the programs of the current festival with lectures on the music, has been mentioned as possible conductor of a course in musicology.

The school will become, it is planned, another service by the Boston symphony, which already works through 46 weeks of the year in Boston, New York, and on such tours for which there is time. It will not be organized for profit, and could not be built at all were it not that on the 210-acre estate of Tanglewood there exist buildings which will house the classes, and perhaps a few of the students.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 7 - 1938

BERKSHIRES HEAR HAYDN SYMPHONY

Debussy and Sibelius Also Are Featured on 2d Program at Tanglewood Festival

CAPACITY CROWD ATTENDS

Serge Koussevitzky and His Boston Orchestra Will Be Seen This Afternoon

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—An audience larger than that of the opening night turned out for the second program of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood here tonight. Because of the demands for seats, the unreserved section was moved back under the colonnade to make room for additional reserved tickets in the rear of the new music shed. Despite this change, it was impossible by mid-afternoon to obtain two reserved seats together for tonight's concert.

The listeners continued to be as enthusiastic as they were numerous. Approval is not manifested here by polite beating of the palms. Shouts, whistles and pounding of benches and the ground abet the applause. Tonight was no exception.

Performance Well Received

The performances of the Haydn E flat symphony, No. 99; Debussy's "La Mer" and Sibelius's first symphony evoked spontaneous and tumultous responses.

The prospects are that the largest crowd of the first week will attend tomorrow afternoon's program. Advance reservations indicated that people who are free only on Sunday are planning to travel as far as 150 miles each way to be present as the first half of the festival ends. Tomorrow Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" Brahms's fourth symphony, Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre" with the composer himself at the piano, Ravel's "Mother Goose" and his second "Daphnis et Chloe" suite.

As evidence of the public's interest in this festival, consider what happened this morning when the rehearsal at Tanglewood was thrown open to season subscribers. About 2,000 persons appeared early in the morning and sat with the quietness and concentration of an audience at a formal concert. More than two-thirds of this gathering remained through the full three hours of the rehearsal.

$10,000 Budget Increase

It was learned today that the budget for this year's festival has been increased by $10,000 over last season's expenditure. The total is $51,000. The increase was necessitated by the engagement of soloists and chorus. But the demand thus far and the continued interest of the public over a wide area suggest that the festival again will be able to meet operating costs from the sale of tickets.

In the two days between opening night and the second concert festival officials worked tirelessly to smooth out parking difficulties which made the movement of cars slow on Thursday. The rains of recent weeks have left some sections of the parking fields too heavy and soft for use. An additional parking space was opened this morning and a road was widened to assure easier and more rapid movement of the 3,000 and more cars that entered Tanglewood tonight.

This year, like last, a group of hardy orchestra men and their families have pitched tents on the edge of Stockbridge bowl and are living there through the festival fortnight. All the musicians of the orchestra will hold a picnic on the lake's edge on Monday, with Lester Roberts of the Curtis Hotel in charge of the provisioning.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

137

AUG 7 - 1938

Berkshire Audience Won By Koussevitzky

Symphonic Festival Season Makes Auspicious Bow With Appropriate Program

By CLIFFORD FOWLER GREEN

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now in the midst of its fifth season, having two concerts with four more to follow. As was the case last year the Festival is being held on the spacious and picturesque estate "Tanglewood," made famous by Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," situated between Lenox and Stockbridge, bordering Lake Mahkeenac.

For the opening concert last Thursday evening, at which the newly constructed music shed was inaugurated, the orchestra was assisted by the Cecelia Chorus of Boston (Arthur Fiedler, conductor) and for this gala occasion Koussevitzky chose selections from Bach's cantata, "Ein Feste Berg ist Unser Gott," (A Stronghold Indeed, is Our God), and Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," both works for orchestra and chorus. The soloists for the latter were: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass.

Like Huge Fan

The new shed is an eminently practical and interesting structure shaped like a huge open fan, with a seating capacity of about 6000 It is said to be the only one of its kind in existence. Main supports are of structural steel, with open sides and back, double roof of wood and felt, to insure its being sound proof against heavy rain. This will prevent a recurrence of what happened last year when a torrential rainstorm wrought havoc and seriously challenged the orchestra on "Wagner Night." Certainly an important consideration in building a structure of this size is its acoustical properties. Much study was given to this feature so that it is no accident that the acoustics are as near perfect as possible and without any amplifica-cally no rts thus audience

wns and nd hem-
, where this elemental music matches its charms with nature.

Appropriate Choice

The choice of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with its magnificent theme of joy and exaltation, was most appropriate for this dedicatory concert. Here the composer employs, in addition to a symphony orchestra, a huge chorus and soloists for the final section, using the words of Schiller's "Ode to Joy," calling all mankind to brotherhood and friendship.

The orchestra and conductor gave a demonstration of their usual fine playing, indeed, it has come to be understood that when the Boston men, with their beloved conductor perform, one is certain that the result will be as good as can be heard anywhere.

Undoubtedly the orchestra and conductor were more than usually inspired. In addition to the dedication of the music shed, it was the celebration of substantial and huge progress of the Festival in the short five years and the hope, with the permanent attraction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to make this Berkshire Symphonic Festival the peer of the well-known European ones. Dr. Koussevitzky showed skill in program building in arranging one to suit the occasion ideally.

For his program Saturday night Dr. Koussevitzky chose two complete symphonies, one by Joseph Haydn, the earliest of the great symphony writers, and one by our contemporary, Jean Sibelius, illustrious son of Finland, whose contributions to symphonic music are being played more and more frequently and who has easily gained the distinction of being the greatest of present day symphonic composers.

Between the Haydn and Sibelius symponies were given some impressionistic music of Claude Debussy, the symphonic sketch in three parts "La Mer." The Haydn was dashed off with Dr. Koussevitzky's usual facility, abandon and clarity which provoked much enthusiasm.

It needed the second number "La Mer" to create an outburst of applause which was nothing less than a furore. This composition of the modernistic composer, controversial in its day, is now apparently accepted by audiences. In it Debussy in his own individualistic style depicts the various moods of the mighty monster, the sea, in all its rampant fury and glory, its calmness and dignity, its depth and serenity. He had a passion for the ocean. The orchestra and conductor deserve and received great appreciation for their stirring performance. Following the intermission came the "First Symphony" of Sibelius.

The program Sunday afternoon will consist of: "Eine Kleine Nachtmusic," by Mozart; the "Fourth Symphony," by Brahms; "Music for the Theater," by the living American composer Aaron Copeland; "Mother Goose," by the French Maurice Ravel, and Suite No. 2, "Daphnis Et Chloe," also by Ravel.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

AUG 8 - 1938

Moment Musicale

By MAUD WELIN

BEAL HOBER, dramatic soprano who was guest artist for the Cambrian Chorus last Winter, will be heard with the Boston Symphony on the all-Wagnerian program scheduled for Thursday night at Tanglewood. The music shed on the Tanglewood Estate was dedicated last week when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the six concerts of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

An audience of nearly 6,000 attended. The program included the chorus and chorale from Bach's Eightieth Cantata, "Ein Feste Ist unser Gott;" Handel's concerto grosso in D Minor, Op. 6, No. 10, and Beethoven's ninth sympohny. The Cecilia Chorus of 100 members from Boston, trained by Arthur Fieldler, sang the Bach music and the choral finale of the symphony. Soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, who has also appeared in Schenectady; and three Metropolitan Opera singers: Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor and Norman Cordon, basso.

Short dedicatory speeches were made after the Bach choruses by Gertrude Smith, President of the festival since its organization; Bentley W. Warren, President of the Boston Symphony's board of trustees and Dr. Koussevitzky. Miss Robinson Smith outlined the history of the festival and announced that the concerts are now self-sustaining through ticket sales, but the building had been made possible through private contributions, and further improvements must come in the same way.

Mr. Warren praised the festival committee for its success in making available the adequate and admirable auditorium. He told of the broadening of the Boston Symphony's activities since its foundation in 1881. Dr. Koussevitzky, he said, who has now become an American citizen, had long cherished a vision of a music center of first importance, and was convinced that America was ready for it. He hopes that the annual festival may be supplemented my an academy holding annual sessions before the concerts and devoted to cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and instrumentalists.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

SECOND BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM SUBSTANTIAL FARE

Audience at Tanglewood Large Despite Weather — Haydn, Debussy and Sibelius Are Offered

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 6—The second program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, given tonight by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, was less massive and ceremonial than the first, which dedicated the festival's new temple of music, but it was substantial and interesting, and threatening showers did not prevent this gathering of a vast audience of music lovers, many of whom had driven a long way and faced a long night journey home.

On Fridays no concerts are given, but many of the festival patrons yesterday used their freedom to drive to Pittsfield for one of the excellent summer concerts given at the South mountain music colony by the South mountain string quartet, the date of which had been shifted to supplement the orchestra schedule. The quartet is composed of Katherine Parlow and Edwin Edeler, violin; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, cello, and on this occasion was reinforced by Gunnar Johansen, pianist, who collaborated in a performance of the Brahms quintet for piano and strings. The other numbers were Hindemith's string quartet in F-minor, opus 10, and the brilliant Handel-Halvorsen "Passacaglia" for unaccompanied violin and cello, played by Miss Parlow and Mr Willeke. The capacity of the building, erected by Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge for the Berkshire chamber music festivals, of which another will be given next month, is naturally limited, but those who could not get in were able to enjoy the music from the grassy fields outside.

Debussy's "La Mer"

Tonight's program at Tanglewood opened with Haydn's Symphony in E-flat, No 99, a fine example of the work of the father of the symphony, and closed with the first symphony by the Finnish composer, Sibelius, who is coming to be regarded as the greatest master of this form of music in our time. The gap was bridged by the poetic and colorful tone poem "La Mer" by Debussy, a work which some of his admirers rate above the better known "Afternoon of a Faun."

These musical interpretations of the changing moods of the sea are not closely imitating, and might be enjoyed as pure music without knowledge that the ocean was their theme, yet even without the title a sensitive listener, after several hearings, would be likely to get a whiff of sea air. No composer was better qualified than Debussy to reveal what the wild waves are saying, but the message they brought to his ears was far too subtle for mimicry. Sea and wind have a myriad of overtones, with which the poetic imagination mixes the nuances of sunshine, cloud and fog.

"La Mer" at first hearing pleases but may seem monotonous; its exquisite art is more fully grasped on closer acquaintance. Its beauty, however, depends in an unusual degree on the rich eloquence of a great orchestra. With Mr Koussevitzky the interpretation of this ethereal music is as discerning as his interpretation of the stern sub-Arctic symponies of Sibelius.

Sibelius's First Symphony

The first symphony by Jean Sibelius, composed 39 years ago, after a cordial reception, dropped out for a time but is now benefiting from the cumulative prestige of the composer's later works. This, in comparison, is elementary, with nothing of the elaborate and original form which he gradually evolved, and more of the national flavor which, in some degree, tinges all his music. It may never become so popular as several of the later symphonies, yet it is a strong and interesting work, and it shows in full measure the grandeur of which Sibelius was a master. His works need to be played with power and fervor and Mr Koussevitzky is not mistaken in giving them a large place in his programs.

Under his hands the performance of the symphony had tremendous power and gave the concert a fine climax.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

Music in the Country

"Oh, I didn't know they had flowers in the country!" says a character in one of Oscar Wilde's plays. If the craze for rural music festivals continues to grow, country people may yet be astonished to discover that concerts are also given in cities. But there must be a good many city people, also, whose design for living does not include subscriptions to the symphony season and who find the atmosphere of the cencert hall rather depressing, yet who enjoy greatly the variety which a regional music festival gives to a summer in the country.

Time was when music stopped at the advent of spring. Our own city used to have a May music festival, following closely upon the May breakfasts and other seasonal festivities, but the complaint was that May was too late for concerts. In May people were all for the open road and for outdoor recreations, and were reluctant, it was said, to listen to classical music. Moreover by May the musical season had ended, and musicians of repute and self-esteem were either taking a vacation in Europe or heading for a South American winter.

Time has changed all this. Many frontiers are barred to the professional birds of passage. Jobs abroad are harder to find, and at the same time economic conditions make summer employment more necessary. The vacation habit has grown, and summer colonies have developed an artistic life of their own, no longer limited to landscape painting but including concerts and theatrical enterprises. Music teachers no longer quit work when their pupils depart from the city in the spring; they go to the country, too, and sometimes find summer their busiest season. A famous teacher, established at a pleasant resort, may find among his pupils professional musicians from all parts of the United States who in summer can find time for an intensive "master 'course."

Such possibilities have inspired Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to the hope that the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival may be supplemented by a school or academy, preceding the concerts and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders, and separate instrumentalists.

For a good many years the South Mountain music colony at Pittsfield founded by Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, has rendered a comparable service in the field of chamber music, and Tanglewood, the beautiful summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is no less ideally suited for such a school. As Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra, said in his address at the dedication of the new music shed, the personnel of the orchestra "contains artists unexcelled any-'where as teachers of advanced pu-'pils in the use of the various in-'struments." As a center for advanced musical education Tanglewood has great possibilities.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

UNIQUE MUSIC SCHOOL IS GOAL IN STOCKBRIDGE

Boston Symphony, Under Koussevitzky, Heard At Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 6—(AP)—A unique music school, unlike any other in the United States, is the aspiration of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, which tonight heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

The audience, which filled the new music shed at "Tanglewood" in spite of preliminary showers for the second of the current concerts, heard a superbly played program from three masters of different periods—Haydn, Debussey and Sibelius.

And most of those attending had a sense of participating in the new undertaking—the school which the festival group expects to be an actuality in the summer of 1940.

The school is a dream of Dr. Koussevitzky's. Its inception was announced Thursday night by Bentley Mirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony.

Group To Number 10.

A very small group will live at "Tanglewood," the estate given the Boston Symphony in December, 1936, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., which is the permanent home of the Berkshire festival. This group, probably not more than 10, will be made up of the most promising young orchestra conductors to be found.

Another, and larger, group will study choral conducting and choral music. Koussevitzky will supervise the work of the orchestral conductors. No musician has been designated for choral music, but Archibald Davidson of Boston is considered a likely choice.

In addition, there will be a group of talented young instrumentalists who will work through the summer with Boston Symphony musicians, participate in programs and sit in on rehearsals for the festival proper.

A chorus of major ability will probably emerge as well. This fall a questionnaire will be sent all former Harvard and Radcliffe chorus members, asking whether they would be interested in a course of study in the Berkshires, to be interspersed with programs and climaxed with appearances at the Berkshire festival.

It is expected also that an effort will be made to interest lay musicians in the school's program, and probably a course in musicology will be offered as well. Olin Downes, who is prefacing the programs of the current festival with lectures on the music, has been mentioned as possible conductor of a course in musicology.

The school will become, it is planned, another service by the Boston Symphony, which already works through 46 weeks of the year in Boston, New York, and on such tours for which there is time.

Non-Profit Enterprise.

It will not be organized for profit, and could not be built at all were it not that on the 210-acre estate of "Tanglewood" there exist buildings which will house the classes, and perhaps a few of the students.

Tomorrow afternoon the first half of the festival will close with a program of music covering the last 150 years—Mozart, Brahms, Ravel, Respighi and Aaron Copland. Copland, representative of the modernists, will play "in person" the piano part of his "music for the theater."

Many of tonight's audience were present in 1934 at the first Berkshire festival, given under Henry Hadley in the horse show ring at the Hanna farm here.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1938

FESTIVAL SUCCESS ASSURED THIS YEAR

Attendance of 19,000 Is Far Beyond Expectations—Second Series Will Open Thursday Night

Pittsfield, Aug. 7—The third and final concert of the first series in the fifth annual Berkshire Music festival was given by the Boston symphony orchestra, Dr Serge [illegible]vitzky, conductor, this afternoon and like its precedessors was a musical achievement of the first rank. The size of the great audience was estimated at 6500, practically the same as last night. Perfect acoustics made the concert a pleasure to holders of unreserved tickets who had seats from choice beyond the limits of the colonnade.

It was a perfect August afternoon with the sun tempered by a slight breeze. During intermission hundreds sought the refreshing shade of the avenue of stately Hawthorne pines; others found a cool rendezvous in the garden overlooking the lake and the haze-enshrouded mountains beyond.

The attendance for the first series of about 19,000 has far exceeded expectations and already there is a forward look to next year with continued growth of the festival practically assured. With the advance sale of tickets for the second series, starting Thursday night, above expectations, there is no longer worry over this year's budget of $15,000, an increase of $10,000 over last year.

Tomorrow afternoon Dr Koussevitzky is to entertain members of the orchestra, their wives and officers of the Berkshire Festival association at a picnic on the symphony orchestra shore of Mahkeenac lake. There will be 150 guests.

137

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 7 - 1938

Berkshire Audience Won By Koussevitzky

Symphonic Festival Season Makes Auspicious Bow With Appropriate Program

By CLIFFORD FOWLER GREEN

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now in the midst of its fifth season, having two concerts with four more to follow. As was the case last year the Festival is being held on the spacious and picturesque estate "Tanglewood," made famous by Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," situated between Lenox and Stockbridge, bordering Lake Mahkeenac.

For the opening concert last Thursday evening, at which the newly constructed music shed was inaugurated, the orchestra was assisted by the Cecelia Chorus of Boston (Arthur Fiedler, conductor) and for this gala occasion Koussevitzky chose selections from Bach's cantata, "Ein Feste Berg ist Unser Gott," (A Stronghold Indeed, is Our God), and Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," both works for orchestra and chorus. The soloists for the latter were: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass.

Like Huge Fan

The new shed is an eminently practical and interesting structure shaped like a huge open fan, with a seating capacity of about 6000. It is said to be the only one of its kind in existence. Main supports are of structural steel, with open sides and back, double roof of wood and felt, to insure its being sound proof against heavy rain. This will prevent a recurrence of what happened last year when a torrential rainstorm wrought havoc and seriously challenged the orchestra on "Wagner Night." Certainly an important consideration in building a structure of this size is its acoustical properties. Much study was given to this feature so that it is no accident that the acoustics are as near perfect as possible and without any amplification system.

There have been practically no vacant seats at the concerts thus far, in fact an overflow audience has extended out on the lawns and among the stately elms and hemlocks adjoining the shed, where this elemental music matches its charms with nature.

Appropriate Choice

The choice of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with its magnificent theme of joy and exaltation, was most appropriate for this dedicatory concert. Here the composer employs, in addition to a symphony orchestra, a huge chorus and soloists for the final section, using the words of Schiller's "Ode to Joy," calling all mankind to brotherhood and friendship.

The orchestra and conductor gave a demonstration of their usual fine playing, indeed, it has come to be understood that when the Boston men, with their beloved conductor perform, one is certain that the result will be as good as can be heard anywhere.

Undoubtedly the orchestra and conductor were more than usually inspired. In addition to the dedication of the music shed, it was the celebration of substantial and huge progress of the Festival in the short five years and the hope, with the permanent attraction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to make this Berkshire Symphonic Festival the peer of the well-known European ones. Dr. Koussevitzky showed skill in program building in arranging one to suit the occasion ideally.

For his program Saturday night Dr. Koussevitzky chose two complete symphonies, one by Joseph Haydn, the earliest of the great symphony writers, and one by our contemporary, Jean Sibelius, illustrious son of Finland, whose contributions to symphonic music are being played more and more frequently and who has easily gained the distinction of being the greatest of present day symphonic composers.

Between the Haydn and Sibelius symponies were given some impressionistic music of Claude Debussy, the symphonic sketch in three parts "La Mer." The Haydn was dashed off with Dr. Koussevitzky's usual facility, abandon and clarity which provoked much enthusiasm.

It needed the second number "La Mer" to create an outburst of applause which was nothing less than a furore. This composition of the modernistic composer, controversial in its day, is now apparently accepted by audiences. In it Debussy in his own individualistic style depicts the various moods of the mighty monster, the sea, in all its rampant fury and glory, its calmness and dignity, its depth and serenity. He had a passion for the ocean. The orchestra and conductor deserve and received great appreciation for their stirring performance. Following the intermission came the "First Symphony" of Sibelius.

The program Sunday afternoon will consist of: "Eine Kleine Nachtmusic," by Mozart; the "Fourth Symphony," by Brahms; "Music for the Theater," by the living American composer Aaron Copeland; "Mother Goose," by the French Maurice Ravel, and Suite No. 2, "Daphnis Et Chloe," also by Ravel.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

AUG 8 - 1938

M nal interest centers on the D waged against Senator Wil
velt, Sheridan Downey, John cal observers believe there is the best chance of turning
Rep

BEAL HOBER, dramatic soprano who was guest artist for the Cambrian Chorus last Winter, will be heard with the Boston Symphony on the all-Wagnerian program scheduled for Thursday night at Tanglewood. The music shed on the Tanglewood Estate was dedicated last week when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the six concerts of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

An audience of nearly 6,000 attended. The program included the chorus and chorale from Bach's Eightieth Cantata, "Ein Feste Ist unser Gott;" Handel's concerto grosso in D Minor, Op. 6, No. 10, and Beethoven's ninth sympohny. The Cecilia Chorus of 100 members from Boston, trained by Arthur Fieldler, sang the Bach music and the choral finale of the symphony. Soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, who has also appeared in Schenectady; and three Metropolitan Opera singers: Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor and Norman Cordon, basso.

Short dedicatory speeches were made after the Bach choruses by Gertrude Smith, President of the festival since its organization; Bentley W. Warren, President of the Boston Symphony's board of trustees and Dr. Koussevitzky. Miss Robinson Smith outlined the history of the festival and announced that the concerts are now self-sustaining through ticket sales, but the building had been made possible through private contributions, and further improvements must come in the same way.

Mr. Warren praised the festival committee for its success in making available the adequate and admirable auditorium. He told of the broadening of the Boston Symphony's activities since its foundation in 1881. Dr. Koussevitzky, he said, who has now become an American citizen, had long cherished a vision of a music center of first importance, and was convinced that America was ready for it. He hopes that the annual festival may be supplemented my an academy holding annual sessions before the concerts and devoted to cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and instrumentalists.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

SECOND BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAM SUBSTANTIAL FARE

Audience at Tanglewood Large Despite Weather — Haydn, Debussy and Sibelius Are Offered

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 6—The second program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, given tonight by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, was less massive and ceremonial than the first, which dedicated the festival's new temple of music, but it was substantial and interesting, and threatening showers did not prevent this gathering of a vast audience of music lovers, many of whom had driven a long way and faced a long night journey home.

On Fridays no concerts are given, but many of the festival patrons yesterday used their freedom to drive to Pittsfield for one of the excellent summer concerts given at the South mountain music colony by the South mountain string quartet, the date of which had been shifted to supplement the orchestra schedule. The quartet is composed of Katherine Parlow and Edwin Edeler, violin; Conrad Held, viola, and Willem Willeke, cello, and on this occasion was reinforced by Gunnar Johansen, pianist, who collaborated in a performance of the Brahms quintet for piano and strings.

The other numbers were Hindemith's string quartet in F-minor, opus 10, and the brilliant Handel-Halvorsen "Passacaglia" for unaccompanied violin and cello, played by Miss Parlow and Mr Willeke. The capacity of the building, erected by Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge for the Berkshire chamber music festivals, of which another will be given next month, is naturally limited, but those who could not get in were able to enjoy the music from the grassy fields outside.

Debussy's "La Mer"

Tonight's program at Tanglewood opened with Haydn's Symphony in E-flat, No 99, a fine example of the work of the father of the symphony, and closed with the first symphony by the Finnish composer, Sibelius, who is coming to be regarded as the greatest master of this form of music in our time. The gap was bridged by the poetic and colorful tone poem "La Mer" by Debussy, a work which some of his admirers rate above the better known "Afternoon of a Faun."

These musical interpretations of the changing moods of the sea are not closely imitating, and might be enjoyed as pure music without knowledge that the ocean was their theme, yet even without the title a sensitive listener, after several hearings, would be likely to get a whiff of sea air. No composer was better qualified than Debussy to reveal what the wild waves are saying, but the message they brought to his ears was far too subtle for mimicry. Sea and wind have a myriad of overtones, with which the poetic imagination mixes the nuances of sunshine, cloud and fog.

"La Mer" at first hearing pleases but may seem monotonous; its exquisite art is more fully grasped on closer acquaintance. Its beauty, however, depends in an unusual degree on the rich eloquence of a great orchestra. With Mr Koussevitzky the interpretation of this ethereal music is as discerning as his interpretation of the stern sub-Arctic symponies of Sibelius.

Sibelius's First Symphony

The first symphony by Jean Sibelius, composed 39 years ago, after a cordial reception, dropped out for a time but is now benefiting from the cumulative prestige of the composer's later works. This, in comparison, is elementary, with nothing of the elaborate and original form which he gradually evolved, and more of the national flavor which, in some degree, tinges all his music. It may never become so popular as several of the later symphonies, yet it is a strong and interesting work, and it shows in full measure the grandeur of which Sibelius was a master. His works need to be played with power and fervor and Mr Koussevitzky is not mistaken in giving them a large place in his programs.

Under his hands the performance of the symphony had tremendous power and gave the concert a fine climax.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

Music in the Country

"Oh, I didn't know they had flowers in the country!" says a character in one of Oscar Wilde's plays. If the craze for rural music festivals continues to grow, country people may yet be astonished to discover that concerts are also given in cities. But there must be a good many city people, also, whose design for living does not include subscriptions to the symphony season and who find the atmosphere of the cencert hall rather depressing, yet who enjoy greatly the variety which a regional music festival gives to a summer in the country.

Time was when music stopped at the advent of spring. Our own city used to have a May music festival, following closely upon the May breakfasts and other seasonal festivities, but the complaint was that May was too late for concerts. In May people were all for the open road and for outdoor recreations, and were reluctant, it was said, to listen to classical music. Moreover by May the musical season had ended, and musicians of repute and self-esteem were either taking a vacation in Europe or heading for a South American winter.

Time has changed all this. Many frontiers are barred to the professional birds of passage. Jobs abroad are harder to find, and at the same time economic conditions make summer employment more necessary. The vacation habit has grown, and summer colonies have developed an artistic life of their own, no longer limited to landscape painting but including concerts and theatrical enterprises. Music teachers no longer quit work when their pupils depart from the city in the spring; they go to the country, too, and sometimes find summer their busiest season. A famous teacher, established at a pleasant resort, may find among his pupils professional musicians from all parts of the United States who in summer can find time for an intensive "master 'course."

Such possibilities have inspired Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to the hope that the annual Berkshire Symphonic festival may be supplemented by a school or academy, preceding the concerts and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders, and separate instrumentalists.

For a good many years the South Mountain music colony at Pittsfield, founded by Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, has rendered a comparable service in the field of chamber music, and Tanglewood, the beautiful summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is no less ideally suited for such a school. As Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra, said in his address at the dedication of the new music shed, the personnel of the orchestra "contains artists unexcelled any- 'where as teachers of advanced pu- 'pils in the use of the various in- 'struments." As a center for advanced musical education Tanglewood has great possibilities.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

UNIQUE MUSIC SCHOOL IS GOAL IN STOCKBRIDGE

Boston Symphony, Under Koussevitzky, Heard At Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 6—(AP)—A unique music school, unlike any other in the United States, is the aspiration of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, which tonight heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

The audience, which filled the new music shed at "Tanglewood" in spite of preliminary showers for the second of the current concerts, heard a superbly played program from three masters of different periods—Haydn, Debussey and Sibelius.

And most of those attending had a sense of participating in the new undertaking—the school which the festival group expects to be an actuality in the summer of 1940.

The school is a dream of Dr. Koussevitzky's. Its inception was announced Thursday night by Bentley Mirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony.

Group To Number 10.

A very small group will live at "Tanglewood," the estate given the Boston Symphony in December, 1936, by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., which is the permanent home of the Berkshire festival. This group, probably not more than 10, will be made up of the most promising young orchestra conductors to be found.

Another, and larger, group will study choral conducting and choral music. Koussevitzky will supervise the work of the orchestral conductors. No musician has been designated for choral music, but Archibald Davidson of Boston is considered a likely choice.

In addition, there will be a group of talented young instrumentalists who will work through the summer with Boston Symphony musicians, participate in programs and sit in on rehearsals for the festival proper.

A chorus of major ability will probably emerge as well. This fall a questionnaire will be sent all former Harvard and Radcliffe chorus members, asking whether they would be interested in a course of study in the Berkshires, to be interspersed with programs and climaxed with appearances at the Berkshire festival.

It is expected also that an effort will be made to interest lay musicians in the school's program, and probably a course in musicology will be offered as well. Olin Downes, who is prefacing the programs of the current festival with lectures on the music, has been mentioned as possible conductor of a course in musicology.

The school will become, it is planned, another service by the Boston Symphony, which already works through 46 weeks of the year in Boston, New York, and on such tours for which there is time.

Non-Profit Enterprise.

It will not be organized for profit, and could not be built at all were it not that on the 210-acre estate of "Tanglewood" there exist buildings which will house the classes, and perhaps a few of the students.

Tomorrow afternoon the first half of the festival will close with a program of music covering the last 150 years—Mozart, Brahms, Ravel, Respighi and Aaron Copland, representative of the modernists, will play "in person" the piano part of his "music for the theater."

Many of tonight's audience were present in 1934 at the first Berkshire festival, given under Henry Hadley in the horse show ring at the Hanna farm here.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1938

FESTIVAL SUCCESS ASSURED THIS YEAR

Attendance of 19,000 Is Far Beyond Expectations—Second Series Will Open Thursday Night

Pittsfield, Aug. 7—The third and final concert of the first series in the fifth annual Berkshire Music festival was given by the Boston symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, this afternoon and like its precedessors was a musical achievement of the first rank. The size of the great audience was estimated at 6500, practically the same as last night. Perfect acoustics made the concert a pleasure to holders of unreserved tickets who had seats from choice beyond the limits of the colonnade.

It was a perfect August afternoon with the sun tempered by a slight breeze. During intermission hundreds sought the refreshing shade of the avenue of stately Hawthorne pines; others found a cool rendezvous in the garden overlooking the lake and the haze-enshrouded mountains beyond.

The attendance for the first series of about 19,000 has far exceeded expectations and already there is a forward look to next year with continued growth of the festival practically assured. With the advance sale of tickets for the second series, starting Thursday night, above expectations, there is no longer worry over this year's budget of $15,000, an increase of $10,000 over last year.

Tomorrow afternoon Dr Koussevitzky is to entertain members of the orchestra, their wives and officers of the Berkshire Festival association at a picnic on the symphony orchestra shore of Mahkeenac lake. There will be 150 guests.

138

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1938

Second Festival Concert Draws Another Big Crowd To Berkshire Hills Shed

Most of Those Who Attended Program Thursday Night in Boxes Again Last Night—Fresh Gardens and Lawns Make Tanglewood at Stockbridge Site of Concert, a Charming Spot—Western New England Tennis Tournament Will Start Tuesday at Wyantenuck Country Club—Williamstown Garden Club Flower Show Will Be Held Tuesday at Lasell Gymnasium—This Week Is Phlox Week at Berkshire Garden Center With Meeting There Tuesday Afternoon—Two Symposiums for Music Lovers to Be Held the 18th and the 25th — Playhouse to Present 'Pride and Prejudice'

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 6—All Berkshire roads these days lead to Tanglewood, Stockbridge, where the second Berkshire Music Festival concert was given tonight by the Boston Symphony orchestra. With gardens and lawns as green and fresh as in early spring, Tanglewood is a charming spot at this time, aside from the incomparable music provided on concert nights. Most of the well-known society people who were in boxes Thursday evening attended again tonight. With Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond were Mr and Mrs Henry A. Francis and Mrs Lucy Wadhams Dodge of Pittsfield.

Tennis Tournament to Begin

Wyantenuck Country club at Great Barrington will reach the peak of midsummer events next week. On Tuesday the western New England men's tennis championships will start for a five-days' tournament. Everett Hamilton Pell is general chairman and associated with him are Misses Mary de Windt and Elizabeth La Branche, Albert Spalding, Kimball Spahr, Arthur S. Somers, Ray Palmer and Dudley S. Turner.

Next Saturday comes the annual meeting of Wyantenuck club of which John B. Hull, Jr., is the president, and next Saturday night the annual costume ball will be the largest dance of the summer at the club. Mrs Robert Latimer Redfield, Jr., of New York, is general chairman of the ball.

Starting next Friday, the Pittsfield Country club will open its 20th annual three-day men's golf tournament with a tournament dinner that night and the annual tournament ball is to be a event of Saturday night. A. Park Shaw is general chairman. Built in 1785 the Country clubhouse was formerly called Broadhall.

Tomorrow afternoon's polo game on Z. Marshall Crane field at Pittsfield will be against West Point officers. Pittsfield club, of which Zenas Crane Colt is manager, is western New England champion.

Flower Show Tuesday

Williamstown Garden club is to hold its annual one-day flower show in Lasell gymnasium on Tuesday. Mrs George Alfred Cluett is giving a trophy to the winner of the highest score in the decorative classes while the club is awarding a prize in the horticultural division. There will be 71 classes. Mrs Carl S. Hoar and Mrs Preston Robinson are cochairmen.

The coming week will be phlox week at Berkshire Garden center, Stockbridge, and the Lenox Garden club council meeting will be held there Tuesday afternoon. A. Kenneth Simpson, horticulturist, will report on experiments at the center.

The parsonage at South Worthington, the summer home of Wayne C. Smith of Springfield, will again be opened to the public for the benefit of the South Worthington Community church next Saturday, the 13th. Supper will be served on the lawn from 6 to 7.30 p. m. by women of the church, followed by an entertainment in the house to be given by students at the Springfield Conservatory of Music. In event of rain the supper will be served in the house. There will also be on exhibition for the first time, the original records of the old stage coach tavern on Highland street at Chesterfield, better known as the Marshall Smith farm. These records cover the period from 1790 to 1840. Although some of the records are 150 years old, they are still legible.

A committee of sponsors representing various Berkshire and Litchfield county communities are to present two symposiums for music lovers on Thursday mornings, the 18th and 25th, by Marion Rous, pianist and music commentator, a summer resident of Norfolk. The first symposium will be held at the Scoville library at Salisbury under the title "From a Beethoven Cup" and the second, "Music Manifold," will be given at the Norfolk Country club. Mrs Thomas T. Mackie of Pine Cliff, Great Barrington, who is the former Miss Carolyn B. Van Cortlandt, is a sponsor. The Lakeville list includes Mrs N. Chandler Foot, Miss Harriette Harrison, Mrs John McChesney, Mrs George P. Milmine, Misses Eleanor Prendergast and Margaret H. Williams.

Club Tea Today

Wyantenuck Country club tea this afternoon was in charge of Mrs Frances Sayre Starbuck of New York and South Egremont. Among those assisting were Mrs John Bross Lloyd, Mrs Charles E. Bayliss, Jr., Mrs Dwight Partridge, Mrs Hugh Peters, Mrs Henry R. Powell and Mrs Herbert H. Bradley.

Mr and Mrs Walter B. Smith of 1200 Lake Shore drive, Chicago, were recent guests of Mr and Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt at Pittsfield. The late Miss Kate S. Buckingham of Chicago bequeathed her summer home on Bald Head at Lenox to Mr Smith and the house is closed this summer.

Visiting Mrs Warren M. Salisbury of 1100 Lake Shore drive, Chicago, at Tor court, Pittsfield, are Mrs C. Morse Ely, Mrs Albert Blake Dick and Mrs Keene Addington of Chicago. Kimball Salisbury, who is visiting his mother at Tor court, played in the Equinox golf tournament at Manchester, Vt., this week.

Mr and Mrs Donald F. McPherson of Pine lane, Winnetka, Ill., have arrived at Court hill, Pittsfield, which Mrs McPherson bought recently from the estate of her mother, the late Mrs Frederick T. West. This property has been in the family 50 years. The hill was so named from the first court established in Pittsfield township in 1761.

Countess Giovanni Cardelli of 1448 Lake Shore drive, Chicago, is occupying for the summer, Mr and Mrs William Felton Barrett's Sky farm at North Egremont. The countess is the former Miss Ruth Lamson of Chicago.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 7 - 1938

Concert Fete Event of Week at Pittsfield

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Most of the Berkshire entertaining this week-end revolves around the fifth annual music festival at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, where the second of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra was given last night in the new $82,000 music shed which has 5,700 seats.

The Chicago colony is well represented among boxholders. With Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn tonight was Mrs. Chumasero McAvoy of the Ambassador East, who is her guest at Schermeer, Lenox. With Dr. and Mrs. Robert Metz is Mrs. Metz's sister, Mrs. Frederick T. Haskell of Lake Shore drive, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. H. Ross Luce, at Gladstone, N. J. Mr. and Mrs. Metz entertained at dinner last night at Fernbrook, Lenox, and later took their guests to Tanglewood.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Francis and Mrs. Lucy Wadhams Dodge of Pittsfield were among the guests of Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, who has a box for the entire festival. Mrs. Gibbs has had charge of the old fashioned herb week program this week at Berkshire Garden center, Stockbridge. Forty varieties of herbs familiar to Berkshire medicine closets a century ago are grown at the center.

Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, a supporter of the festival from its start, is a boxholder again this year.

• • •

Festival guests of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Sherman Taylor of Lake Shore drive at Plumsted, Lenox, include Mr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Campbell of Lake Forest, and Mrs. George Cook Kimball and Miss Marjorie S. Kimball of Lake Shore drive, who are en route to Hyannisport, Cape Cod, for August. Miss Helen Campbell Taylor is back at Plumsted from Atlantic City.

Visiting Mrs. James Ransom Walker at Fair Acres, Stockbridge, are Mrs. John Stuart Coonley of the Ambassador and Mrs. Francis King of South Hartford, N. Y., who is the former Miss Louisa Yeomans of Chicago. Arriving for the second series of festival concerts, starting Thursday, will be Mrs. Walker's son and daughter-in-law, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Walker of Gwynedd Valley, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Smith of Lake Shore drive were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt of Pittsfield. They inspected Bald Head, the Lenox estate of the late Miss Kate S. Buckingham, who bequeathed the property to Mr. Smith. The house is unoccupied this season.

Visiting Mrs. Warren M. Salisbury at Tor court, Pittsfield, are Mrs. C. Morse Ely. Albert Blake Dick, and Mrs. Keene Addington of Chicago. Kimball Salisbury played in the golf tournament at Manchester, Vt., this last week.

• • •

Mr. and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson of Pine lane, Winnetka, with their daughter, Frances Ogden McPherson, and Donald F. McPherson Jr., have arrived at Court Hill, Pittsfield, which Mrs. McPherson bought recently from the estate of her mother, the late Mrs. Frederick T. West. This property has been in the family fifty years. Court Hill was so named from the first court established in Pittsfield township in 1761.

Mrs. Giovanni Cardelli of Lake Shore drive is occupying for the summer Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett's Sky farm at North Egremont.

Thomas H. Blodgett is passing several weeks in California and Mrs. Blodgett has Mrs. Edward S. Avery of New York City as her guest at Great Pine farm, Great Barrington. Mr. and Mrs. Blodgett's son-in-law and daughter, Prof. Livingston Hall of the Harvard law school and Mrs. Hall, who were at the farm, are taking a three weeks' motor boat cruise up the coast to Bar Harbor. Miss Louise Goddard of St. Louis, Mo., and Mr. and Mrs. Kimball Price of Far Hills, N. J., are their guests.

Mrs. Blodgett is on the Wyantenuck Country club entertainment committee which is sponsoring a costume ball at the club Saturday night.

During the music festival the chamber music concerts at Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge's temple on South mountain, Pittsfield, are being given Friday instead of Sunday afternoons.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

AUG 8 - 1938

Mohawk Drama Festival Makes Its 3d Stand at Beautiful Union College

School Is the Scene of What Is Believed to Have Been America's First University Play; President Skilfully Upholds Tradition.

By JAMES THRASHER
Times Staff Writer

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Aug. 8.—America on wheels may find in this vicinity three fairly new but already distinguished summer festivals.

Forty miles to the east is the Bennington Festival of the Dance, at Bennington, Vt. A like distance to the southeast is found the Berkshire Festival, presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Stockbridge, Mass. The angle's vertex is here on the campus of 143-year-old Union College, where the Mohawk Drama Festival has taken its stand for the third successive summer.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

Aug. 8/38

MUSIC FESTIVAL AT STOCKBRIDGE DRAWS CROWDS

Nearly 20,000 Enjoy First Series Programs in Magnificent New Shell

Stockbridge, Aug. 8—Fine weather again prevailed yesterday afternoon at the Berkshire symphonic festival when the third concert in the first series drew another banner crowd, estimated at over 6000 persons, bringing the total for the series close to 20,000. The second series will open Thursday night with a Wagnerian program, in which Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will be assisted by Paul Althouse, tenor; Beale Hober, soprano; Norman Cordon, bass, and Anna Kaskas, contralto.

The weekend drew to the magnificent new shell at Tanglewood audiences from a surprisingly wide variety of states, as disclosed by the number plates on the cars. Saturday night's audience had been treated to thrilling readings of the melodious "Symphony in E flat," by Haydn; the subtle "La Mer" of Debussy, and the interesting, if somewhat forgotten First Symphony of Sibelius.

Yesterday's program again disclosed the artistry of Dr Koussevitzky as a program builder. Just as Thursday's solid program was ideally suited for a dedication program, so was yesterday's program aimed at pleasing an audience that time and circumstance indicated would prefer a lighter program. With one exception, the fourth Symphony of Brahms, the program was of light fare indeed. Perhaps the lightness was more accentuated by the impressiveness of the reading given by Dr Koussevitzky to the Brahms and the intrinsic worth of the work itself.

The Fourth finds Brahms at his most original self. It represents his complete coming of age, hints of which were quite noticeable in the Second. The orchestra yesterday was quite successful in overcoming the more than mental handicaps imposed by such a sultry day.

Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," a gem of its own, opened the program, and immediately the virtuosity of the conductor was apparent in the lightness and gaiety which bubbled from the reading.

The second half of the program opened with the infrequently heard "Music for the Theater" by Aaron Copeland. The Boston orchestra was the first to present this when it was written 13 years ago, and yesterday the composer, at the piano, shared with Dr Koussevitzky, in the applause given this number, which slightly more than presages Dr Goodman and his men.

Two Ravel elections closed the program, the "Mother Goose" suite, and the second "Daphne and Chloe" suite, substituted for the Respighi "Pines of Rome." The first was chuckful of humor, and delightful in its rich, though mischevious orchestration. The second revealed Ravel as he is better known, in a more introspective mood. It distinctly lifted the tone of the program after the drop from the standard achieved in the Brahms.

Unknown to the audience, further tests of the acoustics of the shell have been taken during the first three concerts, and as announced by Prof Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, were just as satisfactory as those taken while the shell was empty. No "dead" spots have been uncovered anywhere throughout the shell. The final test will come when the festival gets its first rainstorm during a program.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 8 - 1938

Expect 40,000 to Hear Berkshire Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE, ug. 8 (AP) — Directors of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, basing their estimate on concerts already held, today said they expected the total attendance would reach forty thousand when the series concludes next Sunday.

Three concerts, which comprised the first half of the program, concluded yesterday, attracted nineteen thousand music lovers. The concerts, resuming next Thursday night, will be repeated Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The first three concerts attracted audiences from every section of the United States, Canada and many parts of Europe, including children in camp uniforms and many of the nation's social leaders.

Their numbers were so great that extra chairs had to be added to the regular seating capacity of 5628 at two of the Boston Symphony's three programs. At every break in the concerts, Serge Koussevitsky, director, was obliged to respond to bravos and cheers.

The new, fan-shaped music shed, used this Summer for the first time, proved perfect acoustically, and everyone, from those in the lowest priced to the most expensive seats, heard every note.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 9 - 1938

The Berkshire Festival

Music and moonlight, nature in her gentlest mood and the great masters in their mightiest, a symphony of hills and sky and trees and poetry—of such is the Berkshire Festival now being held at Tanglewood in Lenox.

This year, the fifth since the Symphonic Festival was taken into the verdant hills of Eastern Massachusetts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is playing in a new music shed seating nearly 6,000. Great music, superlatively played in soul-satisfying surroundings, can only intensify the emotional impact it ordinarily makes on the sensitive ear.

The sides of the new shed are open and from every seat one can look out on trees, grass, hills and sky. There Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" and there he gazed up at the Berkshire hills and felt his very being lifted up to a plane as lofty as their peaks.

Such surroundings not only halo the concerts with auras of perfect beauty, they engender a spirit of festival in keeping with the name the organization has chosen. It is a splendid thing to combine the best in nature with the best in music.

139

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD
AUG 8 - 1938

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

FIRST SUNDAY CONCERT AT FESTIVAL EXCELLENT

Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood, (Stockbridge), Mass., Aug. 8—The first Sunday afternoon concert here attracted another capacity audience to hear master works of Mozart and Brahms, and in the second half, three modern works—"Music For The Theater", Aaron Copland; "Mother Goose" Suite, Ravel, and in place of the programmed "Pines of Rome" of Respighi, another Ravel work, Suite No. 2, from the ballet "Daphine et Chloe."

The orchestra gleamed brightly in Mozart's serenade for strings, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik", and the Brahms No. 4 in "E" minor, was rounded out majestically. As one glanced out at the stately trees surrounding the shed on three sides, he might wonder if they too were not listening to this masterpiece by Brahms, who was indeed one of the world's great naturalists. Third movement, allegro giocoso, impressed this listener particularly for its splendid performance.

The bright and vigorous Ravel was also met by grand justice. Copland's work, now 13 years old, evoked much comment from the audience. The composer was at the piano. It was difficult for this writer to be enthusiastic.

The brass was a bit overbearing throughout the program. It is warm weather, and at times, such as a poor attack in the second movement of the Brahms, it tells tales with the orchestra. As for effect upon strings, one on an idle harp snapped in the space of a rest during the symphony.

Acoustics Perfect

As for acoustics, Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, reported today: "The entire auditorium is free from dead spots and reception at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Saturday night—The second concert of this series is just over. The great climax of the Sibelius First Symphony re-echoes, in the imagination, over the broad, peopled estate.

Over the lighted greens to the refreshment stand—a cold drink—to the office building, into the press room: the sudden contrast, symphony to the clicking of typewriters and telegraph machines over a hum of conversation. Men are trying, all vainly, I fear, to say something adequate about the music.

This symphonic monument by our Finnish contemporary did the uncommon thing for these days of leaving an audience spellbound. After the final strumped chords the audience did not burst into applause as it had done after the previous works. Dr. Koussevitzky waited a moment, then slowly laid his baton upon the stand. The storm of handclapping came almost reluctantly at first.

The previous numbers were Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No. 10 of the London series, and Debussy's "La Mer" three symphonic sketches. The continuity and color of these sketches, their sweeps and contrasting placidities marked them as performances in which conductor and all his forces had but one artistic concept. The same could not be felt about the Haydn symphony. In this relatively pure and simple music, much of its enjoyment depends, especially to our modern ears accustomed to so many tonal devices unthought of in Haydn's day, on wholesomeness of tone, string or wind, on the grace of phrasing and perfection of intonation, precise degree of accentuation, and these things did not comprise nor closely enough approach in a whole the ideal held for them.

This steel and timber parthenon, unfittingly referred to as "The Shed" dedicated to the form of expression that is man's highest—the symphony, is imposing in its colonnaded fan-shaped structure and in its setting. It is beautiful by the laws of nature as well as by man's. When science sets out to construct a thing of maximum efficiency, it very often achieves a thing of aesthetic appearance.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 8 - 1938

FESTIVAL CROWDS MAY TOTAL 40,000

19,000 Music Lovers Drawn by First Half of Berkshire Concerts.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 8.—(AP)—Directors of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, basing their estimate on concerts already held, today said they expected the total attendance would reach 40,000 when the program concludes next Sunday.

Three concerts, which comprised the first half of the program, concluded yesterday, attracted 19,000 music lovers. The concerts, resuming next Thursday night, will be repeated Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The first three concerts attracted audiences from every section of the United States, Canada and many parts of Europe, including children in camp uniforms and many of the nation's social leaders.

Their numbers were so great that extra chairs had to be added to the regular seating capacity of 5628 at two of the Boston Symphony's three programs. At every break in the concerts, Serge Koussevitzky, director was obliged to respond to bravos and cheers.

The new, fan-shaped "music shed," used this summer for the first time, proved perfect acoustically, and everyone, from those in the lowest priced to the most expensive seats, heard every note of three beautifully chosen programs.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 8 - 1938

Glade Music Festival Features Composer

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

A luxurious weekend of music, spanning the generations from Papa Haydn to the rambunctious moderns, continued to entice its thousands to the storied glade near Lenox, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne once wandered and write, and where a row of sentinel pines bears his name.

With its Sunday afternoo program—the longest yet played in the series—the Boston Symphony Orchestra reached the half way mark in its 1938 festival. Playing will be resumed Thursday evening with an all-Wagner program.

The novelty of the weekend was the personal appearance of the young American composer, Aaron Copland, to assist the playing of his suite of "Music for the Theater." Yesterday's audience gave him a generous ovation, although probably more for politiness' sake than for any profound appreciation of his dissonant syncopations.

Mr. Copland was at the piano with an abbreviated nucleus of the orchestra for the playing of the five movements, which were labeled Prologue, Dance, Interlude, Burlesque and Epilogue. Modestly, the composer had not over-stressed his own instrument in the writing, and therefore played only as a member, pro tem, of the orchestra, not as a solo performer. The best that can be said for the music is that it is fresh and interesting, and does not pretend to a significance it does not possess. The suite was first performed in 1925 by the same Boston Symphony, although it was new to most of the Tanglewood audience.

The fanciers of impressionism found their most ardent prayers answered Saturday night in a tenuously superb treatment which Serge Kouussevitzky and his musicians gave to Debussy's triad of symphonic sketches entitled "aL Mer." If any contemporary conductor reads Debussy more sensitively than Koussevitzky, this listener has not heard him. The most unbending disdainer of program music must have capitulated to Debussy's shimmering tone pictures of the wind and waves of his beloved Mediterranean.

In this festival, Dr. Koussevitzky is demonstrating himself again as the matchless program builder. Debussy was sandwiched the other night between Haydn (the 99th in E flat), and the first symphony of Sibelius, the prodigious Finn. Yesterday the first half of the program was devoted to Mozart (the Fourth Symphony). Then Koussevitzky plunged unblushingly into the moderns for what will be remembered as the most playful hour of this year's festival. Abandoning his usual intense seriousness of demeanor, the nervous, hard-working conductor relaxed and actually smiled at his men while leading them in Ravel's "Mother Goose" suite.

One of his rare last-minute changes was made in the Sunday program. Instead of Resphighi's "Pines of Rome," Ravel's second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite was substituted, and a positively thrilling, if frankly sensational, performance was given to it—one that left the audience in an ecstatic mood and enhanced the prolonged ovation given the conductor and his orchestra. These unstinted demonstrations of applaus and "bravos" have become an established rite at the festival, and then are obviously a personal tribute to Koussevitzky, since nobody hopes to tempt him into an encore offering.

The festival management estimates that more than 19,000 persons have attended the three concerts thus far—an average of more than 6,000 per concert. Perfect weather has been vouchsafed the event to date, fortunately for the trusting motorists who park their cars in the crowded fields nearby the new music shed.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 8 - 1938

Capacity Audience For Berkshire Music

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Saturday night's regional rain did not materialize at Tanglewood as the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival brought out another capacity audience to listen to the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of its spectacular conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The immaculately new and delightfully cool music shed justified the sound engineer's official O. K. as to the perfection of its acoustical properties.

Chronologically and structurally, the second concert was a well built exposition of the extreme poles of orchestral composition; the symphony No. 99 in E flat by the father of the modern orchestra, Josef Haydn, and the monumental First symphony by the contemporary, Jan Sibelius, with a cushioning modernistic contribution, "La Mer," Debussy's greatest orchestral contribution to make the transition from the ancient to the modern forms of composition less of an esthetic shock. For the saks of accuracy, however, it must be acknowledged that certain portions of the impressionistic French composer's musical water color not only out-Debussy'd Debussy but crowded the great Finnish composer for honors in allowable dissonance.

Dr. Koussevitzky brought out all the innate grace and beauty, the wealth of invention which permeates the work of Haydn and endowed it with a piquancy that must have gladdened the hearts of the citizens of Valhalla, hearing the work with a modern orchestra, the proportions of which Haydn never hoped to achieve. All the established tonal beauty of the orchestra was heard to the best advantage in "La Mer" while the sonority of the horns, the crecendo of the tympani and the eerie harmonization received understanding treatment by the men under the enlightening guidance of the conductor. Many personal recalls for Dr. Koussevitzky were shared by the men of his splendid group.

Sunday afternoon concert included "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" by Mozart, the Fourth symphony of Brahms, Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre," Ravel's "Mother Goose" and in place of the programmed "Pines of Rome," Ravel's Suite No. 2 from "Daphnis and Chloe." The novelty of hearing Mr. Copland at the piano for his group did not compensate for the lack of merit in his music. Ravel does the thing so much better, as was proven in the remarkably orchestrated fairy tales which followed (unfortunately for Mr. Copland) his musical expression in the modern manner.

The largest audience of the week cheered the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky for many minutes after yesterday's concert, but the conductor's inexorable rule of "no encores" prevailed. Tanglewood's beautiful gardens was the mecca of hundreds of the audience during the intermission. An all-Wagner program will inaugurate the second week's series on next Thursday night at 8:30 p. m.

MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL
AUG 8 - 1938

MUSIC LOVERS ARE SWARMING TO STOCKBRIDGE

Stockbridge, Mass. Aug. 8. (AP)—Directors of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, basing their estimate on concerts already held, today said they expected the total attendance would reach 40,000 when the program concludes next Sunday.

Three concerts, which comprised the first half of the program, concluded yesterday, attracted 19,000 music lovers. The concerts, resuming next Thursday night, will be repeated Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The first three concerts attracted audiences from every section of the United States, Canada and many parts of Europe, including children in camp uniforms and many of the nation's social leaders.

Their numbers were so great that extra chairs had to be added to the regular seating capacity of 5,628 at two of the Boston Symphony's three programs. At every break in the concerts, Serge Koussevitzky, director, was obliged to respond to bravos and cheers.

The new, fan-shaped "music shed," used this summer for the first time, proved perfect acoustically, and everyone, from those in the lower priced to the most expensive seats, heard every note of three beautifully chosen programs.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 8 - 1938

Test Passed By Berkshire Music Shed

Stockbridge, Mass., Auditorium is Proclaimed One of Nation's 3 Open Acoustical Marvels

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7.—(AP.)—Ease with which a program ranging widely in tone was heard today supported scientific tests that have placed the stamp of approval upon acoustic proerties of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new fan-shaped "music shed."

The concert, third in the current series, rose from the delicate sonorities of Mozart's "Eine Klene Nachtmusik" to the enoromous climaxes of Brahms's Fourth Symphony.

Unknowingly, the 19,000 persons attending the first three concerts have participated in the tests, made by Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"It is gratifying to be able to report," the professor said upon completion of this survey, "that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots, and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Volume Tests.

Before the festival opened, the most accurate acoustical examinations possible were made by Professor Fay. An instrument producing a sound of unvarying volume was set up on the stage, and other instruments were moved about the acre-and-a-half floor space to register variation in volume.

There was practically no variation, but the "hall" was empty. Tests again were made at rehearsal, and finally after the audiences moved in, whereupon the professor announced his findings.

Some of the shed's seats are 160 feet from Serge Koussevitzky as he directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At the widest part of the fan-shaped hall, the distance is 265 feet.

Although there had been no rain during the concerts, even that is expected to make no difference, for the roof is made of four carloads of two-inch planking, heavily insulated, through which the sound of falling water did not penetrate during preliminary tests.

Apparently the new music shed, completed for this summer's series of concerts, is one of two or three acoustical marvels in the country now being used for summer music.

Another of them is the wooden auditorium at Chautauqua, in western New York State, famous for decades for its acoustical properties. A third, not a building at all, is the Hollywood Bowl, which is almost a whispering gallery.

Concerts here will be resumed Thursday night, and the festival will close with programs under Dr. Koussevitzky Saturday night and next Sunday afternoon. The audiences of the first half will be duplicated, perhaps exceeded. So far they have come from every corner of the United States and many European countries.

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD

AUG 8 - 1938

THINK MUSIC FESTIVAL MAY ATTRACT 40,000

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 8—(AP)—Directors of Berkshire Symphonic festival, basing their estimate on concerts already held, today said they expected the total attendance would reach 40,000 when the program concludes next Sunday.

Three concerts, which comprised the first half of the program, concluded yesterday, attracted 19,000 music lovers. The concerts, resuming next Thursday night, will be repeated Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The first three concerts attracted audiences from every section of the United States, Canada and many parts of Europe, including children in camp uniforms and many of the nation's social leaders.

Their numbers were so great that extra chairs had to be added to the regular seating capacity of 5,628 at two of the Boston symphony's three programs. At every break in the concerts, Serge Koussevitzky, director, was obliged to respond to bravos and cheers.

The new, fan-shaped "music shed," used this summer for the first time, proved perfect acoustically, and everyone, from those in the lowest priced to the most expensive seats, heard every note of three beautifully chosen programs.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

[illegible] - 1938

Over 6,000 at Brilliant Concert in Berkshires

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Stockbridge, Mass.—The records set on Sunday afternoon by the Berkshire Festival at "Tanglewood" included attendance, high temperature and general excitement, the latter induced by the virtuoso playing of an orchestra which easily holds all previous records in that department.

The display effects had their widest lattitude in Ravel's "Daphis and Chloe" Suite, substituted for Resphigi's "Pines of Rome," inflamed even the classical measures of Brahms's Fourth Symphony in E minor and, as if in utter defiance of a torrid afternoon, got shamelessly "hot" in the provoking rhythms of Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater" with the perspiring dark-clad composer at the piano.

More than 6,000 people who heard the two hour and a half concert gave vent to their emotion in the now customary "Tanglewood" manner of shouting and clapping clamorously for Dr. Koussevitzky. At the thought of crowded parking lots, some of them edged toward the outgoing lanes, divided between their needless fears of a traffic jam and a desire to do riotous homage to the man who had whipped them to the fever stage of an artistic intoxication with the dionysiac tonal furies of Ravel's antique rhapsody. Under Dr. Koussevitzky's ministrations this brilliant pagan poem fairly made the air quiver as all the orchestral resources which Ravel knew—and they are boundless—were let loose in an inundation which was all the ear could endure of aural beauty.

Magical things happened during this carnival of instruments. Percussion, wind and strings were permitted to help themselves unstintedly to the ripe colors of the orchestral prism and do with them whatever it was within their power to create. An ensemble of virtuoso players knew when their time had come, and the Boston Orchestra individually made the most of it. At the apogee of an indescribably protracted crescendo, for instance, a pianissimo of harmonics and brushed cymbals took flight into the ether as though on wings and listeners held their breath.

It was one of those unbelievable crescendos which concluded the limpid and fragrantly narrative account of the "Mother Goose Suite" by the same composer. One cannot help but think that Copland's music was badly placed. The comparison with Ravel was unavoidable and it is to be feared that the impression of the living and present composer was all but obliterated. Copland's music was compoesd in 1925 but one didn't need the program to be aware of it. Too much has happened since that date to interest anyone in historical exhibits relating to the period when Coolidge was president. Though perfectly willing to pass judgment on "Music for the Theater," the objective reporter prefers to defer to the more illuminating fact that during its performance the audience gained an intimate knowledge of the steel rafters overhead, the pine trees outside enveloped in a sun haze, and other details of the scene which become so conspicuous when the interest flags and eyes begin to rove.

It was the most graphic example of Koussevitzky's musical galvanism to witness at the beginning of the concert how, with every member of the audience and orchestra suffering helplessly in the heat, he assumed an attitude of command and immediately set in motion a graceful and luminous performance of Mozart's "Eine kleine Nacht Musik." It refreshed every spirit in the auditorium and can only be likened to the power of a spellbinder who captures the attention of a fretting crowd and holds it enthralled as long as he wishes.

SATURDAY'S CONCERT

The concert Saturday night was a foretaste of the same virtuosity which came into full flower on Sunday. The pyrotechnics this time centered about the First Symphony of Sibelius with particular honors for the brass division. Koussevitzky uses it without stint and in three concerts so far it has not failed him by so much as a single tone.

When was there a first symphony to compare in stature with this initial effort of the Finnish master? One would have to go to Brahms's in C minor to find a companion piece. Particularly impressive on this occasion were the thumping scherzo and the lyrical slow movement.

If technical faults are to be found—and it is hypercritical to find them—the E flat Symphony No. 99 of Haydn began with some slight suggestion of a broken rapport, but it was knitted together before the first movement was over. The songful adagio proved another blessed tie that bound the choirs together and by the time the full orchestra was on the stage for Debussy's "La Mer" there was another instance of that matchless music making which results when some hundred artists unite their skill for an inspired cause.

* * *

Each season at the Berkshire Festival are seen more Hartford faces among the milling crowds at intermission time. There is something about this Festival that gets into the blood. G. E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, said yesterday that if "Tanglewood" needed a slogan it would use the remark an an enthusiastic music lover who declared: "Come once, come always."

* * *

The most frequently heard query in the Berkshire environs is: "Where's George? Have you seen George?" The reference is to George W. Edman of the Berkshire Eagle who, if there were a Pulitzer prize for that sort of thing would long ago have been placed in nomination for the award as public relations counsel. Those who know say that George Edman is the man who has been the spirit and the drive behind the Berkshire Festival.

* * *

Immediately after the appeal of Gertrude Robinson Smith on Thursday evening for more funds to realize the completion of the new music shed, there were two thousand-dollar donations.

* * *

The press delegation includes representatives from Montreal to Pittsburgh and there were motor plates to be seen from Illinois, California and Louisiana.

* * *

At the next concert Thursday night Anna Kaskas will be heard in the role of Erda in a concert version of the last act of Siegfried.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 - 1938

BRAHMS SYMPHONY FEATURES CONCERT AT FESTIVAL 'SHED'

Large Crowd Hears Third Program by Boston Orchestra at Berkshire's 'Acoustical Marvel'

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 7—A marvelous performance of the fourth symphony by Brahms was the outstanding feature of this afternoon's concert at the Berkshire Symphonic festival, but the whole program was interesting, even though its specific gravity was reduced by some of the numbers, presumably introduced to relieve the austerity of the symphony. This made the concert rather different from its predecessors, and considerably more varied. Even the orchestration was diverse.

Mozart's exquisite little gem, "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," for example, is a serenade for strings, often played as a string quartet. Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater" is for piano, a reduced body of strings, and the jazzier wind instruments and percussion. On the other hand Ravel's "Mother Goose" pieces are for full orchestra, and the scoring of Respighi's "Pines of Rome" is notably full and brilliant, including such realistic devices as a phonograph record of the song of a nightingale.

(Continued from First Page)

Well Suited for Day

This variety in the orchestral forces required matched the wide range of musical content in the works performed, yet the cumulative effect of the program did not suffer so much as might have been expected, and the large proportion of divertisement was perhaps fortunate, since the day turned out to be sultry with no breath of air penetrating the groves which surround the Tanglewood music shed. The audience showed not the slightest restlessness, and followed each of the strongly contrasted numbers with manifest interest. More severe was the ordeal of the musicians, who might have been forgiven some letting down in the minor numbers, but the remarkable standard which has characterized the festival was kept intact.

What mattered most, however, was the magnificent interpretation by Mr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra of the one of Brahms's symphonies which has been least popular but which is now beginning to take the high place which it deserves. The fourth symphony lacks the fine, bold sweep of the finale of the first, inspired by Beethoven's ninth, and it falls short of the lyric beauty of the second, which was quickest to win wide popularity.

On the other hand, in the first two movements of the fourth symphony is some of the most delicious music that Brahms ever penned, and in the last two movements he rises to one of his most exalted climaxes. The third movement is not a conventional scherzo but an allegro of might and power, and the energetic and impassioned finale goes on from that point. Mr Koussevitzky seldom forgets the adage, "Look to the end," and he made of the symphony a great and inspiring whole. Throughout, he and his associates gave the music as though their hearts were in it, and rich beauty was evoked from every phrase.

Of a very different sort, but also of the highest quality, was the performance of the other major work, "The Pines of Rome," which in addition to its musical merit gives full scope to a great orchestra of the first rank. Mozart's dainty music for strings did not fare quite so well, and the reading given seemed slightly perfunctory and hurried, as though the forces employed were too slight for so great an auditorium. But Ravel's clever trifles were beautifully played, and there was plenty of life in the performance by a small orchestra, with the composer at the piano, of Mr Copland's suite, which was written in 1925 and performed in the same year by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This 13-year-old work is the only sample of modernism offered at this year's festival, and but one other American composition is included, a movement from the third Symphony Henry Hadley, who conducted the Berkshire Symphonic festivals in their first two seasons. In general Mr Koussevitzky is doubtless well advised in providing programs for audiences of more than 6000 people, many of whom do not constantly frequent symphony concerts, to adhere to great masterpieces and to make the festivals distinguished by extra pains and effort in the interpretation of works which, like the world's greatest books, are theoretically well known by everyone. His record as a conductor, however, shows that he has no prejudice against modernism, and the inclusion of this brilliant and brittle American music may suggest a readiness to test the receptivity of festival audiences.

The ovation given to Mr Copland after the performance was all that either a composer or a musical director could ask. Even so, it seems reasonable to select for such an occasion works in the modern idiom which have been fairly well tested and need not so much a hearing as a chance to survive. America is receptive to novelties; it is less receptive to works which have ceased to be the sensation of the moment, and to fill this gap might be a worthy mission for the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

Music Festival's 'Shed' New Acoustical Marvel

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

Stockbridge, Aug. 7 — (AP) — Ease with which a program ranging widely in tone was heard today supported scientific tests that have placed the stamp of approval upon acoustic properties of the Berkshire Symphonic festival's new fan-shaped "music shed."

Unknowingly, the 19,000 persons attending the first three concerts have participated in the tests, made by Prof Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"It is gratifying to be able to report," the professor said upon completion of his survey, "that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots, and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Before the festival opened, the most accurate acoustical examinations possible were made by Prof Fay. An instrument producing a sound of unvarying volume was set up on the stage, and other instruments were moved about the acre-and-a-half floor space to register variation in volume.

There was practically no variation, but the "hall" was empty. Tests again were made at rehearsal, and finally after the audiences moved in, whereupon the professor announced his findings.

Some of the "shed's" seats are 160 feet from Serge Koussevitzky as he directs the Boston Symphony orchestra. At the widest part of the fan-shaped hall, the distance is 265 feet.

Although there had been no rain during the concerts, even that is expected to make no difference, for the roof is made of four carloads of two-inch planking, heavily insulated, through which the sound of falling water did not penetrate during preliminary tests.

Apparently the new "music shed," completed for this summer's series of concerts, is one of two or three acoustical marvels in the country now being used for summer music.

Another of them is the wooden auditorium at Chautauqua, in western New York state, famous for decades for its acoustical properties. A third, not a building at all, is the Hollywood bowl, which is almost a whispering gallery.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 8 - 1938

RECORD AUDIENCE TO HEAR SYMPHONY AT STOCKBRIDGE

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 8.—(AP)—Directors of Berkshire Symphonic Festival, basing their estimate on concerts already held, today said they expected the total attendance would reach 40,000 when the program concludes next Sunday.

Three concerts, which comprised the first half of the program, concluded yesterday, attracted 19,000 music lovers. The concerts, resuming next Thursday night, will be repeated Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The first three concerts attracted audiences from every section of the United States, Canada and many parts of Europe, including children in camp uniforms and many of the nation's social leaders.

Their numbers were so great that extra chairs had to be added to the regular seating capacity of 5,628 at two of the Boston Symphony's three programs. At every break in the concerts, Serge Koussevitsky, director, was obliged to respond to bravos and cheers.

The new, fan-shaped "music shed," used this summer for the first time, proved perfect acoustically, and everyone, from those in the lowest priced to the most expensive seats, heard every note of three beautifully chosen programs.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

140

AUG 8 - 1938

Acoustics in New Strawbridge 'Music Shed' Approved in Tests

M. I. T. Professor Reports Entire Auditorium Free From Dead Spots; Audiences at Present Festival Find Reception Substantially Perfect

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7.—(AP)—Ease with which a program ranging widely in tone was heard today supported scientific tests that have placed the stamp of approval upon acoustic properties of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new fan-shaped "music shed."

The concert, third in the current series, rose from the delicate sonorities of Mozart's "Eine Klene Nachtmusick" to the enormous climaxes of Brahm's Fourth Symphony.

Unknowing, the 19,000 persons attending the first three concerts have participated in the tests, made by Prof. Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"It is gratifying to be able to report," the professor said upon completion of his survey, "that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots, and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Before the festival opened, the most accurate acoustical examinations possible were made by Prof. Fay. An instrument producing a sound of unvarying volume was set up on the stage, and other instruments were moved about the acre-and-a-half floor space to register variation in volume.

There was practically no variation, but the "hall" was empty. Tests again were made at rehearsal, and finally after the audiences moved in, whereupon the professor announced his findings.

Some of the "shed's" seats are 160 feet from Serge Koussevitzky as he directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At the widest part of the fan-shaped hall, the distance is 265 feet.

Although there had been no rain during the concerts, even that is expected to make no difference, for the roof is made of four carloads of two-inch planking, heavily insulated, through which the sound of falling water did not penetrate during rehearsal. The new "music shed," completed for this summer's series of concerts, is one of two or three acoustical marvels in the country now being used for summer music.

Another of them is the wooden auditorium at Chautauqua, in western New York State, famous for decades for its acoustical properties. A third, not a building at all, is the Hollywood Bowl, which is almost a whispering gallery.

Concerts here will be resumed Thursday night, and the festival will close with programs under Dr. Koussevitzky Saturday night and next Sunday afternoon. The audiences of the first half will be duplicated, perhaps exceeded. So far they have come from every corner of the United States and many European countries.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 8 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY WINS ACCLAIM IN 3D CONCERT

Berkshire Music Festival Has Attracted 19,000 At Concerts

(Special to The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7—The third concert of the Berkshire festival here this afternoon was attended by the largest audience since the series started. The weather was perfect although extremely warm.

A very enthusiastic audience greeted Serge Koussevitzky's conducting of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The program included part of Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," and Brahms' "Fourth Symphony." The second part was devoted to works of the moderns with the composer Aaron Copland playing the piano part of his own composition, "Music for the Theater." A large portion of the last half was devoted to Ravel's "Mother Goose," children's pieces, and the same composer's "Suite No. 2" from the ballet, Daphnis and Chloe."

Applause Thunderous.

The Mozart serenade for string orchestra was a work of exquisite beauty and a decided favorite. The Brahms symphony was such a success that after the first movement many in the audience began to applaud the performance. The Copland music, with its five parts, won for the composer much acclaim. Two particularly popular parts of it were the dance sections. At the close a ripple of applause broke into a thunderous ovation.

Ravel's children's pieces were delicately and beautifully played.

Fourth Concert Thursday.

For the final number, Dr. Koussevitzky decided to substitute for Respighi's "Pines of Rome," originally planned, Ravel's "Suite No. 2" from "Daphnis and Chloe." It was enthusiastically received.

Today's concert brought the series to its midpoint. More than 19,000 persons have heard the first three concerts.

The fourth concert will be played Thursday night, and the festival will close with programs under Dr. Koussevitzky Saturday night and next Sunday afternoon. So far the audience has included persons from every corner of the United States and from European countries.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

141

AUG 8 - 1938

MORE THAN 6000 HEAR FESTIVAL IN STOCKBRIDGE

Brahms' Fourth Symphony and Ravel Numbers on Program

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 7—Nature bestowed her warmest, sunniest smile upon the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this afternoon. Another enormous audience heard the third and last program in the first series of concerts.

Over 6000 Attend

The audience numbered more than 6000 persons many of whom came great distances for the fame of the festival has already spread far beyond the confines of the Berkshire hills.

Saturday night Dr. Koussevitzky had roused his audience [illegible] with his unmatched readings of the Haydn "Symphony in E Flat" and Debussy's "La Mer." His eloquent reading of the first symphony by Sibelius earned a volley of bravos.

This afternoon he offered a program skillfully calculated to please so great and varied an audience. It opened with "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" by Mozart and offered such fare as the Fourth Symphony by Brahms; "Music for the Theater" by Copeland; Ravel's "Mother Goose" suite and the second "Daphne and Chloe" suite by the same composer.

Exquisitely Played

The incomparable strings of the Boston Orchestra sang beautifully the gay lightsome music by Mozart. It was vital, ingratiating music, exquisitely played.

The music of Mozart and Beethoven, heard during these three concerts, has lost nothing during the years, but today the more sophisticated music of Brahms finds a readier response than when he was alive. Called cold and intellectual, it has taken some years for the vast public to realize that beneath a somewhat gruff exterior there is a sensitiveness and emotional message which Brahms has given us in his own way, often in long, highly embellished sentences but none the less maintaining his own conviction that nothing music could express was equal in significance to the sheer beauty of the music.

In the Fourth Symphony we find the mellowed Brahms, revealing his complete originality and fearlessness of self expression, symptoms of which were first revealed in his second symphony. The Boston players and Dr. Koussevitzky provided a superb reading of this work, a reading of searching completeness, rich in color and fire and lightsome as the vagrant breezes which penetrated the music shed, when light and gaiety were required.

One wonders if the occasion, the beauties of Tanglewood and the freshness of the players is not responsible in some measure for the heights they reached during these concerts.

American Composer

From Brahms to Copeland is a long journey but the audience had a 25-minute recess in which to make it and they appeared to enjoy this American composer's "Music for the Theater." Copeland has divided his work into five episodes, Prologue, Dance, Interlude, Burlesque and Epilogue. It is not music one would want to hear every day but is virile music, imaginative and even if written in 1925, shows signs of streamlining. Last year in behalf of American composers, Dr. Koussevitzky offered a work by William Burlingame Hill. Mr. Copeland was at the piano during the performance of his work and with Dr. Koussevitzky received much applause.

Following the Copeland work, one heard the delightful, humorous "Mother Goose" suite by Ravel. These little pieces written for the piano to be played by children have a charm and blitheness all their own. They are richly scored and a wealth of imagination has gone into their making.

Virtuoso Performance

The final work played was the second "Daphne and Chloe" suite, a work in the interpretation of which Dr. Koussevitzky excels. Mere words cannot describe the shimmer of the strings, the gold of the brasses or the colors painted by the woodwinds. It was a virtuoso performance, a fitting finale to this first series of monumental, unforgettable concerts.

Thursday night a Wagner program will be given with the assistance of Paul Althouse, tenor, and Beal Hober, soprano. The final scene of the first act of "Die Walkure" will be sung as well as the entire third act of "Siegfried." Norman Cordon and Anna Kasaks will appear in the latter work with the first mentioned singers.

Acoustic Properties Win Approval

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 7 (AP)—Ease with which a program ranging widely in tone was heard today supported scientific tests that have placed the stamp of approval upon acoustic properties of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new fan-shaped "music shed."

Third in Series

The concert, third in the current series, rose from the delicate sonorities of Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusick" to the enormous climaxes of Brahm's Fourth Symphony.

Unknowingly, the 19,000 persons attending the first three concerts have participated in the tests, made by Prof. Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"It is gratifying to be able to report," the professor said upon completion of his survey, "that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots, and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Before the festival opened, the most accurate acoustical examinations possible were made by Prof. Fay. An instrument producing a sound of unvarying volume was set up on the stage, and other instruments were moved about the acre-and-a-half floor space to register variation in volume.

Practically No Variation

There was practically no variation, but the "hall" was empty. Tests again were made at rehearsal, and finally after the audiences moved in, whereupon the professor announced his findings.

Some of the "shed's" seats are 160 feet from Serge Koussevitzky as he directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At the widest part of the fan-shaped hall, the distance is 265 feet.

Although there had been no rain during the concerts, even that is expected to make no difference, for the roof is made of four carloads of two-inch planking, heavily insulated, through which the sound of falling water did not penetrate during preliminary tests.

Apparently the new "music shed," completed for this summer's series of concerts, is one of two or three acoustical marvels in the country now being used for summer music.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 8 - 1938

6,000 AT CONCERT IN THE BERKSHIRES

Largest Crowd in History of Fete Hears Boston Symphony Led by Koussevitzky

MOZART WORK IS PLAYED

'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik' Is Opening Number—Ravel and Brahms Also on Program

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—The first half of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end this afternoon with a series of performances that were as polished and as stirring as those that marked the first two concerts. Once again the audience filled the music shed and overflowed under the Colonnade. Today's concert attracted the largest attendance of the festival's history, well over 6,000, including many youngsters.

There was a heavy downpour at about dawn, but the skies were clear at concert time, even if the air was humid. Hundreds who planned to drive long distances for this program were able to do so. And those who have been here all week-end had an opportunity in the daylight to appreciate the beauty of Tanglewood with its formal gardens, its majestic lane of hawthorne pines and its superb view of Stockbridge Bowl and the hills beyond.

This afternoon's program, like the first two, was carefully devised, if overlong. It began with Mozart's delectable "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," played with joyous lilt by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra strings. Then came the Fourth Symphony of Brahms, which caught the dark, passionate glow that suffuses the music.

Copland at the Piano

For contemporary representation there was Aaron Copland, whose suite, "Music for Theatre," was presented with the composer at the piano. Written in 1925, the score is still largely vivid and fresh. It has sweet and acrid, witty and urbane pages. The musicians played it with relish, and the audience gave Mr. Copland a generous greeting.

The program ended with two works by Ravel, in commemoration, no doubt, of his recent death. His "Mother Goose" and second "Daphnis et Chloe" suites received performances that underlined the daring and individuality of one of the great instrumentaters of our times. The "Daphnis et Chloe" suite, which is one of Mr. Koussevitzky's fortes, was brilliantly set forth in its contrasts and iridescent colors.

But the highlight of this week's performances, at least to one listener, was the interpretation of Debussy's "La Mer" at last night's concert. There are some who believe that Mr. Koussevitzky's conception of this work is the finest of the present period. That is a claim that covers a lot of territory, including one or two conductors who have wrought personal wonders with "La Mer." But last night's performance was a cogent argument for the Koussevitzky partisans.

Praise for Orchestra

Give some of the credit to the band of players that are the Boston Symphony Orcestra. They were like a single instrument in the hands of a great virtuoso. Every color, every half light, every sonority that Debussy and Mr. Koussevitzky asked for they commanded. The collective tone had a matchless transparency. The dawn rose over Debussy's sea, first mistily, gently, coolly, and then accumulated into a majestic sunrise and high noon.

One could dilate at length on the felicities of this performance, but let it suffice to recall the brilliance of the end of the first section, the shimmering lights of the waves at play in the second and the seething grandeur of moments of the last section.

Last night's program began with a measured, lyrical performance of Haydn's E flat symphony, No. 99, which served as a proper preface in its grace and meticulous proportion to the elemental sweep of "La Mer." For some, Sibelius's first symphony must have seemed an anti-climax after "La Mer." But so grandiloquently did Mr. Koussevitzky and his men capture the spirit and context of the score—for example, the savagery and barbaric intensity of the third movement—that even the unwilling listener had to give ear.

Crowds Are Enthusiastic

There seems, however, to have been few surfeited listeners at any part of the three programs. The enthusiasm has mounted in a continuous crescendo. At the end of each concert Mr. Koussevitzky was recalled repeatedly, and he and his men were obliged to take numerous bows.

The measure of this audience, which is made up in about equal part of knowing and veteran symphonic listeners and of people whose experience is limited to the radio, to previous festivals and to scattered concerts, may be gauged from the fact that perhaps the most spontaneous outburst of the week came after "La Mer."

It is clear, as one watches groups and individuals in the audience, that the festival is making new friends for music. This observer noted a young couple during last night's concert. They gazed at each other, chatted in whispers and seemed unaware that an orchestra was playing, but one could see that the Sibelius symphony was beginning to draw their attention, and in the last movement, when in one passage the entire string section seethes with mounting intensity, the two youngsters were sitting up straight, gripping their chairs tensely and listening as if the vibrations of the music were surging through their very pores.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

AUG 8 - 1938

Classical Music On the Air Keeps Its Popularity

WQXR Survey Shows Lighter Programs Suffer in Hot Weather

By LEONARD CARLTON

Statisticians of WQXR have concluded that serious music is no less popular during hot weather than at other times.

While checks on high-priced comedy, variety and feature programs show a steady decline in their listening audiences, those who have come to depend on WQXR for a regular diet of the best recorded music, the station avers, remain faithful. This conclusion is based on the sales figures of their monthly program booklets which lists full details of classical music to be broadcost.

For the first time since these were offered to the public, more than two years ago, summer sale has kept pace with that of cooler months. In 1936 program sales for July declined 6 per cent from the June figure. Next year the drop was only 6.5 per cent, while the figure for 1938 has been a mere half of 1 per cent.

The ever-increasing audience for the type of program WQXR offers is evidenced by the fact that sales for July, 1938, were ten times as large as those of July, 1936. The Breakfast Symphony program alone, broadcast from 8 to 9 A. M. daily, is estimated to have an audience of 5,000 families in the New York area.

Disgruntled Swingsters may report that only confirmed symphony hounds pay out 10 cents a month for program booklets, but there is no doubt that serious summer music is attaining a new popularity with radio audiences. One indication of that is the changed attitude of orchestra leaders toward lengthy compositions.

Until recently, hot weather programs were made up almost entirely of short selections and single symphonic movements. Our memory may be bad, but we can't remember any previous August week with quite so many full symphonies scheduled. Last Thursday Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra performed the entire Beethoven Ninth Symphony—most ambitious project in music at any time of year. The following day, Van Hoogstraten at Robin Hood Dell took the entire program for just one work, the Fourth Symphony of Brahms. Over the week-end, radio brought us the Seventh of Beethoven, the Fourth and Fifth of Tschaikovsky.

Tomorrow, Hans Lange conducts Beethoven's Second Symphony from Grant Park; Tuesday it's the Brahms Third at Lewisohn Stadium, while on Thursday the Toronto Promenade Orchestra plays Beethoven's Fifth. If it's really true that summer audiences won't sit through so much heavy stuff, everybody's gone crazy at once.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 8 - 1938

FESTIVAL REACHES HALFWAY POINT

Koussevitzky Gives Aaron Copland Score.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 7.—With half of the 1938 Berkshire Festival completed it becomes increasingly apparent that a major musical movement is taking shape in this quiet green countryside. Ideals, man-power, an audience—all these have been available for the past festivals. But with the erection of the $80,000 permanent shed for the concerts the committee has in effect committed itself to a long range plan of activity bound to be important in the country's musical life.

What direction that activity may take no man can guess, but there was a broad hint in the performance yesterday afternoon of Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater" under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Since the thirty-eight-year-old Copland is regarded by many of America's younger composers as their dean, the choice may foreshadow a larger attention to such music at future festivals. The most provocative score yet performed in these historically conservative surroundings, it was received with heartening warmth by the audience of 6,000 odd, with a solo bow for Mr. Copland midway in the work, and many more at its conclusion. As music, it is a good deal more transparent than it was thirteen years ago (when it was new), but the gain in clarity is decidedly to the composer's advantage.

However, there was obviously a larger affection among the listeners for the afternoon's more traditional music, especially for Mr. Koussevitzky's large-lined and cohesive performance of the Brahms Fourth Symphony. This program began with a bright (sometimes flashy) playing of Mozart's "Kleine Nachtmusik" and continued with a tribute to the late Maurice Ravel, his "Mother Goose" suite and the second of the "Daphnis and Chloe" suites.

Thus, in two days the audience had an opportunity twice to experience the liquid strings and glowing brass of the Boston Orchestra at their unparalleled best, for the "Daphnis and Chloe" is only exceeded, as a Koussevitzkyan miracle, by his reading of Debussy's "La Mer," which was played on Saturday evening. If any factors were needed to complete the blended magic of Debussy's fancy and Mr. Koussevitzky's re-creation, they were amply supplied by the night wind without the glint of water in the distance. Granting Debussy's tone-poem to be in fact a symphony of wind and waves, this was wholly a symphonic program, beginning with the E flat (No. 99) of Haydn and concluding with the E minor (No. 1) of Sibelius. Both were superbly well-performed, with no edge in quality to indicate that Mr. Koussevitzky is more commonly considered a Sibelius rather than a Haydn specialist. The festival resumes on Thursday with an all-Wagner program.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 8 - 1938

'Cello Solos at Stadium

2 Numbers Played by Joseph Emments

By ROBERT C. BAGAR.

Joseph Emonts, first 'cellist of the Philharmonic-Symphony during its Lewisohn Stadium concerts, was the soloist last evening in the program conducted by Alexander Smallens. Mr Emonts played the Bruch "Kol Nidrei" and the Boellmann "Symphonic Variations," assisted by the orchestra.

The artist's genuine musicianship and his undeviating understanding of the works more than made up for the thinness of his tone, although, to be perfectly fair, the wide-open spaces are not congenial to strings, as a rule. Anyway, Mr. Emonts had technic to spare in the Boellmann number and also sustained an expressive legato for the Bruch piece. He was enthusiastically applauded.

Mr. Smallens, besides providing the soloist with sympathetic accompaniments and delivering an authoritative reading of the Strauss "Don Juan," led the musicians in the fifth symphony of Tschaikowsky. An audience of moderate size attended.

On Saturday evening Arnold Belnick, 1-year-old violinist, furnished a creditable reading of the Bruch concerto in G minor. The list also included music by Wagner, Schumann and Sibelius. Mr. Smallens was the conductor.

* * *

Music Notes.

Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater" was the American work played yesterday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, in the program that ended the first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The composer played the piano part. Other numbers were Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," the fourth symphony of Brahms and two Ravel pieces, "Mother Goose" and the "Daphnis and Chloe" suite. A capacity audience in the new music shed at the Tanglewood estate applauded enthusiastically.

* * *

Alexander Bloch will conduct the Greenwich Orchestra next Wednesday at the Theater of Music in pieces by Arensky, Haydn, Schubert and others.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 8 - 1938

40,000 Expected At Music Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 8 (AP).—Directors of Berkshire symphonic festival, basing their estimate on concerts already held, today said they expected the total attendance would reach 40,000 when the program concludes next Sunday.

Three concerts, which comprised the first half of the program, concluded yesterday, attracted 19,000 music lovers. The concerts, resuming next Thursday night, will be repeated Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The first three concerts attracted audiences from every section of the United States, Canada and many parts of Europe, including children in camp uniforms and many of the nation's social leaders.

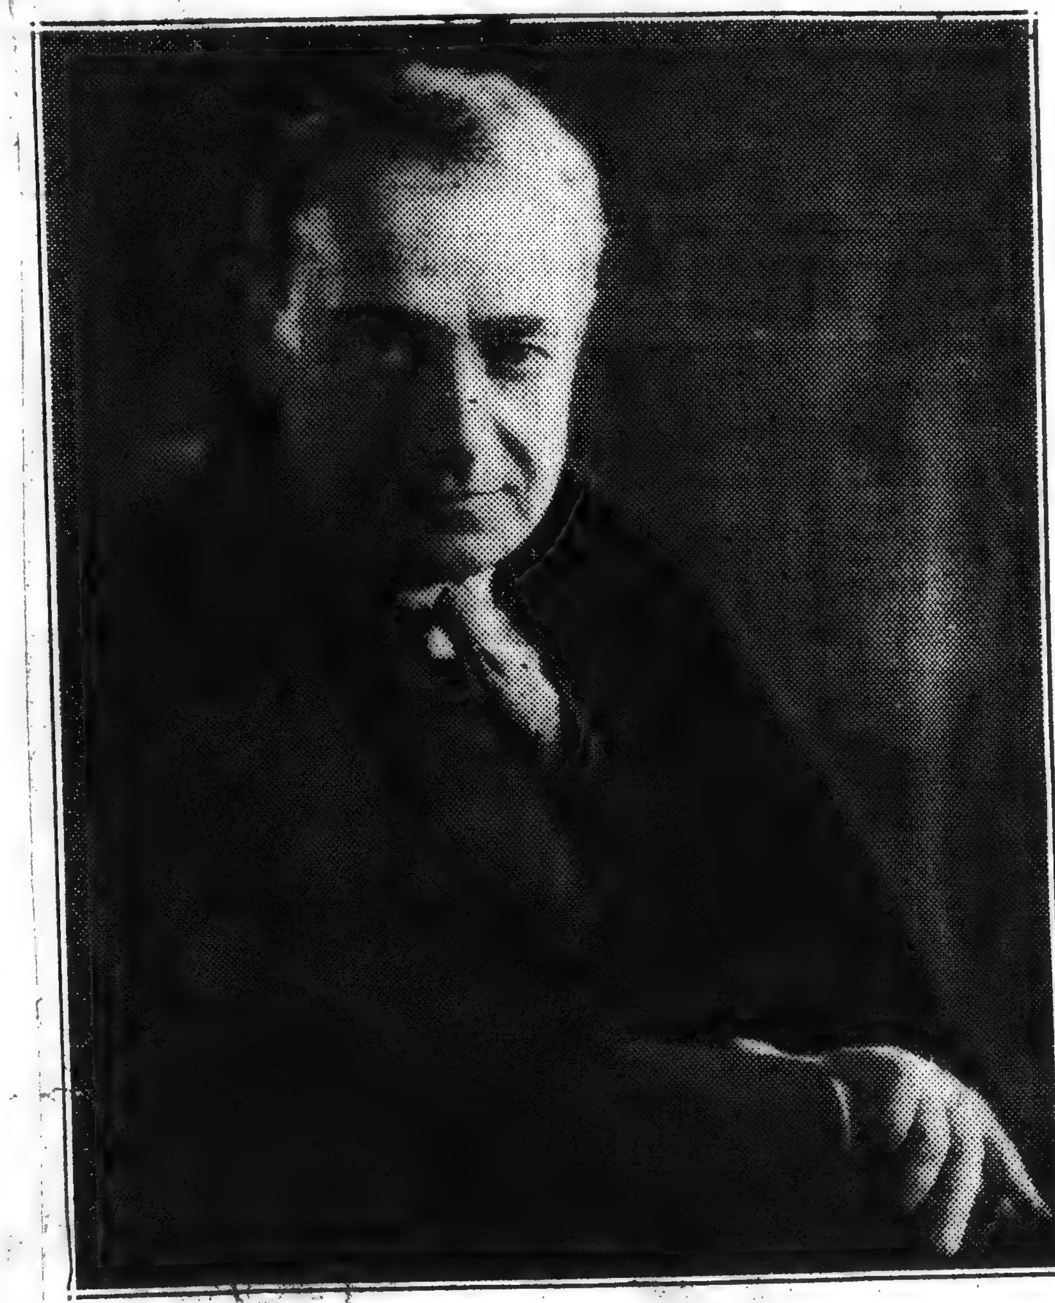
Their numbers were so great that extra chairs had to be added to the regular seating capacity of 5,628 at two of the Boston symphony's three programs. At every break in the concerts, Serge Koussevitzky, director, was obliged to respond to bravos and cheers.

The new, fan-shaped "music shed," used this summer for the first time, proved perfect acoustically, and everyone, from those in the lowest priced to the most expensive seats, heard every note of three beautifully chosen programs.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 8 - 1938

Festival's Famed Leader



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.

International Acclaim For Koussevitzky

Conductor of Berkshire Festival Has Led Boston Orchestra for Fourteen Years

Whether or not we are creating an "American Salzburg" at Stockbridge with the Berkshire Symphonic Festivals—the fifth of which is now going on—there is no doubt but what we are hearing there one of the world's great orchestras, led by one of the world's greatest conductors, Serge Koussevitzky.

For 14 years now, Dr Koussevitzky has conducted the Boston Symphony—and unless memory fails, he has been with his orchestra longer than any other conductor now on the country's podiums. When his appointment to the post was made in 1924, he was a kind of legendary figure. Nothing much was known of him here, except that he had conducted with a kind of sudden fame, orchestras in London and Paris, and that, as Howe says in his semi-centennial book on the Boston orchestra, "There were reports of his friendliness toward new music, and his freedom with the old; and of his ability to excite an audience by goading an orchestra to a sort of furious eloquence."

As a matter of fact, his Western reputation was very new at the time. Born in a remote northern province of Russia in 1874, he had studied conducting at the Petrograd Conservatory as a youth. There it was required of each student that he play some instrument, and the young Koussevitzky strangely elected the double bass, from which he proceeded to draw music of a sweetness and fluency that was the marvel of his professors and his fellow students.

Strange Apostle.

Graduating from the Conservatory, and being a person of considerable private means, he was able to organize his own private orchestra, in Petrograd, take it to Moscow, and in each city, give classical "festivals" choral concerts and series advancing contemporary Russian music. In 1909, he and his wife founded the Edition Russe de Musique. Then came the fantastic venture of a pioneer and apostle, says Mr. Howe, when he took his orchestra 2000 miles up the Volga into the heart of rural Russia, where he excited the natives by playing Beethoven and Scriabin. From 1916 to 1920 he conducted the state-subsidized orchestra, but soon left it as his sympathies were not of a communistic sort. Going to Paris, he organized the Concerts Koussevitzky, and it was here and in London where he was a guest conductor, that he came to the attention of the Western world.

His First U. S. Program.

It is interesting to consider his first program with the Boston Orchestra. He opened with a concerto of Vivaldi, "prelude to many more delightful Eighteenth century excursions. It was also characteristic of him to choose such a classic as Brahm's 'Haydn Variations,' a touch of 'parade' and no more in Berlioz's 'Roman Carnival' Overture. From living composers, this notorious 'modernist' detained his audience only 10 minutes to introduce Honegger's 'Pacific 231.' And finally the 'Poeme d'Extase' of Scriabin, who by his Slavic blood and soaring style was bound to be a composer after Koussevitzky's heart."

Certain superannuated customs of the Boston Symphony were abolished by Dr. Koussevitzky, very shortly after he took over the orchestra. The first to go was the tradition of having soloists for practically every concert, thereby preventing the concert from being held up for an inserted "recital." Those soloists who did appear were largely to play concertos of symphonic importance.

Dr. Koussevitzky also fixed the tendency toward guest conductors. Previous to his coming there had been two, each with a pair of concerts. Now each season there are two, while the regular conductor rests up for a fortnight.

As for Dr. Koussevitzky's being a modernist, Mr. Howe has compared his record with that of Dr. Karl Muck, and finds that Koussevitzky's ratio is about three new works to every two programs, while Muck gave about one new work to each two programs.

As Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was played at the dedication of the new music shed at Tanglewood last week, and as this was one of the works which brought Dr. Koussevitzky pre-eminently to the fore in Europe, it would be interesting to quote Ernest Newman on the matter. Dr. Koussevitzky, it seems, conducted it in London shortly after Weingartner had given it. Mr. Newman said then:

Ninth Symphony.

"Had I the requisite space, I would argue here again a thesis I put forward a little while ago—that Koussevitzky's Beethoven is the genuine classic and Weingartner's the romantic.

"The popular belief of course is to the contrary—that the sober elderly German gentleman shown us in the ordinary German reading is the true Beethoven, while the volcanic spirit that Koussevitzky makes of it, is only Koussevitzky himself. I believe this to be a fallacy. The classic is never a classic to himself; he only becomes a classic to later generations. To himself, he is an ardent, very lively romantic. To make for yourself a fancy picture of this classic, a hundred years after his death, and to insist on his behaving in the decorous way that you think the classics ought to behave, is really to romanticize him. Koussevitzky, by playing the Ninth Symphony as if it were written yesterday by a powerful genius whose muscles were twice the size of those of the ordinary man gives us, I contend, a Beethoven which Beethoven himself would recognize. Koussevitzky's reading is therefore the genuinely classic one; it reproduces the vigour and tension the work must have had for its creator and for the men of his day, not this vigour and tension watered and slackened down through a century of false realization."

Mr. Howe's book sums up Dr. Koussevitzky as follows:

Homage to Conductor.

"If there is a single trait which will encompass everything notable Dr. Koussevitsky has done, it is his tireless capacity for enthusiasm. Assimilating the music of youth and its point of view, he believes in it, for the time being at least, with all his being. And he carries the same eager attitude toward the music which the world has heard too often. He can always re-study, freshly conceive, keep its emotions 'first hand.' His surprising flair for the mood of a composer is seen in such a score as Sibelius's Third Symphony, in which he has divined the simple but elusive beauties which the others have passed by. He likewise strives to draw his audience into a sort of receptive unanimity, accounting a performance successful only so far as this accord is reached. Coming to a strange country, he has exercised, even more completely than he did in France, his ability for self identification with a people and their art. The music of our composers he has made his own. He has studied the Orchestra as musician and men; the public wit htheir manifold inclinations and responses, and found in both a rapport which grows with the seasons. In contrast with the arbitrary conductor who turns his back upon an audience, or the unprogressive one who merely courts applause, he is the leader in every sense of the world. Pursuing his artist's vision he takes the world with him."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 8 - 1938

MORE THAN 6000 HEAR FESTIVAL IN STOCKBRIDGE

Brahms' Fourth Symphony and Ravel Numbers on Program

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 8 — Nature bestowed her warmest, sunniest smile upon the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sunday afternoon. Another enormous audience heard the third and last program in the first series of concerts.

Over 6000 Attend

The audience numbered more than 6000 persons many of whom came great distances for the fame of the festival has already spread far beyond the confines of the Berkshire hills.

Saturday night Dr. Koussevitzky had roused his audience to a frenzy with his unmatched readings of the Haydn "Symphony in E Flat" and Debussy's "La Mer." His eloquent reading of the first symphony by Sibelius earned a volley of bravos.

Yesterday he offered a program skillfully calculated to please so great and varied an audience. It opened with "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" by Mozart and offered such fare as the Fourth Symphony by Brahms; "Music for the Theater" by Copeland; Ravel's "Mother Goose" suite and the second "Daphne and Chloe" suite by the same composer.

Exquisitely Played

The incomparable strings of the Boston Orchestra sang beautifully the gay lightsome music by Mozart. It was vital, ingratiating music, exquisitely played.

The music of Mozart and Beethoven, heard during these three concerts, has lost nothing during the years, but today the more sophisticated music of Brahms finds a readier response than when he was alive. Called cold and intellectual, it has taken some years for the vast public to realize that beneath a somewhat gruff exterior there is a sensitiveness and emotional message which Brahms has given us in his own way, often in long, highly embellished sentences but none the less maintaining his own conviction that nothing music could express was equal in significance to the sheer beauty of the music.

In the Fourth Symphony we find the mellowed Brahms, revealing his complete originality and fearlessness of self expression, symptoms of which were first revealed in his second symphony. The Boston players and Dr. Koussevitzky provided a superb reading of this work, a reading of searching completeness, rich in color and fire and lightsome as the vagrant breezes which penetrated the music shed, when light and gaiety were required.

One wonders if the occasion, the beauties of Tanglewood and the freshness of the players is not responsible in some measure for the heights they reached during these concerts.

American Composer

From Brahms to Copeland is a long journey but the audience had a 25-minute recess in which to make it and they appeared to enjoy this American composer's "Music for the Theater." Copeland has divided his work into five episodes, Prologue, Dance, Interlude, Burlesque and Epilogue. It is not music one would want to hear every day but is virile music, imaginative and even if written in 1925, shows signs of streamlining. Last year in behalf of American composers, Dr. Koussevitzky offered a work by William Burlingame Hill. Mr. Copeland was at the piano during the performance of his work and with Dr. Koussevitzky received much applause.

Following the Copeland work, one heard the delightful, humorous "Mother Goose" suite by Ravel. These little pieces written for the piano to be played by children have a charm and blitheness all their own. They are richly scored and a wealth of imagination has gone into their making.

The final work played was the second "Daphne and Chloe" suite, a work in the interpretation of which Dr. Koussevitzky excels. Mere words cannot describe the shimmer of the strings, the gold of the brasses or the colors painted by the woodwinds. It was a virtuoso performance, a fitting finale to this first series of monumental, unforgettable concerts.

Thursday night a Wagner program will be given with the assistance of Paul Althouse, tenor, and Beal Hober, soprano. The final scene of the first act of "Die Walkure" will be sung as well as the entire third act of "Siegfried." Norman Cordon and Anna Kasaks will appear in the latter work with the first mentioned singers.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 8 - 1938

Plan All-Wagner Program At Berkshire Festival

Audiences of more than 6000 again went to Tanglewood last week-end to hear the second and third concerts in the first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Fine weather prevailed both Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and the crowds even exceeded that of the opening night Thursday.

Following Thursday night's impressive program of Bach and Beethoven, Saturday's program of works by Haydn, Debussy and Sibelius was lighter but interesting and balanced. The program opened with Haydn's Symphony in E-flat major No. 99, the 10th in the London series. Then came Debussy's tone poem, "La Mer," considered by many to be better than his well-known "Afternoon of a Faun." Written by a composer passionately attached to the sea, the work interprets its moods without being too delineative, and its musical structure would make it interesting and valuable to one who knew nothing of its intent to describe the sea. The program ended with Sibelius' powerful First Symphony. This work is less elaborate than Sibelius' later work, but it is full of memorable themes and has the grandeur characteristic of all his work. Each part of the program brought an ovation from the audience for Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra, and the performance of the symphony as a climax to the program called forth tremendous applause and five reappearances of the conductor.

Sunday afternoon's program was a full and varied one. Opening with Mozart's "Eine Kleine Machtmusik," it followed a succession of contrasting works. The piece de resistance was Brahm's symphony in E minor, No. 4, the melodic charm and striking climax of which were interpreted in a magnificent performance.

The lighter second half of the program was presented with the brilliance which audiences have learned to expect from the Boston symphony. Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre," played by a small orchestra with the composer at the piano, received enthusiastic applause. "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi, and Ravel's "Ma Mere l'Oye," with their colorful scores, gave further evidence that there is no limit to this orchestra's interpretative adaptability.

The second series in the festival will begin next Thursday evening, with an all-Wagner program, and continue Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 8 - 1938

* * *

Record Crowd at Concert In Berkshires

The first half of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to an end yesterday afternoon with an audience of well over 6,000 that filled the new $82,000 music shed at Tanglewood.

It was the largest crowd in history of the famous music fete. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the new, beautiful setting. Tanglewood, with its formal gardens, majestic lane of hawthorne pines and superb view of Stockbridge Bowl and the hills beyond bade a gorgeous background for the festival.

Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" . . . the Fourth Symphony of Brahms as well as Aaron Copland's "Music for Theater" presented with the composer at the piano, delighted. Ravel's "Mother Goose" and second "Daphnis et Chloe" suites were presented—the latter most brilliantly set forth.

143

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 8 - 1938

Music As It Should Be At Berkshire Festival

By NANCY BURNCOAT

Concert goers at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the still unfinished music shed at "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, found the Sunday afternoon concert a wholly unique experience yesterday.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in white linen conducted his men in cool-looking black trouser-white coat ensemble on the stage of the shed, largest structure for the performance of Symphonic music in the United States. Acoustics of the fan-shaped building are as near perfect as one could wish. Every number of the carefully constructed program was heard with clarity through the impressive shed and along the outskirts where many sat on benches.

In The Boxes

Boxes were filled with directors and early patrons of the festival and their guests, a row of them extending across the center of the shed, overlooking the stage from a sloping floor. There is the illusion of being out of doors on such a day as yesterday, with a mass of pines framed at the left, shimmering birch trees at the right, with the pale green of the buildings frame work and the straw color of the uprights to continue the cool color scheme.

It is difficult to realize that the music can be heard with ease in every part of the shed, with no amplifying devices whatever, although the last bench is 176 feet from the stage and the outer curve of the fan measures 404 feet.

It was impossible to see in an assemblage of over 5000 men, women and children from Boston, New York and less distant points, drawn to the Berkshire hills by this more than ever famous festival, many familiar faces. There were several hundred from Worcester, however, either motoring from their Summer homes nearby or driving up for the day.

Those who find an endless fascination in the conducting of Dr. Koussevitzky, noted the conventional manner of his handling the baton for Mozardt's "Eine Kleiner Nachtmusik," serenade for stringed orchestra, and the Brahms Symphony in E minor, No. 4, Op. 98, as contrasted with his greater informality in the second half of the program, after an intermission of 20 minutes.

The majority of the matinee patrons strolled about the grounds, on invitation of the program, see—ing the gardens with their sculpture, pools and formal hedges, and looking off across the hills to the mountain silhouettes on the horizons. At the house, once a private residence, one heard records of the Respighi Symphonic poem. "Pini di Roma" (Pines of Rome) for which had been substituted the beautiful and familiar Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe" making a Ravel sequence, with five of the "Ma Mere l'Oye" (Mother Goose) child pieces to close a concert that will long be remembered for performance and setting.

Following Dr. Koussevitzky's custom with contemporary composers Aaron Copland of New York city was on the stage after the intermission, to play the piano part of the interesting "Music for the Theater," a decidedly modern suite, of which "Dance and Burlesque" were most enjoyed, as gauged by th applaus.

Somewhat reminiscent of the Pops was the smoke that floated the heated air, but the transquality of the lovely outdoor concert was as hushed as if the men were playing in Symphony Hall. Those who attended their first concert since the new shed housed the festival were enthralled by the beauty of the music in surroundings no less ideal. Series B start Thursday night and Sunday afternoon's program again at 3.30 will end the present season.

THEATER and SCREEN

Further Thoughts on the Future of Concerts at Stockbridge

B. Her Aug. 8/38

PLAY AND FILM ON JESSE JAMES

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The impressive nature of the new quarters of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge induces even more than previously thoughts as to the near future of this undertaking. First, a word or two about this building, which has been so modestly and ludicrously described as a shed, to supplement those which we telegraphed from Tanglewood on the opening night. The architect, Eliel Saarinen, was a friend of Dr. Koussevitzky and at his suggestion drew tentative plans, which were carried out by Joseph Franz.

Obviously the first problem in constructing a covered auditorium to seat 6000 and to be open at the sides and the back for the sake of coolness is purely functional. It must not only fit the above specifications but must be designed for good acoustics. After that you can begin to think of beauty. Well, the acoustics are as good as can be expected. It is not Symphony Hall, nor could any building semi-open to the air and seating twice as many people possibly have the same qualities. But it is fully adequate for the clear reproduction of orchestral sound, if nothing subtler as to tone. And, aside from this, the slender steel columns, the broad sweep of the portico, the height and spaciousness of the interior all combine to answer at least one definition of architectural beauty.

Now for the future. It has always been taken for granted that Dr. Koussevitzky does not intend to stop with a mere half dozen concerts which are similarly given during the season in many cities of this country. Presumably he has oratorio and even opera at the back of his mind. We know, too, that he wants to have a school to function along with the festival. Oratorio, judging from the results of the opening concert, would certainly work. And, with the vast public that seems so keen on these festivals at his command, Dr. Koussevitzky might well lead the American people back into the road of a love for choral music, from which in recent years it has strayed. As to opera, there is at once the question of the size of the audience to be surmounted. Clearly no opera of any intimate appeal, such as Mozart, or theatrical effect, such as Verdi and Puccini, could stand the test. But perhaps some pageant-like work, in which the audience does not have to catch each small dramatic incident, might go. We are inclined to be skeptical, but stranger successes have been scored in the history of opera.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 9 - 1938

Bentley Warren's announcement that summer music school at Tanglewood may be an actuality by 1940 was one of the most interesting features of the opening of the fifth Berkshire Symphonic festival and the dedication of the new music shed. The house and grounds donated by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline to the Boston Symphony in 1936 provide good opportunity for such a development. It is expected that a few, probably not more than 10, promising young orchestra conductors will live at Tanglewood itself, and will study under Koussevitsky. A larger group will study choral conducting and choral music, possibly under the direction of Archibald Davidson of Boston, and a group of instrumentalists will work with the Boston symphony musicians and participate in programs. It is also possible that chorus will be part of the development, and to this end a questionnaire is being planned to be sent to former members of the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses to see if they would be interested in a course of study at Tanglewood, including the presentation of programs and participation in the festival. Of interest to laymen is the further possibility of a course in musicology for which Olin Downes is mentioned as possible conductor. The buildings at Tanglewood will house all classes and a few students.

The second series of the Berkshire Symphonic festival begins Thursday night with an all-Wagner program. The final scene of Act. 1 of "Die Walkure" will be presented, with Beale Hober, soprano, and Paul Althouse, tenor; and the entire third act of "Siegfried" will be given, with Norman Cordon, Anna Kaskas, Beale Hober, and Paul Althouse, Saturday evening, the progrm will be dedicated to the late Henry Hadley, founder of the festival, and will open with "Angelus" from his third symphony. The rest of the program will consist of Beethoven's sixths "Pastoral" symphony, and Tchaikovlsy's sixth "Pathetique" symphony. The festival will close Sunday afternoon with the following program: Schumann's symphony in B-flat, No. 1, Op. 38, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and Brahms' second symphony.

Those who are attending all the festival concerts and the afternoon lectures by Olin Downes are also including in their musical activities the chamber music concerts by the South Mountain string quartet, which have changed from Sunday to Friday afternoons doring the period of the festival. The concerts are held at the Temple of Music in Pittsfield. The program will be as follows:

Quartet in D major (for two violins, viola and cello), Mozart.

Sonata in F major (for cello and piano), Richard Strauss.

Qaurtet in F sharp minor Opus 121 (for two violins, viola, and cello), Max Reger.

A concert of chamber music by Hydn and Franck will be given at the Playhouse-in-the-hills in Cummington Sunday afternoon by Hugo Kortschak, violin Harris Danziger, violin; Louise Rood, viola; Emmeran Stoeber, violoncello; and Lonny Epstein, piano.

More than 500 singers will participate in the Northfield festival of sacred music to be held at Mount Hermon school Sunday, August 14, under the direction of Dr. John Finley Williamson. The festival is part of the session of the fourth annual summer school of the Westminster choir school.

The Silvermine festival opens at Silvermine, Conn. on Thursday, August 18, with a concert by the New York Philharmonic symphony orchestra under the direction of Eugene Ormandy. The opening concert will include Beethoven's "Leonare" overture Nov. 3, Brahms' fourth symphony, five selections from Wagner. David Blair McCloskey, baritone, will be soloist. Friday night, the 19th, Jose Iturbi will conduct, beginning with Mendelssohn's "Buy Blas" overture, and continuing with Schubert's "unfinished" symphony, Sibelius' "The Swan of Tuonela" and "Finlandia", Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with Mr. Iturbi at the piano, and Ravel's "Bolero". The final concert, Sunday night, August 21, conducted by Mr. Ormandy, will include Beethoven's ninth symphony and Bach's Passacaglia. The Schola Cantorum of New York and the Federated Choirs of Connecticut, and four soloists, will join in the presentation of the ninth symphony.

On Saturday morning a special children's concert will be given by the orchestra, under the direction of Quinto Maganini.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1938

Sibelius and Inez Hadley Send Festival Best Wishes

Cable Arrives From Helsinki, Finland—State Police Seek Co-operation of Motorists

A cable from J an Sibelius, famed Finnish composer, and Inez Hadley, widow of Conductor Henry Hadley, carrying their "best wishes" to the Berkshire Symphony Festival arrived this morning to make memorable the interim between the first and second programs of the 1938 series.

Visiting Composer

The cable was sent from Helsinki, where Mrs. Hadley is visiting the composer whose symphony in E minor was one of the highlights of the first three programs. Mr. Hadley is credited with conceiving the idea of the Festival, for whose first two seasons he conducted the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Meanwhile, concerning itself with more pedestrian matters, the Festival management issued an appeal to those who attended the first series to bring their programs with them. The demand has been so heavy that a shortage is probable.

Wants Public's Aid

Lieut. John Sullivan of the Northampton barracks of the State Police, in charge of traffic on the highways outside Tanglewood, has also issued a request.

"We shall appreciate the continued co-operation of the public," he said, "in helping our men keep the stream of traffic before and after the remaining concerts in motion as effectively as was done at the Sunday concert. With this help, there need be no delay in either entering or leaving the grounds."

Lost and Found

The lost and found departmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has an assorted collection o glasses, scarfs, handkerchiefs, purse with some change, an automobile hub cap, several pair gloves, straw hats, rain coats an top coats. Any of these articles may be claimed by applying to th checking counters in the rear o the music shed on days of performances. An oblong platinum wrist watch has been reported lost by Max Dost who is stopping at the Greenock Inn at Lee. Anyone finding a watch answering its description is asked to communicate with Mr. Dost or the Festival office a Stockbridge.

Among those expected for the second series is Walter Wood of the National Geographic Magazine and Mrs. Wood.

Koussevitzky, Host

Serge Koussevitzky entertained members of orchestra last night at a picnic at the music shed. The party was planned originally for the shores of Stockbridge Bow but was transferred to the shed because of the rain.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 9 - 1938

Festival Sets Attendance Record

WITH all attendance records shattered for the first series of concerts the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is preparing for an even greater influx of music lovers to the new shed at Tanglewood for the second series of concerts, starting Thursday at 8:30 p. m. The opening of the second series will mark the first presentation of opera in concert form at the festival. It will be a Wagner evening.

The response of the music-loving public to the series of concerts being given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky has surpassed the most optimistic hopes of the festival trustees, who estimate the attendance for the first concerts at more than 19.000, not including the rehearsals Saturday morning given as a privilege to members and patrons. More than 2,000 attended the rehearsal.

The second series of concerts starting Thursday night will feature the final scene of Act 1 from "Die Walkirie," with Paul Althouse and Bael Hober as soloists. Then will come the complete third act of "Siegfried," with Norman Cordon, Anna Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Miss Hober as soloists.

Saturday night is dedicated to Henry Hadley, who conducted the first two Berkshire Symphonic Festivals, and first on the program will be his composition, "Angelus," from Symphony No. 3. The rest of the program will include Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony. A delegation from the Henry Hadley Foundation will be guests of the festival on this occasion.

The sixth and final program Sunday at 3:30 p. m. will be Schumann's Symphony in B Flat No. 1; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite and Brahms' Second Symphony.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES

AUG 9 - 1938

Opening last Thursday, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be continued by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week with programs on Thursday and Saturday nights, and will close Sunday afternoon. The Thursday evening program will be entirely Wagnerian, including the final scene of Act 1 of "Die Walkure," with Beale Hober and Paul Althouse singing the soprano and tenor parts, and the entire third act of "Siegfried." Miss Hober and Mr. Althouse will take the parts of Brunhilde and Siegfried, with Anna Kaskas as Erda and Normon Cordon as Wotan.

The concert on Saturday will open with the "Angelus" (andante tranquillo) movement from the Third Symphony, in B minor, by the late Henry Hadley, who conducted the first Berkshire Symphonic Festival. This will be followed by Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, the Sixth, and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony, also the Sixth. The closing concert Sunday will include Schumann's First Symphony, in B flat; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" orchestral suite and the Brahms Second Symphony in D major.

Today's News Today
Tonight—Local Showers
Tomorrow—Partly Cloudy
Full Report Page 1, Second Section
Radio Programs on Page 11

The Berkshire Evening Eagle

City
Edition
2 P. M. Quotations

Volume 45—No. 68 · Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Monday, August 8, 1938. · 18 Pages— Price Three Cents

Lengthy Program Taxes Endurance Of Festival Crowd

Critic Finds Koussevitzky Including Too Much—Praises Saturday Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE third concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday afternoon revealed Serge Koussevitzky falling into the avoidable pitfall of including too much on the program with the result that the audience was obliged to stretch its normal supply of endurance rather thin. The length of the program was further emphasized by including so taxing a major work as the Brahms Fourth symphony in E minor.

Record Crowd

An audience probably the greatest of the Festival so far was in attendance. There had been short, sudden showers at various times on both Saturday and Sunday, but fortunately none occured to interfere with the concerts in any way. Parking upon arrival and departure after the concerts were facilitated tremendously by benefiting from the lessons of the initial concert. The audiences were early in arriving, and presented a gay and brilliant spectacle in their colorful gala costumes as they promenaded around the shed and on the esplanade between the rear of the hall and the mansion which was part of the estate given to the Boston Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

"Child's Play"

The concert yesterday opened with Mozart's "Kleine Nachtmusik" for string orchestra. For a string section like the one of which the Boston orchestra may boast, this is really child's play. Not that the players did not accord it the attention it deserves, but such a thing is simply a natural for them. Its charm never diminishes, and in the hands of a leader like Koussevitzky, it receives a resplendent, sparkling finish. We still do not understand why the final rondo is played so fast that it loses some of its clarity and enunciation.

The first movement of the Brahms is marked allegro non troppo. Brahms never intended his allegros to be as fast as, for instance, Mozart's, but, regardless of the indicated tempo, if the pace

Continued on Second Page

Dwyer Told Lawyer of Slaying

Defense Counsel Testifies for Youth

SOUTH PARIS, Me., Aug. 8, (AP).—The lawyer who defended Paul N. Dwyer, 19, on a charge of strangling Dr. James C. Littlefield, testified today that Dwyer pleaded guilty in fear for his own life and that of his mother. E. Walker Abbott, who represented Dwyer, told a Superior Court jury trying Francis M. Carroll on the same charge, that on the third day of Dwyer's trial last November, the youth told him he had "to plead guilty."

"My life has been threatened," he quoted Dwyer as saying, "my mother has been threatened, and I've got to get out of here." In cross-examination, Abbott said Dwyer told him Carroll had made the threats.

Told Same Story

Two weeks before that trial, at which Dwyer did plead guilty and was sentenced to life imprisonment, the boy told his counsel, the latter said today, a story "substantially the same as at this trial."

In nearly three days of testimony last week, Dwyer laid not only Dr. Littlefield's slaying but that of his wife, Lydia Littlefield, [illegible], to the 43-year-old Carroll, father of Dwyer's erstwhile sweetheart, Barbara Carroll, 18. Dwyer previously had confessed Mrs. Littlefield's strangulation as well as the doctor's.

Carroll, Abbott testified in response to questioning by Special Prosecutor Ralph M. Ingalls, was the officer on guard while Paul told him what the boy now contends is "the true story" about the slayings.

The same night, Abbott added, Dwyer called him to his cell and told him "not to believe the story he had told me that afternoon." Abbott said he never was actually alone with Dwyer.

The "true" confession, Sheriff F. F. Francis earlier testified, was told him by one of his deputies, Sidney Verrill, the day last November when Dwyer pleaded guilty. Francis was being cross-examined by Defense Counsel Clyde R. Chapman.

"Where had he heard it," asked Chapman.

"Paul Dwyer," replied Francis.

Watched Carroll

The sheriff said he assigned Verrill to investigate it, meanwhile keeping Carroll at work where "I could watch him."

John J. Breslin, chief prosecutor for Bergen County, New Jersey, testified Dwyer was "greatly concerned" about Barbara Carroll, his former sweetheart, and a daughter of the defendant. The State has alleged that Dr. Littlefield's knowledge of Carroll's alleged violation of his daughter was the reason for the slaying.

Dearborn Pope, South Paris truckman, testified he found in his truck prior to Dwyer's trial a re-

Continued on Second Page

New England Waters Take Ten Lives

Two Also Killed By Lightning During Weekend

BOSTON, Aug. 8 (AP).—Ten of the thousands of persons who swarmed New England watering places over the weekend were lifeless today, victims of drowning accidents. Lightning-scarred storms, which failed to sweep away the scorching heat, also took two lives, and five others died in automobile crashes.

The toll was increased by five additional violent deaths, including a murder and a suicide.

Water Victims

Drowning victims included: Lucy Woodward, 10, Bath, Me.; Donald J. Poland, South Portland, Me.; Peter Provocryk, 24, Fall River; Russell Bruce, 46, Whitman; Frank Shafner, 21, Lynn; Edward Burgoyne, 62, Worcester; Mrs. Mary Renfrew, 58, Lincoln, R. I.; Ovide Boisvert, 46, Woonsocket, R. I.; Jorda Peabody, 14, Warwick, R. I.; Leo LaFrance, 28, Woonsocket, R. I.

Victims of automobile accidents: Mrs. Sarah Thayer Winthrop, 54, of Boston and Manchester, Mass., at Portsmouth, N. H.; Ralph Gordon, 19, Concord, N. H.; Lewis Malloy, 27, of Quincy, at Hing-

Continued on Second Page

Guards Hunt More Bodies, Victims of Lightning Bolt

NEW YORK, Aug. 8 (UP)—Life guards kept a watch on the beach at Jacob Riis Park today for bodies of swimmers who might have been killed by the bolt of lightning known to have killed three and injured 15 on the shore.

The bolt felled everyone within a 200-foot radius on the beach crowded with 80,000 persons Sunday afternoon. It struck with terrifying suddenness. Blue flames played along the sand, between bright umbrellas, beach chairs and loungers in vari-colored bathing suits. Scores who escaped injury were stunned or momentarily paralyzed. Even before they screamed others on the beach had started to run. There was a panic for hours.

The dead were Cesare Cito, 36; Peter Cava, 27, and Mrs. Cava, 34. Inhalator squads worked over them for five hours. Five of the injured were still in a critical condition today. Ten others were treated at the Beach Hospital.

For a minute after the crash, there were more than 50 persons unconscious or helpless. Most were able to rise without help later.

If the bolt struck the water, it would have killed any swimmers nearby and their bodies probably would have been washed out to sea, to return with the tide. Early today no bodies had been found.

A year ago, on Sunday, Oct. 8, lightning struck the same beach a few hundred yards away, killed three and injured 14.

Dog Brings Dollar Bill Home Each Day

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Aug. 8—The boy with the goose which laid the golden egg had nothing on the San Antonio lady with the "dollar-a-day dog." Each afternoon for two weeks he has come, his nose dirt covered, to drop a dollar bill from his mouth into his mistress's hand. He will give the money to no other.

Folks have been unable to find the supposed buried treasure by tracking the pooch. His hiding place, like his pedigree, is surrounded in mystery.

Hunting Knife Murder Clue

ST. ALBANS, Vt., Aug. 8. (AP).—With a black-handled hunting knife as practically their only clue, investigators today sought to solve the slaying of Wellington Churchill, 31, a railroad worker. Churchill was found dead Saturday on the front steps of his home with the five-inch knife in his back.

Koussevitzky's Other Side

Russia Threatens Totalitarian War

Barkley Is Winner in Kentucky

Majority for New Dealer May Reach 60,000

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 8, (AP).—Gov. A. B. Chandler today conceded his defeat as Senate majority leader Alben W. Barkley's lead in Saturday's Democratic senatorial primary continued to climb.

Tabulating was resumed after a Sunday decess, required by law.

On the basis of unofficial returns from 3398 of the State's 4313 precincts Barkley had 227,015 votes to 188,856 for the governor, a majority of 38,159.

Chandler in a congratulatory telegram to the senator pledged his "active support" of the nominee in the November election.

Mentions President

The governor said: "President Roosevelt said he desired your return and a majority of Kentucky Democrats agreed to return you. I bow to the will of the majority of my fellow citizens. I have no excuses, alibis or regrets. . . . "

In the Republican primary John P. Haswell of Hardinsburg on the basis of unofficial returns from 1339 precincts was far ahead of his four opponents in the race for the senatorial nomination. Haswell, backed by the State GOP organization, had 9452 votes to 2278 for his nearest opponent, Andrew C. Ritchie.

60,000 Predicted

At his home in Paducah last night Barkley predicted his majority would be "between 60,000 and 70,000." At the same time he told newsmen he knew of "no coercion" of Federal employees to vote for him. The Senate campaign expenditures committee charged political use of public funds in the campaign, which it termed "deplorable."

"However," said Barkley, "I am not naive enough to suppose that most of them did not vote for me."

Doctor Summoned

Dr. J. W. Bryan, Louisville physician who said Chandler's recent illness was due to poisoning, was served with an ordinance warrant charging violation of a city ordinance which requires a physician attending the victim of a gunshot wound or poisoning to report the case to the Chief of Police within two hours. He was summoned to appear in ordinance court, which meets Thursday.

Police Chief John Malley, criticized by the city Civil Service Board for terming Bryan's diag-

Continued on Second Page

Soviets Prepared To Hurl Planes Against Japanese

Battle Again Rages Along Border as Diplomats Continue Attacks With Communiques

(By the United Press)

Soviet Russia today threatened to abandon diplomatic fencing and resort to drastic artillery and aerial warfare to settle her Siberian frontier quarrel with Japan.

Battle Reported

A four-hour battle in the Changkufeng sector and another fruitless diplomatic exchange in Moscow shoved the far east border conflict to a new crisis after 11 days of sporadic but often severe fighting. Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinov told the Japanese that hereafter the Red Army will strike with full power at any invader.

The danger of a formal war between Russia and Japan continued remote. Experts who took that view when the current clash began two weeks ago saw little reason to abandon it; the Foreign Policy Association in a summary of the crisis contended neither power wants war now.

But a major battle already has been fought without a declaration of war and, in the totalitarian tempo, current developments might easily make it impossible for either Moscow or Tokyo to prevent the conflict from exploding into a great undeclared war for domination of the Far East.

Reports Conflict

Censorship and inadequate communications clouded the full extent and outcome of fighting along the strategically vital border sector of Siberia, Manchukuo and Korea. Conflicting claims of successes have been issued by both capitals.

On the basis of official announcements, however, the Japanese originally fought their way to the top of Changkufeng Hill—an elevation dominating important Manchukuo rail lines—which had been claimed and occupied by Rus-

Continued on Second Page

God of War Battalion Beats Japs

Nipponese Having Trouble in Drive On Hankow

SHANGHAI, Aug. 8 (UP).—The Chinese today asserted that their "God of War" battalion, aided by artillery and an aerial squadron, defeated a Japanese effort to land troops on the Yangtse River banks at Wusueh. Chinese claimed they sank four Japanese warships and blasted a dozen launches from transports that attempted to land the troops. Fusueh is 30 miles west of Kiukiang.

The Chinese admitted that 600 Japanese troops had been put ashore opposite Kiukiang. A seesaw battle, causing great losses to both sides was in progress on Ox Hill and Old Tiger mountains south of Kiukiang. Japanese reports indicated that the floods along the north bank of the Yangtse were growing worse.

4000 Casualties

Chinese said they inflicted 4000 Japanese casualties in that area during the most severe fighting since the Japanese started their drive on Hankow. Chinese military authorities said that Japanese warships were withdrawing from Payang Lake and that the Japanese at other points were on the defensive.

Guerillas Busy

In some quarters there was speculation as to whether the Hankow drive had been suspended peding clarification of the Siberian crisis. Despite Japanese military claims that Chinese operations in North China had been sup-

Continued on Second Page

Corrigan Hailed by Boston

Wrong Way Flier Welcomed by Governor Hurley

BOSTON, Aug. 8 (AP).—His Irish eyes a-smiling, Douglas Corrigan today dropped in on the city he visited seven years ago "flat broke"—this time to receive the acclaim of thousands for the courage that took him across the Atlantic on a "wrong way" flight.

From New York, where he won the hearts of the Gothamites, he came here aboard a big airliner, a far cry from the ancient, $900 "crate" in which he winged his way to Ireland, the land of his forefathers "by mistake."

The "luck of the Irish" brought Boston a perfect day for the seldom—if ever—equalled reception for the daring young man of the flying machine.

Roar of Welcome

From the throats of thousands swelled a mighty roar of welcome as Captain Walter Hughen set down the transport at East Boston Airport, and thousands more lined the narrow, twisting streets to wave a greeting to Corrigan as he passed in parade.

"This was my second trip over Boston Airport," he told the crowd which welcomed him.

"Only the first time," he chuckled, "I thought it was Baltimore. I realize now, of course, that it was Boston."

The grinning flier wore the same clothes in which he flew the At-

Continued on Second Page

Berkshire Life Business In July Best Since 1935

At the end of a 28-day national campaign, the Berkshire Life Insurance Company has announced through the home office in Pittsfield an increase of 84.3 per cent in volume of paid business over July, 1937.

As proof that "sales mean jobs," James B. O'Brien, the company's general agent in Albany and chairman of the campaign, pointed to a 63 per cent increase in the number of sale and an increase of 48 per cent in the number of salesmen.

As a result of the campaign, the company experienced the largest "paid" month since August, 1935.

Mr. O'Brien, Walter Boireau of Boston and S. Samuel Wolfson comprised the committee which planned the campaign. Assisting them as sub-chairmen under Mr. O'Brien were Walter H. Boireau of Boston, William Carroll of New York, W. R. Furey of Pittsburgh and B. C. Bowers of Chicago.

Lincoln Tried To Get Patent On Boat Lifter

NEW YORK, Aug. 8 (AP)—From a long-unopened safe, investigators today removed evidence that Abraham Lincoln tried, 89 years ago, to patent an invention for assisting steamboats through shallow river waters.

The safe, once the property of the United States Patent Office but now owned by Crosby Gaige and Douglas C. Hertz, was opened by locksmith Charles Courtney.

Inside, in addition to several models of inventions by others, was a printed application for a patent, filed March 10, 1849, and signed A. Lincoln, Springfield, Ill.

Lincoln's idea was that river boats should be fitted with pontoons which, filled with compressed air, would lift the vessels "over bars or through shallow water without discharging their cargo."

War Prisoners To Be Freed

SAINT JEAN-DE-LUZ, France, Aug. 8. (AP).—United States Ambassador Claude G. Bowers announced today the Spanish government and the Insurgent regime had accepted a plan for the release of 56 war prisoners, including 14 Americans. through mediation of the United States Embassy. The Ambassador said each side agreed to free 28 men, of whom 14 held by the insurgents were American privates in the government infantry.

Lindberghs In England

LYMPNE, England, Aug. 8. (AP)—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and Mrs. Lindbergh landed at Lympne airport at 12.40 P. M. (6.40 A. M. EST) today on a flight from Le Bourget Airport, Paris. They had left Le Bourget at 10.50 A. M. (4.50 A. M. EST).

The flier and his wife passed through customs immediately after landing and then proceeded to Reading where the Colonel's airplane was built.

Queen Mary, British Liner, Breaks Ocean Crossing Record

NEW YORK, Aug. 8. (U.P.).—The Queen Mary, pride of the Cunard White Star Line, broke the record for the westward crossing of the Atlantic today when she sped past Ambrose Channel Lightship three days, 21 hours and 48 minutes out of Europe. She docked at 4 A. M., clipping one hour 14 minutes off the record set last year by the French liner Normandie, her chief rival on the ocean race track that is measured by Ambrose Channel on this side and Bishop's Rock, 2907 miles away, on the European side. The Queen Mary passed the lightship at 1.32 A. M. (EDT).

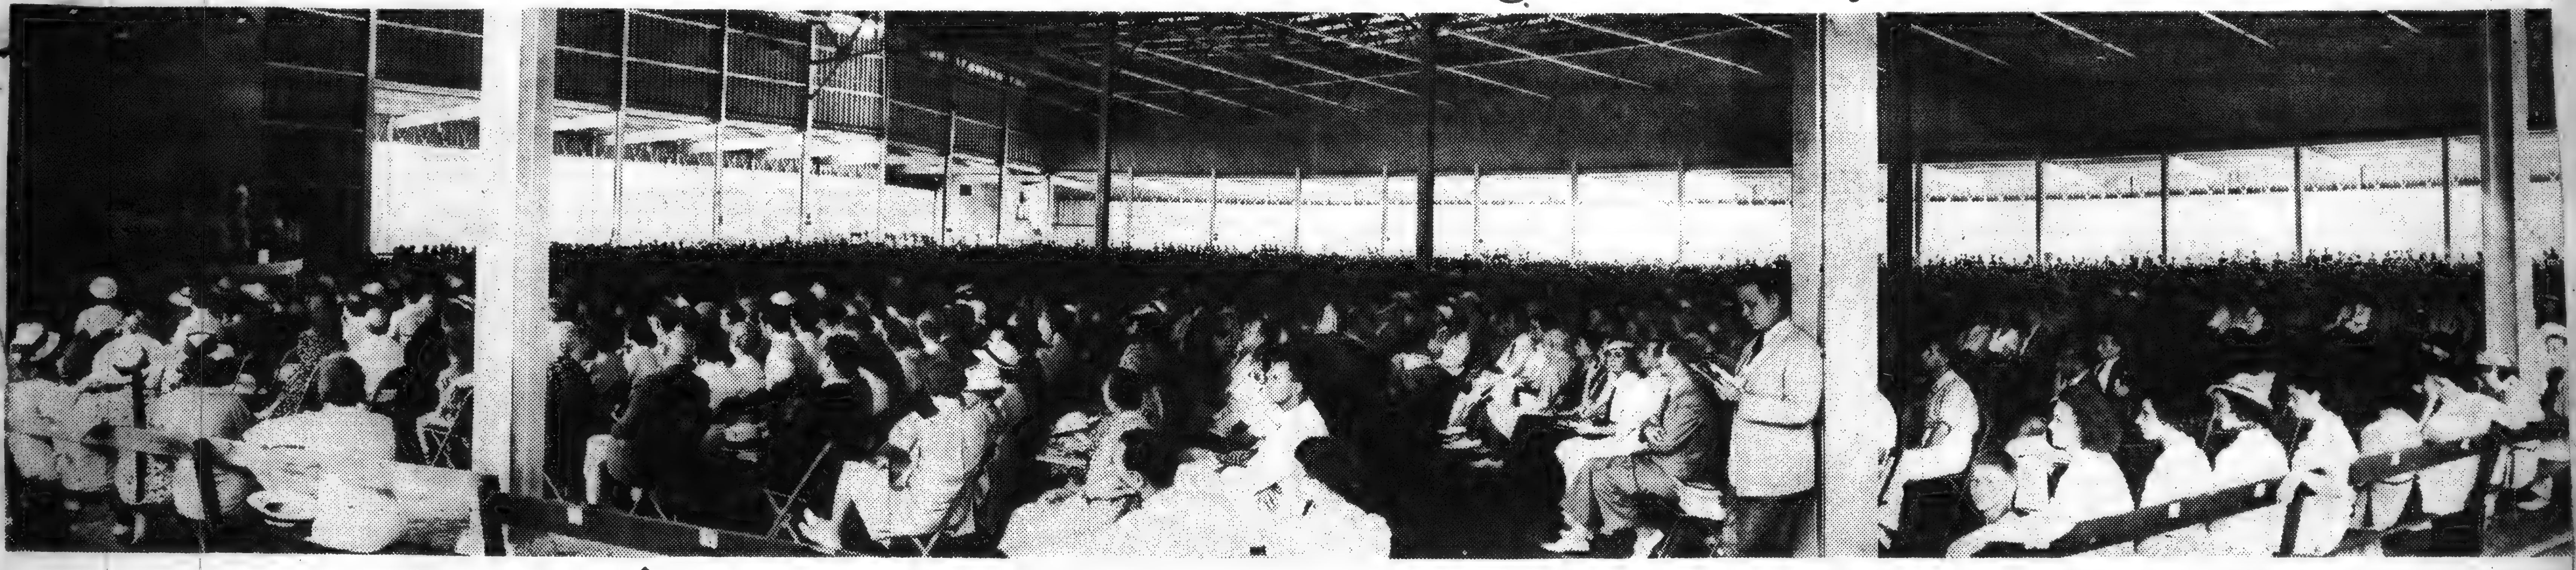
Unofficially, the Queen Mary's average speed was computed at 31.02 knots, almost 36 land miles an hour. The Normandie's average for her record run was 30.58 knots.

When the Queen Mary previously held the record, from 1936 to 1937, her owners declined to fly the blue flag of supremacy from her mast, saying they preferred to consider the title a mythical one. However, when the Normandie regained the record on Aug. 2, 1937, she ran up a blue flag, as the Italian liner Rex had done when she was champion.

It was assumed that the Queen Mary would accept the title without the flag again, even though the Normandie's flag came down. The Queen Mary sailed from Cherbourg at 1.24 A. M. Thursday, but her race did not start until she passed Bishop's Rock more than four hours later. The passengers were asleep and oblivious to their record trip and were not informed of it until 8 A. M., when customs men went aboard and aroused them for inspection.

PITTSFIELD, MASS. EAGLE
HOLYOKE, MASS. Transcript Telegram
WORCESTER, MASS. TELEGRAM
144
6
103

Panoramic View of Berkshire Festival During Yesterday Afternoon's Concer



Attendance at Festival 4000 Ahead of Last Year

Good Weather, Improved Parking And Handling of Traffic Contribute To Successful Weekend

The moon and the sun—the latter with perhaps undue enthusiasm—looked down on Tanglewood at the proper moments over the weekend to put the final stamp of cosmic approval on the first half of the 1938 Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The clear weather, along with markedly improved parking and traffic handling, joined the more predictable excellence of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in attracting approximately 13,000 to the concerts Saturday evening and yesterday afternoon.

4000 Increase

The estimated total attendance of 19,000 for the first half of the program represents a 4000 increase over that for the first three concerts of last season.

Even though the huge one-and-a-half-acre roof of the music shed has sounded the death knell for the Festival's original slogan, "Music Under the Moon," the Tanglewood wildlife continues to preserve the atmosphere of the out of doors. The crickets are on duty for the evening concerts and while they were catching up on their sleep yesterday afternoon, the cicadas provided a rural obligato for Mozart, Beethoven and Ravel.

Yesterday's first daylight concert brought out the amateur photographers by the hundreds. They snapped members of the orchestra from behind the pines around the tuning room, trailed celebrities and socialites, shot Stockbridge Bowl from the Tappan house lawn and when nothing else was doing, took pictures of each other.

Yesterday's sun also lured many out from the shed to the somewhat more breezy shade of the trees on the lawn. There, and to a lesser extent inside the shed, fashion bowed to comfort and the men took to shirtsleeves.

Parking Good

The setting out of new pathways, fencing of treacherous spots in the parking fields and reorganization of the traffic system brought this situation smartly out of the difficulties it encountered Thursday night. The public, in turn, adopted the suggestion to arrive early and as a result, almost none who started in good time missed a note of either Saturday's or yesterday's concert. Even yesterday morning's rain failed to put a crimp in the parking plans.

Acoustics Perfect

Yesterday Professor Richard D. Fay of the Masachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the shed, issued a statement in which he said:

"Preliminary tests made of the acoustic properties of Tanglewood have indicated that the auditorium would be completely successful. However, on account of the several unusual features of the design, it was not possible to predict completely what the effect of an audience would be. We have, therefore, made an extremely critical survey of the acoustics during the first two performances to find any possible faults. It is gratifying to be able to report that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Gaston Works Hard

A tremendous amount of work has been done on the Tanglewood parking areas since Thursday and Ward J. Gaston, superintendent of the estate, has a large crew still at work drawing gravel and stone to make the areas in as perfect condition as possible for the opening of the second series of concerts Thursday night.

It is difficult to drain the northwest parking field easily because of the nature of the ground. It is hard pan and the heavy rains this summer have soaked the ground and clogged the blind ditches that were built some time ago. The wettest spots were enclosed with snow fence in time for Saturday night's concert and some quick work done in graveling roads. More work is being done on the roads this week.

Has Birthday

Mrs. Normand F. Allen, president of the C. H. Allen Company of Hartford, moved her own 75th birthday celebration from her home in Hartford to Tanglewood, not wishing to miss either the party or the concerts.

Nine Dogs and a Canary Register at Red Lion

Is there no limit to this Festival business? Nine dogs and a canary were registered at Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge for the weekend.

One dog came unaccompanied by its master and insisted on shaking hands with everyone who aproached the desk. The dog was a handsome German police dog.

The canary owend by Festival goers at the hotel escaped from its cage Saturday night as the bell hop was carrying it to the automobile. In some manner the cage door was opened and out flew the bird. There was great excitement for a half hour as hotel employees scattered in all directions trying to find it. The cage was left on the porch. At the end of the half hour, back came the canary, perched a moment on the veranda rail of the hotel, then hopped into its cage.

Festival

Continued From First Page

prevents the playing of the theme so as to give each beat of a measure its proper values, then it is surely too fast. The distinguishing feature of Brahms's music is his rhythmic sense. The first theme of this symphony is patently a pedestrian tempo in which the figure emerges normally by counting equally four-one. A method which stresses only the first beat of each measure fails to catch the idiom of his speech. It is a thick symphony at best, and takes excessive care to prevent the brasses from becoming blatant.

"Three Blind Mice"

After intermission came Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre" with the composer at the piano, which is used as an orchestral instrument. It calls for an orchestra of diminished numbers, only six first violins instead of the 12 used in the rest of the program, four violas, etc., and the same proportionate cuts in the winds. We are thankful to Koussevitzky for allowing us to hear new music and commend his encouragement of contemporary composers. We hesitate to condemn what does not please us, but we must confess not to have been moved by it, nor did we find the ludicrous spots funny. It should have provided a sort of emotional release after the Brahms but it failed, we thought. Through the five episodes there is a predominating theme resembling, so far as we can describe it, "Three Blind Mice" in descending ninths.

A dance in 5/8 rhythm is a bit of sublimated jazz which affords a fraction of a fillip. To the trumpet is given a prominent part in the highest register of his instrument. He blew himself scarlet in the face to accomplish it. The conductor graciously turned the vehement applause toward the smiling composer, and in their several reappearances there was much clasping of hands.

Too Much Alike

The Mother Goose pieces of Ravel were not in very good juxtaposition so soon after the Copland. The Ravel pieces are decidedly naive, but in a sense are in the same category. The same composer's "Daphnis and Chloe" second suite was still to be played at a time when the audience had already enjoyed a concert of normal duration, but this particular suite from Ravel's "choreographic symphony" bears rehearing at any time when the performers are the Boston orchestra and Koussevitzky. This is the music in which Nijinsky and Karsavina made one of their greatest successes when they danced to it in the first performance in Paris in 1912. Yesterday afternoon it became a living, thrilling thing. As Daphnis went through all the emotions of despair, anguish and melancholy in his search for Chloe until a general dance, which grows more and more animated, rises to a joyous tumult, it became a fitting climax and end to the first half of the Festival.

The descent from the severity of the first program to a more popular plane for the second concert on Saturday night was a welcome contrast and recompense. The program which Koussevitzky laid out for this second concert was a masterpiece of taste and good judgment, providing three courses, each one by itself capable of giving tremendous enjoyment and in their sequence complementing each other to provide a superlative repast. So keen was the edge of the men in the band that if their peerless chef d'orchestre had chosen to lead them in simple scales, even that would have roused the huge audience to a pitch of enthusiasm. Their response to his slightest wish, sometimes more implied than indicated, was the basis of the glory of the evening's pleasure. Whether in the restrained delicacy of the Haydn Symphony, the E Flat, No. 99, or the filmy mime of Debussy's "La Mer," or the more hearty exuberance of the climaxes of Sibelius' first symphony, there was that element above and beyond mere precision which makes one performance stand out above others.

Orchestra at Peak

The simplicity of Haydn was allowed to retain its essential character. Flexible details of color and graceful variations of tempo were executed by the whole orchestra in the manner of a string quartet. The tonal balance, legato and piquant in turn, or even a little heavy-footed as in the minuet, were gems. The adagio revealed an unforgettable clarity of voices and at the same time the precosity of Haydn. Beethoven certainly must have studied this movement and profited by it, too. Haydn gives the wind instruments here a style of part-writing which Beethoven applied in many ways in his day. Haydn's sudden interjection of a short slow reflective phrase as a pause before the final coda was a bit of business which the Bonn master also used advantageously.

The Haydn symphony was first heard in London in 1794 or '95. In this connection it is interesting to notice the conditions which prevailed in London in the 18th century, particularly as it affected concerts. They usually started at 6 in the evening, and notes in the advance announcements to the effect that "proper care will be taken for a sufficient guard for all the coaches home" are indicative of the conditions of the streets in England's metropolis in those days.

Haydn to Debussy

From the classicism of Haydn to the fragile impressionism of Debussy was a far step indeed. The subtitles of the piece explain the music: "from dawn to noon at sea," "play of the waves," "dialogue between the wind and the sea." The frail elegance of Debussy lost none of its feminine sensitiveness in the dramatically conceived interpretation of Koussevitzky. The performance was a tour de force; its virtuosity was quite overwhelming. From the larger general contours to the turn of the smallest phrase there was care and refinement. A single lone toot of a motorhorn from the far parking lot came discordantly just as the second sketch was beginning, after an extra measure of hesitation had been extended the better to prepare the soft tiptoe entrance of the reeds. The luscious chords before the end stood out in the beauty of their orchestral tone.

No Let-Down

There is a tradition of uncertain establishment that Saturday nights in festival series often call for a bit of concession to popular demand in program making, but this was no let-down in any phase. It seems irreverant to dismiss the Debussy with a few adulatory effusions. It really merited an analysis by a microscope and also the more distant focus of a telescope, so absolutely crushing was the power and incandescent susceptibility of the performance. Nowhere was the response of the orchestra more immediate. The men were in conspicuously happy vein throughout the evening, and from the lovely tender introduction of the Haydn to the marvellous sudden decrescendo of the tympani before the final phrase of the Sibelius, there was a continuous succession of the most lofty type of orchestral playing.

After intermission came the symphony of Sibelius, an experience indelibly inscribed upon every listener's memory. This was music in which, especially after the frangibility of the Debussy, Koussevitsky could figuratively let his hair down. The rich wealth of the score provided all the material necessary and he gave the orchestra full rein. It was a performance of the moving and individual interpretation which is his customary conception of this work. The imagination in the first movement was truly rousing in its ardent glow. To the first phrase of the violins in the second movement, Koussevitzky gives a plaintive, nostalgic character by stressing the first and third beats and giving less weight to the second and fourth, thereby giving it a style both distinguished and personal. Except for this movement, however, the symphony seems to suggest a titanic struggle for dominance between elements no less than mountainous, and for a great share of the time it demands the ultimate of orchestral resources.

Third Sibelius

This first symphony is hardly the work of a youngster; Sibelius was 34 when he wrote it, but it does retain many of the virtues and the faults of the composer's youth, and we are grateful for both attributes. Festival audiences have now heard three Sibelius symphonies, the second and the seventh having been on the lists of the preceding years, and this one Saturday night was a necessary step in our Sibelius education. The Boston orchestra has always been the American champion of the renowned Finn and it merits recognition for the pioneer work which is bringing such satisfying rewards.

Dwyer

Continued From First Page

volver "just like" the state exhibit shown him by Ingalls that Dwyer had identified as the revolver he carried for protection after an attempt on his life.

Miss Bessie Stinson, chief telephone operator at Norway, testified that about 9.45 P. M., the night of the crime a call was made "rather breathlessly" for the Littlefield home.

Listening in, she testified, she heard someone she didn't identify demand to see Mrs. Littlefield, saying "I'm the one that took the doctor on the hill."

Dwyer testified he called Mrs. Littlefield shortly after the doctor was slain in Dwyer's home on Paris Hill.

Drownings

Continued From First Page

ham; Mrs. Frances Trowbridge, 24, of Hanover, at Brockton; William Borzezinski, 24, of Gardner, at Templeton.

Hit by Lightning

Leonard T. Grant, 32, of Dedham, former captain of the New York University football team, was killed by lightning while playing golf, and another bolt killed John Socha, 45, of Suffield, Conn.

Wellington Churchill, 31, of St. Albans, Vt., was found dead at the door of his home with a five-inch hunting knife in his back. State Detective Almo Franzoni said he was murdered.

Philip Smith, 54, and Raymond Parent, 25, both of Lawrence, died of beatings in street fights.

Samuel Datz, 54, of Boston, was swept to his death from a loading platform under 10 tons of coal.

Medical Examiner Edward P. Goodrich reported that Manford B. Grant, 77, of Prospect, Me., who died of shotgun blast, was a suicide.

Chinese War

Continued From First Page

pressed, all other reports, including foreign military advices. Indicated that a sizeable 8th route army was attacking reduced Japanese garrisons.

Japanese reports admitted that 100,000 guerillas were active in the Suchow sector, destroying railways and "robbing villagers."

Peiping reports said that guerilla attacks in the north, including the Tientsin area, were delaying Japanese troop movements to Manchukuo. Scattered fighting was reported along the railroad lines.

Barkley

Continued From First Page

nosis "a political bedtime story," said issuance of the warrant had been delayed until after the primary.

New Deal Gets New Hope

WASHINGTON,; Aug. 8, (AP).—the Kentucky victor of Senate Leader Alben W. Barkley increased the hopes of administration lieutenants today for a three-fold triumph in tomorrow's senatorial primaries. Democratic Senators Robert Bulkley of Ohio, Hattie Caraway of Arkansas, and James P. Pope of Idaho will be up for renomination as loyal Roosevelt backers.

Senator Pope's race against Representative D. Worth Clark, however, may bring the only clearcut test of administration policies. Pope, who helped write the Crop Control Act, has not opposed any Roosevelt measures, while Clark as a self-styled conservative voted against the government reorganization bill and various other White House proposals.

Russia-Japan

Continued From First Page

sians. The Japanese contended the hill was Manchukuan.

There followed a series of skirmishes, artillery bombardments by both sides and Japanese charges that Russian airplanes bombed Korean towns. Both capitals denied they at any time invaded the other's territory and both claimed they have driven the invading enemy from their own territory.

Battle of Communiques

Today's four-hour battle was announced at Tokyo. The official statement claimed the battle was started by a Russian attack on Changkufeng Hill and that the attack was repulsed. Significantly, the announcement immediately followed a Moscow communique stating that the remnants of Japanese troops had been cleared from Russian soil. Thus, soldiers fight with guns and bayonets along the border but without any apparent effect on officials fighting with communiques at headquarters.

As a matter of fact, the inclination of both capitals to admit only victories bolsters the prospect of avoiding a major war as neither will later be faced with the necessity of drastic "face-saving" action which might make war inevitable.

The unusual firmness with which Moscow has stood its ground throughout the present crisis was again reflected on Sunday in Litvinov's warning to Japan that failure to end attacks on Russian soil would lead to retaliation with artillery and airplanes on a major scale. As to a peaceful settlement, the diplomatic exchange made only slight progress toward agreement on method of negotiation.

There have been indications in the past that Moscow believes it would be fatal for Russia to permit Japan finally to win a complete victor for China. The Changkufeng fighting unquestionably has made Japan's conquest in the south more difficult. There would be no reason for the Soviets to weaken their stand in order to speed a solution.

Heavy Fighting Is Reported

TOKYO, Aug. 8 (AP).—The Foreign Office said today that Soviet forces had been repulsed in a "heavy engagement" on the slopes of Changkufeng Hill, disputed point on the Manchoukuoan-Siberian border. An army communique said the Russians were in a general retreat to the north.

Hand-to-Hand

The battle, beginning about 6.30, A. M., followed an intensive Russian artillery bombardment which had lasted all night. Russian an Japanese forces were said to hav clashed in bitter hand-to-han fighting when the former rushe Japanese positions 200 yards fro the summit of the mile-wide, four mile-long almond-shaped heights.

"Casualties on both sides are ex pected to be heavy," the Foreig Office said.

Corrigan

Continued From First Page

lantic—blue shirt, blue and re striped tie, Brown leather jacke and blue and grey checkere trousers.

Greeted by Hurley

Corrigan was welcomed to Bosto by two men of Irish descent, Mayo Maurice J. Tobin and Governo Charles F. Hurley. "As Governor, Hurley said, "I extend to you th heartfelt greetings of an enthusias tic citizenry and assure you that n error of compass, or place, or o affection is in evidence, when a one unit, Massachusetts says—'Wel come Douglas Corrigan'."

Five hundred policemen—two o them Corrigans and scores of them Irishmen—will patrol the route fo a parade city officials estimated hundreds of thousands will watch.

Mixed in with cheering and speech-making, Corrigan has set aside time for three "must" visits—to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology aeronautical laboratories, to the Children's Hospital and to the House of the Angel Guardian, a home for orphans.

Eleven Days Of Heat Wave

BOSTON, Aug. 8. (U.P.).—A weekend thunder shower failed to break a tropical heat wave which has gripped New England for 11 days. Crystalizing the sentiment of a sweltering public, a Boston newspaper observed editorially: "What this country needs is a snowstorm."

Cocktail Hours
Daily to 6
Berkshire Inn Grill
Hors d'oeuvres Served Without Charge
• Berkshire Inn
• William Cullen Bryant House
• Egremont Inn
• Olde Egremont Tavern
• Jug End Barn
OLDE EGREMONT INNS
SOUTH EGREMONT
GREAT BARRINGTON
MASS.

"We pay our rent money to ourselves!"

The easiest, surest way to home-ownership is yours with a 'Federal Savings' Budget Plan. A nominal down payment — and then fixed monthly payments, often less than rent, that include principal, interest, taxes and insurance. You know, at all times, exactly what your monthly cost will be. Let us show you facts and figures.

Listen in Station WBRK Tuesday Evening at 7 P. M.
William C. Root, Vice President, Will Talk on FHA Mortgages.

UNION CO-OPERATIVE
FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
48 North Street Phone 5663

DRIVE A CAR THAT Stays BEAUTIFUL

Let Us Simoniz Your Car

Simonizing is without question the greatest process ever developed for preserving motor car finishes and their beauty. So, let us give your car this deluxe beauty treatment. We do Simonizing as it should be done, and at reasonable prices. What about today?

CITY GARAGE AND SALES CO.
449 NORTH ST. DIAL 5696

DRASTIC REDUCTIONS on all
WHITE SHOES
for balance of week.
Berkshire Shoe Co.
293 North St.

evenings after 7 p.m. — Sunday all day
DOWN GO RATES!

That's when long distance telephone rates step way down! That's when you get the big bargains! That's the time to call friends or relatives or to make plans or appointments!

TELEPHONE

QUICK Cash LOANS
"FEDERAL"
CAN GIVE SERVICE AT ONCE
It's Not Hard To Make a Loan of $25 to $300
How Our 20-Payment Plan Makes It Easy For You

$ 30—Repay	$ 1.50	per	month
$ 40—Repay	$ 2.00	per	month
$ 50—Repay	$ 2.50	per	month
$ 60—Repay	$ 3.00	per	month
$ 80—Repay	$ 4.00	per	month
$100—Repay	$ 5.00	per	month
$200—Repay	$10.00	per	month
$300—Repay	$15.00	per	month

Plus interest on unpaid balances for actual number of days money is used—our only charge.

Federal Loan
OF PITTSFIELD
Michelman Bldg.
INDUSTRIAL LOANS
237 North St. Dial 2-6498
Pittsfield, Mass. License No. 4

Plan Your Partnership for PROFITS INSURED IN FULL

TO LIVE at a profit and have those profits insured in full, start a joint account here. Invest $1 per share per month and enjoy planning ahead. You'll have more ready money in the bank, plus bigger dividends, plus our modern money-management plans to help you have all sorts of things you will want — at lower cost!

Systematic Self-financing Plans Pay Better — Save More
BIGGER DIVIDENDS • SHARES INSURED
For details — call here, write or telephone the Treasurer

THE PITTSFIELD CO-OPERATIVE BANK
★ SPECIALISTS IN HOME FINANCING ★
48 Fenn Street Opposite Post Office

BANKING LOOKS AHEAD

The Peak we never Reach

There are always those who believe that human progress has reached its final peak. For example, in 1844 and again in 1886, it was predicted by prominent men that "improvement must soon end."

Today those predictions seem naive. Great new industries have since been born—air craft, automobiles, gasoline and radio to name a few. Billions in wealth and millions of jobs have been created.

The officers and directors of this bank believe that our country will go on to new and higher peaks. We stand ready to aid in the forward march of our community and nation.

The Agricultural National Bank Of Pittsfield

MEMBER FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

children's concert will be given by the orchestra, under the direction of Quinto Maganini.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
HOLYOKE, MASS. Transcript Telegram
WORCESTER, MASS. TELEGRAM

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

145

AUG 9 - 1938

Scenes Before, During, and After the Festival at Tanglewood

Above: The photographer got a side view of the orchestra in action, and the audience listening attentively.

Below: Conductor Koussevitzky as he leads his men through a difficult passage.

Center: Marjorie Edwards, violinist, a summer resident at Pontoosuc Lake, and a student at South Mountain, is seen here showing almost violent approval of the afternoon's program.

Above: The audience promenades around the shed during the intermission.

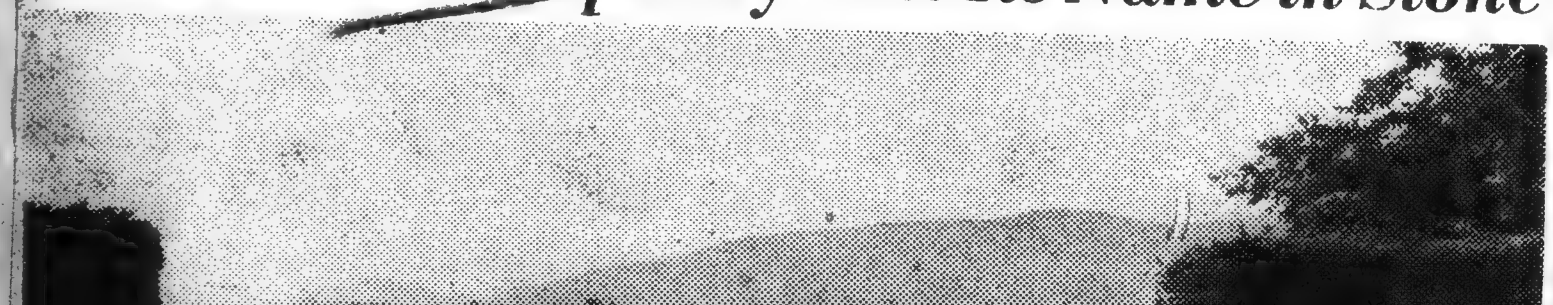
Below: The chauffeurs don't appear to mind waiting for orders at this affair. They are seated on the benches which are on the grounds surrounding the shed

---

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 10 1938

The Boston Symphony Gets Its Name in Stone



—Photo by David Milton Jones

Along the back of this stone bench at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is engraven the message that the estate has been given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamund Sturgis Brooks in memory of several members of their family "who lived here many years." Mrs. Brooks recently had the inscription cut in the bench and the semicircle of lawn flagged.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 10 1938

Stockbridge Has Many Attractions The Latter Part of This Week

Tomorrow Night Comes the Fourth in the Series of Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival Concerts; Violet Heming Is Appearing in 'Susan and God' At Berkshire Playhouse and Olin Downs Is to Speak at the Berkshire Museum Thursday and Saturday

Stockbridge, Aug. 10 — Wagnerian opera in concert form will be the offering at the fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival tomorrow night at Tanglewood when Dr Serge Koussevitzky reassembles his illustrious Boston Symphony orchestra on the stage of the new music shed.

Advance reservations point to an audience equally as large and brilliant as the one that attended the inaugural of the new shed last week. Many friends of one of the soloists, Anna Kaskas, will motor up from Hartford, Bridgeport and other Connecticut communities to hear her sing.

The program will consist of the final scene of the first act of "Die Walkyrie" and the third act of 'Siegfried." In "Die Walkyrie" Paul Althouse will sing the role of Siegmund and Beal Hober the role of Sieglinde. In "Siegfried," Norman Cordon will be heard as the wanderer; Miss Kaskas, as Erda; Mr Althouse, as Siegfried, and Miss Hober, as Brunnhilde.

Other attractions in the Berkshires within easy riding distance of Tanglewood, will be the Berkshire playhouse offering at Stockbridge all week of "Susan and God," starring Violet Heming; a chamber music concert Friday afternoon at 4 at Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's South Mountain temple in Pittsfield, open to the public at no charge; Ted Shawn's dance recitals at Jacob's Pillow in West Becket, Friday afternoon and Saturday; chamber music at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., Cummington and Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale, N. Y.

Thursday and Saturday afternoons at 3, come the festival-sponsored lectures by Olin Downes at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield. These lectures are open to the public at a reasonable fee. The museum also invites those who attend the lectures to visit several special exhibitions now on display.

RECORD THRONGS DRAWN TO BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

B Globe Aug 9/38

With all attendance records shattered for the first series of concerts, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is preparing for an even greater number at the new music shed at "Tanglewood" for the second series of concerts starting Thursday evening at 8:30.

The opening of the second series will mark the first presentation of opera in concert form at the festival. It will be a Wagner evening.

The response to the series being given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has surpassed the most optimistic hopes of the festival trustees, who estimate the attendance for the first concerts at more than 19,000, not including the rehearsal last Saturday morning given as a privilege to members and patrons. More than 2000 attended the rehearsal.

Prof. Richard D. Fay of M. I. T., acoustics consultant during the erection of the new shed, says:

"We made an extremely critical survey of acoustics during the first two performances to find any possible faults. It is gratifying to be able to report that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1938

Glamorous Assembly Hears All-Wagner Program at Festival

Audience Thoroughly Pleased With Concert of Operatic Music—Moon Lends Enchantment

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the first of the last trio, brought out an audience fully as large as any of the record-breakers which attended the three first concerts, and one which seemed to exceed in brilliance the gala audiences of the previous evening concerts.

Glamorous Assembly

The weather since Wednesday evening had been anything but propitious, but the late afternoon saw the sun dissolve the gray clouds and poke its bright face through to cheer and clear the atmosphere and dry things up in general. The prospect of an entire evening of Wagner may have accounted for the large attendance and the particularly glamorous assembly.

The first three concerts, all in all, had been thrilling events. Many music-lovers have their favorites which sometimes influence their opinion, but on one thing, everyone has agreed, and that point is paramount, that Koussevitzky with his justly renowned virtuose Boston Symphony Orchestra has given three programs in their best inimitable manner. He has made no concessions whatsoever, and the mounting enthusiasm of the audiences has been demonstration enough of their appreciation.

In the three years that the Boston Symphony has appeared in these Berkshire Festivals Koussevitzky has played material from nearly every shelf in the orchestral library. The new shed which was inaugurated last week on the beautiful estate, Tanglewood, which Mrs. Gorham Brooks gave

Continued on Second Page

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 11 1938

MAESTRO

This is an orchestra's-eye view of Serge Koussevitzky, celebrated conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now presiding over the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass. Tonight he will conduct his musicians in the fourth concert of the series — a Wagnerian program consisting of the final scene from Act I of "Die Walkure"; and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Wagner Under the Moon

Taken last night during the concert at Tanglewood, this picture by Irving D. Sisson, Eagle staff photographer, reveals the ideal conditions which attended the fourth program of the Festival series.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 13 1938

Symphony Music Causes Dog to Fight Musician

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Aug. 13 (UP).—Jesus Maria San Roma, Puerto Rican pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and ~~Arthur~~ Fielder associate conductor, made it known today that they were the hosts of a large, exceedingly friendly Puerto Rican dog which they would be glad to give to any one.

San Roma was playing a modern Russian composition at a recital Wednesday night when he was startled by a long drawn howl as of a creature in extreme misery. He looked over toward the side of the concert hall whence the howl came and saw Fielder. San Roma was puzzled, but he nodded, smiled reassuringly and continued.

There was another, longer and louder howl. San Roma looked again and saw his friend bending over, engaged in a struggle. The pianist stopped playing and hurrying from the stage to his friend's assistance found Fielder struggling with a large, floppy dog.

The music having ended, the dog became quiet. Fielder explained that on his way from the airport where he arrived, he stopped at a restaurant to eat. The dog approached him, displaying the emotion of one who was at the end of a long search for a friend. Fielder fed him. When he reached his seat at the high school auditorium a block away, to hear San Roma play, Fielder looked down and saw the dog crouched beside him. At first, Fielder said, the dog was quiet but it began showing interest when the pianist played the Russian composition. He was not sure, he said, whether the howls were of approval or from aural pain.

Fielder and San Roma led the dog to the door and left it. The concert was resumed. But when the pianist and the conductor left, the dog was waiting for them.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 10 1938

Price-Jacking Reported To Festival Management

One Tourist Place in Stockbridge Said To Have Advanced Overnight Fee From $1.50 to $4

Several instances of price-jacking on the part of tourist places to take advantage of the tremendous demand for rooms in Stockbridge during the Festival period have come to the attention of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival management it was learned today.

Jumped $2.50

At one place in Stockbridge where the regular charge is $1.50 per person, the price was increased to $4 per night per person. In Lenox there was a similar case. In contrast, there is one desirable place near the center of Stockbridge where the charge of $4 per day, American plan, has not been changed.

The Festival office is listing places brought to its attention where prices have been increased unreasonably and these places are being removed from the recommended list of places to stay.

Crowd Expected

Music lovers planning to attend the second series of concerts opening tomorrow night at Tanglewood began to arrive in groups today and by tomorrow afternoon the influx is expected to be at its peak. Advance reservations for concert tickets and for accommodations indicate an audience equally as large and brilliant as the crowd that attended the inaugural of the new shed.

Rehearsals are being held daily by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. Because of the rehearsals and the great amount of work that has to be done on roads, the public has been asked by the Festival management not to ask admittance to Tanglewood. On concert days the place will be open several hours ahead of performances to permit inspection of the gardens and the shed.

The rehearsal Saturday morning at 10 will be for members and patrons only. It will be supervised just as closely as a performance.

Downes To Speak

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will resume his Festival lecture series at the Berkshire Museum tomorrow afternoon at 3. He will discuss the two Wagner selections to be played at tomorrow evening's concert.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 13 1938

ANOTHER CAPACITY CROWD EXPECTED

To Overflow Shed at Symphonic Festival

FIFTH CONCERT

Seats Still Available, However — Works of Hadley, Beethoven, and Tchaikovsky Tonight.

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky return to the stage of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood this evening for the fifth concert in the current festival it is expected they will be greeted by another capacity audience that will overflow the confines of the new building, according to the report from the Festival office today.

All reserved seats in the rear section have been sold for tonight's concert but there are reserved and unreserved seats still available in the front section and unreserved seats in the rear section. Music lovers planning to attend the concert are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge at once if they wish to make reservations.

There is equally as large a crowd that will turn out for the Sunday afternoon concert, the final one which begins at 3.30.

This evening's program includes Henry Hadley's "Angelus," Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth.

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, in charge of the parking crew at Tanglewood, gave the assurance today after inspecting the parking areas, that there is no shortage of suitable parking space and urged everyone to come early for preferred positions.

NEWS

147

AUG 11 1938

Fourth Symphony Concert Is Tonight At Tanglewood Shed

Program Will Be Devoted To Wagner Work

New Music Shed Dedicated At First Concert Of Series Last Thursday

6,000 AT OPENING

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Draw Huge Crowds

Dedication of the new music shed at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., took place Thursday night as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, opened its series of six concerts comprising the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Six thousand music-lovers from this area of New England packed the new $800,000 shed to capacity.

Emphasis On Music

Foregoing any elaborate inaugural ceremony, the program opened with a few remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York City and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, and by Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Orchestra.

The concert opened with the chorale and chorus from "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80 by J. S. Bach, with the orchestra and more than 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston participating. Four soloists, Anna Kaskas of Hartford, Jeannette Vreeland, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse participated as additions to the festival entertainers. The audience joined in singing one verse of the old Bach hymn.

Highlight Of Program

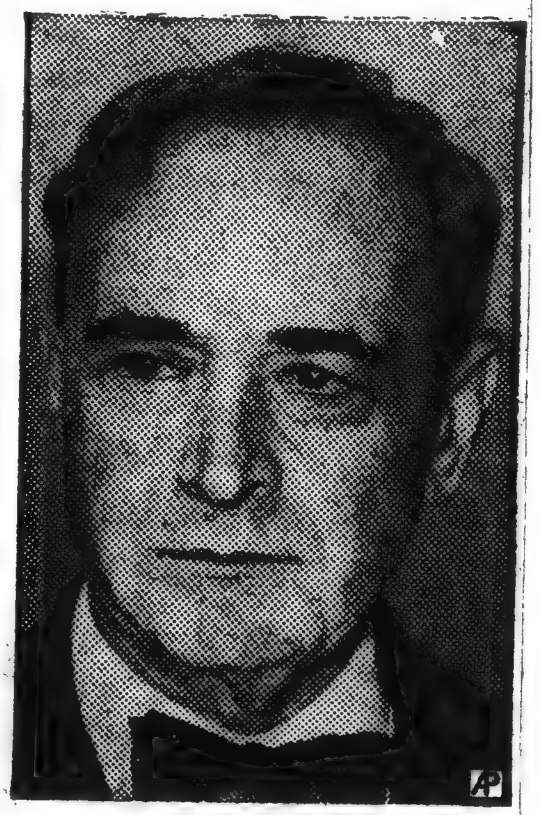
Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in D Minor marked the highlight of the program. Its four movements were: Allegro, ma non troppo, un poco maestoso; Molto vivace, presto; Adagio molto e cantabile; and Presto. This was augmented by the final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125, sung by the soloists and the Cecilia Chorus, Arthur Fiedler conducting.

The second concert was presented Saturday evening, with Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No 99; Debussy's "La Mer," three symphonic sketches; and Sibelius' symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39.

The third concert, given Sunday afternoon, included "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra (Koechel No. 525), by Mozart; Symphony in E Minor, No. 4, Op. 98, by Brahms; Music for the Theatre, by Copland; "Ma Mere l'Oye" ("Mother Goose") five children's pieces, by Ravel; and Suite No. 2 from the Ballet "Daphnis et Chloe," by Ravel.

Fourth Concert Tonight

Tonight the fourth concert in the series will be presented at 8:30. Devoted entirely to the work of Wagner, it will offer "Die Walkure," Act I, Final Scene, with Paul Althouse and Beal Hober singing the parts of Siegmund and Sieglinde respectively. "Siegfried," Act III (complete), will also be presented, with the following artists and parts: Norman Cordon, The Wanderer; Anna Kaskas, Erda; Paul Althouse, Siegfried; and Beal Hober, Brunnhilde.



AP

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 12 1938

Boston Symphony Opens All-Wagner Concert Series

Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the second series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphony Festival at Tanglewood Thursday night with an all-Wagner program, in which Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, baritone, participated. A beautiful moonlight evening and a program of works by a favorite composer drew another audience of more than 6000 to fill the new music shed.

The program opened with the final scene of Act 1 of "Die Walkure," in which Paul Althouse took the part of Siegmund and Beal Hober that of Sieglinde. The scene is that in which Siegmund sings his famous spring song and draws forth the sword Norhung.

Closely associated with the first part of the program was the second, the third act of "Siegfried". Although the two works were composed 13 years apart, the yare linked together musically as parts of the "Ring", and they combined to give a program well unified and at the same time free from monotony.

The third act of "Siegfried", in which Siegfried overcomes Wotan and awakens Brunnhilde from her sleep on the mountain top, offers the full wealth of Wagner's rich and varied compositional texture. The themes of the "Ring" succeed one another thruout the act, building up to the climax, when Siegfried and Brunnhilde embrace, and a new world has risen above that ruled by the old gods.

Last night's program displayed to particularly good advantage the perfect acousties of the new music shed. Wagner's music, with its textural variety and wide dynamic range, was carried to every part of the shed and even outside to those who preferred their music mixed with moonlight. The singers all projected their romantic parts with rich and impressive voices.

The enthusiastic reception of this concert as well as that of Beethoven's ninth symphony last week have given evidence that Berkshire audiences are more than willing to have singers share the new shed wiit htheir beloved Boston symphony, and future symphonies may see the development of choral and operatic work as tn integral part of the festival.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1938

Second Festival Series Attracts Many Newcomers To Tanglewood Music Shed

Koussevitzky Conducts for Large Attendance—Many First-Time Listeners Noted as Second Series Opens

Many newcomers were attracted to the second series in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood Shed last night.

Seated in the official box last night with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith were; Mrs. Herbert Darlington, Miss Sybil Darlington, Joseph Darlington, Miss Helen Knox, Charles Pritchett, Malcolm Vaughan, all of New York, and Moses Stevens, of Boston.

Mrs. Rockwood Gibbs had as guests Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hodge Jones, of Lebanon, N. Y. Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister, of Lenox, entertained in her box Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Catherine Geddes, both of Chappaqua, N. Y. They are the house guests for the weekend at Mrs. Hollister's home.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Gutterson and Miss Colleen Gutterson, of Rye, N. Y., George Carter, of Canaan, Conn., and Miss Priscilla Green, of Berlin, N. Y., were guests of Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, of Lenox.

R. Jay Flick, of Lenox, had as his guests, Miss Olive Whiting, of New York, Mrs. Margaret Flick Hoffmann, of Lenox, and Mrs. Henry Lee, from South Carolina.

Mrs. John Orb of Chicago, Mrs. James Oastler of Falls Village, Conn., and Mr. and Mrs. Emmeran Stoebner of New York were the guests of Mrs. E. E. Whitney. Guests in Mr. and Mrs. Laurence R. Connor's box included Mrs. Fred G. Crane, of Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer E. Dawson and George Parsons of Concord.

Owen Johnson's Daughter Present

Mr. and Mrs. George Godley from Greenwich, Conn., were among the guests in Mrs. William Knapp's box. Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson had their son-in-law and eldest daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Chambers with them, and also Miss Patsy Johnson, and Mrs. Frank Lawrance and Mrs. Charles Lawrance, of Islip, L. I., and Mrs. Joseph Frelinghuysen Jr., of Falls Village, Conn., were in the same box. They are all the Johnsons' houseguests for the weekend.

Guests of Mrs. George E. Judd of Boston in her box last night were Mrs. Judd's sister, Mrs. Frank Eliot, and daughter, Miss Mary Eliot, of Washington, D. C., Mrs. August Zinssen of New York City and Mrs. Charles McMullen of Niskayuna, N. Y.

—Mrs. Vernon Foster was among the new guests in Giraud Foster's box.

Madame Queena Mario a Guest

Besides Madame Queena Mario, in Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller's two boxes, were: Mme. Gerster-Gardini, New York City; Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley, the composer, New York City; Miss Netta Symes, Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. John B. Seaver, Batavia, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. J. M. McCord, Albany, N. Y.; Miss Elisabeth D. Gilmore, Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. M. P. Beach, Brewster, N. Y.; H. A. C. Burnett, Interlaken; Barth Brace, New York City; Mrs. Louise G. Downes, mother of music critic Olin Downes; Miss Audrey Bowman, Cleveland, Ohio; Jack Newman, Cleveland, Ohio; and Irving Kelsey, Pittsfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Aurelio Giorni, of New York and Northampton were in the box of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton. Mr. Giorni is formerly of the South Mountain Music Colony here.

President-emeritus of Williams College Harry A. Garfield, and Mrs. Garfield, of Williamstown, were in Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren's box. Prof. and Mrs. Richard A. Newhall, of Williams College, were also guests in the Warran box.

Henry B. Sawyer of Boston, who is vice-president of the Boston Symphony, and Mrs. Sawyer, had as their guests, Mr. and Mrs. John Noble of Cambridge, Mrs. Wallace Buell of this city, and Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate, of Pittsfield.

Capt. Hon. A. E. Brooks-Stone of London, Eng., Colonel and Mrs. R. B. Paddock of Chicago, Ill., and Mrs. Arthur P. Weeden, Providence, R. I., were the guests of Colonel and Mrs. Arthur D. Budd of Windsor.

With Edward A. Taft of Boston, a trustee of the orchestra, were Mrs. Houghton P. Metcalf, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. George S. Mumford Jr., Dover, and Mr. and Mrs. John Nightingale, Boston.

Miss Mary Parsons of Lenox, entertained Dr. and Mrs. Robert Cushman Murphy, New York, and Mrs. John Morgan, Rye, N. Y.

House Guests of Mrs. Griswold

House guests of Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Stockbridge, who were with her in her festival box last night, are: Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hunter, Miss Mary Alice Hunter, and John B. Hunter Jr. of Montclair, N. J.

In Mrs. Edward Davis' box, were Mrs. Edward P. Merwin, Stockbridge; Mrs. Carlton Shugg, North Adams; Mrs. Churchill Francis, Lee, and Miss Florence Cluett, Williamstown.

Mrs. John C. MacInnes of Philadelphia, Pa., and this city, and Mrs. George Emery of Seaford, Dela., were with Mrs. Edward A. Jones of this city, in her box.

Norman Tripps Guests of Barretts

Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Great Barrington, entertained in their boxes, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Clement, East Aurora, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. John H. Leeming, Westfield, N. J.; Mrs. Lufkin Hunsiker, Rye, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Vincent, Colebrook, Conn.; and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Tripp, Rye, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. George O. Forbes, and Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey T. Barnes of North Egremont, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Great Barrington.

With Mrs. Edwards Spencer of Lenox in her box were her three nieces, the Misses Joumine, Roseline and Pernette de Viry, James Stellman of Roseland, N. J., and Robert Scanlon of Stockbridge. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield had as their guests Mrs. John Counsell of Toronto, Canada, Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin Stoddard of Fairfield, Conn.

Dr. and Mrs. Robert C. Murphy of New York City and Mrs. Montgomery Hare of New York were the guests of Miss Mary Parsons of Lenox. Guests of Edward H. Cranwell, owner of the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club, were Rev. Lawrence F. O'Toole, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Lenox Dale, William Mangin of Lenox, Dr. T. E. Terrance of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Rev. Michael J. Leonard, pastor of St. Mark's Church, Pittsfield.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. S. Griswold of New York City, former residents of Lenox, had as guests in their two boxes, Mr. and Mrs. John Strong Griswold, Mrs. Dana T. Bartholomew, Mr. and Mrs. Maitland Griggs and Judge Alfred Cox and Mrs. Cox, all of New York.

With Mrs. J. Graham Parsons were Mrs. J. Graham Parsons Jr., of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Wanton C. Balis of Greenfield, Del. Others who had boxes for the second series were Mrs. James L. Narrick, Mrs. Frank C. Smith, Mrs. John A. Topping, Mrs. Walter Jennings, Major and Mrs. Harold J. Duffin, George L. K. Morris of Lenox, Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet and Ambassador-at-Large Norman H. Davis, of Stockbridge.

The fifth concert will comprise Henry Hadley's "Angelus" (Andante tranquillo) from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, Op. 60; Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, "Pastoral," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B Minor, "Pathetic," Op. 74.

The series will be complete Sunday afternoon with the sixth concert starting at 3:30. The program will include Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38, by Schumann; "Lieutenant Kije," "Orchestral Suite, Op. 60, by Prokofieff; and Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 73, by Brahms.

New Music Shed

The new music shed was built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country. Designed so that every one can hear well regardless of where his seats may be, it is expected to become the home of musical activities for years to come. The new roof is constructed so that the sound of rain falling on it will not disturb the audience or the musicians. Improvements have been made in the music shell to make it more comfortable for the musicians and to eliminate the glare from lights on the stage. Lights in the main part of the shed itself have been placed high so that the audience would not be annoyed by glare.

New and more comfortable chairs have been installed and further improvements have been scheduled for the near future. The sides of the shed are open so that the audience can peer out and also enjoy the breezees that come in across the gardens.

Traffic facilities have been considerably improved and as in the past are handled by the American Legion. There are new walks from the parking places to the shed itself and covered walks to safeguard the members of the audience in case of rain.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

A 18 1939

Local Notables On Normandie

Belgian Envoy, Barkleys, Arthur de Tittas Are Among Passengers.

When the Normandie steamed out to sea at noon yesterday, a number of Washington residents were on board. The Belgian Ambassador, Count van der Straten-Ponthoz, who left Washington Tuesday, will go directly to Belgium to join the countess and their family for several weeks.

Senator and Mrs. Alben Barkley were also on board. They are on their way to The Haugue, where Senator Barkley will preside at the Interparliamentary Conference beginning August 22.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur de Titta, who formerly lived here at the Wardman Park Hotel, were among other passengers. Leaving Washington several days ago they have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Reek at Altantic Beach, Long Island. They will go directly to Paris, where Mr. De Titta will assume his duties as assistant European director of Fox Movietone News.

Others on the Normandie are Lieut. Gen. Sir Reginald Hildyard, K. B. C., Governor General and Commander in Chief of Bermuda, who is accompanied by Lady Hildyard; Garrard Winston, attorney, former Undersecretary of the Treasury; Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Mrs. Koussevitsky.

Of social importance on the sailing list was the Earl of Carnarvon, of London, who has been visiting in New York. He is widely known there, where, in 1922, he married Catherine Tredick Wendell, daughter of the late Jacob Wendell, of New York. They were divorced in 1936.

NEWS
Millerton Ny
AUG 11 1938

147

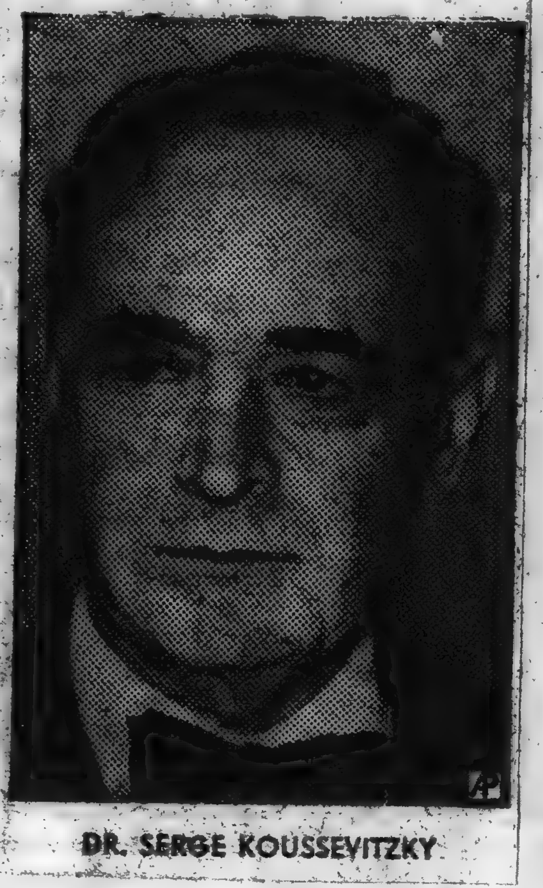
Fourth Symphony Concert Is Tonight At Tanglewood Shed

Program Will Be Devoted To Wagner Work

New Music Shed Dedicated At First Concert Of Series Last Thursday

6,000 AT OPENING

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Draw Huge Crowds



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Dedication of the new music shed at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., took place Thursday night as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, opened its series of six concerts comprising the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Six thousand music-lovers from this area of New England packed the new $800,000 shed to capacity.

Emphasis On Music

Foregoing any elaborate inaugural ceremony, the program opened with a few remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York City and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, and by Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Orchestra.

The concert opened with the chorale and chorus from "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80 by J. S. Bach, with the orchestra and more than 100 members of the Cecilia chorus of Boston participating. Four soloists, Anna Kaskas of Hartford, Jeannette Vreeland, Norman Cordon and Paul Althouse participated as additions to the festival entertainers. The audience joined in singing one verse of the old Bach hymn.

Highlight Of Program

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in D Minor marked the highlight of the program. Its four movements were: Allegro, ma non troppo, un poco maestoso; Molto vivace, presto; Adagio molto e cantabile; and Presto. This was augmented by the final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125, sung by the soloists and the Cecilia Chorus, Arthur Fiedler conducting.

The second concert was presented Saturday evening, with Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No. 99; Debussy's "La Mer," three symphonic sketches; and Sibelius' symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39.

The third concert, given Sunday afternoon, included "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra (Koechel No. 525), by Mozart; Symphony in E Minor, No. 4, Op. 98, by Brahms; Music for the Theatre, by Copland; "Ma Mere l'Oye" ("Mother Goose") five children's pieces, by Ravel; and Suite No. 2 from the Ballet "Daphnis et Chloe," by Ravel.

Fourth Concert Tonight

Tonight the fourth concert in the series will be presented at 8:30. Devoted entirely to the work of Wagner, it will offer "Die Walkure," Act I, Final Scene, with Paul Althouse and Beal Hober singing the parts of Siegmund and Sieglinde respectively. "Siegfried," Act III (complete), will also be presented, with the following artists and parts: Norman Cordon, The Wanderer; Anna Kaskas, Erda; Paul Althouse, Siegfried; and Beal Hober, Brunnhilde.

The fifth concert will comprise Henry Hadley's "Angelus" (Andante tranquillo) from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, Op. 60; Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, "Pastoral," and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 6, in B Minor, "Pathetic," Op. 74.

The series will be complete Sunday afternoon with the sixth concert starting at 3:30. The program will include Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38, by Schumann; "Lieutenant Kije," "Orchestral Suite, Op. 60, by Prokofieff; and Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 73, by Brahms.

New Music Shed

The new music shed was built with funds contributed by music lovers from all parts of the country. Designed so that every one can hear well regardless of where his seats may be, it is expected to become the home of musical activities for years to come. The new roof is constructed so that the sound of rain falling on it will not disturb the audience or the musicians. Improvements have been made in the music shell to make it more comfortable for the musicians and to eliminate the glare from lights on the stage. Lights in the main part of the shed itself have been placed high so that the audience would not be annoyed by glare.

New and more comfortable chairs have been installed and further improvements have been scheduled for the near future. The sides of the shed are open so that the audience can peer out and also enjoy the breezees that come in across the gardens.

Traffic facilities have been considerably improved and as in the past are handled by the American Legion. There are new walks from the parking places to the shed itself and covered walks to safeguard the members of the audience in case of rain.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 12 1938

Boston Symphony Opens All-Wagner Concert Series

Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the second series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphony Festival at Tanglewood Thursday night with an all-Wagner program, in which Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, baritone, participated. A beautiful moonlight evening and a program of works by a favorite composer drew another audience of more than 6000 to fill the new music shed.

The program opened with the final scene of Act 1 of "Die Walkure," in which Paul Althouse took the part of Siegmund and Beal Hober that of Sieglinde. The scene is that in which Siegmund sings his famous spring song and draws forth the sword Norhung.

Closely associated with the first part of the program was the second, the third act of "Siegfried". Although the two works were composed 13 years apart, the yare linked together musically as parts of the "Ring", and they combined to give a program well unified and at the same time free from monotony.

The third act of "Siegfried", in which Siegfried overcomes Wotan and awakens Brunnhilde from her sleep on the mountain top, offers the full wealth of Wagner's rich and varied compositional texture. The themes of the "Ring" succeed one another thruout the act, building up to the climax, when Siegfried and Brunnhilde embrace, and a new world has risen above that ruled by the old gods.

Last night's program displayed to particularly good advantage the perfect acoustics of the new music shed. Wagner's music, with its textural variety and wide dynamic range, was carried to every part of the shed and even outside to those who preferred their music mixed with moonlight. The singers all projected their romantic parts with rich and impressive voices.

The enthusiastic reception of this concert as well as that of Beethoven's ninth symphony last week have given evidence that Berkshire audiences are more than willing to have singers share the new shed wiit btheir beloved Boston symphony, and future symphonies may see the development of choral and operatic work as tn integral part of the festival.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1938

Second Festival Series Attracts Many Newcomers To Tanglewood Music Shed

Koussevitzky Conducts for Large Attendance—Many First-Time Listeners Noted as Second Series Opens

Many newcomers were attracted to the second series in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood Shed last night.

Seated in the official box last night with Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith were; Mrs. Herbert Darlington, Miss Sybil Darlington, Joseph Darlington, Miss Helen Knox, Charles Pritchett, Malcolm Vaughan, all of New York, and Moses Stevens, of Boston.

Mrs. Rockwood Gibbs had as guests Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hodge Jones, of Lebanon, N. Y. Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister, of Lenox, entertained in her box Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Catherine Geddes, both of Chappaqua, N. Y. They are the house guests for the weekend at Mrs. Hollister's home.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Gutterson and Miss Colleen Gutterson, of Rye, N. Y., George Carter, of Canaan, Conn., and Miss Priscilla Green, of Berlin, N. Y., were guests of Mrs. Carlos M. deHeredia, of Lenox.

R. Jay Flick, of Lenox, had as his guests, Miss Olive Whiting, of New York, Mrs. Margaret Flick Hoffmann, of Lenox, and Mrs. Henry Lee, from South Carolina.

Mrs. John Orb of Chicago, Mrs. James Oastler of Falls Village, Conn., and Mr. and Mrs. Emmeran Stoebner of New York were the guests of Mrs. E. E. Whitney. Guests in Mr. and Mrs. Laurence R. Connor's box included Mrs. Fred G. Crane, of Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer E. Dawson and George Parsons of Concord.

Owen Johnson's Daughter Present

Mr. and Mrs. George Godley from Greenwich, Conn., were among the guests in Mrs. William Knapp's box. Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson had their son-in-law and eldest daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Chambers with them, and also Miss Patsy Johnson, and Mrs. Frank Lawrance and Mrs. Charles Lawrance, of Islip, L. I., and Mrs. Joseph Frelinghuysen Jr., of Falls Village, Conn., were in the same box. They are all the Johnsons' houseguests for the weekend.

Guests of Mrs. George E. Judd of Boston in her box last night were Mrs. Judd's sister, Mrs. Frank Eliot, and daughter, Miss Mary Eliot, of Washington, D. C., Mrs. August Zinssen of New York City and Mrs. Charles McMullen of Niskayuna, N. Y.

—Mrs. Vernon Foster was among the new guests in Giraud Foster's box.

Madame Queena Mario a Guest

Besides Madame Queena Mario, in Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller's two boxes, were: Mme. Gerster-Gardini, New York City; Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelley, the composer, New York City; Miss Netta Symes, Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. John B. Seaver, Batavia, N. Y.; Dr. and Mrs. J. M. McCord, Albany, N. Y.; Miss Elisabeth D. Gilmore, Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. M. P. Beach, Brewster, N. Y.; H. A. C. Burnett, Interlaken; Barth Brace, New York City; Mrs. Louise G. Downes, mother of music critic Olin Downes; Miss Audrey Bowman, Cleveland, Ohio; Jack Newman, Cleveland, Ohio; and Irving Kelsey, Pittsfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Aurelio Giorni, of New York and Northampton were in the box of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton. Mr. Giorni is formerly of the South Mountain Music Colony here.

President-emeritus of Williams College Harry A. Garfield, and Mrs. Garfield, of Williamstown, were in Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren's box. Prof. and Mrs. Richard A. Newhall, of Williams College, were also guests in the Warran box.

Henry B. Sawyer of Boston, who is vice-president of the Boston Symphony, and Mrs. Sawyer, had as their guests, Mr. and Mrs. John Noble of Cambridge, Mrs. Wallace Buell of this city, and Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate, of Pittsfield.

Capt. Hon. A. E. Brooks-Stone of London, Eng., Colonel and Mrs. R. B. Paddock of Chicago, Ill., and Mrs. Arthur P. Weeden, Providence, R. I., were the guests of Colonel and Mrs. Arthur D. Budd of Windsor.

With Edward A. Taft of Boston, a trustee of the orchestra, were Mrs. Houghton P. Metcalf, Providence, R. I.; Mrs. George S. Mumford Jr., Dover, and Mr. and Mrs. John Nightingale, Boston.

Miss Mary Parsons of Lenox, entertained Dr. and Mrs. Robert Cushman Murphy, New York, and Mrs. John Morgan, Rye, N. Y.

House Guests of Mrs. Griswold

House guests of Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Stockbridge, who were with her in her festival box last night, are: Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hunter, Miss Mary Alice Hunter, and John B. Hunter Jr. of Montclair, N. J.

In Mrs. Edward Davis' box, were Mrs. Edward P. Merwin, Stockbridge; Mrs. Carlton Shugg, North Adams; Mrs. Churchill Francis, Lee, and Miss Florence Cluett, Williamstown.

Mrs. John C. MacInnes of Philadelphia, Pa., and this city, and Mrs. George Emery of Seaford, Dela., were with Mrs. Edward A. Jones of this city, in her box.

Norman Tripps Guests of Barretts

Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Great Barrington, entertained in their boxes, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Clement, East Aurora, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. John H. Leeming, Westfield, N. J.; Mrs. Lufkin Hunsiker, Rye, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Vincent, Colebrook, Conn.; and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Tripp, Rye, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. George O. Forbes, and Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey T. Barnes of North Egremont, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Great Barrington.

With Mrs. Edwards Spencer of Lenox in her box were her three nieces, the Misses Joumine, Roseline and Pernette de Viry, James Stellman of Roseland, N. J., and Robert Scanlon of Stockbridge. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield had as their guests Mrs. John Counsell of Toronto, Canada, Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin Stoddard of Fairfield, Conn.

Dr. and Mrs. Robert C. Murphy of New York City and Mrs. Montgomery Hare of New York were the guests of Miss Mary Parsons of Lenox. Guests of Edward H. Cranwell, owner of the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club, were Rev. Lawrence F. O'Toole, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Lenox Dale, William Mangin of Lenox, Dr. T. E. Terrance of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Rev. Michael J. Leonard, pastor of St. Mark's Church, Pittsfield.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. S. Griswold of New York City, former residents of Lenox, had as guests in their two boxes, Mr. and Mrs. John Strong Griswold, Mrs. Dana T. Bartholomew, Mr. and Mrs. Maitland Griggs and Judge Alfred Cox and Mrs. Cox, all of New York.

With Mrs. J. Graham Parsons were Mrs. J. Graham Parsons Jr., of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Wanton C. Balis of Greenfield, Del. Others who had boxes for the second series were Mrs. James L. Narrick, Mrs. Frank C. Smith, Mrs. John A. Topping, Mrs. Walter Jennings, Major and Mrs. Harold J. Duffin, George L. K. Morris of Lenox, Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet and Ambassador-at-Large Norman H. Davis, of Stockbridge.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

AUG 18 1938

Local Notables On Normandie

Belgian Envoy, Barkleys, Arthur de Tittas Are Among Passengers.

When the Normandie steamed out to sea at noon yesterday, a number of Washington residents were on board. The Belgian Ambassador, Count van der Straten-Ponthoz, who left Washington Tuesday, will go directly to Belgium to join the countess and their family for several weeks.

Senator and Mrs. Alben Barkley were also on board. They are on their way to The Haugue, where Senator Barkley will preside at the Interparliamentary Conference beginning August 22.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur de Titta, who formerly lived here at the Wardman Park Hotel, were among other passengers. Leaving Washington several days ago they have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Reek at Altantic Beach, Long Island. They will go directly to Paris, where Mr. De Titta will assume his duties as assistant European director of Fox Movietone News.

Others on the Normandie are Lieut. Gen. Sir Reginald Hildyard, K. B. C., Governor General and Commander in Chief of Bermuda, who is accompanied by Lady Hildyard; Garrard Winston, attorney, former Undersecretary of the Treasury; Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Mrs. Koussevitsky.

Of social importance on the sailing list was the Earl of Carnarvon, of London, who has been visiting in New York. He is widely known there, where, in 1922, he married Catherine Tredick Wendell, daughter of the late Jacob Wendell, of New York. They were divorced in 1936.

148

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 16 1938

Berkshire Festival

The musical resources of America are rich and extensive to a degree not realized by most Americans. When Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned from a European trip some time ago, he reported that French musicians had urged him to bring his orchestra to their country; told him that Europe was without the fine symphonic orchestras which are numerous in America.

With the political disturbances in Europe, the musical world has suffered there. The Salzburg Festival has lost its prestige.

Therefore, it is encouraging to see that similar movements have begun in the United States. Although not all of them will develop into other Salzburgs of the past, a number of them should develop into musically valuable institutions.

Among the most successful is the Berkshire Festival conducted at Lenox by Koussevitsky. The season this Summer has been extremely popular, and there is talk of extending the time of the festival next year.

Due to the benevolence of a number of wealthy persons interested in music, to the genius of a number of orchestra conductors, and to the radio, which broadcasts much good music, Americans are becoming keenly aware and appreciative of first-rate music. The musical world has taken on new life, and seems to be in one of its most vital periods. Good music is no longer isolated to a few cities. It is spreading over the land.

RADIO GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 27 1938

TWO of the world's finest violinists have brought forth two most interesting violin concertos on our recent record lists. Musically, the most exciting is the Prokofieff Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, played by the great Jascha Heifetz with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor Album 450. $6.50).

Prokofieff, with Shostakovitch, is the foremost proponent of modern-day Russian music, and has been prone to overmodernism or to a tongue-in-the-cheek classicism. (In another current release, a score to a Soviet film called "Lieutenant Kije," played by the Boston Symphony, he disappoints us considerably. (Victor Album 459. $6.50.)

But in this violin concerto, which he wrote in 1935, Prokofieff seems to have found himself. It is a brilliant and moving work, with the orchestra playing a magnificent counterpart to the solo instrument throughout. The way Mr. Heifetz plays it leaves no doubt that he realizes he has something really great and makes the most of it. Heifetz considers the concerto one of the world's six greatest, and after a hearing or two the listener should agree.

The other concerto is the much-publicized "lost" Concerto in D Minor by Robert Schumann. In reality, it was never lost at all but left to the violinist Joachim, who willed that it should not be played for 100 years after his death in 1856. But through the persuasion of that remarkable youngster, Yehudi Menuhin, it was released for performance and publication late last year. At last it comes to us in recorded form in Victor Album 451. ($7.00.)

Menuhin introduced it to America and has played it with the leading symphony orchestras in the country. The recording is with the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York, John Barbirolli conducting; and it is faultless. Schumann's music reflects his sunny nature, and this work is warm, happy and bright . . . particularly in the melodic second movement. To say that young Yehudi plays it well is superfluous.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

AUG 19 1938

MME. ADAMOWSKA DEAD IN RUMSON; PADEREWSKI PUPIL

The Only Woman Taught by Pianist—Appeared With Noted Orchestras

Special Dispatch to New York Post

RUMSON, N. J., Aug. 19.—Mme. Antoinette Szumowska Adamowska, Ignace Jan Paderewski's only woman pupil and a concert pianist and teacher of note, died here yesterday at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Guido Pantaleoni Jr. Mme. Adamowska, who was seventy, had been ill since July 8.

Born in Lublin, Poland, she made her concert debut at the age of eighteen with the Musical Society of Warsaw. With her husband, the late Josef Adamowski, she came to this country forty years ago. Mr. Adamowski was a cellist and a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He served as a trustee of the Paderewski prize fund for musicians.

Mme. Adamowska once received a diamond brooch for playing before the Czar of Russia and his court. She had played with the London Symphony Orchestra under Henschel and Henry Wood, with a symphony orchestra under Theodore Thomas in Chicago and with the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch.

With her husband and his brother, Timothee Adamowski, she played in a trio which became well known throughout this country and Europe.

For several years she taught piano at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. One of her pupils was Jesus Maria Sanroma, soloist with the Boston Symphony during the World War.

Surviving in addition to Mrs. Pantaleoni are a son, Phaddeus Adamowski of Gydnia, Poland, three sisters and a brother.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 12 1938

Final Berkshire Programs of '38 Season Staged

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 11 (AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival, only venture of its sort in America which comes in two separate parts, resumed concerts tonight in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, between here and Lenox.

More than 19,000 persons heard the first set of three concerts last week by the Boston symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. With good weather conditions as many, or more, are expected for the last three programs. After tonight these will be played Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Tonight's music included the last scene of the first act of Wagner's "Die Walkure," and the third act complete of the same composer's "Siegfried." The soloists were Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, baritone.

Saturday's music will include the Beethoven "Pastoral" symphony and Tchaikowsky's "Pathetique" symphony. The concert is given in honor of the late Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival, and the andante from his third symphony will be played in his memory.

The Hadley Foundation will send representatives. A cable of good wishes has been received from Jean Sibelius and Inez Hadley, widow of the composer, who is conferring with Sibelius in Finland.

The concluding program, Sunday afternoon, will include Schumann's first symphony in B flat, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the second Brahms symphony.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 12 1938

COMPLETE WAGNER PROGRAM HEARD IN SYMPHONIC SERIES

Excerpts From 'The Ring,' Part of 'Die Walkuere,' Third Act of 'Siegfried' Given at Stockbridge

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 11—The second series of concerts in the fifth Berkshire Symphonic festival opened tonight at Tanglewood with a Wagner program given by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, and four solo singers—Paul Althouse, Norman Cordon, Beal Hober and Anna Kaskas. It was made up of two generous excerpts from the "Ring"—the final scene from the first act of "Die Walkuere," in which Siegmund sings his famous love song and draws the magic sword Nothung from the tree in which it is embedded, and the whole of the third act of "Siegfried," in which Wotan vainly strives against the twilight of the Norse gods, and the youthful Siegfried, sword in hand, makes his way to the mountaintop where the Valkyrie Bruennhilde, in profound sleep, lies within the protecting circle of the magic fire, to be awakened with a kiss.

These two excerpts, from works composed 13 years apart, fit together admirably, and the program escaped both the Scylla and Charybdis of concert productions of Wagner's music. A miscellaneous selection from many operas is irritating and frivolous, and a concert version of a complete music drama is apt to be tedious. But the scenes from the "Ring" presented tonight fit together well and even give a certain artistic unity, while they contain little music that depends on scenery and action for its effect.

Wagner's veto on the performance of his colossal music dramas except in their original and complete form has, in fact, broken down, and it is unlikely that he would maintain it, if he were living today, in the face of greatly changed conditions. Much might be said of the enormous growth of interest in his music which has come in the past three-quarters of a century from the labors of orchestral conductors who have disregarded the composer's wishes and have been presenting his music to delighted audiences of people who seldom or never had a chance to hear and see a stage version.

In this pioneer work Theodore Thomas used to find that next to the symphonies of Beethoven the people most wanted the thrilling dramatic music of Wagner, and while America has made great strides musically since those far-off days Mr Koussevitzky still finds the formula a good one for holding the interest of the audiences of more than 6000 people who attend the Berskhire festival.

Even listeners who know intimately the greatest symphonies and the Wagner music dramas confess to a new thrill in hearing them in such beautiful surroundings and played in an acoustically perfect open-air auditorium by an orchestra inspired to do its utmost. In this music shed even the most delicate effects of strings and solo instruments are clearly heard, and, at the same time, the heroic grandeur of Wagner's orchestration can be brought out freely with none of the cramping limitations which most closed auditoriums impose.

Cool, Still Evening

The weather, too, was perfect in every respect—cool, still, and dry. The musicians celebrated the change by shifting to conventional black, which made the picture on the stage more formal. If they played no better than at some of the previous concerts they certainly played with more comfort and pleasure; a number of the players of stringed instruments could be seen testing and scrutinizing them for possible damage from prolonged damp, which often softens glue and lets joints spring apart.

Althouse Sings "Siegmund"

Much of the success of the performance should be credited to the soloists, all of whom were well fitted to their parts. Paul Althouse, one of the foremost American tenors, sang Siegmund's love song with beautiful cantabile, and put dramatic energy into the role of the young Siegfried taunting the aged Wotan and forcing his way to the sleeping Bruennhilde. The soprano, Beal Hober, has a less beautiful voice, but it has the true Wagnerian quality and volume and she made her part telling. Norman Cordon, whose singing of the bass part in Beethoven's ninth symphony won much admiration, gave the part of Wotan with dignity and impressiveness. Anna Kaskas, a young singer of great promise, made the dim-bulb part of Erda, the earth spirit, unexpectedly effective by the rich and interesting timbre of her voice. The audience again was very large, and fully as enthusiastic as at any of the other concerts.

Almost 6000 Hear Singers, Orchestra

Pittsfield, Aug. 11 — Another audience of close to 6000 persons heard the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzy conducting, in the fourth Berkshire Music festival concert at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, tonight. Four vocalists shared in the acclaim in an all-Wagner program. Dr Koussevitzky and the soloists were recalled again and again in an extraordinary demonstration at the close.

The weather was perfect with a full moon following a day of intermittent sunshine and rain. Late in the afternoon the wind changed into the west and many ticketholders, who had expected to remain at home, changed their minds at the last minute and were present. On account of the heavy showers of the past 24 hours, parking again became a real problem in the limited areas available, and a number of automobiles were stalled when they tried to leave the field. However, the state police under Lieut John P. Sullivan and Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre in charge of parking, made the most of the opportunities offered and there was comparatively little delay in getting away after the concert. A portion of the lawn near the home of Supt Ward E. Gaston was used by about 300 car owners.

The fifth concert will be offered Saturday night at 8.30.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 12 1938

Festival Resumed In Berkshire Shed

Boston Symphony Performs Wagnerian Selections in Concert Series.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP).—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, only venture of its sort in America which comes in two separate parts, resumed concerts Thursday evening in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, between here and Lenox.

More than 19,000 persons heard the first set of three concerts last week by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. With good weather, as many, or more, had been expected for the last three programs. The last two will be played tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon.

Thursday evening's music included the last scene of the first act of Wagner's "Die Walkure" and the third act complete of the same composer's "Siegfried." The soloists were Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, baritone.

Tomorrow's music will include the Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony and Tchaikowsky's Pathetique symphony. The concert is given in honor of the late Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival, and the andante from his Third symphony will be played in his memory.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1938

Second Berkshire Series Will Be Opened Tonight

Koussevitzky Will Conduct All-Wagner Program

Special to the Herald Tribune

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 10. —The second series of concerts in ne Berkshire Music Festival will pen at Tanglewood tomorrow night ith an all-Wagner program by the oston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky as conductor. dvance sale of tickets indicates nother capacity house.

The festival management has reived a cable of "best wishes" from n Sibelius, Finnish composer, and rs. Inez Hadley, widow of Henry adley, who is the guest of the mposer at Helsinki. Mr. Hadley st suggested holding a Berkshire stival.

RADIO DIAL
CINCINNATI, O.

AUG 12 1938

FIRST CONCERT IN BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TO BE ON NBC

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 12 1938

FESTIVAL MAKES EXCURSION INTO OPERATIC FIELD

Metropolitan Singers Heard With Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 12—Opening the second series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival made its first excursion into the realm of opera last night.

In this the association was aided by three artists of the Metropolitan Opera Association, Paul Althouse, tenor; Anna Kaskas, contralto, and Norman Cordon, baritone, and by Beal Hober, soprano.

Two episodes from Wagner's "Ring" cycle were given, the finale of Act I of "Die Walkure" and the entire third act of "Siegfried" were chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for this program. No happier choice seems possible for it provided outstanding opportunities for soloists and orchestra.

There is magnificient music in "Die Walkure" from the opening vivid portrayal of the tempest to the final intoxicating beauty of the lovely melody, well known as the "Spring Song."

Mr. Althouse is regarded as the finest tenor interpreter in the works of Wagner to be found in this country and we are among those who feel his equal cannot be found anywhere. He sang with vitality, warmth and understanding. The final duet with Miss Hober was a superb achievement. Miss Hober's voice was adequate to meet most of the cruel demands made upon it. She gave a distinguished performance of the role of Brunhilde in the "Siegfried" excerpt, matching in volume and intensity Mr. Althouse's interpretation of the youthful Siegfried.

The orchestra has accomplished some remarkable playing during these concerts but tonight it seemed to reach an even higher level of achievement. The tempestuous prelude introducing the third act of "Siegfried" was tonally thrilling. The rhythm of "The Ride" and the motives of the "Distress of the Gods," "The Rhine," "The Fall of the Gods," "Sleep," "Fate" and "Wotan's Spear" were played with singular beauty. The fire music was vivid and exciting.

Anna Kaskas devoted her opulent tones to the music of the earth goddess "Erda" and through skillful coloring of tone she provided a moving picture of the weary goddess. Norman Cordon provided some excellent singing as he voiced the music of Wotan.

Recalled Many Times

The huge audience, quite as large as any during the first series of concerts, thrilled to the music, and soloists, orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky were recalled many times.

It is understood that the stage of the music shed is suitable for operatic performances and with the plaudits of the audience ringing in his ears it is possible that Dr. Koussevitzky may plan a more ambitious operatic performance next season. It must be noted that all the singers tonight were Americans. There is no dearth of fine American voices and Tanglewood seems the logical place to hear them, for Tanglewood is American to the core. It must not, however, become a training school for young singers as some of our festivals have become.

Saturday night the orchestral program will include a tribute to Henry Hadley, the "Angelus" from his Third Symphony; the Sixth Symphony of Beethoven and the Sixth Symphony of Tschaikowsky.

Boston Symphony To Inaugurate Fifth Annual Festival

The opening concert of America's outstanding Summer music festival will be brought to NBC's coast-to-coast audience when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates its Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Thursday, August 4. The complete two-hour program, starting at 7:30 p. m. (E.S.T.), will be broadcast over NBC, including WCKY, WLS and WSM.

Two choruses from Bach's cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, will comprise the program, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be assisted by Boston's noted Cecilia Society Chorus. The soloists in the final choral movement of the Beethoven Symphony will be Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, basso. Olin Downes, distinguished music reviewer for the New York Times, will discuss the Beethoven work during intermission.

The first half of the program will open with the first chorus of the Bach cantata, and close with the famous choral from the same work, in the singing of which the audience will be invited to join. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give brief addresses dedicating the new open-air auditorium just completed to house this annual festival.

The auditorium, built on the historic farm where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," nestles beside a lake in the picturesque Berkshires between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts, and accomodates an audience of more than five thousand. The four previous festivals were performed under canvas on Tanglewood Farm, which last year was deeded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent site for this annual Summer series, which is rapidly becoming the American rival of Europe's Salzburg Music Festivals.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

AUG 12 1938

SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL STARTS SECOND PART

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 11 (AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, only venture of its sort in America which comes in two separate parts, resumed concerts tonight in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, between here and Lenox.

More than 19,000 persons heard the first set of three concerts last week by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. With good weather conditions as many, or more, are expected for the last three programs. After tonight these will be played Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Tonight's music included the last scene of the first act of Wagner's Die Walkure and the complete third act of the same composer's Siegfried. The soloists were Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon baritone.

Saturday's music will include the Beethoven Pastoral symphony and Tchaikowsky's Pathetique symphony. The concert is given in honor of the late Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival and the andante from his third symphony will be played in his memory.

The Hadley Foundation will send representatives, a cable of good wishes has been received from Jean Sibelius and Ines Hadley, widow of the composer, who is conferring with Sibelius in Finland.

The concluding program, Sunday afternoon, will include Schumann's first symphony in B flat, Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije suite, and the second Brahms symphony.

HARRISBURG, PA.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 11 1938

Sally Harris Letter

DEAR MARIAN:

Such an interesting letter has come to me from George King Raudenbush, conductor of the Harrisburg Symphony Orchestra, that I quote it for you, knowing that you, too, will enjoy reading it.

—

Mr. Raudenbush, writing from Lenox, Mass., encloses the program of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival now in progress at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, between Stockbridge and Lenox, and with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky as the great attraction.

Mr. Raudenbush writes:

"You would be enthusiastic about this music festival. Mrs. Raudenbush and I have had a most interesting time here with Olin Downes (music critic of the New York Times), who lectures on the programs, and with Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitsky.

"Dr. Koussevitsky is such a great artist and such a fine man. Musicians are drawn here from far and near and the audience comes from every state in the Union. I think it will become in time the American Salzburg Festival. At any rate, I saw many people here who have formerly gone each year to Salzburg or Bayreuth.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

✓

AUG 10 1938

Berkshire Opens Thursday Night

YOU CAN hear the Berkshire festival at home by tuning in on the NBC network. The complete two-hour program starting at Stockbridge at 8:30 p. m. is to be broadcast.

Two choruses from Bach's cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, will comprise the program, and the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Koussevitsky, will be assisted by Boston's noted Cecilia Society chorus.

The soloists in the final choral movement of the Beethoven symphony will be Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, Bridgeport-born contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, Basso. (Miss Kaskas also will be soloist in the Ninth at Silvermine). Olin Downes will dsicuss the Beethoven work during intermission.

The first half of the program will open with the first chorus of the Bach cantata, and close with the famous choral from the same work, in the singing of which the audience will be invited to join. Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will give brief addresses dedicating the new open-air auditorium.

The auditorium, built on the historic farm where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales," is beside a lake in the picturesque Berkshires between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., and accommodates an audience of more than 5,000. The four previous festivals were performed under canvas on Tanglewood Farm, which last year was deeded to the Boston symphony as a permanent site for this annual summer series

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 12 1938

ALL BOXES FILLED FOR SECOND PART OF MUSIC EVENT

Many Visitors of Society Importance On Hand for Closing Half of Symphonic Festival

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 11—All boxes were filled again and there were many visitors of society importance at the opening tonight of the second series of three Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood, Stockbridge. Many in tonight's audience were present at the first of the second series of last year's festival when a terrific shower with rain and hail pelting down on a circus tent at Tanglewood interrupted Dr Koussevitzky's Wagner program. The demand for a new music shed started that evening.

Occupying two boxes tonight with Mr and Mrs William E. S. Griswold, who have two cottages at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox, over the weekend, were Mr and Mrs William E. S. Griswold, Jr., Mr and Mrs John Sloane Griswold, Dwight Griswold, Mr and Mrs Edward S. Harkness, Mr and Mrs Maitland P. Griggs, Mr and Mrs Dana T. Bartholomew of New York, Judge and Mrs Alfred C. Coxe of Old Lyme, Ct.

Among others having boxes for the first time were Mrs Arnold Whitridge, Mrs Walter Jennings of Cold Spring Harbor, and her sister, Mrs Eugene Lenthilon of Paris; Mrs John A. Topping, Mrs John C. Breckenridge, Mrs Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs Alan M. Limburg, Paul D. Cravath.

Mrs John R. Drexel, Jr., had in her box Mr and Mrs William Merriam Crane, Jr., Capt James C. Fargo of New York, Miss Janet Adamson of Philadelphia.

With Mr and Mrs Bruce Crane, were Mr and Mrs Frederick Fisher, Mr and Mrs Aurelio Giorni of New York; Judson Bemis of Boston and Miss Elizabeth Long of Hartford, sister of Mrs Crane.

In the box with Mr and Mrs Norman H. Davis were Mr and Mrs John Clarkson Potter, Mr and Mrs J. Paschall Davis, Mr and Mrs Goode P. Davis.

Mr and Mrs Morgan Wing, Mr and Mrs Henry Lewis, 3d, of New York, and Miss Maude Preece of Washington were with Miss Louisa G. Ludlow.

With Mr and Mrs John D. Kennedy in a box were Mr and Mrs Seymour L. Cromwell, Mr and Mrs Alexander Douglas Knox and Mrs Kennedy's son, Herbert Parsons Patterson.

Mr and Mrs William Barclay Parsons, Jr., of New York, Mrs Lawrence K. Lunt and Miss Hilary T. Lunt of Concord, were with Mr and Mrs Shaun Kelly.

Miss Mary Parsons had as box guests, Dr and Mrs Robert Cushman Murphy, Mrs Montgomery Hare and Mrs Laurence F. Rainsford.

Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre was accompanied by Mrs William K. du Pont of Wilmington, Del., and Dr Clinton R. Barker of New York.

With Assistant Secretary of State Adolf A. Berle, Jr., and Mrs Berle, were Mr and Mrs Blake L. Lawrence of Syosset, L. I.

Guests of Mr and Mrs Donald F. McPherson were Mrs John P. Hazen Perry of Rosebrook farm, New Canaan, Ct., Mrs Mahlon Ogden West, Victor Elting, John P. Elting and Donald F. McPherson, Jr., of Chicago.

Mr and Mrs Stuart C. Henry, Miss Judith Colt and Samuel G. Colt, Jr., were in Mr and Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt's box.

Also noticed were Baroness Clemens Von Kettler of Paris, and Mrs James W. Markoe who are at Berkshire Hunt and Country club; Mrs Schuyler Schieffelin, Miss Mary S. Schieffelin, Mr and Mrs Charles W. Kellogg, who are at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge; Mrs Cornelia Colton Hollister and Miss Olive Colton, who are at Curtis hotel, and Miss Ethel L. Haven who is at Lenox club.

At Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, are Mr and Mrs Henry B. Johnson, Mr and Mrs Edgar L. Hoag of New York, Mr and Mrs Julian Olney of White Plains, Mr and Mrs John W. Greene of Rye, N. Y.

Mrs Donald W. Brown of New York is with Mrs Nina L. Duryea at The Mill, Stockbridge.

150

HERALD

[illegible], Mass

AUG 1 1 1938

FESTIVAL AT BERKSHIRE IS BIG SUCCESS

Total Attendance At Tanglewood Will Reach 40,000 It Is Estimated

By Frances O'Connell Corridan

Tonight among the moonlit Berkshires, up and down the undulating trails that lead to Tanglewood, music lovers by the thousand will be converging upon that summer shrine of the symphony, the new music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge.

One series of the 1938 concerts is already finished. On the opening night a week ago, six thousand people thronged into the music shed. On Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon increasing crowds attended, until a total of twenty thousand had gone down the ramps and across the grennsward, into the new summer home of music to see and hear the classic Boston Symphony Orchestra play traditional and modern music under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

As it is New England's greatest contribution to musical history, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the logical aggregation of virtuosi to hold forth at Tanglewood, yet it is possible that any other of the four or five most famous American orchestras could, under the influence of the surroundings, the leadership, and the enthusiasm that features the Berkshire Festival, take on the coloring that make the Boston Symphony Orchestra blend so flawlessly into the occasion. However that may be, there is and could be but one perfect orchestra leader for these concerts, and that is he—Serge Koussevitsky—who wields the baton to summon the magic music that mounts to the skies above Tanglewood in the month of August.

As inexorable but less exquisite in precision than Stokowski; as indomitable but less engaging in his artistry than Ormandy; less of a tormented dark angel than Toscanini, directing with a flaming sword the way to peace, Koussevitsky has characteristics not evident in these world-famous men that make him the conductor by divine right for the outdoor symphonic series in the Berkshires.

Here in these hills whose hearts are ribbed with enduring rock; where the red Indian roamed at will; where the white settlers fought for freedom against tyranny even before the Revolution; where in the quiet years, culture took root, coming to flower and fruit in the arts of Hawthorne, Bryant, Lowell, Holmes, the Sedgwicks and countless others, Koussevitsky is a part of the landscape and the story. His dynamic strength, his love of freedom, his passion for brotherhood and for human advancement, his masterful genius making itself felt in his interpretation of the great composers as he gives their music to his spellbound audiences, are as much at home in the New England hills as if they were a product of her quarries, her rivers or her fields, and his symphonic music is as natural to its setting as the breeze blowing through the trees and across the starry lake.

Bach's First Chorus and Chorale was the gesture that began the concerts on August 4. Most of the audience felt, however, that the Festival actually started only with Dr. Koussevitsky's down beat for the Beethoven Symphony No. 9 which made up the second part of the initial program.

The audience, by invitation, joined in singing the chorale, and, whatever was lost in artistry here, was, by unifying the interdependent parts of the festival, made up in the intense audience—satisfaction of belonging, as well as being present. It was a splendid and productive evidence of the Koussevitsky intelligence.

The Ninth Symphony was the inspired selection for the opening night. It gave to those who could attend but once the largest measure of unforgettable music that can be carried away from one concert. It pledged to those expecting to return for the remaining concerts the anticipated assurance that all the resources of the conductor of the musicians, the instruments and the location were to be carried to their zenith in making the 1938 Festival the finest Tanglewood has known.

The Ninth Symphony of Beethoven calls on quartet and chorus in the Fourth Movement, after the mighty First, the irresistibly rhymic Second and the intricate, indescribably lovely Third Movement, leave one wondering what more could possibly follow. And when what does follow—orchestra and voice together—was revealed last Thursday night, Tanglewood, musically, came into its own. Here were no corners however distant. confining music—as heard by those present—to the four walls of the most spacious auditorium.

At Tanglewood, there are no walls; and as the inspired strains escaped to the open air, they mounted to the stars; they surged along the paths between the planets, becoming in the truest sense, the "music of the spheres."

The Saturday evening program included the Haydn Symphony in E-Flat, Debussy's "La Mer" and the Sibelius Symphony in E Minor, numbers with which Koussevitsky aroused his hearers to a pitch of exhausting excitement.

Sunday's program, skillfully varied. was full of grace, of charm and fascination, running the gamut of the years from Brahms to Ravel, the amazing French composer who only recently died.

Tonight's program is entirely Wagnerian, inevitably majestic, resplendent and triumphant. It will draw a tremendous crowd, for if ever a Titan can be said to be popular, Wagner with his Lohengrin and Siegfried has reached that stage among those who know, as well as among those who only love, music.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 12 1938

Berkshire Festival Makes First Excursion Into Opera

Metropolitan Singers Assist Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 11—Opening the second series of concerts at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival made its first excursion into the realm of opera tonight.

In this the association was aided by three artists of the Metropolitan Opera Association, Paul Althouse, tenor; Anna Kaskas, contralto, and Norman Cordon, baritone, and by Beal Hober, soprano.

Two episodes from Wagner's "Ring" cycle were given, the finale of Act I of "Die Walkure" and the entire third act of "Siegfried" were chosen by Dr. Koussevitzky for this program. No happier choice seems possible for it provided outstanding opportunities for soloists and orchestra.

There is magnificient music in "Die Walkure" from the opening vivid portrayal of the tempest to the final intoxicating beauty of the lovely melody, well known as the "Spring Song."

Mr. Althouse is regarded as the finest tenor interpreter in the works of Wagner to be found in this country and we are among those who feel his equal cannot be found anywhere. He sang with vitality, warmth and understanding. The final duet with Miss Hober was a superb achievement. Miss Hober's voice was adequate to meet most of the cruel demands made upon it. She gave a distinguished performance of the role of Brunhilde in the "Siegfried" excerpt, matching in volume and intensity Mr. Althouse's interpretation of the youthful Siegfried.

The orchestra has accomplished some remarkable playing during these concerts but tonight it seemed to reach an even higher level of achievement. The tempestuous prelude introducing the third act of "Siegfried" was tonally thrilling. The rhythm of "The Ride" and the motives of the "Distress of the Gods," "The Rhine," "The Fall of the Gods," "Sleep," "Fate" and "Wotans Spear" were played with singular beauty. The fire music was vivid and exciting.

Anna Kaskas devoted her opulent tones to the music of the earth goddess "Erda" and through skillful coloring of tone she provided a moving picture of the weary goddess. Norman Cordon provided some excellent singing as he voiced the music of Wotan.

Recalled Many Times

The huge audience, quite as large as any during the first series of concerts, thrilled to the music, and soloists, orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky were recalled many times.

It is understood that the stage of the music shed is suitable for operatic performances and with the plaudits of the audience ringing in his ears it is possible that Dr. Koussevitzky may plan a more ambitious operatic performance next season. It must be noted that all the singers tonight were Americans. There is no dearth of fine American voices and Tanglewood seems the logical place to hear them, for Tanglewood is American to the core. It must not, however, become a training school for young singers as some of our festivals have become.

Saturday night the orchestral program will include a tribute to Henry Hadley, the "Angelus" from his Third Symphony; the Sixth Symphony of Beethoven and the Sixth Symphony of Tschaikowsky.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 12 1938

Festival Draws 6,000 To Tanglewood Estate

Kousseviitzky Conducts All-Wagnerian Program

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—After a day of intermingled sunshine and showers, the weather cleared early this evening for tonight's concert in the new Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, opening the second series in the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. All the boxes, the blue ticket theater seats and the unreserved section of settees were filled by an audience of 6,000 persons.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra chose for the fourth concert of the festival an all-Wagnerian program. The first half consisted of the final scene in Act I of "Die Walküre" with Paul Althouse taking the role of Siegmund and Beal Hober, that of Sieglinde.

For the second half, the third act of "Siegfried" was sung in full with Norman Cordon singing the role of the Wanderer; Anna Kaskas as Erda; Paul Althouse as Siegfried, and Beal Hober as Brünnhilde.

The festival association has received $2,300 toward the fund of $57,000 which the festival corporation, of which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith is president, hopes to raise for the further development of Tanglewood. This total includes checks of $1,000 each from Mrs. Alonzo G. Sexton, of New York, who is at Heaton Hall, and John Shepard jr., of Palm Beach.

The fifth concert comes Saturday evening, with compositions by Henry Hadley, founder of the festival; Beethoven and Tchaikovsky on the program.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

AUG 1 1 1938

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

A school of music for advanced musicians and conductors may emerge as a part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has long cherished the idea of music center of the first importance here. Not an American citizen, Dr. Koussevitzky is convinced that the time is ripe for such a center as the Berkshire Festival offers. The site is available, the personnel of the orchestra included artists unexcelled as teachers for advanced pupils and after experience with amateur choruses, Dr. Koussevitzky believes that only trained leaders are necessary to provide for great choral and community singing.

It is his hope that the annual festival may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work orchestral conductors choral leaders, and separate instrumentalists.

ARDMORE, PA.
WEEKLY CHRONICLE

AUG 1 2 1938

Metropolitan Music

A Review of Outstanding Contributions by Florence Leonard

The season for summer concerts and festivals of music is rapidly approaching its close, and a mere list of these activities all through the United States is most imposing. For it discloses an ever increasing number of them. Besides, the records show a growth in importance in several of these festivals which began as small and unpretentious groups.

Orchestral music, opera and famous soloists still appear to have the strongest appeal to large numbers of the public. When orchestra, soloist and great composer are combined, the results are astonishing, as at the recent Stadium concert in New York, when 19,000 people assembled to hear Heifetz in the Brahms Violin Concerto. There were 6000 to listen to a Mozart Concerto for two pianos, as played by Joseph and Rosina Lhevinne.

These two performances were given within the limits of a huge city; but the first performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in its new shelter from inclement weather, at Lenox, Mass., far from large cities, attracted an audience of nearly 6000.

The program for this first concert consisted of a chorus and finale from a Bach Cantata, "Ein Feste Burg," a concerto grosso by Haendel and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. The assisting chorus was the Cecilia Society of Boston, conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

It is five years since the summer concerts in the Berkshires were inaugurated under the leadership of the late Henry Hadley, who first advancedd the idea, and who was the first conductor of the concerts. The first two years the concerts were given out of doors. After the resignation of Dr. Hadley because of ill health, Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Orchestra gave three concerts in a tent at Holmwood, in Lenox. The response to these opportunities was so surprising that the committee realized that permanent home for the festival would be needed. It was then that the land now in use, the estate of Tanglewood was given by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston. Last year the concerts were given in a huge tent. But the elements warred against Wagner, with deplorable results, and consequently the campaign for a permanent building was started.

It is interesting to know that the concerts themselves are self-sustaining. The splendid building was made possible through private subscription. Now the committee seeks more funds for improvements to building and grounds. Mr. Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony's board of trustees, in his dedicatory speech, disclosed the ambition of Koussevitsky, now an American citizen, to found a music center of first importance, and ambition of Koussevitsky, now an by an academy holding annual sessions before the concerts.

UTICA, N. Y.
PRESS

AUG 12 1938

Back from Boston, Miss Bertha J. Southwick, executive secretary of the Family Welfare Association, has brought some comparative opinions on music appreciation in Boston and Utica. During her month's vacation Miss Southwick was one of some 16,000 persons who made it to a point to attend the Boston Symphony's orchestra's Esplanade concerts. She remarked that she really did see two policemen, both "elderly gentlemen who looked as though they had escaped from the Museum of Fine Arts and who had no police duties whatsoever to command their attention during the concert." Miss Southwick said that men, women, boys and girls paid absolute attention to the music and the musicians, and the only sounds to be heard were those evoked by the orchestra members. Before returning to Utica, Miss Southwick visited briefly in Rhode Island and other New England states.

B. Eagle
Aug. 12/38

BEGIN SECOND HALF OF FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 11—The second half of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival began tonight at the new music shed on "Tanglewood" estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. An audience nearly as large and equally as brilliant as that which attended the inaugural of the shed a week ago was present to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in concert performance of excerpts from music-dramas by Richard Wagner.

The program began with the final scene from Act 1 of "The Valkyrie," with Beal Hober as Sieglinde, and Paul Althouse as Siegmund. The remainder of the evening consisted of the third act of "Siegfried," with roles taken as follows: Bruennhilde, Miss Hober; Siegfried, Mr. Althouse; Erda, Anna Kaskas; The Wanderer, Norman Cordon.

At the conclusion of the program, as at the three previous concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra and soloists were given an ovation by the enthusiastic audience.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

151

AUG 12 1938

WAGNER FEATURES BERKSHIRES MUSIC

Excerpts From 'Walkuere' and 'Siegfried' Are Offered at Symphonic Concert

FOUR SOLOISTS ARE HEARD

Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, Norman Cordon and Beal Hober Sing Roles

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—As an earnest of the fresh fields it wishes to conquer, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began the second half of its fifth season at Tanglewood here tonight with two large segments from the music-dramas of Richard Wagner. The final scene from the first act of "Die Walkuere" and the entire third act of "Siegfried" were presented in concert form on this occasion.

In time, it is hoped, Wagner and the other great composers for the stage may be done with sets, lights and action; but for the devoted Wagnerites concert versions were eminently acceptable.

In choosing a Wagner program for the beginning of the second week of the festival, Serge Koussevitzky reminded those of his listeners who were here on the same evening a year ago of the events that led to the building of the new music shed. It was an electrical storm of terrific intensity that warred with a Wagner program a year ago tonight. Wagner emerged battered and unbowed, but the festival and Boston Symphony Orchestra authorities were determined that a permanent structure must be built to replace the large circus tent. It was built.

Weather Clears for Concert

It seemed, earlier in the day, that there was a fair chance of a repetition of bad weather for the Wagner program this year. Last night there had been precipitation of 1.23 inches in the Berkshires, and this afternoon there was a heavy shower. But a west wind did its job well, clearing the skies by concert time. And a festival audience was able to listen to Wagner without the realistic effects of thunder and lightning.

The second week started as auspiciously as the first. The attendance was again close to capacity, or about 5,500. The audience came from far and wide, and many persons arrived early. There had been warnings that parking would be made easier on the soft, wet fields if motorists would appear early. There were few instances of difficulties during the evening.

For tonight's performances Mr. Koussevitzky enlisted the services of four soloists, three of whom—Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon—appeared last week in Beethoven's Ninth. The fourth was Beal Hober, who sang the music of Sieglinde in the "Walkuere" excerpt and that of Bruennhilde in the third act of "Siegfried."

Miss Hober has sung Wagner in concert form before, and Mr. Althouse, who was the Siegmund and Siegfried here, has often done these roles on the operatic stage and in the concert hall.

Performers Well Received

For Miss Kaskas and Mr. Cordon, both of them among the younger singers of the Metropolitan Opera Association, Wagner was a comparatively new realm. Miss Kaskas was undertaking the music of Erda for the first time, as was Mr. Cordon the part of the Wanderer. In a recent music festival in Montreal Mr. Cordon had cut his Wagnerian wisdom teeth on no less a role than Gurnemanz.

The audience paid its tribute of applause and cheers at the end of each excerpt. Conductor, orchestra and soloists shared in the approval.

In the three days that have intervened since the end of the first half of the festival the authorities have received letters of congratulation from all parts of the country. One from a woman in California who heard last Thursday night's broadcast included a contribution toward the $58,000 fund needed to complete the shed. Another letter from St. Louis enclosed a check for this week's series of concerts with the admonition that the tickets were not to be sold, for the writer was planning to leave at dawn on Tuesday for the Berkshires and intended to reach Tanglewood, if it were humanly possible, in time for some, if not all, of the concerts.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 12 1938

Anna Kaskas in Wagnerian Role At "Tanglewood"

BY CARL E. LINDSTROM

Stockbridge, Mass.—It was the second Thursday of last year's Berkshire Festival that Richard Wagner, who never lost, except temporarily, his battles with man, and who moved the denizens of Valhalla about like pawns, took the count in a match with the rain god of the western Massachusetts hills.

Last night, the second Thursday of the current season, there was a return engagement, and if anyone foundered it was certainly not Wagner. There was a bland moon and an auspicious, beaming planet in the heavens; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were in fine fettle—rather too fine for the four soloists, who sang gamely but were many times overwhelmed by the sumptuousness of Wagnerian scores in the hands of a symphony orchestra at full complement.

Anna Kaskas Commendable

Though she had by far the briefest part, that of Erda in the last act of Siegfried, Anna Kaskas made a more commendable showing than any of the other three soloists. Lest the comparison be invidious it must be added that she had two factors in her favor—first, her part lay easily within the lower half of her scale which is rich and sure; secondly, the symphonic context. The significence of Erda's appearance in this act points mainly to the sleep from which the Wanderer has aroused her, Bruennhilde's dreamless sleep upon the Valkyr's rock, and the sleep to which she herself is reassigned by the Wanderer. The composer naturally utilizes for the most part the modulations of the slumber music and the subdued Valhalla motive to accompany the voice of Erda. Miss Kaskas is to be credited with a moving performance which, at one point rose to a really thrilling climax.

The major burden of the evening fell to him best able to deal with it—Paul Althouse—whose long experience has placed him in leading Wagnerian roles at the Metropolitan. His style was good—vocal style, that is—and making allowances for occasional rough declamation and a pitchless shout or two. He was disposed to act his part, a trait more conspicuous in oratorio than in a concert version of opera.

There were times when Mr. Althouse could not be heard at all, but the same was true of Beal Hober as Sieglinde and as Bruennhilde and of Norman Cordon as the Wanderer and it is probably not to be written down as a fault against any one of them. The orchestra was tremendous and Dr. Koussevitzky gave no quarter. The reviewer found himself hoping that those who consider Wagner a symphonist and not a composer of stageable operatic music were there in large numbers. There were questions he would like to have asked, either to his own or their embarrassment, at about 10 minutes of 11 last night.

In Orchestral Terms

The orchestral tapestry which Dr. Koussevitzky wove with his hundred and more men was a gorgeous thing. It was a gleaming, glistening, smouldering, fabric, eruptive with unsuspected inner voices. Its substance was thick and yet weightless. It was not a symphony—too repetitive for that. The dramatic pattern lay in the voices and the pattern was all too faintly traced. Incidentally, had the voices been vested with a power commensurate with the instrumental forces, there would yet have been something wanting, for neither enunciation nor diction were more than adequate and a good memory for the text was the listener's best aid.

Miss Hober's soprano came through with considerable power at times but her best efforts were deprived of their effect by persistent transgressions on the short side of the pitch. Likely the high tuning of the Boston Symphony added to the tribulations of the singers.

Dr. Koussevitzky directed the entire performance—that is, he conducted singers as well as players. His was not just the job of supplying accompaniments to stars, although at the conclusion he insisted that the soloists take all the applause. The instrumental interludes he projected with great power. The program comprised the last two scenes from the first act of Die Walkuere and all of the last act of Siegfried, two spans of potent music withal but this concert was by no means the best of the Festival thus far.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 12 1938

WAGNER SHINES IN TANGLEWOOD

Berkshire Symphonic Fete Continues with Fine Program

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

The Wagnerians had their two hours under the great music shed at Tanglewood, as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was resumed last night after a four-day recess.

Like the heroes of the Wagner music-dramas, Serge Koussevitzky and his cohorts were able to shake their fists at the gods who control the elemtns, for they had sturdy shelter over their heads to withsand any assault such as that which made last year's Wagnerian program altogether too realistic.

But even the old circus tent would have been safe last night, for the midweek rains had ceased in time. Their result lingered, however, in a lowered temperature, and it was the first cool concert of the Berkshire series: Fluttering programs no longer served as fans for perspiring auditors, while the Boston Symphony musicians had abandoned their white linen jackets of last week and appeared in proper concert attire of tails.

The ground was a bit muddy underfoot in the parking lanes, but this was only a minor difficulty. The 5,700 seats of the airy auditorium were filled nearly to capacity and the 80 boxes strung midway across the assemblage held their customary quota of the socially elite.

With the assistance of four competent vocalists, the Boston Orchestra presented two generous excerpts from the "Ring Cycle"—the final scene from Act 1 of "Die Walkur" and the entire third act of "Siegfried." In thus being given with concert stage (instead of operatic) emphasis, the full sensuous richnes sof Wagner's instrumentation could be realized without theatrical distraction. The orchestra was using the special tenor tubas which Wagner developed for his music, and the splendid horn section of Bostonians has never shone to better advantage.

In the "Walkure" scene, Paul Althouse sang Siegmund, and Beal Hober was heard as Sieglinde, both exhibiting a superior knowledge of Wagnerian form. In the "Siegfried" music, they were joined by Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon. All the singers except Miss Hober appeared last week in the performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

"Series B" of the Tanglewood concerts will be concluded over the weekend. Saturday evening's program will consists of the "Angelus" from the third symphony of Henry Hadley, founder and first conductor of the Berkshire Festival; and Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Tchaikowsky's "Pathetic" symphonies. On Sunday afternoon, the orchestra will play Schumann's Symphony No. 1, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" orchestral suite, and Brahms' Second Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 11 1938

Rain Again at Stadium

By ROBERT C. BAGAR.

The "Radio Nignt" program, which was to have been given at the Lewisohn Stadium last evening, was canceled, rain once more causing a postponement of a Stadium event. In its stead a program of symphonic music was played in the Great Hall of City College.

This evening Alexander Smallens will conduct an all-Stravinsky concert, featuring Jeanne Palmer, soprano; Luba Senderowna, contralto; Ivan Ivantzoff, tenor, and Peter Nicolaeff, bass. The chorus of the Art of Musical Russia, Inc., will also take part. The pieces to be played consist of the "Firebird" suite, "Les Noces" and the "Symphony of Psalmns."

* * *

The second series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood estate, Stockbridge, Mass., begin this evening with an all-Wagner program. Under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky the Boston Symphony Orchestra, together with the following soloists, Beal Hober, soprano; Anna Kaskas, mezzo soprano; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass, will offer the final scene from the first act of "Die Walkuere" and the whole third act of "Siegfried."

* * *

The London Symphony Orchestra will perform a new tone poem by Lee Sims, the noted pianist and composer during its regular schedule of concerts in London next season. The work, entitled "Blythewood," will thus be the first by an American to be played by the noted organization since their performance of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." Ferde Grofe, well-known composer, pianist and conductor, has recently completed the orchestration.

Not cast in the traditional concerto mold, "Blythewood," instead, follows in the paths set out by Manuel de Falla, celebrated Spanish composer, in his "Nights in the Gardens of Spain," with the piano functioning as an integral part of the orchestral web, rather than dominating it in solo or bravura passages.

STADIUM CONCERTS

Conductor, Alexander Smallens.
All-Stravinsky Program.

Soloists—Jeanne Palmer, soprano; Luba Senderowna, contralto; Ivan Ivantzoff, tenor; Peter Nicolaeff, bass; Katja Andy, Hannah Klein, Alfred Thieleker, William Tarrasch, pianists.

The Chorus of the Art of Musical Russia, Inc.

Tonight at 8:30.

"Fire Bird" Suite——Stravinsky
"Symphonie de Psaumes"——Stravinsky
(First performance at the Stadium.)
"Les Noces"——Stravinsky
(First performance at the Stadium.)

* * *

GOLDMAN BAND

Conductor, Edwin Franko Goldman.
Prospect Park.
Tonight at 8:30.

Grand March, "America"——Goldman
Overture, "The Carnival of Venice," Thomas
"Echo Waltz," Trio for Three Cornets. Goldman
Messrs. Smith, Elsass and Mahoney.
Polka and Fugue——Weinberger
Overture, "Masaniello"——Auber
Second Hungarian Rhapsody——Liszt
"Spartan March"——Prokofieff
"Humoresque, Pop! Goes the Weasel," Lucien Cailliot
Overture, "1812"——Tchaikovsky

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 12 1938

ALL WAGNERIAN PROGRAM GIVEN AT TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony Orchestra Assisted by Distinguished Quartet

Stockbridge, Aug. 12—An all Wagnerian concert, taken from "The Ring" series, featured the opening at Tanglewood last night of the second half of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, during which the Boston Symphony orchestra was assisted by a distinguished quartet of vocalists. Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass; Beal Hober, soprano; and Anna Kaskas, contralto were heard last night to excellent effect in the large shell where the splendor of the Berkshire setting without supplemented the audible beauty within. The final scene from the first act of "Die Walkure," and the third act of "Siegfried," in its entirety, made up the program.

Though composed some 13 years apart, during which time Wagner had his doubts as to the possibility of accomplishing a setting for the "Ring" legend, the two selections presented a singular unity, both in their mood, and in their ability to be offered without stage settings.

Last night, the perfect weather, almost late-September like in its coolness, was enhanced by a moon that poured its silvery light on the birches that surround the shell, just as in the excerpt from "Die Walkure," the moon floods the two lovers as Siegmund sings his famous love song, and draws from the oak the magic sword "Nothung" which alone can deliver Sieglinde and save him. The story of "Siegfried" is that of the young hero who tries to awaken the sleeping Brunnhilde, by passing the ring of magic fire that surrounds her.

Paul Althouse was outstanding both in his interpretation of Siegmund and Siegfried. The love song was as lyric as the most romantic could desire, and his more dramatic passages were fired with the intensity and impressiveness that have made him one of the Metropolitan's leading interpreters of Wagner. In proportion to the amount of work to be done, Anna Kaskas was the prize performer of the night. Though Erda has less to sing than the others, the moving singing by Kaskas of that part from memory was extremely effective.

Beal Hober has a typical Wagnerian voice and style and her obvious familiarity with the scores gave her interpretation a clearly etched touch. Norman Cordon, singing from the score, struggled nobly with the loudest and most ominous portions of the "Siegfried" portion. The voice is well suited for the Wotan role.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 13 1938

Festival Lessons

With the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky this evening and tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood, the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will end. It will end gloriously from an artistic point of view. That much is assured by the presence of the Boston orchestra and its illustrious conductor. It will end with the trustees deriving some satisfaction of having handled a record-breaking attendance with a minimum amount of trouble.

Faced with many new problems because of its handsome new building, the management tried to anticipate all of them. It did not anticipate, however, the continued unprecedented rains that finally forced it to abandon completely one large parking area in the rear of the superintendent's house. Under normal conditions this large field would have been in excellent condition.

The Festival management has learned one lesson that it thought it had learned last year. It must prepare for the worst possible situation even though that situation does not develop. No. 1 on the list of needed improvements at Tanglewood no doubt will be proper drainage of parking areas so that in 1939 no one will run the risk of being mired in the mud, no matter how abundant is the rain.

The audience last night was almost up to the 6000 mark, some having stayed away due to threatening weather earlier in the day. The orchestra, under Dr Koussevitzky was garbed in more somber hue in comparison to their summery appearance in the previous concert, but the quality of the performance was at its usual peak. In fact, the pleasant weather was a distinct relief to the string players.

Saturday night, the program will include the Henry Hadley "Angelus, the Beethoven Pastoral" symphony and the Tschaikowsky "Pathetic."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 13 1938

BERKSHIRES PLAN THREE-WEEK FETE

Possibility of Prolonging the Music Program Next Year Follows Gain in Patronage

OFFICIALS STUDY CHANGE

Festival and Orchestra Boards May Make a Decision at Their Joint Conference

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—A plan to extend the length of the Berkshire symphonic festival, now in its fifth season, to three weeks is being discussed by officials and friends of the undertaking, it became known today. A decision is expected when the boards of the festival corporation and of the Boston Symphony Orchestra hold[redacted]t meeting.

Two week-ends of programs by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky have been set for next year. The first two week-ends in August have been selected again and the dates are Aug. 3, 5 and 6 and Aug. 10, 12 and 13. Thus the festival is certain to go on for at least the same length of time as this year and last.

The public support of this year's festival has been so encouraging and the demand for further expansion of the program so persistent that a third week has come under consideration. The first question to be decided is whether there shall be the addition of another week. The two boards may determine this question themselves. An alternate procedure may be adopted, with letters sent to patrons and members of the festival inviting renewals for next season and asking for opinions concerning a third week.

New Attraction Foreseen

If another week is added, it may be in the form of an attraction other than the Boston Symphony. It is known that the orchestra has engagements for the last two weeks in August in 1939. It might be available the last week in July. But it is possible that some other musical presentation, or an allied artistic field, may be drafted.

The authorities have reason to consider expansion. The first week-end of concerts this year played to 19,000 persons, an increase of 4,000 over the same period last year. The prospects are that the audiences this week will show a comparable increase over the second week of 1937.

The festival and orchestra authorities, moreover, have indicated that they hope to open a school for conductors, choral leaders and other musicians—one of Mr. Koussevitzky's pet projects for his vision of a national Summer music center in the Berkshires—in 1940. It may be in order for the festival to expand slowly, a little each year, with a third week the logical development for 1939.

There seems to be little doubt that the festival has come to stay. Consider the instance of the patron from Marblehead, Mass., who has already reserved his box for 1939 and has even made hotel reservations for next year's festival period.

Last night's Wagner program proved that this audience is eager, on the whole, to absorb strong meat. The final scene of the first act of "Die Walkuere" is comparatively familiar, but the full third act of "Siegfried" is not. Done without sets, lights, costumes or action, this act requires from the audience concentration and imaginative objection. The large gathering, which was, naturally, not made up wholly of devout Wagnerites, followed attentively, and seemed moved at the end.

Soloists Found Effective

The soloists sang effectively, and in one instance—Paul Althouse as Siegfried—with color, authority and feeling. The dominating element of these performances, however, was the orchestra. Under Mr. Koussevitzky's commanding leadership, Wagner, as the sovereign symphonist, came to life. There were passion, breadth and grandeur in the communication of this music.

It is possible to differ with Mr. Koussevitzky in one or two details, but the total impression was one of immense power and control, with the great pages of the music dramas singing out resplendently. One cannot forget the tremendous surge of the music between the two scenes of the act, nor the brilliance of tone and color.

For artists relatively new to Wagner, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon as Erda and the Wanderer sang comprehendingly. The nobility that their great scene requires will perhaps come with time and experience. But both singers have young, fresh voices and they caught something of the Wagnerian line. Beal Hober as Sieglinde and Bruennhilde was at her best in restrained lyrical passages, although at the end of the "Siegfried" duet her voice took on heroic stride. Mr. Althouse was the most finished Wagnerian. His singing of the pages of Siegfried's discovery of the sleeping Bruennhilde was as fine as anything this listener has heard him do.

Beethoven to Be Played

The festival continues tomorrow night with the Sixth symphonies of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. The program will open with the late Henry Hadley's "Angelus" from his Third symphony. It will be played in memory of the man who conducted the first Berkshire festival in 1934. A delegation from the Henry Hadley Foundation will atte[redacted]

Although not a part of the festival, but near enough to share in its audience, the South Mountain String Quartet presented another program this afternoon at the Temple of Music on South Mountain, again shifting its Sunday date to Friday so that it would not conflict with the festival. The quartet—Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke—played Mozart's D major quartet and Reger's E flat quartet, Op. 109. Gunnar Johansen, resident pianist at South Mountain, joined with Mr. Willeke in the Strauss sonata for 'cello and piano, Op. 6. Mr. Johansen played with a singing tone, with thrust and in the slow movement with tenderness and depth. He seems to be a gifted young pianist.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 13 1938

FINAL CONCERT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY COMES TOMORROW

Stockbridge, Aug. 13—When the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky return to the stage of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood this evening for the fifth concert in the current festival, they will be greeted by another capacity audience that will overflow the confines of the new building, according to the report from the festival office today.

All reserved seats in the rear section have been sold for tonight's concert, but there are reserved and unreserved seats still available in the front section and unreserved seats in the rear section. Music lovers planning to attend the concert are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge at once if they wish to make reservations.

There is equally as large a crowd that will turn out for the Sunday afternoon concert, the final one, which begins at 3.30.

This evening's program includes Henry Hadley's "Angelus," Beethoven's Sixth or "Pastoral" Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth or "Pathetique."

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, in charge of the parking crew at Tanglewood, gave the assurance today after inspecting the parking areas, that there is no shortage of suitable parking space but urged everyone to come early for preferred positions.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 13 1938

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., ends with tomorrow afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Tonight Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony; the andante tranquillo from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3; and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" Symphony. Tomorrow's program is composed of Schumann's Symphony in B Flat, No. 1, Sibelius's "Tapiola," and the Brahms Second Symphony.

* * *

Another woman conductor will make her New York debut on Wednesday night, when Ruth Kemper conducts the Greenwich Orchestra at the ~~Federal~~ Music Theater. She has chosen the Mozart "Haffner" Symphony and Goldmark's A Minor Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in which Noah Bielski will be the soloist, as the principal works on her program.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 13 1938

Philharmonic To Be Heard At Silvermine

Anna Kaskas Sings In Norwalk Festival Opening August 18

Anna Kaskas will sing in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on Sunday, Aug. 21, for the second festival performance during August in these environs.

After her successful appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshires she is now to take part in a festival which is Connecticut's own, that at Silvermine near Norwalk which runs from Thursday to Sunday Aug. 18 to 21.

This festival is under the sponsorship of the Connecticut State Federation of Music Clubs and the Silvermine Guild of Artists The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, conducted variously by Eugene Ormandy, Jose Iturbi and Quinto Maganini, will provide the main musical events, but there will be other attractions such as two chamber music recitals by the Roth Quartet on Thursday morning, Aug. 18, and Friday morning, Aug. 19, lectures on Thursday and Saturday morning by Charles O'Connell, and one on Friday morning by Richardson Wright.

Exhibitions During Week

During the entire festival week there will be exhibitions of paintings, etchings and water colors and an outdoor exhibition of sculpture. An interdenominational praise service will be given Sunday evening at which Virginia Carrington Thomas will be at the organ.

Besides Anna Kaskas, the soloists in Beethoven's Ninth will be Rosa Tentoni, Chase Baromeo and Edouard Grove. Three hundred and fifty voices from the Schola Cantorum of New York and the Connecticut State Federated Choirs will be heard in the choral movement. Ormandy will conduct this performance.

Silvermine some 10 miles out of Norwalk, is aptly named, for it was here that the first silver mine in America was operated.

This second annual "sunshine starlight convention of the arts" will be held in the wooded dell of the Guild grounds and the adjacent estate of Lawrence Bennett. The grounds have been graded so that a gradual lawn slopes to the lakeside where the orchestra will play from a shell built out over the water.

In case of rain during or after intermission at any one of the three symphony programs, the concert will be considered completed. In case of rain before the concert it will be postponed until the first clear evening. The seating arrangement includes boxes, reserved chairs, unreserved benches with backs and 10 tiers of bleachers.

The Programs

The symphonic programs follow: Thursday, Aug. 18 at 8:45—(Ormandy) Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Brahm's Fourth Symphony, Wagnerian excerpts from Die Walkuere, Lohengrin and Meistersinger.

Friday, Aug. 19 at 8:45—(Iturbi) Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Swan of Tuonela and Finlandia by Sibelius, Ravel's Bolero and Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue with Iturbi at the piano.

Sunday, Aug. 21 at 8:30—(Ormandy) Bach's Passacaglia in C minor and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

There will be a junior concert on Saturday morning at 10, conducted by Quinto Maganini. The Roth Quartet will perform works by Mozart, Brahms, Dohnanyi, Haydn, Debussy and Schumann.

Governor Cross has accepted the honorary presidency of the Silvermine Guild Music Festival Association. The honorary vice-presidency of the Association was accepted by former Senator Frederic C. Walcott. It is the Governor's desire to encourage a cultural movement of this magnitude which has become Connecticut's convention of the arts.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

MUSICAL EVENTS

Berkshire Festival and Other Native Talent

YOU pick up U. S. Route 7, switch to Massachusetts 102 at Stockbridge, follow 102 to 183, and after a short while you're at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Or perhaps you go by train. Anyhow, the trip is worth the trouble, if any, because the Berkshires are all they are supposed to be, and so is the Symphonic Festival.

I was a shade suspicious of the Festival beforehand, for visitors had been talking about the event as some itinerants used to carry on about Salzburg. Everything proved to be O.K., however, the only demurrer being that apparently somebody threw several bags of mosquitoes into the general vicinity of the audience. The Boston Symphony, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played with all of the accurate sonority that it reveals in Carnegie Hall, and the music shed is one of the best concert places in the country.

In the Berkshires they call a fan-shaped, covered auditorium that seats nearly 6,000 listeners a shed. It turns out to be a remarkable sounding board for the music, and the orchestra platform is about the neatest any acoustician ever designed.

The Boston Symphony's tone is famous; it's more astonishing than ever in the Stockbridge setting. Perhaps one reason is that the shed is open on three sides, so the tone moves out all the way, with nothing to stop it. That may be oversimplifying some acoustic theories, but a couple of authorities in such matters say that it is approximately the idea.

The locale is in Tanglewood, a 200-acre estate, where Hawthorne used to write and which has been donated for the purposes of the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. If you prefer to hear the music at a distance—and it carries way out yonder without amplification—you are at liberty to wander about Tanglewood. You can buy refreshments, printed music, and phonograph records on the lot, and cigarettes from pretty cigarette girls who don't expect tips. Almost everybody associated with the operation of the concerts is a volunteer, and volunteering is so popular in the Berkshires that there's always an amiable

---

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

MUSIC

STADIUM CONCERTS—Last week. At the Lewisohn Stadium, Amsterdam Ave. at 136, nightly at 8:30; through Wed., Aug. 17—Philharmonic-Symphony, Smallens conducting, Thurs. through Sat., Aug. 11-13; Freccia conducting, Sun. and Mon., Aug. 14-15; Van Hoogstraten conducting, Tues. and Wed., Aug. 16-17. Soloists: John Corigliano, Aug. 12; Harold Bauer, Aug. 15.

GOLDMAN BAND—Last concerts this season—Central Park Mall, Fri., Sun., and Mon. Eves., Aug. 12, 14, and 15, at 8:30; Prospect Park, Brooklyn, Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30.

OPEN-AIR OPERA—At Randalls Island Stadium, 8:45 P.M.: "Carmen," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13; "Madama Butterfly," Sun. Eve., Aug. 14. At the Marine Stadium, Jones Beach, L.I.: "La Traviata," Fri. Eve., Aug. 12; "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13.

WPA—At the Federal Music Theatre, 254 W. 54—New York Civic Orchestra, Balaban conducting: Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 1:30. Federal Symphony, Balendonck conducting, Sun. Eve., Aug. 14, at 8:45. Greenwich Orchestra, Ruth Kemper conducting: Wed. Eve., Aug. 17, at 8:45.

OUT-OF-TOWN—Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting: Tanglewood, Route 183, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30; and Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 3:30. . . . Silvermine Guild Music Festival, Silvermine, Norwalk, Conn.—Roth String Quartet: Thurs. and Fri. Morns., Aug. 18-19, at 10:30. Philharmonic-Symphony, Ormandy conducting: Thurs. and Sun. Eves., Aug. 18 and 21, at 8:45; Iturbi conducting: Fri. Eve., Aug. 19, at 8:45. Junior Concert. Maganini conducting: Sat. Morn., Aug. 20, at 11:30. . . . Building of Arts Series, Bar Harbor, Me.—Piano recital by Jose Iturbi: Sat. Aft., Aug. 13, at 3:30. Song recital by Roland Hayes: Sat. Aft., Aug. 20, at 3:30. . . . Chamber-music concerts by the Gordon String Quartet: The Hall, Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., Sun. Afts. at 4. . . . "The Tales of Hoffmann," by the Steel Pier Opera Company, Atlantic City, N.J., Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 11-12, at 8:45; "The Bartered Bride," Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 18-19.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
AUG 13 1938

All-Stravinsky

and the interpretation possessed notable gusto and savor.

Something, indeed, is lost, when it is presented without stage action, especially before an audience unfamiliar with Russian, and at times it risks becoming iterative and monotonous, although the music conveys often engrossingly the atmosphere of Slavic peasant revelry, melancholy and inevitability inherent in the subject. The soloists, choristers and instrumentalists did their work well, and Mr. Smallens merited much praise in his co-ordination of the various elements of the performance with limited time for rehearsal. The audience numbered 4,000.

Smart to
. . . priv
speciali no inv freedom
WAI

THE TOWN HOUSE
108 East 38th Street
on exclusive Murray Hill, complete housekeeping suites of 1 to 5 rooms, furnished or unfurnished, available at attractive rentals, including maid service. Air Conditioned restaurant featuring Continental cuisine at moderate prices. Solarium, terraces.
Rentals from $900
N.A. Berwin & Co.
INCORPORATED
103 Park Avenue
AShland 4-8100

LUNCHEON & DINNER
Elective Price Menu
COCKTAILS
In the air-conditioned
NETHERLAND
Restaurant and Bar
The Sherry-Netherland
FIFTH AVENUE at 59th STREET
FACING THE PARK

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 13 1938

BERKSHIRES PLAN THREE-WEEK FETE

Possibility of Prolonging the Music Program Next Year Follows Gain in Patronage

OFFICIALS STUDY CHANGE

Festival and Orchestra Boards May Make a Decision at Their Joint Conference

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—A plan to extend the length of the Berkshire symphonic festival, now in its fifth season, to three weeks is being discussed by officials and friends of the undertaking, it became known today. A decision is expected when the boards of the festival corporation and of the Boston Symphony Orchestra hol[redacted] meeting.

Two week-ends of programs by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky have been set for next year. The first two week-ends in August have been selected again and the dates are Aug. 3, 5 and 6 and Aug. 10, 12 and 13. Thus the festival is certain to go on for at least the same length of time as this year and last.

The public support of this year's festival has been so encouraging and the demand for further expansion of the program so persistent that a third week has come under consideration. The first question to be decided is whether there shall be the addition of another week. The two boards may determine this question themselves. An alternate procedure may be adopted, with letters sent to patrons and members of the festival inviting renewals for next season and asking for opinions concerning a third week.

New Attraction Foreseen

If another week is added, it may be in the form of an attraction other than the Boston Symphony. It is known that the orchestra has engagements for the last two weeks in August in 1939. It might be available the last week in July. But it is possible that some other musical presentation, or an allied artistic field, may be drafted.

The authorities have reason to consider expansion. The first week-end of concerts this year played to 19,000 persons, an increase of 4,000 over the same period last year. The prospects are that the audiences this week will show a comparable increase over the second week of 1937.

The festival and orchestra authorities, moreover, have indicated that they hope to open a school for conductors, choral leaders and other musicians—one of Mr. Koussevitzky's pet projects for his vision of a national Summer music center in the Berkshires—in 1940. It may be in order for the festival to expand slowly, a little each year, with a third week the logical development for 1939.

There seems to be little doubt that the festival has come to stay. Consider the instance of the patron from Marblehead, Mass., who has already reserved his box for 1939 and has even made hotel reservations for next year's festival period.

Last night's Wagner program proved that this audience is eager, on the whole, to absorb strong meat. The final scene of the first act of "Die Walkuere" is comparatively familiar, but the full third act of "Siegfried" is not. Done without sets, lights, costumes or action, this act requires from the audience concentration and imaginative objection. The large gathering, which was, naturally, not made up wholly of devout Wagnerites, followed attentively, and seemed moved at the end.

Soloists Found Effective

The soloists sang effectively, and in one instance—Paul Althouse as Siegfried—with color, authority and feeling. The dominating element of these performances, however, was the orchestra. Under Mr. Koussevitzky's commanding leadership, Wagner, as the sovereign symphonist, came to life. There were passion, breadth and grandeur in the communication of this music.

It is possible to differ with Mr. Koussevitzky in one or two details, but the total impression was one of immense power and control, with the great pages of the music dramas singing out resplendently. One cannot forget the tremendous surge of the music between the two scenes of the act, nor the brilliance of tone and color.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 13 1938

FINAL CONCERT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY COMES TOMORROW

Stockbridge, Aug. 13—When the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky return to the stage of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood this evening for the fifth concert in the current festival, they will be greeted by another capacity audience that will overflow the confines of the new building, according to the report from the festival office today.

All reserved seats in the rear section have been sold for tonight's concert, but there are reserved and unreserved seats still available in the front section and unreserved seats in the rear section. Music lovers planning to attend the concert are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge at once if they wish to make reservations.

There is equally as large a crowd that will turn out for the Sunday afternoon concert, the final one, which begins at 3.30.

This evening's program includes Henry Hadley's "Angelus," Beethoven's Sixth or "Pastoral" Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth or "Pathetique."

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, in charge of the parking crew at Tanglewood, gave the assurance today after inspecting the parking areas, that there is no shortage of suitable parking space but urged everyone to come early for preferred positions.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 13 1938

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., ends with tomorrow afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Tonight Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony; the andante tranquillo from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3; and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" Symphony. Tomorrow's program is composed of Schumann's Symphony in B Flat, No. 1, Sibelius's "Tapiola," and the Brahms Second Symphony.

* * *

Another woman conductor will make her New York debut on Wednesday night, when Ruth Kemper conducts the Greenwich Orchestra at the Federal Music Theater. She has chosen the Mozart "Haffner" Symphony and Goldmark's A Minor Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in which Noah Bielski will be the soloist, as the principal works on her program.

For artists relatively new to Wagner, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon as Erda and the Wanderer sang comprehendingly. The nobility that their great scene requires will perhaps come with time and experience. But both singers have young, fresh voices and they caught something of the Wagnerian line. Beal Hober as Sieglinde and Bruennhilde was at her best in restrained lyrical passages, although at the end of the "Siegfried" duet her voice took on heroic stride. Mr. Althouse was the most finished Wagnerian. His singing of the pages of Siegfried's discovery of the sleeping Bruennhilde was as fine as anything this listener has heard him do.

Beethoven to Be Played

The festival continues tomorrow night with the Sixth symphonies of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. The program will open with the late Henry Hadley's "Angelus" from his Third symphony. It will be played in memory of the man who conducted the first Berkshire festival in 1934. A delegation from the Henry Hadley Foundation will at[redacted]

Although not a part of the festival, but near enough to share in its audience, the South Mountain String Quartet presented another program this afternoon at the Temple of Music on South Mountain, again shifting its Sunday date to Friday so that it would not conflict with the festival. The quartet—Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideleer, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke—played Mozart's D major quartet and Reger's E flat quartet, Op. 109. Gunnar Johansen, resident pianist at South Mountain, joined with Mr. Willeke in the Strauss sonata for 'cello and piano, Op. 6. Mr. Johansen played with a singing tone, with thrust and in the slow movement with tenderness and depth. He seems to be a gifted young pianist.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 13 1938

Philharmonic To Be Heard At Silvermine

Anna Kaskas Sings In Norwalk Festival Opening August 18

Anna Kaskas will sing in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on Sunday, Aug. 21, for the second festival performance during August in these environs.

After her successful appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshires she is now to take part in a festival which is Connecticut's own, that at Silvermine near Norwalk which runs from Thursday to Sunday, Aug. 18 to 21.

This festival is under the sponsorship of the Connecticut State Federation of Music Clubs and the Silvermine Guild of Artists. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, conducted variously by Eugene Ormandy, Jose Iturbi and Quinto Maganini, will provide the main musical events, but there will be other attractions such as two chamber music recitals by the Roth Quartet on Thursday morning, Aug. 18, and Friday morning, Aug. 19, lectures on Thursday and Saturday morning by Charles O'Connell, and one on Friday morning by Richardson Wright.

Exhibitions During Week

During the entire festival week there will be exhibitions of paintings, etchings and water colors and an outdoor exhibition of sculpture. An interdenominational praise service will be given Sunday evening at which Virginia Carrington Thomas will be at the organ.

Besides Anna Kaskas, the soloists in Beethoven's Ninth will be Rosa Tentoni, Chase Baromeo and Edouard Grove. Three hundred and fifty voices from the Schola Cantorum of New York and the Connecticut State Federated Choirs will be heard in the choral movement. Ormandy will conduct this performance.

Silvermine some 10 miles out of Norwalk, is aptly named, for it was here that the first silver mine in America was operated.

This second annual "sunshine starlight convention of the arts" will be held in the wooded dell of the Guild grounds and the adjacent estate of Lawrence Bennett. The grounds have been graded so that a gradual lawn slopes to the lakeside where the orchestra will play from a shell built out over the water.

In case of rain during or after intermission at any one of the three symphony programs, the concert will be considered completed. In case of rain before the concert it will be postponed until the first clear evening. The seating arrangement includes boxes, reserved chairs, unreserved benches with backs and 10 tiers of bleachers.

The Programs

The symphonic programs follow: Thursday, Aug. 18 at 8:45—(Ormandy) Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Brahm's Fourth Symphony, Wagnerian excerpts from Die Walkuere, Lohengrin and Meistersinger.

Friday, Aug. 19 at 8:45—(Iturbi) Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Swan of Tuonela and Finlandia by Sibelius, Ravel's Bolero and Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue with Iturbi at the piano.

Sunday, Aug. 21 at 8:30—(Ormandy) Bach's Passacaglia in C minor and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

There will be a junior concert on Saturday morning at 10, conducted by Quinto Maganini. The Roth Quartet will perform works by Mozart, Brahms, Dohnanyi, Haydn, Debussy and Schumann.

Governor Cross has accepted the honorary presidency of the Silvermine Guild Music Festival Association. The honorary vice-presidency of the Association was accepted by former Senator Frederic C. Walcott. It is the Governor's desire to encourage a cultural movement of this magnitude which has become Connecticut's convention of the arts.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

MUSICAL EVENTS

Berkshire Festival and Other Native Talent

YOU pick up U. S. Route 7, switch to Massachusetts 102 at Stockbridge, follow 102 to 183, and after a short while you're at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Or perhaps you go by train. Anyhow, the trip is worth the trouble, if any, because the Berkshires are all they are supposed to be, and so is the Symphonic Festival.

I was a shade suspicious of the Festival beforehand, for visitors had been talking about the event as some itinerants used to carry on about Salzburg. Everything proved to be O.K., however, the only demurrer being that apparently somebody threw several bags of mosquitoes into the general vicinity of the audience. The Boston Symphony, led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played with all of the accurate sonority that it reveals in Carnegie Hall, and the music shed is one of the best concert places in the country.

In the Berkshires they call a fan-shaped, covered auditorium that seats nearly 6,000 listeners a shed. It turns out to be a remarkable sounding board for the music, and the orchestra platform is about the neatest any acoustician ever designed.

The Boston Symphony's tone is famous; it's more astonishing than ever in the Stockbridge setting. Perhaps one reason is that the shed is open on three sides, so the tone moves out all the way, with nothing to stop it. That may be oversimplifying some acoustic theories, but a couple of authorities in such matters say that it is approximately the idea.

The locale is in Tanglewood, a 200-acre estate, where Hawthorne used to write and which has been donated for the purposes of the Festival by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. If you prefer to hear the music at a distance—and it carries way out yonder without amplification—you are at liberty to wander about Tanglewood. You can buy refreshments, printed music, and phonograph records on the lot, and cigarettes from pretty cigarette girls who don't expect tips. Almost everybody associated with the operation of the concerts is a volunteer, and volunteering is so popular in the Berkshires that there's always an amiable

---

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

MUSIC

STADIUM CONCERTS—Last week. At the Lewisohn Stadium, Amsterdam Ave. at 136, nightly at 8:30; through Wed., Aug. 17—Philharmonic-Symphony, Smallens conducting, Thurs. through Sat., Aug. 11-13; Freccia conducting, Sun. and Mon., Aug. 14-15; Van Hoogstraten conducting, Tues. and Wed., Aug. 16-17. Soloists: John Corigliano, Aug. 12; Harold Bauer, Aug. 15.

GOLDMAN BAND—Last concerts this season—Central Park Mall, Fri., Sun., and Mon. Eves., Aug. 12, 14, and 15, at 8:30; Prospect Park, Brooklyn, Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30.

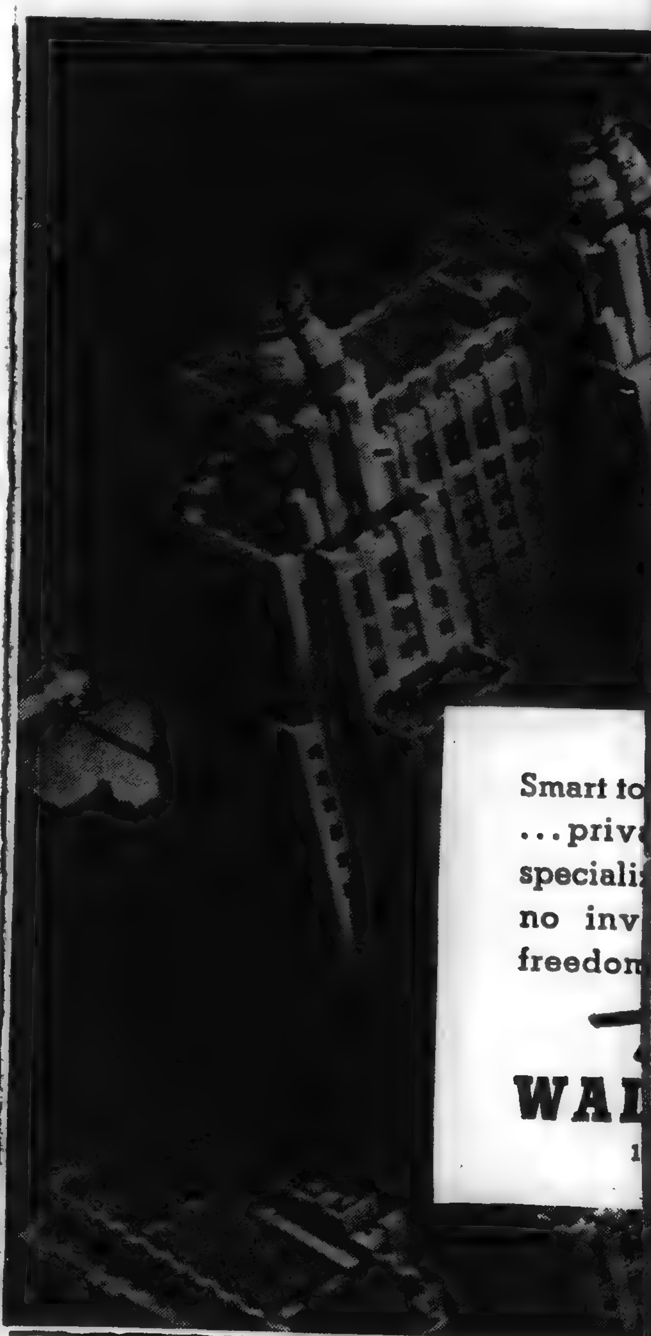
OPEN-AIR OPERA—At Randalls Island Stadium, 8:45 P.M.: "Carmen," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13; "Madama Butterfly," Sun. Eve., Aug. 14. At the Marine Stadium, Jones Beach, L.I.: "La Traviata," Fri. Eve., Aug. 12; "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13.

WPA—At the Federal Music Theatre, 254 W. 54—New York Civic Orchestra, Balaban conducting: Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 1:30. Federal Symphony, Balendonck conducting, Sun. Eve., Aug. 14, at 8:45. Greenwich Orchestra, Ruth Kemper conducting: Wed. Eve., Aug. 17, at 8:45.

OUT-OF-TOWN—Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting: Tanglewood, Route 183, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30; and Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 3:30. . . . Silvermine Guild Music Festival, Silvermine, Norwalk, Conn.—Roth String Quartet: Thurs. and Fri. Morns., Aug. 18-19, at 10:30. Philharmonic-Symphony, Ormandy conducting: Thurs. and Sun. Eves., Aug. 18 and 21, at 8:45; Iturbi conducting: Fri. Eve., Aug. 19, at 8:45. Junior Concert, Maganini conducting: Sat. Morn., Aug. 20, at 11:30. . . . Building of Arts Series, Bar Harbor, Me.—Piano recital by Jose Iturbi: Sat. Aft., Aug. 13, at 3:30. Song recital by Roland Hayes: Sat. Aft., Aug. 20, at 3:30. . . . Chamber-music concerts by the Gordon String Quartet: The Hall, Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., Sun. Afts. at 4. . . . "The Tales of Hoffmann," by the Steel Pier Opera Company, Atlantic City, N.J., Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 11-12, at 8:45; "The Bartered Bride," Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 18-19.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
B 2 AUG 13 1938

All-Stravinsky



THE TOWN HOUSE
108 East 38th Street
on exclusive Murray Hill, complete housekeeping suites of 1 to 5 rooms, furnished or unfurnished, available at attractive rentals, including maid service. Air Conditioned restaurant featuring Continental cuisine at moderate prices. Solarium, terraces.
Rentals from $900
N.A. Berwin & Co.
INCORPORATED
103 Park Avenue
AShland 4-8100

NS
LUNCHEON & DINNER
Elective Price Menu
COCKTAILS
In the air-conditioned
NETHERLAND
Restaurant and Bar
The Sherry-Netherland
FIFTH AVENUE at 59th STREET
FACING THE PARK

and the interpretation possessed notable gusto and savor.

Something, indeed, is lost, when it is presented without stage action, especially before an audience unfamiliar with Russian, and at times it risks becoming iterative and monotonous, although the music conveys often engrossingly the atmosphere of Slavic peasant revelry, melancholy and inevitability inherent in the subject. The soloists, choristers and instrumentalists did their work well, and Mr. Smallens merited much praise in his co-ordination of the various elements of the performance with limited time for rehearsal. The audience numbered 4,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 13 1938

BERKSHIRES PLAN THREE-WEEK FETE

Possibility of Prolonging the Music Program Next Year Follows Gain in Patronage

OFFICIALS STUDY CHANGE

Festival and Orchestra Boards May Make a Decision at Their Joint Conference

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—A plan to extend the length of the Berkshire symphonic festival, now in its fifth season, to three weeks is being discussed by officials and friends of the undertaking, it became known today. A decision is expected when the boards of the festival corporation and of the Boston Symphony Orchestra hol[redacted] meeting.

Two week-ends of programs by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky have been set for next year. The first two week-ends in August have been selected again and the dates are Aug. 3, 5 and 6 and Aug. 10, 12 and 13. Thus the festival is certain to go on for at least the same length of time as this year and last.

The public support of this year's festival has been so encouraging and the demand for further expansion of the program so persistent that a third week has come under consideration. The first question to be decided is whether there shall be the addition of another week. The two boards may determine this question themselves. An alternate procedure may be adopted, with letters sent to patrons and members of the festival inviting renewals for next season and asking for opinions concerning a third week.

New Attraction Foreseen

If another week is added, it may be in the form of an attraction other than the Boston Symphony. It is known that the orchestra has engagements for the last two weeks in August in 1939. It might be available the last week in July. But it is possible that some other musical presentation, or an allied artistic field, may be drafted.

The authorities have reason to consider expansion. The first week-end of concerts this year played to 19,000 persons, an increase of 4,000 over the same period last year. The prospects are that the audiences this week will show a comparable increase over the second week of 1937.

The festival and orchestra authorities, moreover, have indicated that they hope to open a school for conductors, choral leaders and other musicians—one of Mr. Koussevitzky's pet projects for his vision of a national Summer music center in the Berkshires—in 1940. It may be in order for the festival to expand slowly, a little each year, with a third week the logical development for 1939.

There seems to be little doubt that the festival has come to stay. Consider the instance of the patron from Marblehead, Mass., who has already reserved his box for 1939 and has even made hotel reservations for next year's festival period.

Last night's Wagner program proved that this audience is eager, on the whole, to absorb strong meat. The final scene of the first act of "Die Walkuere" is comparatively familiar, but the full third act of "Siegfried" is not. Done without sets, lights, costumes or action, this act requires from the audience concentration and imaginative objection. The large gathering, which was, naturally, not made up wholly of devout Wagnerites, followed attentively, and seemed moved at the end.

Soloists Found Effective

The soloists sang effectively, and in one instance—Paul Althouse as Siegfried—with color, authority and feeling. The dominating element of these performances, however, was the orchestra. Under Mr. Koussevitzky's commanding leadership, Wagner, as the sovereign symphonist, came to life. There were passion, breadth and grandeur in the communication of this music.

It is possible to differ with Mr. Koussevitzky in one or two details, but the total impression was one of immense power and control, with the great pages of the music dramas singing out resplendently. One cannot forget the tremendous surge of the music between the two scenes of the act, nor the brilliance of tone and color.

For artists relatively new to Wagner, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon as Erda and the Wanderer sang comprehendingly. The nobility that their great scene requires will perhaps come with time and experience. But both singers have young, fresh voices and they caught something of the Wagnerian line. Beal Hober as Sieglinde and Bruennhilde was at her best in restrained lyrical passages, although at the end of the "Siegfried" duet her voice took on heroic stride. Mr. Althouse was the most finished Wagnerian. His singing of the pages of Siegfried's discovery of the sleeping Bruennhilde was as fine as anything this listener has heard him do.

Beethoven to Be Played

The festival continues tomorrow night with the Sixth symphonies of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. The program will open with the late Henry Hadley's "Angelus" from his Third symphony. It will be played in memory of the man who conducted the first Berkshire festival in 1934. A delegation from the Henry Hadley Foundation will at-[redacted]

Although not a part of the festival, but near enough to share in its audience, the South Mountain String Quartet presented another program this afternoon at the Temple of Music on South Mountain, again shifting its Sunday date to Friday so that it would not conflict with the festival. The quartet—Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke—played Mozart's D major quartet and Reger's E flat quartet, Op. 109. Gunnar Johansen, resident pianist at South Mountain, joined with Mr. Willeke in the Strauss sonata for 'cello and piano, Op. 6. Mr. Johansen played with a singing tone, with thrust and in the slow movement with tenderness and depth. He seems to be a gifted young pianist.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 13 1938

FINAL CONCERT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY COMES TOMORROW

Stockbridge, Aug. 13—When the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky return to the stage of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood this evening for the fifth concert in the current festival, they will be greeted by another capacity audience that will overflow the confines of the new building, according to the report from the festival office today.

All reserved seats in the rear section have been sold for tonight's concert, but there are reserved and unreserved seats still available in the front section and unreserved seats in the rear section. Music lovers planning to attend the concert are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge at once if they wish to make reservations.

There is equally as large a crowd that will turn out for the Sunday afternoon concert, the final one, which begins at 3.30.

This evening's program includes Henry Hadley's "Angelus," Beethoven's Sixth or "Pastoral" Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth or "Pathetique."

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, in charge of the parking crew at Tanglewood, gave the assurance today after inspecting the parking areas that there is no shortage of suitable parking space but urged everyone to come early for preferred positions.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 13 1938

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., ends with tomorrow afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Tonight Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony; the andante tranquillo from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3; and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" Symphony. Tomorrow's program is composed of Schumann's Symphony in B Flat, No. 1, Sibelius's "Tapiola," and the Brahms Second Symphony.

• • •

Another woman conductor will make her New York debut on Wednesday night, when Ruth Kemper conducts the Greenwich Orchestra at the ~~Federal~~ Music Theater. She has chosen the Mozart "Haffner" Symphony and Goldmark's A Minor Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in which Noah Bielski will be the soloist, as the principal works on her program.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES ✓
AUG 13 1938

Philharmonic To Be Heard At Silvermine

Anna Kaskas Sings In Norwalk Festival Opening August 18

Anna Kaskas will sing in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on Sunday, Aug. 21, for the second festival performance during August in these environs.

After her successful appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in ~~the Berkshires she~~ is now to take part in a festival which is Connecticut's own, that at Silvermine near Norwalk which runs from Thursday to Sunday Aug. 18 to 21.

This festival is under the sponsorship of the Connecticut State Federation of Music Clubs and the Silvermine Guild of Artists. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, conducted variously by Eugene Ormandy, Jose Iturbi and Quinto Maganini, will provide the main musical events, but there will be other attractions such as two chamber music recitals by the Roth Quartet on Thursday morning, Aug. 18, and Friday morning, Aug. 19, lectures on Thursday and Saturday morning by Charles O'Connell, and one on Friday morning by Richardson Wright.

Exhibitions During Week

During the entire festival week there will be exhibitions of paintings, etchings and water colors and an outdoor exhibition of sculpture. An interdenominational praise service will be given Sunday evening at which Virginia Carrington Thomas will be at the organ.

Besides Anna Kaskas, the soloists in Beethoven's Ninth will be Rosa Tentoni, Chase Baromeo and Edouard Grove. Three hundred and fifty voices from the Schola Cantorum of New York and the Connecticut State Federated Choirs will be heard in the choral movement. Ormandy will conduct this performance.

Silvermine some 10 miles out of Norwalk, is aptly named, for it was here that the first silver mine in America was operated.

This second annual "sunshine starlight convention of the arts" will be held in the wooded dell of the Guild grounds and the adjacent estate of Lawrence Bennett. The grounds have been graded so that a gradual lawn slopes to the lakeside where the orchestra will play from a shell built out over the water.

In case of rain during or after intermission at any one of the three symphony programs, the concert will be considered completed. In case of rain before the concert it will be postponed until the first clear evening. The seating arrangement includes boxes, reserved chairs, unreserved benches with backs and 10 tiers of bleachers.

The Programs

The symphonic programs follow: Thursday, Aug. 18 at 8:45—(Ormandy) Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Brahm's Fourth Symphony, Wagnerian excerpts from Die Walkuere, Lohengrin and Meistersinger.

Friday, Aug. 19 at 8:45—(Iturbi) Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Swan of Tuonela and Finlandia by Sibelius, Ravel's Bolero and Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue with Iturbi at the piano.

Sunday, Aug. 21 at 8:30—(Ormandy) Bach's Passacaglia in C minor and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

There will be a junior concert on Saturday morning at 10, conducted by Quinto Maganini. The Roth Quartet will perform works by Mozart, Brahms, Dohnanyi, Haydn, Debussy and Schumann.

Governor Cross has accepted the honorary presidency of the Silvermine Guild Music Festival Association. The honorary vice-presidency of the Association was accepted by former Senator Frederic C. Walcott. It is the Governor's desire to encourage a cultural movement of this magnitude which has become Connecticut's convention of the arts.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

usher ready to escort you to the right seat, while your car will be parked with éclat by a member of the American Legion.

CONCERTGOERS who happen to be familiar with the performances of Dr. Koussevitzky need no reminder of the consistent excellence of his presentations, although they may find him an unusually relaxed platform personality in the Berkshires. Possibly the black-trousers-and-white-coat regalia of the Festival has something to do with the conductor's air of informality. It's a watchful informality, however, for the orchestra seems to be furnishing exactly the sort of playing he likes.

If you're tempted to see and hear for yourself what happens in Tanglewood, two concerts are scheduled for this weekend (Saturday evening, August 13th, and the next afternoon). Rain won't make any difference. They have arranged the shed so that the music comes out and the rain doesn't get in.

REVERTING to events on home grounds, there was a concert of American music at the Lewisohn Stadium last week, with no less than five conductors as chaperons for our composers. There was one first performance—Morton Gould's American Symphonette, No. 2—and many of the paying guests immediately "discovered" the young musician, who conducted his own opus. Those of us who get in a bit of radio listening now and then are fairly well up on the talents of Mr. Gould, who has a concise and amusing way of projecting his ideas. Mr. Gould handles jazz devices without awe or embarrassment and consequently they sound like normal ingredients of his musical vocabulary. He doesn't yet let go as freely as he might, but he probably will.

Arthur H. Gutman directed his own first symphony—a well-made affair, if not especially memorable. Lamar Stringfield, who has developed into an impressive conductor, took charge of John Powell's Negro Rhapsody for piano and orchestra with slick results, and Milton Kaye's playing of the piano part was all that it should have been, which was a lot. Eugene Plotnikoff led staples by Henry Hadley and Randall Thompson, and Miss Joan Field, a capable young violinist, with Willem van Hoogstraten conducting, played the B-minor concerto of Saint-Saëns. Maybe whoever made up the American pro-

---

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

MUSIC

STADIUM CONCERTS—Last week. At the Lewisohn Stadium, Amsterdam Ave. at 136, nightly at 8:30; through Wed., Aug. 17—Philharmonic-Symphony, Smallens conducting, Thurs. through Sat., Aug. 11-13; Freccia conducting, Sun. and Mon., Aug. 14-15; Van Hoogstraten conducting, Tues. and Wed., Aug. 16-17. Soloists: John Corigliano, Aug. 12; Harold Bauer, Aug. 15.

GOLDMAN BAND—Last concerts this season—Central Park Mall, Fri., Sun., and Mon. Eves., Aug. 12, 14, and 15, at 8:30; Prospect Park, Brooklyn, Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30.

OPEN-AIR OPERA—At Randalls Island Stadium, 8:45 P.M.: "Carmen," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13; "Madama Butterfly," Sun. Eve., Aug. 14. At the Marine Stadium, Jones Beach, L.I.: "La Traviata," Fri. Eve., Aug. 12; "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13.

WPA—At the Federal Music Theatre, 254 W. 54—New York Civic Orchestra, Balaban conducting: Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 1:30. Federal Symphony, Balendonck conducting, Sun. Eve., Aug. 14, at 8:45. Greenwich Orchestra, Ruth Kemper conducting: Wed. Eve., Aug. 17, at 8:45.

OUT-OF-TOWN—Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting: Tanglewood, Route 183, [redacted] Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30; and Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 3:30. . . . Silvermine Guild Music Festival, Silvermine, Norwalk, Conn.—Roth String Quartet: Thurs. and Fri. Morns., Aug. 18-19, at 10:30. Philharmonic-Symphony, Ormandy conducting: Thurs. and Sun. Eves., Aug. 18 and 21, at 8:45; Iturbi conducting: Fri. Eve., Aug. 19, at 8:45. Junior Concert, Maganini conducting: Sat. Morn., Aug. 20, at 11:30. . . . Building of Arts Series, Bar Harbor, Me.—Piano recital by Jose Iturbi: Sat. Aft., Aug. 13, at 3:30. Song recital by Roland Hayes: Sat. Aft., Aug. 20, at 3:30. . . . Chamber-music concerts by the Gordon String Quartet: The Hall, Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., Sun. Afts. at 4. . . . "The Tales of Hoffmann," by the Steel Pier Opera Company, Atlantic City, N.J., Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 11-12, at 8:45; "The Bartered Bride," Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 18-19.

62

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUG 13 1938

All-Stravinsky Concert Draws Crowd of 4,000

Smallens Offers 'Fire Bird' Suite, 'Les Noces' and 'Symphony of Psalms' in Program at the Stadium

By Francis D. Perkins

One of the most enterprising programs of the season at the Lewisohn Stadium of City College was devoted Thursday to three works by Igor Stravinsky: the suite from "The Fire Bird," which often has been heard in these concerts; the "Symphony of Psalms" and "Les Noces," which previously had not been performed north of Fifty-seventh Street, Alexander Smallens conducted the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and the Art of Musical Russia Chorus. Jeanne Palmer, soprano; Liuba Senderowna, contralto; Ivan Ivantzoff, tenor, and Peter Nicolaeff, basso, were the vocal soloists in "Les Noces," with Katje Andy, Hannah Klein, Alfred Thiekeler and William Tarrasch as the quartet of pianists who take part with various percussionists in the instrumental score.

Neither "Les Noces" nor the "Symphony of Psalms" is a novelty, but neither has yet become familiar to New York audiences. The symphony, with a Latin text including extracts from two of the Psalms and a third, the 150th, in full, first was presented here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for ~~whom it~~ was composed, on March 5 and 7, 1931, with the Schola Cantorum as the assisting chorus, and also was performed three times by the Philharmonic-Symphony under Otto Klemperer in October, 1934. "Les Noces" was heard first here as a concert work, three years after its Paris premiere, in a concert of the International Composers' Guild, under Leopold Stokowski, on February 14, 1926. Mr. Stokowski also conducted the first performance here as a stage work for the League of Composers at the Metropolitan on April 25, 1929, and "Les Noces" had a later choreographic production at the Metropolitan by the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe on April 20, 1936.

In both works, different commentators have found much to praise and quite a little to disparage, and some time may still have to pass before we have a consensus of informed musical opinion on the subject. In this performance, the first two parts of the "Symphony of Psalms" did not altogether recreate the impression of imagination and eloquence which had been noted in their Carnegie Hall performances, possibly because the character of the orchestration did not seem particularly well suited to outdoor performance. The color and savor of the wood-wind passages introducing the second section, for instance, was diminished considerably when dissipated over the wide spaces of the Stadium. The third section, the "Laudate," proved to be the most impressive of the three in this outdoor hearing, telling both of jubilant adoration and of reverent awe in an interpretation in which the chorus deserved praise, although it seemed rather more at home in the Russian songs, shouts and recitatives of "Les Noces" than in the Latin of the Vulgate.

"Les Noces," with its insistent, incisive rhythms, its percussive instrumentation and the contrast of the occasional lyric outbursts of the soloists against the vigorously accented, persistent chorus, is well adapted for performance outdoors, and the interpretation possessed notable gusto and savor.

Something, indeed, is lost, when it is presented without stage action, especially before an audience unfamiliar with Russian, and at times it risks becoming iterative and monotonous, although the music conveys often engrossingly the atmosphere of Slavic peasant revelry, melancholy and inevitability inherent in the subject. The soloists, choristers and instrumentalists did their work well, and Mr. Smallens merited much praise in his co-ordination of the various elements of the performance with limited time for rehearsal. The audience numbered 4,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 13 1938

BERKSHIRES PLAN THREE-WEEK FETE

Possibility of Prolonging the Music Program Next Year Follows Gain in Patronage

OFFICIALS STUDY CHANGE

Festival and Orchestra Boards May Make a Decision at Their Joint Conference

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—A plan to extend the length of the Berkshire symphonic festival, now in its fifth season, to three weeks is being discussed by officials and friends of the undertaking, it became known today. A decision is expected when the boards of the festival corporation and of the Boston Symphony Orchestra hold[illegible]t meeting.

Two week-ends of programs by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky have been set for next year. The first two week-ends in August have been selected again and the dates are Aug. 3, 5 and 6 and Aug. 10, 12 and 13. Thus the festival is certain to go on for at least the same length of time as this year and last.

The public support of this year's festival has been so encouraging and the demand for further expansion of the program so persistent that a third week has come under consideration. The first question to be decided is whether there shall be the addition of another week. The two boards may determine this question themselves. An alternate procedure may be adopted, with letters sent to patrons and members of the festival inviting renewals for next season and asking for opinions concerning a third week.

New Attraction Foreseen

If another week is added, it may be in the form of an attraction other than the Boston Symphony. It is known that the orchestra has engagements for the last two weeks in August in 1939. It might be available the last week in July. But it is possible that some other musical presentation, or an allied artistic field, may be drafted.

The authorities have reason to consider expansion. The first weekend of concerts this year played to 19,000 persons, an increase of 4,000 over the same period last year. The prospects are that the audiences this week will show a comparable increase over the second week of 1937.

The festival and orchestra authorities, moreover, have indicated that they hope to open a school for conductors, choral leaders and other musicians—one of Mr. Koussevitzky's pet projects for his vision of a national Summer music center in the Berkshires—in 1940. It may be in order for the festival to expand slowly, a little each year, with a third week the logical development for 1939.

There seems to be little doubt that the festival has come to stay. Consider the instance of the patron from Marblehead, Mass., who has already reserved his box for 1939 and has even made hotel reservations for next year's festival period.

Last night's Wagner program proved that this audience is eager, on the whole, to absorb strong meat. The final scene of the first act of "Die Walkuere" is comparatively familiar, but the full third act of "Siegfried" is not. Done without sets, lights, costumes or action, this act requires from the audience concentration and imaginative objection. The large gathering, which was, naturally, not made up wholly of devout Wagnerites, followed attentively, and seemed moved at the end.

Soloists Found Effective

The soloists sang effectively, and in one instance—Paul Althouse as Siegfried—with color, authority and feeling. The dominating element of these performances, however, was the orchestra. Under Mr. Koussevitzky's commanding leadership, Wagner, as the sovereign symphonist, came to life. There were passion, breadth and grandeur in the communication of this music.

It is possible to differ with Mr. Koussevitzky in one or two details, but the total impression was one of immense power and control, with the great pages of the music dramas singing out resplendently. One cannot forget the tremendous surge of the music between the two scenes of the act, nor the brilliance of tone and color.

For artists relatively new to Wagner, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon as Erda and the Wanderer sang comprehendingly. The nobility that their great scene requires will perhaps come with time and experience. But both singers have young, fresh voices and they caught something of the Wagnerian line. Beal Hober as Sieglinde and Bruennhilde was at her best in restrained lyrical passages, although at the end of the "Siegfried" duet her voice took on heroic stride. Mr. Althouse was the most finished Wagnerian. His singing of the pages of Siegfried's discovery of the sleeping Bruennhilde was as fine as anything this listener has heard him do.

Beethoven to Be Played

The festival continues tomorrow night with the Sixth symphonies of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky. The program will open with the late Henry Hadley's "Angelus" from his Third symphony. It will be played in memory of the man who conducted the first Berkshire festival in 1934. A delegation from the Henry Hadley Foundation will atte[illegible]

Although not a part of the festival, but near enough to share in its audience, the South Mountain String Quartet presented another program this afternoon at the Temple of Music on South Mountain, again shifting its Sunday date to Friday so that it would not conflict with the festival. The quartet—Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke—played Mozart's D major quartet and Reger's E flat quartet, Op. 109. Gunnar Johansen, resident pianist at South Mountain, joined with Mr. Willeke in the Strauss sonata for 'cello and piano, Op. 6. Mr. Johansen played with a singing tone, with thrust and in the slow movement with tenderness and depth. He seems to be a gifted young pianist.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 13 1938

FINAL CONCERT OF BOSTON SYMPHONY COMES TOMORROW

Stockbridge, Aug. 13—When the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky return to the stage of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood this evening for the fifth concert in the current festival, they will be greeted by another capacity audience that will overflow the confines of the new building, according to the report from the festival office today.

All reserved seats in the rear section have been sold for tonight's concert, but there are reserved and unreserved seats still available in the front section and unreserved seats in the rear section. Music lovers planning to attend the concert are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge at once if they wish to make reservations.

There is equally as large a crowd that will turn out for the Sunday afternoon concert, the final one, which begins at 3.30.

This evening's program includes Henry Hadley's "Angelus," Beethoven's Sixth or "Pastoral" Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth or "Pathetique."

Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, in charge of the parking crew at Tanglewood, gave the assurance today after inspecting the parking areas, that there is no shortage of suitable parking space but urged everyone to come early for preferred positions.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 13 1938

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., ends with tomorrow afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Tonight Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony; the andante tranquillo from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3; and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" Symphony. Tomorrow's program is composed of Schumann's Symphony in B Flat, No. 1, Sibelius's "Tapiola," and the Brahms Second Symphony.

* * *

Another woman conductor will make her New York debut on Wednesday night, when Ruth Kemper conducts the Greenwich Orchestra at the Federal Music Theater. She has chosen the Mozart "Haffner" Symphony and Goldmark's A Minor Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in which Noah Bielski will be the soloist, as the principal works on her program.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 13 1938

Philharmonic To Be Heard At Silvermine

Anna Kaskas Sings In Norwalk Festival Opening August 18

Anna Kaskas will sing in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony on Sunday, Aug. 21, for the second festival performance during August in these environs.

After her successful appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshires she is now to take part in a festival which is Connecticut's own, that at Silvermine near Norwalk which runs from Thursday to Sunday Aug. 18 to 21.

This festival is under the sponsorship of the Connecticut State Federation of Music Clubs and the Silvermine Guild of Artists The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, conducted variously by Eugene Ormandy, Jose Iturbi and Quinto Maganini, will provide the main musical events, but there will be other attractions such as two chamber music recitals by the Roth Quartet on Thursday morning, Aug. 18, and Friday morning, Aug. 19, lectures on Thursday and Saturday morning by Charles O'Connell, and one on Friday morning by Richardson Wright.

Exhibitions During Week

During the entire festival week there will be exhibitions of paintings, etchings and water colors and an outdoor exhibition of sculpture. An interdenominational praise service will be given Sunday evening at which Virginia Carrington Thomas will be at the organ.

Besides Anna Kaskas, the soloists in Beethoven's Ninth will be Rosa Tentoni, Chase Baromeo and Edouard Grove. Three hundred and fifty voices from the Schola Cantorum of New York and the Connecticut State Federated Choirs will be heard in the choral movement. Ormandy will conduct this performance.

Silvermine some 10 miles out of Norwalk, is aptly named, for it was here that the first silver mine in America was operated.

This second annual "sunshine starlight convention of the arts" will be held in the wooded dell of the Guild grounds and the adjacent estate of Lawrence Bennett. The grounds have been graded so that a gradual lawn slopes to the lakeside where the orchestra will play from a shell built out over the water.

In case of rain during or after intermission at any one of the three symphony programs, the concert will be considered completed. In case of rain before the concert it will be postponed until the first clear evening. The seating arrangement includes boxes, reserved chairs, unreserved benches with backs and 10 tiers of bleachers.

The Programs

The symphonic programs follow: Thursday, Aug. 18 at 8:45—(Ormandy) Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Brahm's Fourth Symphony, Wagnerian excerpts from Die Walkuere, Lohengrin and Meistersinger.

Friday, Aug. 19 at 8:45—(Iturbi) Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Swan of Tuonela and Finlandia by Sibelius, Ravel's Bolero and Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue with Iturbi at the piano.

Sunday, Aug. 21 at 8:30—(Ormandy) Bach's Passacaglia in C minor and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

There will be a junior concert on Saturday morning at 10, conducted by Quinto Maganini. The Roth Quartet will perform works by Mozart, Brahms, Dohnanyi, Haydn, Debussy and Schumann.

Governor Cross has accepted the honorary presidency of the Silvermine Guild Music Festival Association. The honorary vice-presidency of the Association was accepted by former Senator Frederic C. Walcott. It is the Governor's desire to encourage a cultural movement of this magnitude which has become Connecticut's convention of the arts.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

usher ready to escort you to the right seat, while your car will be parked with éclat by a member of the American Legion.

CONCERTGOERS who happen to be familiar with the performances of Dr. Koussevitzky need no reminder of the consistent excellence of his presentations, although they may find him an unusually relaxed platform personality in the Berkshires. Possibly the black-trousers-and-white-coat regalia of the Festival has something to do with the conductor's air of informality. It's a watchful informality, however, for the orchestra seems to be furnishing exactly the sort of playing he likes.

If you're tempted to see and hear for yourself what happens in Tanglewood, two concerts are scheduled for this weekend (Saturday evening, August 13th, and the next afternoon). Rain won't make any difference. They have arranged the shed so that the music comes out and the rain doesn't get in.

REVERTING to events on home grounds, there was a concert of American music at the Lewisohn Stadium last week, with no less than five conductors as chaperons for our composers. There was one first performance—Morton Gould's American Symphonette, No. 2—and many of the paying guests immediately "discovered" the young musician, who conducted his own opus. Those of us who get in a bit of radio listening now and then are fairly well up on the talents of Mr. Gould, who has a concise and amusing way of projecting his ideas. Mr. Gould handles jazz devices without awe or embarrassment and consequently they sound like normal ingredients of his musical vocabulary. He doesn't yet let go as freely as he might, but he probably will.

Arthur H. Gutman directed his own first symphony—a well-made affair, if not especially memorable. Lamar Stringfield, who has developed into an impressive conductor, took charge of John Powell's Negro Rhapsody for piano and orchestra with slick results, and Milton Kaye's playing of the piano part was all that it should have been, which was a lot. Eugene Plotnikoff led staples by Henry Hadley and Randall Thompson, and Miss Joan Field, a capable young violinist, with Willem van Hoogstraten conducting, played the B-minor concerto of Saint-Saëns. Maybe whoever made up the American pro-

---

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 13 1938

MUSIC

STADIUM CONCERTS—Last week. At the Lewisohn Stadium, Amsterdam Ave. at 136, nightly at 8:30; through Wed., Aug. 17—Philharmonic-Symphony, Smallens conducting, Thurs. through Sat., Aug. 11-13; Freccia conducting, Sun. and Mon., Aug. 14-15; Van Hoogstraten conducting, Tues. and Wed., Aug. 16-17. Soloists: John Corigliano, Aug. 12; Harold Bauer, Aug. 15.

GOLDMAN BAND—Last concerts this season—Central Park Mall, Fri., Sun., and Mon. Eves., Aug. 12, 14, and 15, at 8:30; Prospect Park, Brooklyn, Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30.

OPEN-AIR OPERA—At Randalls Island Stadium, 8:45 P.M.: "Carmen," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13; "Madama Butterfly," Sun. Eve., Aug. 14. At the Marine Stadium, Jones Beach, L.I.: "La Traviata," Fri. Eve., Aug. 12; "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," Sat. Eve., Aug. 13.

WPA—At the Federal Music Theatre, 254 W. 54—New York Civic Orchestra, Balaban conducting: Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 1:30. Federal Symphony, Balendonck conducting, Sun. Eve., Aug. 14, at 8:45. Greenwich Orchestra, Ruth Kemper conducting: Wed. Eve., Aug. 17, at 8:45.

OUT-OF-TOWN—Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting: Tanglewood, Route 183, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., Thurs. and Sat. Eves., Aug. 11 and 13, at 8:30; and Sun. Aft., Aug. 14, at 3:30. . . . Silvermine Guild Music Festival, Silvermine, Norwalk, Conn.—Roth String Quartet: Thurs. and Fri. Morns., Aug. 18-19, at 10:30. Philharmonic-Symphony, Ormandy conducting: Thurs. and Sun. Eves., Aug. 18 and 21, at 8:45; Iturbi conducting: Fri. Eve., Aug. 19, at 8:45. Junior Concert, Maganini conducting: Sat. Morn., Aug. 20, at 11:30. . . . Building of Arts Series, Bar Harbor, Me.—Piano recital by Jose Iturbi: Sat. Aft., Aug. 13, at 3:30. Song recital by Roland Hayes: Sat. Aft., Aug. 20, at 3:30. . . . Chamber-music concerts by the Gordon String Quartet: The Hall, Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., Sun. Afts. at 4. . . . "The Tales of Hoffmann," by the Steel Pier Opera Company, Atlantic City, N.J., Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 11-12, at 8:45; "The Bartered Bride," Thurs. and Fri. Eves., Aug. 18-19.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
152 AUG 13 1938

All-Stravinsky Concert Draws Crowd of 4,000

Smallens Offers 'Fire Bird' Suite, 'Les Noces' and 'Symphony of Psalms' in Program at the Stadium

By Francis D. Perkins

One of the most enterprising programs of the season at the Lewisohn Stadium of City College was devoted Thursday to three works by Igor Stravinsky: the suite from "The Fire Bird," which often has been heard in these concerts; the "Symphony of Psalms" and "Les Noces," which previously had not been performed north of Fifty-seventh Street, Alexander Smallens conducted the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and the Art of Musical Russia Chorus. Jeanne Palmer, soprano; Liuba Senderowna, contralto; Ivan Ivantzoff, tenor, and Peter Nicolaeff, basso, were the vocal soloists in "Les Noces," with Katje Andy, Hannah Klein, Alfred Thiekeler and William Tarrasch as the quartet of pianists who take part with various percussionists in the instrumental score.

Neither "Les Noces" nor the "Symphony of Psalms" is a novelty, but neither has yet become familiar to New York audiences. The symphony, with a Latin text including extracts from two of the Psalms and a third, the 150th, in full, first was presented here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for whom it was composed, on March 5 and 7, 1931, with the Schola Cantorum as the assisting chorus, and also was performed three times by the Philharmonic-Symphony under Otto Klemperer in October, 1934. "Les Noces" was heard first here as a concert work, three years after its Paris premiere, in a concert of the International Composers' Guild, under Leopold Stokowski, on February 14, 1926. Mr. Stokowski also conducted the first performance here as a stage work for the League of Composers at the Metropolitan on April 25, 1929, and "Les Noces" had a later choreographic production at the Metropolitan by the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe on April 20, 1936.

In both works, different commentators have found much to praise and quite a little to disparage, and some time may still have to pass before we have a consensus of informed musical opinion on the subject. In this performance, the first two parts of the "Symphony of Psalms" did not altogether recreate the impression of imagination and eloquence which had been noted in their Carnegie Hall performances, possibly because the character of the orchestration did not seem particularly well suited to outdoor performance. The color and savor of the wood-wind passages introducing the second section, for instance, was diminished considerably when dissipated over the wide spaces of the Stadium. The third section, the "Laudate," proved to be the most impressive of the three in this outdoor hearing, telling both of jubilant adoration and of reverent awe in an interpretation in which the chorus deserved praise, although it seemed rather more at home in the Russian songs, shouts and recitatives of "Les Noces" than in the Latin of the Vulgate.

"Les Noces," with its insistent, incisive rhythms, its percussive instrumentation and the contrast of the occasional lyric outbursts of the soloists against the vigorously accented, persistent chorus, is well adapted for performance outdoors, and the interpretation possessed notable gusto and savor.

Something, indeed, is lost, when it is presented without stage action, especially before an audience unfamiliar with Russian, and at times it risks becoming iterative and monotonous, although the music conveys often engrossingly the atmosphere of Slavic peasant revelry, melancholy and inevitability inherent in the subject. The soloists, choristers and instrumentalists did their work well, and Mr. Smallens merited much praise in his co-ordination of the various elements of the performance with limited time for rehearsal. The audience numbered 4,000.

153

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE
AUG 13 1938

Acoustical Improvements Mark Berkshire Festival Performance

By THOMAS ARCHER.
(Drama and Music Critic of The Gazette.)

This year at the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are no longer housed in a tent for the concerts but in an immense "shed" equipped with a shell reflecting the sound in an eminently satisfactory manner. The new building has greatly increased the impressive musical qualities of the concerts without in the least destroying the al fresco effect which is their chief charm.

At Tanglewood, where the festival takes place, the concert-goer finds himself in a beautiful estate in the heart of the Berkshire hills. It is one of the show places of Western Massachusetts. The festival, which consists of two series of concerts, was begun only a few years ago in an improvised way. Then Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented her huge estate for the purpose. With the erection of the concert shed the task has been completed and the future, it is expected, will be devoted to artistic improvement and expansion.

The festival draws audiences averaging 6,000 for each concert. Lovers of slogans have already named it the Salzberg of America.

The music is magnificent. The programmes are chosen with an eye to special and, if possible, memorable performances. Last Saturday evening, for example, Dr. Koussevitsky led such a memorable performance in giving the First Symphony of Jan Sibelius. Usually this work is regarded as depending too much upon the style of the composer's predecessors to be really representative.

The Berkshire interpretation belied such a criticism. It showed that the symphony in question is just as original and characteristic as the Sibelius Fourth or Fifth. Dr. Koussevitsky obtained particularly fine results with the slow movement. He made of it the song that it is. The scherzo with its stirring motive on the drums was given in forthright and masculine accents. The finale was realized as a towering musical structure.

Best of all this performance made hearers feel the atmosphere which is peculiar to the music of Sibelius, who is first of all devoted to expressing what he has to say in terms of song. This atmosphere, the song of the north as it has been called, makes him the genius he is. It is comparatively easy to realize it in pieces like "The Swan of Tuonela," "The Oceanides," and "Tapiola," but it requires great playing to get the same effects in a symphony like this one.

The programme also included Debussy's "La Mer," which was regarded as a supreme test of the acoustics of the new shed. Certainly the festival authorities have nothing to fear in this respect. Every detail, every nuance, could be heard with the requisite appreciation. A Haydn symphony made an appropriate introduction for the evening.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is still one of the wonders of the world of music. The playing is ever most flexible and the tone superb. The discipline is splendid and an even quality is apparent in all three choirs, strings, woodwinds and brass. Dr. Kousevitsky is a picturesque conductor and he seems to obtain exactly the effects of interpretation he desires.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM
AUG 13 1938

Fair Grounds to Become Nation's Radio Capital

Many Broadcasting Studios Are Being Planned. Television Programs Will Be Shown to Visitors.

By ALTON COOK,
World-Telegram Radio Editor.

Last year Hollywood depopulated Radio City's broadcasting studios. Next year it will be the World's Fair.

When the Fair opens its gates next April 30 two-thirds of the major broadcasts now coming from New York studios are expected to move out to Flushing. A number of programs from other cities also will be moved to the "World of Tomorrow."

The ground plans of the Fair are dotted with radio studios. The municipal station, WNYC, will have no less than five studios in the city building, including one auditorium studio seating several hundred persons.

Nearly all of the large buildings being erected by major American industries represented at the Fair include an auditorium or theater of some sort. Acoustical engineers are being consulted on all these to make sure they will be of proper design for use as radio studios.

Will Want to See Notables.

Naturally, any advertiser who has an auditorium right in the center of his Fair exhibit would want his radio program there, too. The radio notables will be a magnet for drawing visitors to the various industrial exhibits.

It is too early for even a guess at the list of programs which will make studio headquarters at the Fair next spring and summer. One of the few definite items is the Ford plan to move Sunday evening broadcasts of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra to the Fair. For the rest of the list just run your finger down the evening schedule of each program now coming from New York. You can say:—"If it is still on the air the chances are about two to one it will move to the Fair grounds."

Many Special Programs.

Along with the commercial broadcasts at the Fair there will be a variety of special programs from the grounds—concerts, ceremonies, speeches, radio tours and entertainment of various kinds. Four major symphony orchestras—New York Philharmonic, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia—will be playing at the grounds. The Boston Symphony may be added to this list.

The space filled by representatives of sixty-three foreign nations will be another fertile corner for radio entertainment. England is sending its Coldstream Guards band and Italy its almost equally famous Caribiniere Band. Those are samples.

The Fair is not waiting until April 30 for the opening of regular radio activities. John S. Young, the Fair's radio director, has planned a series of programs to come from abroad for broadcast on American networks, starting in October and continuing through the winter.

Heads of Nations to Speak.

Naturally, the primary purpose will be ballyhoo for the Fair. Another theme Mr. Young expects to emphasize will be peace and the interdependence of nations. The programs will bring addresses by reigning monarchs, royal families and leading statesmen of the nations. Included also will be representative samples of the national culture—music, folk lore, etc.

The opening program will come from England, one nation whose reigning monarch will not speak. Because of oratorical limitations King George VI has withdrawn from radio activities for the present. The English program may include an address by the Prime Minister. The series would close with a program from Canada on the eve of the Fair's formal opening.

Paderewski to Play.

A highlight of the winter series is the promise of piano solos by Ignace Paderewski. Mr. Young is hopeful that Paderewski's American radio debut will be included in the program from Poland. However, promises of Paderewski for the American networks have been received before but did not materialize.

After the Fair is open Mr. Young plans to have three hours of radio programs a day available to any station that wants them, either the networks or New York's independent stations. There probably will be one hour from 10 to 11 A. M., another from 4 to 5 P. M. and another after 10 P. M. The hours will be chosen to hit periods when the stations have a minimum of commercial broadcasts. A variety of Fair activities and entertainment will be included in these programs.

Several short wave stations will be represented on the grounds broadcasting the Fair to South America, Europe and the rest of the world. General Electric plans to have a wire from its Fair studios to its short wave transmitters at Schenectady.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
AUG 14 1938

Berkshire Festival

New Music Shed Is Dedicated at Opening Concert—Dr. Koussevitzky Excels in Music of Sibelius—General Impressions of Event

By Roderick O. Williams

"GOOD evening, ladies and gentlemen. We are speaking to you from 'Tanglewood,' the lovely 200-acre estate surruonded by the richly wooded Berkshire Hills overlooking a lake, which is the magnificent setting for the 1938 Berkshire Symphonic Festival. A capacity audience of almost 6,000 is present to witness the dedication of the recently completed Music Shed and to hear the program of Bach and Beethoven masterpieces which will be played in tonight's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the distinguished leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The lights are being lowered and in a few seconds Dr. Koussevitzky will appear . . ." Thus, through the medium of the radio in his car, did your correspondent gain his first impression while trying to fight his way to a parking place in the fields on the estate. So vast is the spread of the festival grounds that many were late who were within the boundaries of the property 15 minutes before concert time.

Upon approaching the music shed, one is struck by the inadequacy of the term, for the structure, which at the opening concert housed an orchestra of 110 pieces, a chorus of over 100 and an audience of almost 6,000, can be described as a cross between an airplane hangar and a symphony hall. The acoustics of the shed appear to be entirely satisfactory, for the chorus and orchestra at the first concert were plainly audible in the adjoining field when the car radio was extinguished. After the opening chorus from Bach's Cantata, "Ein Feste Burg," the dedicatory address was made by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival.

In tracing the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Miss Smith gave credit for the germ of the idea to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, who conducted three concerts by the New York Philharmonic on the Dan Hanna estate near Stockbridge, Mass., in August, 1934. In the following year, with the aid of a tent seating 3,000 persons, the festival continued, although not without struggles with weather and with a financial deficit. In 1936 the festival engaged the Boston Symphony with Dr. Koussevitzky, to perform in a shell on the "Holmwood" estate owned by Mrs. Margaret Emerson. The present home of the festival is permanent as a result of the donation of the Tanglewood estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. Last year, for the first time, the festival concerts were broadcast and were considered a great success in spite of the weather. One concert in which a Wagner program and a violent thunderstorm vied for supremacy, is said to be the event which crystalized the idea of a permanent, weather-proof housing.

The shed is a fan-shaped structure built of steel girders and a roof of lumber padded with felt to deaden the sound of rain. The building, at present, is little more than an acre and a half of roof about 40 feet above the ground, although it is paneled around the top for further protection. Eventually the shed is to have iron roll curtains to enclose it completely against storms, a permanent floor and seats, and any other refinements which are possible within the $58,000 which the festival hopes to raise.

The dedicatory nature of the opening concert made particularly fitting the choice of program which culminated with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the choral finale of which is based on Schiller's "Ode to Joy." The chorus was that of the Cecilia Society of Boston, whose eminent conductor, Arthur Fieldler, was called upon the stage to share the enthusiastic applause with Dr. Koussevitzky and the soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; and Norman Cordon, bass. The performance was a memorable one with special credit going to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra. The chorus was well schooled and the soloists were adequate, although their position behind the orchestra necessitated considerable vocal effort which proved unfortunate in view of the taxing nature of the music.

The concert of Saturday evening, Aug. 6, again proved the outstanding mastery of Dr. Koussevitzky in modern and contemporary music, with special reference to that of Sibelius. Opening with Haydn's Symphony No. 99 in E flat, and a most expressive interpretation of Debussy's "La Mer," the orchestra played the First Symphony of Sibelius as though each man in the ensemble were the composer himself. This statement is not meant to indicate that the performance was free from technical deficiencies but it is an attempt to illustrate the perfection with which the orchestra projected the spiritual and emotional content of the music. The rich, romantic sweep of melody in the Andante, the virile outbursts of the Allegro, and the Finale which is based on material heard throughout the Symphony, were all moulded under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton with convincing authenticity.

Mozart's Serenade for String Orchestra "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" opened the Sunday afternoon concert of Aug. 7, with the Fourth Symphony of Brahms completing the pre-intermission portion. A five-part suite designated as "Music for the Theater," by the American composer, Aaron Copland, introduced the second half of the program with Mr. Copland playing the piano part. Devoting himself with extraordinary devotion to the music of Ravel, Dr. Koussevitzky completed the interesting afternoon with the suite from "Daphnis and Chloe," and "Ma Mere L'Oye."

Excerpts from "Die Walkure" and the attention of the Thursday audience of this past week. The Act I scene between Siegmund and Sieglinde was the "Walkure" offering, ably sung by Paul Althouse and Beal Hober, while Norman Cordon and Anna Kaskas joined them in the complete Act III of "Siegfried." Last night's program opened with a tribute to the memory of Henry Hadley in the performance of his "Angelus" from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor. Beethoven's "Pastorale" Symphony (No. 6) and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" (also No. 6), completed this popular concert. The final program of the festival, to be played this afternoon, will include Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat, the "Lieutenant Kije" suite by Prokofieff, and finally the Brahms Symphony No. 2 in D major.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 14 1938

BEETHOVEN PLAYED AT BERKSHIRE FETE

Sixth Symphony With That of Tchaikovsky Is Presented by Serge Koussevitzky

MEMORIAL TO A FOUNDER

'Angelus' From Henry Hadley Work Prefaces the Major Part of Program

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra bracketed the sixth symphonies of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky for the fifth program of the Berkshire Symphony Festival at Tanglewood here tonight. The program began with a brief memorial to one of the founders of the festival—the late Henry Hadley, who conducted the first two seasons in 1934 and 1935. The "Angelus" from Hadley's third symphony prefaced the symphonies, and there was a delegation from the Henry Hadley Foundation to help observe the occasion.

One of the largest audiences of the festival attended tonight's concert. It was estimated at more than 6,000. All the reserved seats in the rear section were gone yesterday. Again there was thunderous approval for conductor and orchestra. Beethoven's "Pastorale" seemed especially appropriate in this setting.

Record Attendance Expected

For the closing concert of the festival, tomorrow afternoon, a record-breaking crowd is expected, provided the weather is favorable. The final program will consist of Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Brahms's Second symphony.

As the festival approached its end, officials and friends of the enterprise continued to discuss plans for expansion for next year and thereafter. The board of the Festival Corporation was informed today that a meeting will be held next Friday, and the board of the Boston Symphony will meet the following week.

It seemed likely that the addition of another week would not be voted for the 1939 festival, since the orchestra is not available and since it would be difficult to work in another attraction. However, expansion there will be. It is expected to take the form of an additional concert during each of the two weeks already fixed.

The likeliest plan at the moment appears to be to open the festival on Wednesday night each week as well as to give concerts on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons as this year and last. Thus eight programs will be scheduled in two weeks. The addition of an extra week will be deferred to 1940.

Consider Theatre Production

The question of attractions in fields other than music has been and is being canvassed by officials. It became known today that representatives of the festival met with a director of the Mercury Theatre recently to consider whether any special productions were feasible for Tanglewood.

It may be added that the present music shed is not likely to be used for presentations of the spoken drama. The structure was designed for music, and it is acoustically right for music. But it seems much too large and diffuse for the spoken word. If the drama is to be represented at Tanglewood, it may have to wait for the construction of a special theatre, and that is not an improbability for some time in the future.

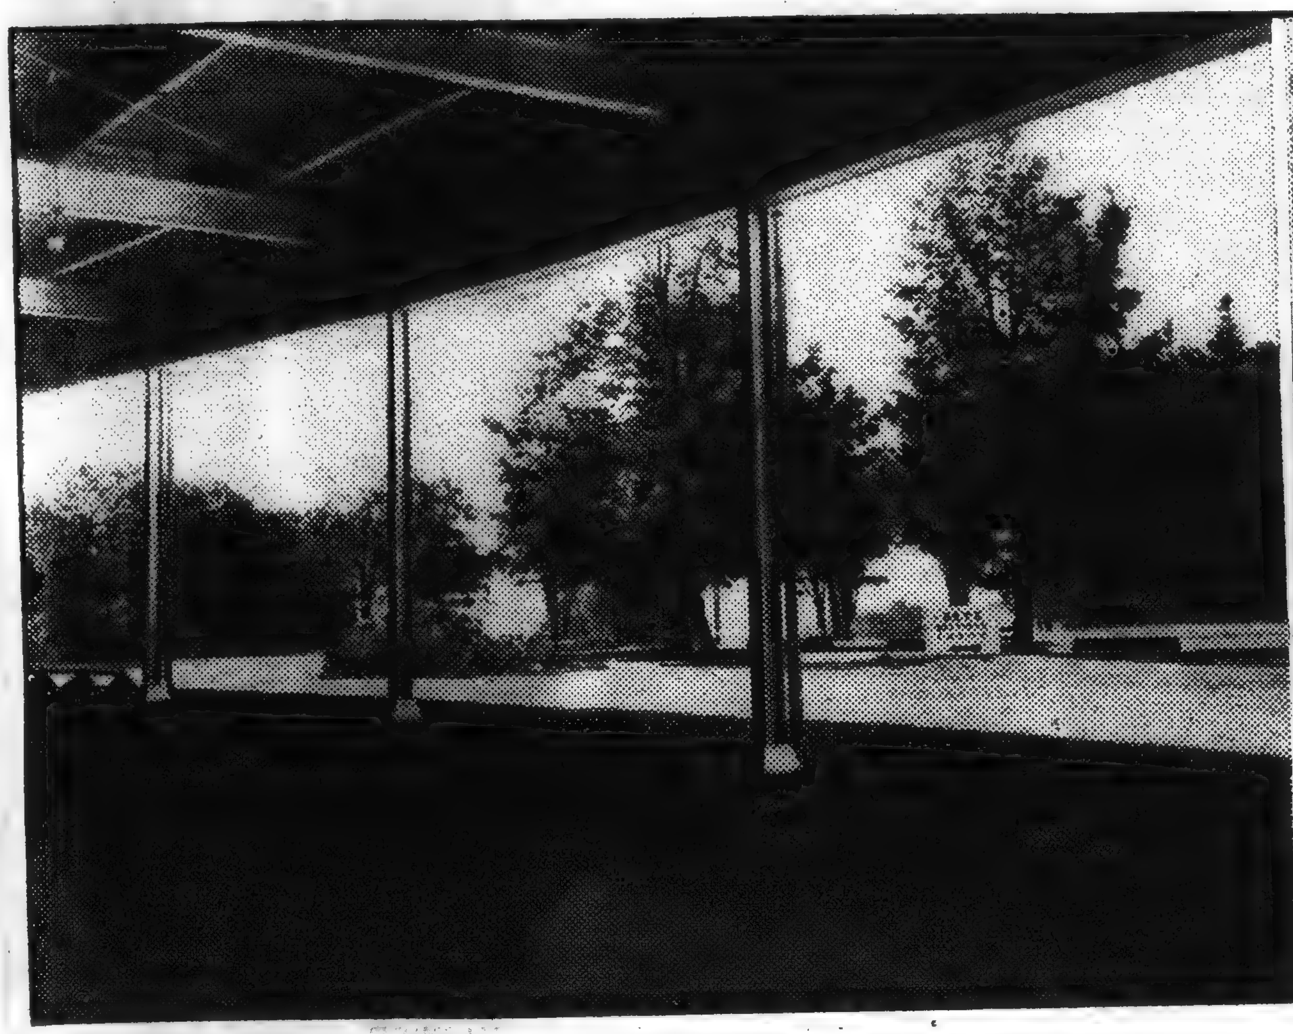
It was learned today that the first gift toward scholarship for the school which is to be opened here in 1940 was made some days ago. A woman from Pittsburgh contributed $100 toward the scholarship fund.

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

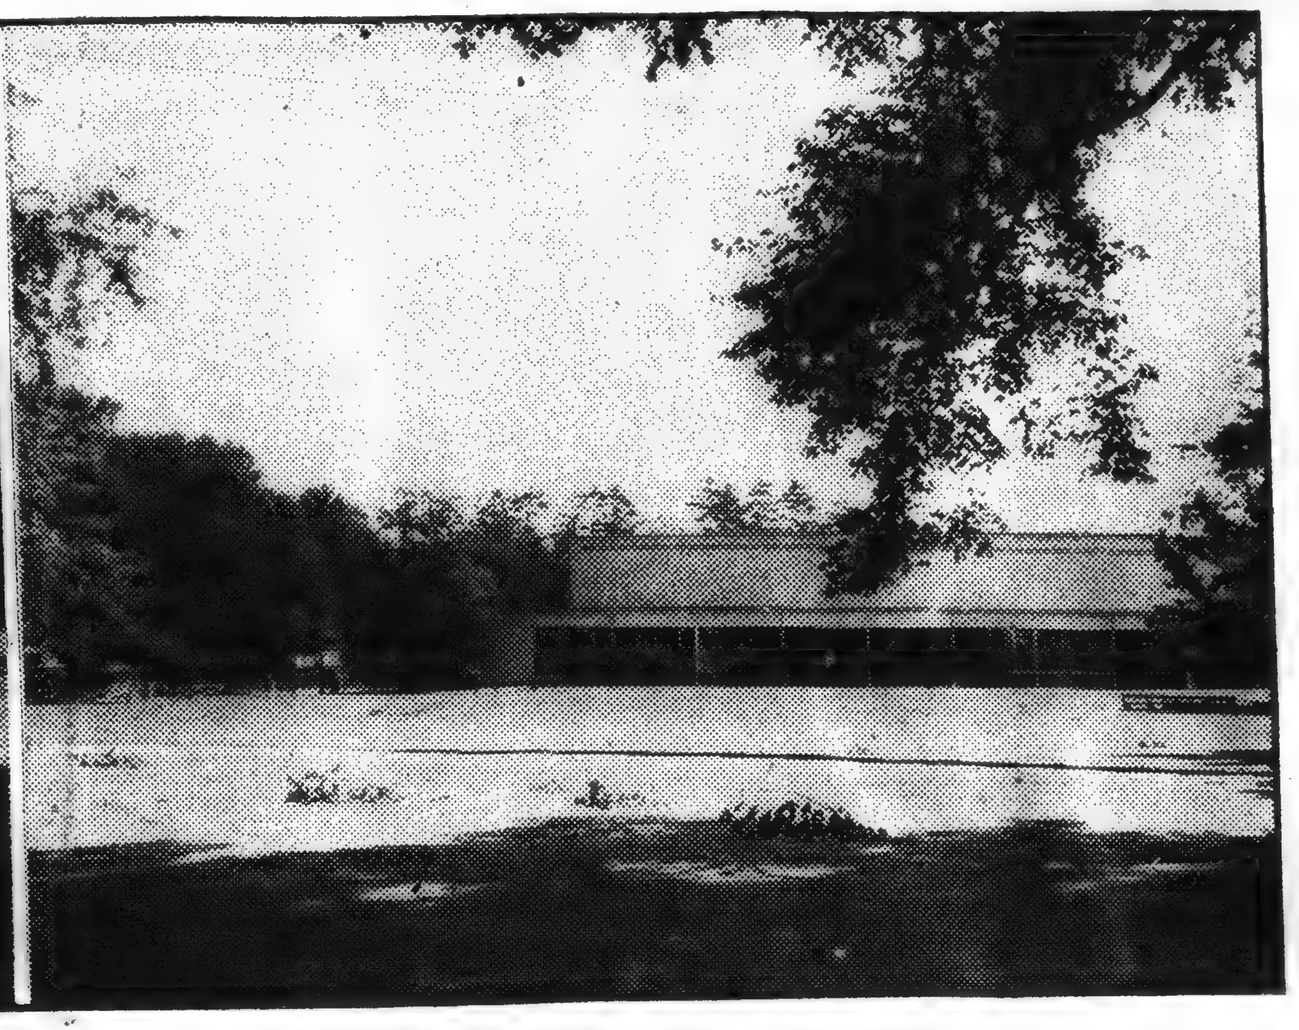
AUG 14 1938

154

Tanglewood's Colorful Setting for Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival



LAWN FROM COLONNADE OF SHED



SHED VIEWED FROM MANSION

Concerts Primarily Devoted to Presentation of Outstanding Orchestral Works; Expect To Establish Conductors' School

By SAMUEL T. WILSON
(Dispatch Music Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.—At the end of the Boston Symphony orchestra's first series of concerts of the present Berkshire Symphonic festival, and as a first-time visitor at the festival, I find myself more than a bit lost in admiration at certain aspects of the festival which make it unique among any I have ever attended.

In the first place, this festival really lives up to its name in that its concerts are primarily devoted to performances of masterworks for orchestra, representing all schools and all periods of musical history.

In the second place the ultimate aim of the festival is not the mere giving of an annual series of concerts but the furtherance of the cause of symphonic music in the United States. To this end a scholarship summer school is to be established at Tanglewood, the magnificent estate given the Boston orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks for the training of native conductors and instrumentalists. It is hoped that the school may be in operation during the summer of 1940.

Another enormously impressive feature of the festival, which testifies to its seriousness of purpose in the service it may render music, is the emphasis placed on excellence of performance rather than on quantity of music played. Strict adherence to a rule of "not too much" has resulted in the giving of only six concerts during the two-week period of the festival. As a result each program is thoroughly well rehearsed and audiences are never brought to the state of satiety usual at festivals of this kind.

⁂

AND still another matter sets the Berkshire festival and its concerts in a class apart. While Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is now the tutelary genius of the festival to whom audiences offer clamorous tribute of warm affection and admiration one never feels that Tanglewood audiences are indulging in blatant conductor worship, that the cult of the conductor, so unfortunate a part of our musical life today, has set its withering mark on Tanglewood.

Dr. Koussevitzky is wholeheartedly adored, but one comes away from the concerts with the conviction that however much his listeners are predisposed in his favor as a dynamic personality and a brilliant conductor they put first things first and see him proportionately as one man among many who is working toward the lofty goal that has been set for the Berkshire festival. Festival ideals transcend personalities at Tanglewood.

Of Tanglewood as an ideal site for festival concerts and of the new music shed as a perfect auditorium I spoke in my wire report of the initial concert of the 1938 series given Aug. 4, and shall resist great temptation to elaborate on those comments here. One more general observation on the festival may well be made, however, before discussing in detail the concerts it has been my very great privilege to hear. The Tanglewood visitor cannot help but be impressed by the Berkshire festival audience.

⁂

THE festival, of course, is a young one—this is only its fifth season. Its audience still is largely a regional one, made up principally of those who regard the Boston orchestra as one of New England's proudest cultural possessions, who take concerts by this great orchestra as a matter of course, who are steeped in the tradition of great music superlatively well presented.

By and large this audience attends the festival concert to hear and not just to be seen. The intelligently appreciative, rapt attention it accords the work of conductor and orchestra is absolute and makes a very real contribution to the concerts, a contribution in its own way as valuable as that made by Dr. Koussevitzky.

As the fame of the Berkshire festival spreads across the country, professional, fashionable concert-goers will doubtless throng to the Berkshire hills. I believe, however, that when this day comes the leavening influence of this purely regional element among festival patrons will be the dominant influence at Tanglewood and that Tanglewood audiences will remain as distinctive as the festival itself.

And now, at long last, a brief discussion of the first three concerts of the 1938 festival. For the concert of Thursday, Aug. 4, the Beethoven Ninth Symphony was the program, since the two excerpts from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" served primarily as the musical frame for the dedicatory addresses of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Mr. Bentley W. Warren.

⁂

THE first chorus from the cantata, sung by the Cecilia society chorus of Boston, opened the concert and the final chorale brought the first part of the program to an impressive conclusion as the audience of more than 6000 persons joined with orchestra and chorus in its performance.

The Beethoven Symphony, which Dr. Koussevitzky told the audience he had programed because he considered it the greatest of all symphonies and because he wanted to "hear the voice of Tanglewood singing Schiller's words calling all nations to the brotherhood of man" was brilliantly presented.

The surging drama of the first movement was powerfully projected by conductor and orchestra while the second, at no sacrifice of musical values, was made the occasion for a breathtaking display of orchestral virtuosity. The adagio was memorable for the ravishing beauty of the orchestra's tone and the communicate, brooding serenity with which Dr. Koussevitzky molded its broad, flowing lines.

The generally finely integrated performance of the choral finale brought the audience cheering to its feet. In this the work of the Cecilia choristers was of noteworthy caliber, and excellent singing was done by the solo quartet composed of Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. Mr. Cordon's delivery of the first baritone recitative marked one of the few times I have heard the talking lines legitimately and beautifully sung. Here was stirring declamation without explosiveness.

⁂

WITH the concert of Saturday, Aug. 6, the festival, its dedicatory ceremonies out of the way, really settled into its stride. First came a performance of Haydn's Symphony in E-flat, No. 99, of patrician elegance and dextrous executive polish. The radiant tonal loveliness and evocative pictorial quality of the playing of Debussy's "La Mer," which followed, literally beggared description. Sibelius' Symphony No. 1 in E minor, superbly done, ended the concert.

For the first concert of the series the lawns and gardens of Tanglewood were bathed in moonlight; for the second, low hanging clouds threatened a rain which happily did not materialize. In the heat of a blazing mid-afternoon sun the concert of Sunday, Aug. 7, was given and desultory breezes carried into the auditorium the scent of pine and fir. On the program of the afternoon were Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik;" Brahm's Symphony in E minor, No. 4; Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater," and Ravel's "Ma Mere l'Oye" and "Daphnis and Chloe" suite No. 2. The Mozart was exquisitely done.

Copland's "Music for the Theater," with the composer at the piano, was effectively presented. The symphony was magnificently played by the orchestra and was more than well received although certain of the more individual aspects of Dr. Koussevitzky's reading were open to question.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra jointly achieved almost incredibly delicate effects of dynamic and tonal shading in "Ma Mere l'Oye" and again in the daybreak section of "Daphnis and Chloe." In the "General Dance," from the last named work, the full power of the orchestra was unleashed in all its splendor and the bravura performance of the suite, developed to an overwhelming climax, brought the audience shouting, here and there even shrieking, to its feet in an ovation which was still in progress some 10 minutes after the concert's end.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 14 1938

Fifth Festival In Berkshires Closes Today

Koussevitzky's Program Includes Symphonies by Schumann and Brahms and Prokofieff Novelty

The fifth annual Berskshire Symphonic Festival will close this afternoon in the new Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass. The program to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, beginning at 3:30, includes Schumann's first symphony, in B flat; Serge Prokofieff's orchestral suite, "Lieutenant Kije," op. 60, and Brahms's second symphony. The suite, introduced here by the Boston Symphony last season, is derived from incidental music composed by Prokofieff for a film of this title produced at Leningrad in 1933. The suite itself was completed and published the following year.

The total audience for the first three festival concerts on August 4, 6 and 7 was estimated at more than 19,000, not counting the 2,000 festival members who attended a rehearsal on August 6.

The seventh festival in August, 1939, which will be the fourth with the participation of the Boston Symphony, the third at Tanglewood and the second in the Music Shed, will consist, like its two immediate predecessors, of six concerts on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

It is, naturally, too early for the announcement of the repertoire, although it is possible that works with chorus or soloists, such as the Beethoven ninth symphony and last Thursday's Wagner program, may have a larger share in next summer's programs. Meanwhile the festival management, headed by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of these festivals since their organization four years ago, has opened a campaign for the $58,000 estimated as necessary for immediate improvements in the Music Shed and the grounds, which it is hoped to have completed in time for the next festival. Some donations have already been received.

In the address made by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., at the opening concert of this summer's festival, it was pointed out that Dr. Koussevitzky is hoping to establish at Tanglewood a school for young orchestral and choral conductors and orchestral instrumentalists, holding annual sessions before each festival. With an adequate plant already in existence at Tanglewood, the principal need for funds would be for scholarships. Mr. Warren expressed the hope that such plans could be sufficiently developed to make it possible to open the school in the summer of 1940.

Festival memberships giving their holders reduced rates for the 1939 festival concerts and other privileges may be taken out now. Information may be obtained from the office of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

155

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

AUG 1 4 1938

Symphonic Festival Is Big Success With Koussevitzky Leader

Boston Symphony Orchestra Writes Brilliant Chapter to Be Added To Berkshire Achievements

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Critic

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13—Another brilliant chapter in America's musical annals is being written by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its eminent leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival being held here at the beautiful estate, "Tanglewood," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his famous "Tales" and which was presented in perpetuity to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass.

Mr. Lewando

To the new spacious fan-shape music shed recently erected have come music lovers from all parts of the nation. Every concert has been a complete sell-out with more than 6000 persons attending each event, listening to great music being performed inimitably and applauding and shouting their appreciation of the artistic treat afforded them.

The dedicatory concert brought to performance a fitting program for the occasion, principal of which was the mammoth ninth (choral) symphony of Beethoven given in collaboration with the Cecilia Chorus of 100 of which Arthur Fiedler is leader. The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon. Preceding the symphony came the first chorus from Bach's Cantata, Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott, No. 80, and the same composer's Chorale from the same work, the audience having been invited to join in singing the 16-bar section. With Dr. Koussevitzky facing them the huge throng unerringly followed his baton and their singing added impellingly to the effect of the performance.

The projection of the immortal Ninth was nothing less than thrilling. Aside from the vitality of performance called forth through Dr. Koussevitzky's inspiring leadership, one could not but be awed by the innate power and the tremendous genius that has given so much for the world to ponder and wonder at, and which is so stirringly climaxed in this his final symphonic effort destined to echo down the ages.

Following the Bach pieces dedicatory remarks were made by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Orchestra, and by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival Association.

Miss Smith and her Board have done wonders to bring this festival to its present high estate in cooperation with Dr. Koussevitzky.

* * *

What ideals, imagination and initiative can do to advance the cause of musical art has been proved by the fine spirit of men and women whose artistic impulse and vision have brought into existence a summer project which is making national and world history in the domain of music. Last year when a disastrous cloudburst almost threatened to blow down the enormous tent under which more than 5000 persons were gathered to hear the concert, it was then and there decided to build the music shed which now houses activities. Mr. Saarinen, the architect, Engineer Joseph Franz, and Acoustican Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology have given generously of effort in the building of the shed.

About $80,000 was raised without pressure to erect the building as it now stands. The roof covers an acre and a half. To complete the plans, $58,000 is yet needed to cover the steel pillars with fluted columns, to beautify the grounds, to add permanent lighting to the parking fields, for iron roll curtains to close the auditorium against storms and for permanent chairs for the audience. It is hoped this compaartively small amount will be forthcoming to complete this great shrine of artistic service.

The second concert was a miracle of achievement. The program comprised Haydn's E-flat symphony No. 99, Debussy's exquisite La Mer, and the first Sibelius symphony. Probably no conductor in the world has done so much for bringing Sibelius' work to the attention of the public. His thorough understanding and sympathy for this composer of the North who is the greatest living symphonist was strongly indicated in the manner of projection of this first symphony. It gave opportunity to become acquainted with the composer's early work and to observe the gems of individuality which were thrusting out from the influencing style of Tschaikowsky. But the high spot of this second concert was the performance of the Debussy work. Here Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra recreated a highly poetic and amazingly impressionistic work in a manner that reached the heat of every listener. No conductor today gives us as much of the spirit of Debussy in this work as Dr. Koussevitzky. It was an extraordinary endeavor, supreme interpretive art that roused the audience to a high pitch of excitement.

Lighter, though without compromise to artistic taste, was the Sunday program that consisted of Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik; Aaron Copland's Music for the Theater; Brahms' 4th Symphony, and the second suite from Ravel's Daphne and Chloe.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

AUG 4 - 1938

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

BERKSHIRES BUZZING IN READINESS FOR GREAT SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood (Stockbridge), Mass., August 4—One hundred and ten members of the Cecilia Chorus of Boston boarded buses at Symphony Hall this morning and headed west for Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge to participate with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed tonight.

Arriving here with the Chorus will be the four soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, Ann Kaska, Norman Cordon, and Paul Althouse. Their part will be in tonight's performance of Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony, and in a Bach cantata. The Orchestra arrived yesterday, fresh from its triumphs at the Esplanade in Boston. Members of the Chorus have been going to Boston from widely scattered points for weeks to rehearse with the Orchestra for the occasion. They will have dinner tonight on the terrace of the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, and will then be transported the mile and a quarter to Tanglewood in buses.

The program will begin promptly at 8:30 with the Bach chorus and chorale from the cantata, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God". The audience will join in the singing. The first half will also include Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor. The second half will be given over entirely to the symphony.

Patrons are pouring into the vicinity from all directions. The great open-air shed will accommodate 5,700 persons. The representation from Bergen County has not yet been learned. Success of the Festival is due in large measure to the efforts by volunteers in many parts of the country—not just the Berkshires. There are sub-chairmen in all the New England States, in New York, Ohio, Florida, California, and in New Jersey.

Members of the American Legion from Pittsfield and surrounding towns are, voluntarily, taking charge of parking. It is an outstanding example of accomplishment through friendly co-operation. Here are no class barriers.

Concerts will be held tonight, Saturday night, Sunday afternoon at 3:30, next Thursday night, Saturday night, August 13, and the following Sunday afternoon at 3:30.

The Festival officers have endeavored to correlate the many cultural interests that abound in the Berkshires, such as the South Mountain chamber music concerts in Pittsfield, similar concerts at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., Ted Shawn and his men dancers at West Becket, the Berkshire Playhouse, and other interests. The Festival itself is sponsoring this year for the third time lectures by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, on the important music to be played at the concerts. Mr. Downes will give his first lecture this afternoon at 3 in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield.

The beautiful shed, a unique structure, is of course the big feature that everyone is talking about. More about this in another column.

* * *

It seems but yesterday that the late Dr. Henry Hadley sent an emissary to the Berkshires with the germ of an idea for the Festival.

Actually it was four years ago (1934). With the skepticism for which New England is noted, the idea was studied, presented to summer and permanent residents and finally, actually accepted with a degree of enthusiasm. The Festival has gone far in the short space of four years.

It is still growing; it is developing gradually into an institution, typically American, establishing its own traditions in keeping with high standards, and with the realization that, to merit continued support of a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Sponsors were fortunate in being given the use of the Dan Hanna estate in the village of Interlaken, in the Township of Stockbridge. In the horse show ring of the farm 65 members of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Hadley presented three concerts in August. Audiences were of 1,800 to 2,000 persons for each concert.

In the fall of that year the Festival was incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts with the broadest kind of charter, "to encourage education in the arts, to organize, conduct, and support an annual musical festival, to provide opportunities for developing musical and artistic talents, to engage in any other activities that will legitimately aid and foster art. . . ."

In 1935 Dr. Hadley was again engaged. A tent seating 3,000 persons was rented and erected on the Hanna farm. A slightly larger orchestra was recruited from the principal orchestras of the East.

A shift in the scene of the concerts was made in 1936 because of the possibility of a change in ownership of the Hanna farm. The purchaser graciously invited the Festival to return, and it likely would have had not something of importance developed in December of 1936.

Covetous eyes had often been cast at Tanglewood, beautiful 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, where Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires and where he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book". Mrs. Corham Brooks presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky now linked in a family tie to the Festival plans were made for six concerts in 1937. An improved and larger tent was secured, seating 5,000 persons. This year was memorable in more ways than one. First of all, crowds came from every point of the compass. There were 32 States, Canada, and Europe represented. More than fifty newspapers and magazines sent representatives. For the first time concerts were broadcast over a national hook-up.

What the future holds no one knows. But America has demonstrated that it is ready for a great festival center, that its music lovers need not go abroad to hear the best. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival believes with Dr. Koussevitzky that great things are in store for Tanglewood.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 14 1938

Fifth Festival Concert Heard In Berkshires

Koussevitsky Conducts the Symphony Orchestra in Works of Tchaikovsky, Beethoven and Hadley

Special to the Herald Tribune

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 13.—The fifth concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood estate, between Stockbridge and Lenox, was held this evening, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~in a Beethoven~~ symphony, a Tschaikovsky symphony and an excerpt from the late Henry Hadley's third symphony in B minor.

As usual, the seating of the festival's new music shed was taxed to its utmost, nearly 6,000 persons from many parts of the East and Canada attending the concert.

The weather was almost as excellent tonight as it has been since the festival began last week. Just before the concert began, however, there was a slight drizzle, and for a time festival officials believed that the shed's soundproof roof would receive its first test under concert conditions. The roof is designed to prevent the sound of rain—even of a heavy rainstorm—from interfering with the music. The weather soon cleared, however.

Many persons found it comfortable to sit or lie on the lawn at the back of the shed. The music could even be heard in the main building of the estate, more than 300 yards away from the orchestra shell.

Tonight's program began with Dr. Hadley's "The Angelus," the second of two American works played at the festival. It was performed in memory of its composer, who conducted the first two festivals here.

Dr. Hadley composed the third symphony, of which "The Angelus" is a part, in the summer of 1906 during a sojourn in Italy and Bavaria. Dr. Hadley himself once described the piece as "absolute music," declaring that he had no program in mind when he composed it.

Beethoven's sixth symphony in F major, known popularly as his "Pastoral symphony, is a remarkable study in relaxation and placidity and was particularly appropriate for this evening's outdoor concert. The opening movement depicts the awaking of serene impressions on arriving in the country and the second is a scene by a brookside. This is followed by a gay meeting of country folk, which is impaired by a tempest. It closes with the shepherds singing "gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm." Following the intermission the orchestra played Tchaikovsky's sixth symphony in B minor, the "Pathetique."

The festival will end at 3:30 p. m. tomorrow.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 14 1938

The World In Music

By Pierre Key

Berkshire Festival.

I could write at length about the Stockbridge, Massachusetts, music festival, were there space available. The throng in attendance at the "Tanglewood" estate, where the performances were recently given, taxed the capacity of the shed-like auditorium in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra played under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's direction. And it was a keenly discriminating throng. As for the programs, any attempt to consider them in detail is prohibited by lack of the aforementioned space.

What matters chiefly in the develeopment of this New England project from a modest beginning, under the late Henry Hadley and men of New York's Philharmonic-Symphony, to one of major charater.

Some $51,000 was expended for this season's programs, a sum one-fifth again above that of a year ago. But what is so encouraging is the proportions the enterprise is assuming, and the possibility of there being some performances of opera in the not-too-distant future.

The choice in the selection of the orchestral works heard was admirable; and their arrangement equally so.

MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

AUG 14 1938

Getting back to current programs, today's schedule is one of the fullest of the summer. Chautauqua has one of its regular symphony-and-guest concerts, with Albert Stoessel conducting the overture to Mozart's "Magic Flute," the Brahms Third Symphony, and Tchaikovsky's Italian Caprice, and Georges Barrere featuring as soloist in Talemann's Suite for Flute and Orchestra and in a group of flute solos with piano accompaniment. (Yes, this is the same Barrere who played in Missoula with Salzedo and Britt.) The Berkshire Festival spotlights Serge Koussevitzky directing Schumann's First Symphony in B Flat, Prokofiev's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, and the Brahms Second Symphony in D.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 14 1938

Koussevitzky Festival Conductor

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Sunday afternoon concert to be presented at the Berkshire Hills summer festival. Details of the program follow:

Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38 .... Schumann
"Lieutenant Kije," Orchestral Suite, Op. 60 .... Prokofiev
Symphony No. [illegible] in D, Op. 73 .... Brahms

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 13 1938

Wagner Segments Played At Berkshire Festival

The second week of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened at Tanglewood as auspiciously as the first, with about 5,500 persons gathered to hear two large segments of Richard Wagner's works. This second half of the Festival's fifth season started Thursday night and the music included the final scene from the first act of "Die Walkuere" and the entire third act of "Siegfried."

The close-to-capacity audience came from far and near, and those who were unable to attend no doubt contributed to the enormous number of congratulatory messages received by Conductor Serge Koussevitsky and the symphony authorities from all parts of the country.

Four soloists opening night included Beal Hober, who sang the music of Sieglinde in the "Walkuere" excerpt and that of Brunnhilde in "Siegfried." The other three artists, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon, appeared last week in Beethoven's ninth symphony.

For Miss Kaskas and Mr. Cordon the music of Wagner was almost a new realm and the audience showed its approval by prolonged applause and cheers. Both younger singers of the Metropolitan Opera Association, Miss Kaskas undertook the music for Erda for the first time, as did Mr. Cordon the part of the wanderer.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

Berkshire Music Festival Attendance Greater Than Expectation of Sponsors

Six Concerts of Series Presented by Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Have Been Heard by More Than 30,000—Talk Is Heard of Extending Next Year's Festival to Three Weeks—Two Dances Held Last Night for Younger Set Who Are in Berkshires for Music Program and Tournaments — John B. Hull, Jr., Reelected President of Wyantenuck Club —Stockbridge Golf Club Sponsors Series of Saturday Programs — Original Records of Old Stage Coach Tavern On Exhibition Yesterday — Two Piano Recitals Will Be Given by Miss Marion Rous—Garden Party at the Dugway, Stockbridge, Tomorrow Afternoon

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, AUG. 13—When the fifth annual Berkshire Music festival ends tomorrow it is likely the attendance will have been 30,000, which is far greater than expectations. So widespread is the interest there is talk of a three weeks' festival next year. Mrs Alonzo G. Sexton of New York city who is at Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, and John Shepard, Jr., of Boston and Palm Beach, have subscribed $1000 each toward the $57,000 fund that is being sought by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation, to improve parking areas, build roads and complete the shed.

Two Dances Held

Two dances tonight provided entertainment for several hundred of the young set who are in Berkshire for the music festival and various tournaments. At Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, the annual costume ball was an outstanding midsummer society event. Prizes were awarded for the best, funniest and most original costumes which were judged by Mrs John B. Hull, Jr., wife of the president of the club; Frederick A. Pearson, and H. Gray Treadwell. Over 300 were present.

Mrs Robert Latimer Redfield, Jr., of 156 East Seventy-ninth street, New York, the former Elisabeth McKernon, was general chairman of the ball and those assisting were Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett, Miss Marion Gilbert, Mrs Frances Sayre Starbuck, Mrs C. W. Harold Dunbar, Mrs John H. Warren, Mrs Frederick H. Turner, Mrs George R. McCormick, Mrs George Church, Mrs Sheldon C. Collins and Mrs John deP. Burkitt.

The annual meeting of Wyantenuck club, at which Mr Hull was reelected president, was followed by a stockholders' luncheon and this afternoon came the Saturday tea with Mrs Frederick H. Turner, chairman. Aiding her, were Mrs William F. Flaherty, Mrs Elizabeth N. Hotchkiss, Mrs Eugene W. Leake, Mrs Ivor S. Williams, Mrs Frank D. Griswold, Mrs Edwin Greene, Mrs Frank J. Brothers, Miss Katherine B. Burgess, Mrs Alfred J. Diefenderfer, Mrs John F. Dinn, Mrs Robert E. Carrick.

At Pittsfield Country club tonight, the men's golf tournament dinner dance was one of the leading events of the Central Berkshire season. On the committee with W. Prince Smith, president of the club, were Miss Virginia Rhodes and James D. Colt, 2d.

Stockbridge Golf club is having a series of Saturday programs including buffet suppers, accordion playing, bingo and mah jongg. Mrs David Lincoln Luke of Scarboro, N. Y., and Holiday House, is general chairman.

Mrs Elizabeth N. Hotchkiss and daughter, Miss Mary Bassett Keyes are giving a shower tomorrow afternoon at their Great Barrington summer home in compliment to Miss Janet Warwood of Poughkeepsie N. Y., whose engagement was announced recently to Frederick A. Pearson, Jr., son of Mr and Mrs Frederick A. Pearson of Estamos.

On Monday afternoon, Mrs Lyman Beecher Stowe is to be hostess at a garden party at The Dugway, Stockbridge, following a meeting of about 60 women who attend Rev Edmund Randolph Laine's lectures on "Milestones in Christian history." Mrs Stowe is the former Miss Hilda R. Smith, sister of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

Dr William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college at Easton, Pa., and a summer resident of Colebrook, Ct., is to be the speaker at Ascension Farm school field day at South Lee Thursday, the 25th. Mrs Edwards Spencer of the Lenox colony is general chairman.

A number of Berkshire music lovers will attend two piano recitals by Miss Marion Rous. The first is to be an event of next Thursday morning at 11.15, at the Scoville Memorial library, Salisbury, Ct., and the subject will be "From a Beethoven cup." The second symposium is scheduled for Thursday, the 25th, same hour, at Norfolk Country club, Norfolk, Ct. Miss Eleanor Prendergast of Lakeville and Mrs Charles Garside of Norfolk are cochairmen.

Several entertainments have been arranged for Miss Anne Remsen Schenck, daughter of Mrs Frederic Schenck of London, who is arriving at Lenox next week for a visit with her grandmother, Mrs J. Frederick Schenck at Valley Head, and Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre at the Gables.

Tomorrow afternoon Pittsfield Polo team, Zenas Crane Colt of Dalton, manager, and William B. Rand, Jr., of Salisbury, Ct., captain, will play the Loudonville team at Loudonville, N. Y.

Mrs and Mrs J. Macy Willets had a dinner party tonight at Cassilis farm, New Marlboro, in honor of Mr and Mrs J. Macy Willets, Jr., and later took their guests to the concert at Tanglewood.

Original records of the old stage coach tavern on Highland street, Chesterfield, were on exhibition this afternoon at the South Worthington parsonage, now the summer home of Wayne C. Smith of Springfield. The records cover the period from 1790 to 1840. A supper and entertainment were held as a South Worthington church benefit.

Miss Natalie Bayard Merrill who recently returned from London with her aunt, Mrs Nicholas Brown, is to occupy for a month, from the 17th, Merry lodge, on Yale hill, Stockbridge.

Mrs Edward Clark Carter, wife of the secretary and treasurer of the American council, Institute of Pacific Relations, is to address the Wednesday Morning club at Pittsfield the 17th on "Places and people in the Orient." Mrs Carter is the former Miss Alice O. Draper. She and Mr Carter are at Sunset farm, Lee, for the summer.

(Continued from Page 1-C)

Mrs John B. Beebe of Great Barrington is visiting her son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs John H. Hamline of 395 Woodland road, Lake Forest, Ill.

Mrs Harry C. Holloway of Glencoe, Ill., and Tamarack, Tyringham, has sailed for Paris to visit her son, Lars Holloway, a music student there.

Mrs F. Dorsey Montgomery, Jr., of Lake Forest, Ill., is visiting her brother-in-law and sister, Mr and Mrs David Lincoln Luke at Holiday house, Stockbridge.

Mrs James Otis Hinkley of Lake Forest has joined Mrs Warren M. Salisbury's house party at Tor court, Pittsfield.

Countess Giovanni Cardelli has returned to her home, 1448 Lake Shore drive, Chicago, from Great Barrington, where she has ben occupying Mr and Mrs William Felton Barrett's Sky farm, while the Barretts were abroad.

With Mrs James Graham Parsons at Bonnie Brae, Stockbridge, for the music festival are Mr and Mrs Alfred L. Aiken of New York city.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1938

Koussevitzky To Sail Aug. 17 On Normandie

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, resting today at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club at Lenox after his two strenuous weeks at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, stated that he would sail Aug. 17 on the Normandie for a short vacation. He will return to Boston in September to conduct rehearsals for the Symphony Hall season which opens Oct. 8.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 14 1938

Music Festival Ends Today; Bigger '39 Season Planned

Eight Concerts May Be Played Next Summer

Tremendous Interest in Tanglewood Programs Expected to Force Expansion of Series

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 13—With the closing concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Music festival scheduled for tomorrow afteroon at 3.30, its host of friends are discussing the possibilities of an enlarged program next year. It was learned tonight that the festival corporation directors are to meet Friday and the Boston Symphony orchestra board the following week to decide on a general plan.

It was learned that on account of engagements already made the orchestra cannot be at Tanglewood the last week of July and the two final weeks of August, so the program will have to be crowded into the first two weeks of August.

In order to meet the tremendous and growing interest in the festival the two boards of directors will consider the advisability of giving four concerts each of the two weeks or eight in all. These would start on Wednesday night with evening concerts on Thursdays and Saturdays and afternoon programs Sundays, as at present.

(Continued from First Page)

Consideration has been given the possibility of giving plays in the new music shed, but this is said to be unlikely at present. A new theater is likely to be considered first.

Tonight's audience exceeded 6000 possibly the largest of the festival. It was a perfect midsummer night and the Tanglewood gardens provided an objective for many admirers.

Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline, who, with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan of Boston, gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony orchestra, with her two daughters motored down from Dublin, N. H., today and were in Mr and Mrs David T. Dana's box tonight.

Parking conditions were greatly improved over Thursday.

Large Audience Hears Concert At Tanglewood

Berkshire Symphonic Series, Which Will Close Today, Includes Beethoven and Tschaikowsky Numbers

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 13—The fifth of the six concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival drew another very large audience to Tanglewood for a program made up of two sixth symphonies, by Beethoven and Tschaikowsky, with the "Angelus" movement from Henry Hadley's third symphony as an introduction. The weather was ideal—even finer than that of Thursday evening, which showed how hospitable to music a Berkshire August can be. Summer in these latitudes is either the best or the worst of times for concert-giving, and in its five years the festival has had a fair share of both extremes.

Scientists for a century have made an elaborate study of the effect of temperature upon sound waves and on instruments, some rising and some falling in pitch as the mercury goes up. They have given less attention to humidity, the musician's worst enemy in our climate, and they have ignored the personal equation, which to the musician is the most important of all. To the remark that the weather was "better for strings" a senior member of the viola section retorted "better for human beings."

(Continued from First Page)

Musicians are not less sensitive than their instruments, and in summer they find making music a delight or a torture according to the conditions. Amateurs can pick and choose but professional musicians have to fulfill engagements regardless of the worst, in heat, humidity, thunder, lightning and rain, that a New England summer can give. For the first week the Boston Symphony orchestra played magnificently under trying conditions, with a fortitude worthy of the highest praise; its members are well entitled to the amelioration which the second week has brought.

Two Symphonies to Be Given

The festival will close tomorrow afternoon with a program made up of two symphonies, Schumann's first, and the second by Brahms, with Prokofieff's orchestral suite, opus 60, between them. This incidental music for a Soviet film, produced in 1933-34, is one of the few relatively new or unfamiliar works included in this year's programs.

In general, the festival is planned to interest both music lovers and a large number of people who are attracted by the delightful conditions under which music is presented here. Thus, as a rule, there is not much scope for critical analysis. The symphonies long ago have been studied as minutely as "Hamlet" or "Macbeth," and what Mr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will make of them is known in advance.

Yet even so versatile and catholic a conductor has his favorite works, and from time to time makes a fresh study of some classic which yields gratifying results. In the symphonies of Tschaikowsky he seems to be infallible. In Beethoven's music he has been more unequal, but not in a predictable way. He has played the fifth symphony disappointingly, as though it had gone stale, and soon after given a dazzling performance of the seventh, which is almost as well worn. Last year he gave so fascinating an interpretation of the "Pastoral" symphony, sometimes disparaged but just now a better appreciated work, that the repetition of this serene and sunny tone picture of country life made tonight's program exceptionally attractive.

WALLA WALLA, WASH.
UNION - BULLETIN

AUG 14 1938

Boston Symphony

Six concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians are scheduled for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which begins Aug. 4 at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewood estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

With the orchestra will appear the Cecilia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. Concerts will be given August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony is conductor.

Since the concert series began in 1934, the festival has been evolving gradually into an institution—typically American—establishing its own traditions with realization that to merit continued support of a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Immediately after last year's series, the festival trustees enlisted the aid of its many friends and raised more than $80,000 within a few months for a music shed.

Now the building is completed to the point called for by plans for this year. Eventual completion, including a permanent floor and stage, will come when more money is received.

Two years ago Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

156

AUG 14 1938

If I Had One Wish to Make

THIS IS what it would be—to sit once more in the cool pale green interior of the new music shed at the Berkshire Symphonic festival in the last concert of the 1938 series, at 3.30 o'clock this afternoon. Once more the dulcet notes of one of America's greatest symphonic groups, under inspired direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky would fill my ears, the harmonious shell and surroundings natural and architectural, rarely attuned to such an art would fill the eyes, and emotion born of marvelous music, magnificently played would flood the heart . . . Very likely it may be. The shed is so huge that friends and acquaintances are mislaid in its depths with the greatest of ease! Every aid to enjoyment of the concert has been planned in the unique building, which looks like some fairylike marquee or cream-colored mushroom in the midst of its acres. Only a master musician could have visioned the tuning-room behind the stage (which by the way is fully as large as the one in Symphony Hall, so the program tells one.) That same program has notes of each concert, matinee or night. It has the invitation to visit gardens in which the nearer sculpture and pools vie with glorious views of the Berkshires themselves, on every hand. "Twenty-five minutes for intermission, messieurs and mesdames," and the gong warns in far corners of the grounds at beautiful "Tanglewood" memorial legacy of its owners to music lovers of the country. One will do well to come running, and find the seat. There are no wasted moments in a Koussevitzky program.

Out of the many I knew who were there, only two were glimpsed in the throng, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, (of Worcester before her marriage) was in one of the boxes that run lengthwise at the building. Then, too, Major Max Vivier of New York and Paris was in another box, visiting his adjacent acquaintances between the concert halves. I see the Stuart Henry painting of "Koussevitzky conducting" is on exhibition throughout the festival season (now ending, however, this afternoon), at the Berkshire Museum. The hush that fell on the vast shell, the utter absence of any amplifying device, which so very often sounds artificial, was another feature that is certain to become festival tradition.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 15 1938

5th Berkshire Festival Attended by 38,000

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—The last notes of Brahms' Second Symphony today closed the fifth Berkshire festival, the first to be held in the new "Music Shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under its long time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every state in the union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the $80,000 "Music Shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the program, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

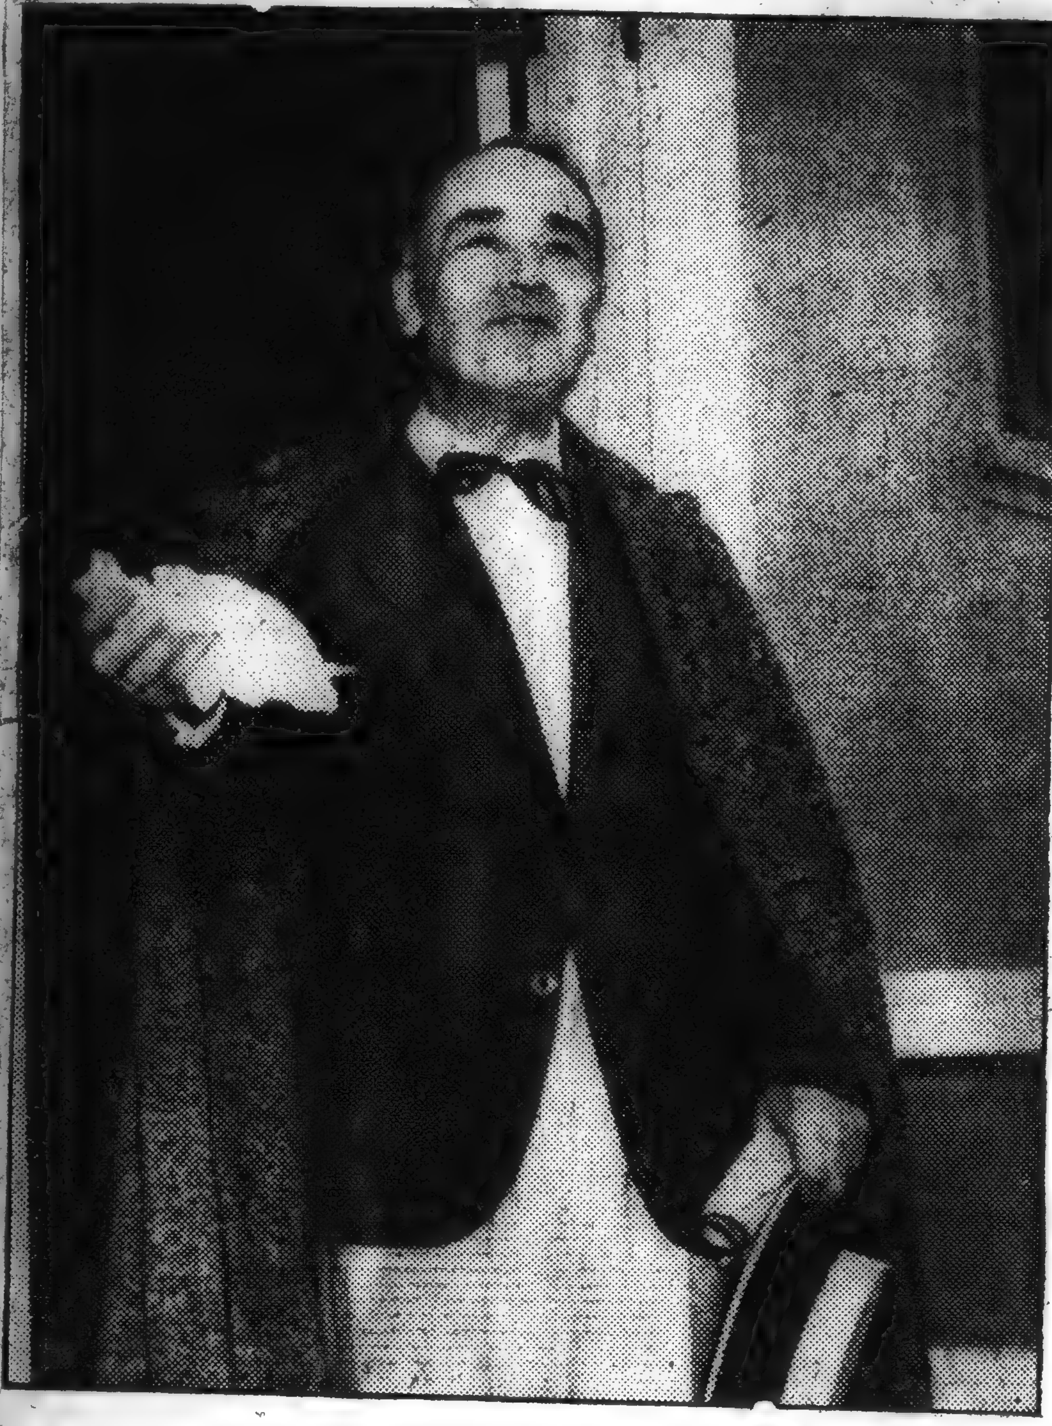
The "Shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

157

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 15 1938

"C'est Fini," Says Maestro



Don Jose Browning Photo

"C'est fini," said Maestro Koussevitzky as he emerged from his dressing room and prepared to leave Tanglewood after concluding the fifth annual Symphonic festival which ended with yesterday's afternoon concert.

6000 Present for Final Berkshire Festival Concert

Reports at Stockbridge Are That Music Season Will Be Longer or More Elaborate Next Year

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14—The final concert of this Berkshire Symphonic Festival took place this afternoon under the finest conditions. The sun shone, and the view over the Stockbridge bowl never seemed more beautiful.

More than 6000 people were in the music shed or scattered over the grounds, for one can hear well wherever one happens to be. Already people are discussing the future of the festival and it appears that a meeting of the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the members of the festival association is scheduled within a few days. One report has it that a three-week season will be held next year, with the Boston Symphony appearing for the usual six concerts and some other form of entertainment taking up the remainder of the time. Another report is that the orchestra may give eight concerts during the usual two-week season. However, it appears definite that there will be additional entertainment next summer.

Two symphonies occupied the major portion of this final program. Schumann's First Symphony in B flat major and the Second Symphony in D major by Brahms. Between these two came the exciting incidental music which Prokofieff wrote for the Soviet film, "Lieut. Kije."

Continued From First Page

Written in 1933 and published as a suite in 1934, this music reveals Prokofieff at his humorous best. One wonders just how often Prokofieff writes with his tongue in his cheek. He pours forth melody as prodigally as the late Victor Herbert and he knows few equals in the realm of descriptive music. The work portrays the birth, romance, wedding, amusement and burial of the mythical Lieut. Kije. It opens with a horn fanfare off stage, and from that moment it goes its descriptive way, ever mounting in excitement until it reaches its climax in the "Troika" and then the poor lieutenant is buried with the off-stage horn fading away into the distance. It is virile, humorous music, clearly understandable and devastatingly clever.

Schumann's "Spring Symphony" should never be analyzed. It is so fresh, so vernal and such a consummate creation of beauty that, to enjoy it to the most, one should close the eyes and just listen.

What matters most is the fact that a sensitive, cultured man has given us a graceful and symmetrical work, expressive of all that is alive and beautiful. Dr. Koussevitzky interpreted the work with loving care. The orchestra played with the freshest of tone and radiant color.

It seemed fitting that the Second Symphony of Brahms should be prepared with Schumann's First Symphony. Here is music and full enough to satisfy the most exigent.

The orchestra played the melodies which run in profusion through the measure with matchless beauty of tone and in the final movement built up a tremendous climax, thrilling in its rhythmic sweep and dynamic power.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 14 1938

All-Wagner Program Presented At Lenox

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Draws Audience Of 5500; Paul Althouse Sings

By CLIFFORD FOWLER GREEN

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13.—For the opening concert of the second week of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at "Tanglewood" in Lenox, last Thursday night, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose an all Wagner program. Selections from the two of the "ring" operas filled the evening, act 1, final scene from "Die Walkure," and the complete act 3 from "Siegfried."

Whatever may be the shortcomings of operatic scenes in concert form (without scenery and action) as compared with a performance such as one hears at the Metropolitan Opera House, they were lost sight of by this audience of fifty-five hundred persons, as they demonstrated their approval more decisively than at any concert heretofore.

So far, this is the first taste of opera that the festival patrons have been given. With the enthusiasm shown, it is a safe guess to say that it is now a permanent fixture for the festivals of the future.

In the performance of this music, Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra had the assistance of four soloists from the Metropolitan Opera Association. In "Die Walkure", the part of Siegmund was sung by Paul Althoue, familiar to Worcester audiences from his many appearances at the Worcester Festival. The role of Sieglinde was taken by Miss Beal Hober. In the act 3 from "Siegfried", Althouse also sang the part of Siegfried and Miss Hober appeared again as Brunnhilde. "Wotan was sung by Norman Cordon while Miss Anna Kaskas sang "Erda". These two latter singers, with Paul Althouse also appeared in the "Ninth Symphony" last week.

Althouse at Ease

Mr. Althouse whose years of experience have been many and under greatly divergent conditions seemed entirely at ease and gave great pleasure in his two roles. His tenor voice was clearly heard at all times in the midst of Wagner's opulent orchestration. His excellent artistry did not, however, minimize the splendid work done by the other soloists, who were all warmly received in this new form of musical offering at "Tanglewood".

Dr. Koussevitsky again showed his skill and musicianship in achieving the right balance when the singers were performing their arias and at no time did he allow the orchestra to overwhelm the voices.

The festival patrons now seem well at home in the new shed, which was dedicated at the opening concert last week. The three thousand or more cars, from all the eastern states, were parked in several zones on the spacious estate, presented to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last year by Mrs. Gorham Brooks.

The temperature and atmospheric conditions were quite ideal for the performance of Wagner's elemental music. The composer had sought at various times to assimilate music and sounds of nature, as in the scene, "Forest Murmurs" from this same opera, "Siegfried." There was just enough breeze rustling through the pines, adjacent to the music shed, followed by a stillness, which gave an unusual but suitable background to the kaleidoscopic harmonies of Wagner.

Fifth Concert

The program of the fifth concert opened with the second movement, "Andante Tranquillo" from the "Third Symphony" by Henry Hadley. Following this, we were given two complete symphonies, the sixth of Beethoven and the sixth of Tchaikovsky.

The reason for the inclusion of the Hadley selection was by way of recognition of this composer-conductor, who conducted the Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two of its five years of existence. At that time he gathered together about a hundred men from various orchestras in and around New York. Since then Koussevitzky and the Boston men have furnished all the orchestral music and it seems likely that this will be so for some time to come. Henry Hadley, it will be remembered, also conducted the Worcester Festival several years previous to his untimely death in 1937. He was inspired to write this symphony during a sojourn in Italy in 1906.

Speaking of the movement, which he called "Angelus," the composer said, "the second movement was suggested on hearing, every afternoon, the bells from a distant church, which were wafted across the fields to a secluded spot in the woods, where I worked out of doors."

Sir George Grove Quoted

Then came the Beethoven "Sixth Symphony" which he himself subtitled, "The Pastoral." Sir George Grove in his immortal work on the Beethoven symphonies writes of this one "It causes a monotony which is never monotonous, and which, though no imitation, is akin to the constant sounds of nature—the monotony of rustling leaves and swinging trees: the running brooks and blowing winds, the call of birds and the hum of insects." In addition to this there is the imitation of the rural German band followed by the inevitable storm. Dr. Koussevitsky and his orchestra received a real ovation from the audience.

From the sale of tickets thus far it is predicted that the attendance at the final concert Sunday afternoon will exceed any thus far. The program will be: Symphony in B-flat. No. 1 by Schumann; a new composition of the versatile Composer-Conductor-Pianist Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije" (orchestral suite); and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

ROME, N. Y.
SENTINEL

AUG 15 1938

"In Tanglewood Shed"

Two erroneous impressions have become prominent in the news concerning this season's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire Hills. A typical sentence read: "Tanglewood, a large Stockbridge estate where Author Nathaniel Hawthorne used to live, was deeded by its owners to the Boston Symphony two years ago." Not only that, but many who attend the concerts seem to come away with the conviction that they have seen the mansion in which Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" and several other works. Moreover, other news dispatches have been dated from Lenox, making it appear the concerts are staged in a new "music shed" in that fashionable Massachusetts resort.

Boundary lines of the towns of Lee and Stockbridge come so close to the heart of Lenox village as always to have caused confusion. Wealthy families having their estates just over one line or the other have had their mail addressed to Lenox. The same pretty lake in Northern Stockbridge has been termed "Lake Mahkeenac" in Lenox but "Stockbridge Bowl" in the quite as aristocratic village farther south.

As for Hawthorne, he dated his preface to "The House of the Seven Gables" as of "Lenox, January 27, 1851;" but the tiny cottage which commanded such a marvelous view of lake, hills and dale was indubitably over the line in Stockbridge. That cottage burned around about 1890 and for many years thereafter visitors were shown the chimney and foundations. In course of time a new "summer family" acquired land in the vicinity, succeeded in having the highways relocated and erected a mansion as much out of harmony with Hawthorne's tastes and pocketbook as could well be conceived. It is that estate upon which the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been staged, first partly under canvas and now in what is styled the "Tanglewood Music Shed."

It illustrates afresh how prone so many Americans are to worship names without knowledge of their owners that anyone should come away from modern "Tanglewood" believing it had been occupied by the author. Thus hundreds annually pay good money to inspect the existing "house of seven gables" in Salem assuming it to have been the scene of Hawthorne's tale by that name, when his preface distinctly declares he built the mansion in the story "of materials long in use for constructing castles in the air."

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 15 1938

SYMPHONY CLOSES AT TANGLEWOOD

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15 (AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday with a total attendance of thirty-eight thousand for its six concerts in an auditorium, the capacity of which is only 5638 people.

One of the best known of Summer music ventures, it attracted music lovers from nearly every state in the union, and a number of foreign countries. In the audience were many who used to spend their summers at the European festivals, but preferred to take no chances this year with disturbed conditions abroad.

The Berkshire festival will sustain itself, according to George Edman, chairman of the coordinating committee, which directs the work of the six hundred volunteers from this neighborhood who do the work of the festival.

The backbone of next year's festival will be Serge Koussevitzky and his superb Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is possible the festival will expand, perhaps by the addition of opera to the program, perhaps in the direction of more concerts. No announcement has been made so far, beyond the fact that by 1940 a school for orchestral musicians, conductors, and possibly singers as well will be operating at Tanglewood.

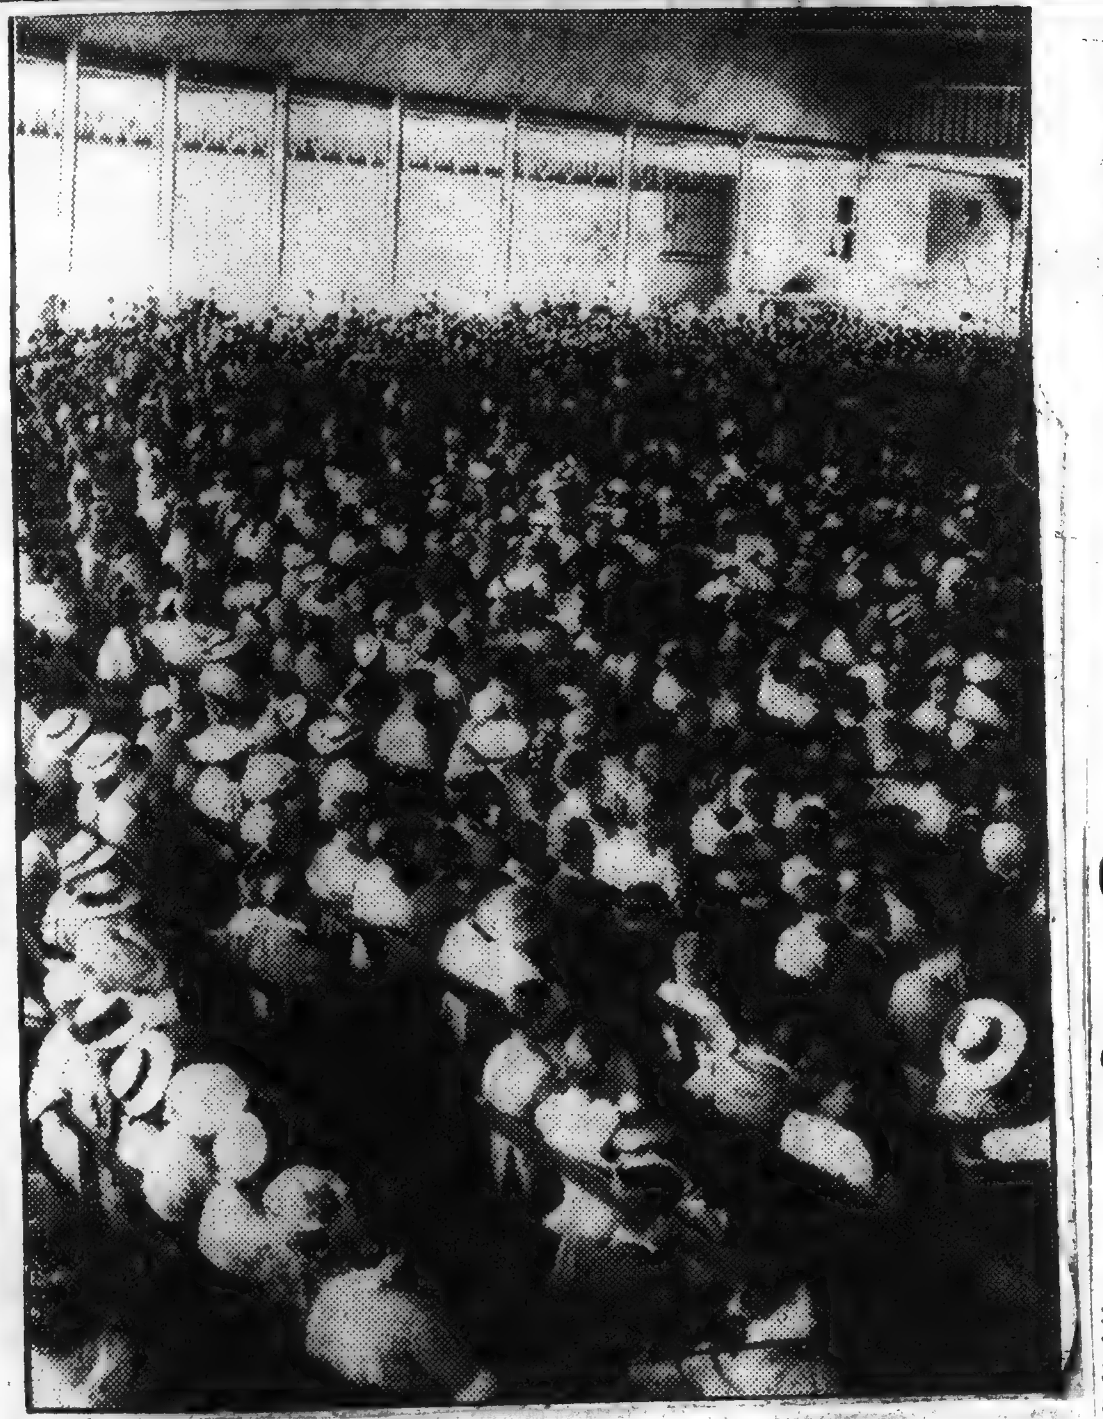
A campaign to obtain money for improving the property will get underway this week, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced.

158

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

15 1938

Scenes at Last Berkshire Festival Concert



Photos by Don Jose Browning

Before what was believed the largest audience to attend the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Tanglewood, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his talented group of musicians yesterday concluded the fifth annual series of concerts. Pictured above are patrons of the festival as they wandered about the spacious grounds. Lower photo gives a fair idea of how well packed the new music shed was, showing a portion of the "unreserved" section.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

Brahms Symphony Closes Fifth Berkshire Festival

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 14 (AP)—The last notes of Brahms' Second Symphony today closed the fifth Berkshire Festival, the first to be held in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its long-time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every state in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the $80,000 "music shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next Summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the program, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

The "shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

During this festival Dr. Koussevitzky explored the entire orchestral literature, from the cantatas of Bach to the gently acrid modernites of Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, which brought many laughs to the audience this afternoon. Today's program included also a virtuosic performance of Schumann's B Flat (first) Symphony, a work not usually as popular with audiences as it seemed today.

Meanwhile, with his labors finished until the orchestra begins its Boston season early in October, Mr. Koussevitzky looked forward to Aug. 17 when he sails for a vacation abroad.

MANCHESTER, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 15 1938

OVER 38,000 ATTENDED BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Concerts Attracted Music Lovers From Every State Of The Union And Some Foreign Countries.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday with a total attendance of 38,000 for its six concerts in an auditorium, the capacity of which is only 5,638 people.

One of the best known of summer music ventures, it attracted music lovers from nearly every state in the union, and a number of foreign countries. In the audience were many who used to spend their summers at the European festivals, but preferred to take no chances this year with disturbed conditions abroad.

The Berkshire festival will sustain itself, according to George Edman, chairman of the coordinating committee, which directs the work of the 600 volunteers from this neighborhood who do the work of the festival.

The backbone of next year's festival will be Serge Koussevitzky and his superb Boston Symphony orchestra. It is possible the festival will expand, perhaps by the addition of opera to the program, perhaps in the direction of more concerts. No announcement has been made so far, beyond the fact that by 1940 a school for orchestral musicians, conductors, and possibly singers as well will be operating at Tanglewood.

A campaign to obtain money for improving the property will get underway this week, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

AUG 14 1938

Greatest Cello Concerto Has Been Recorded By Casals

BY VIRGINIA D. STURM

RECORDING releases for the summertime seem to have taken a little lighter vein than those presented in the winter. That is true except in one instance, and that is the release of the Dvorak Cello Concerto which is considered to be the outstanding achievement as far as this instrument is concerned.

True, the concerto is filled with a wistfulness and an engaging charm, and at the same time it holds its position as being the greatest of all cello works. When a cellist has really accomplished the playing of this masterpiece, he or she may well feel secure in artistic attainment. That is if the concerto is really played well.

Pablo Casals is still the unquestioned peer among cellists despite the fact that he does less and less playing in this country. When one listens to his performance of the Dvorak concerto one is newly impressed with his virtuostic accomplishments.

While Dvorak was a Bohemian, this work is felt to have some Americanism, for it was while he was in this country that he wrote it. In one movement there are apparent strains of southern familiarity. Anton Dvorak is accompanied by the Czech Philharmonic orchestra.

Arturo Toscanini and the N. B. C. symphony have recorded Symphony No. 13 in G-major by Haydn, and the same orchestra, under the direction of Frank Black has done the Brahms Liebeslieder Waltzes (Love Song Waltzes) and Bruno Walter, conducting the Vienna Philharmonic orchestra plays the Mozart Symphony No. 38 in D-major (Prague).

This album will become a cherished possession because the orchestra is an outstanding one and no one discredits the artistry of Bruno Walter. But, political forces in Vienna have made it impossible for Mr. Walter to conduct further this great organization, it is understood.

John Barbirolli and the Philharmonic Sympony Society of New York have recorded the Claude Debussy "Iberia" (Images).

Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony have made a "fun" record of the Prokofieff playing of "Lieutenant Kije" suite, which is motion picture music of a Russian film, and the suite, "Love For Three Oranges."

William Primrose, the viola player of the former London String quartet has joined forces with Gerald Moore to record Brahms beautiful Sonata in E-flat major (Op. 120, No. 2) for Viola and Piano.

Chopin Nocturnes, always popular with musicians, have been preserved as played by Arthur Rubinstein who stands today as one of the most eminent of pianists.

That is an imposing list, as a group of albums, and with high fidelity recording there is scarcely a flaw.

Single discs include a new one by Igor Gorin of two Alfred Hay Malotte sacred numbers; Chopin's Polonaise in A-flat major, played by Ignace Jan Paderewski (Parts 1 and 2), the Lament from "Dido and Aenus," from Purcell with the present transcription by Charles O'Connell; two spirituals sung by Marian Anderson, contralto; two Bach chorales played by the Philadelphia orctestra, under the direction of Eugene Orman; and a ballet number, "La Boutique Fantasqus," by Rossini, with the transcription by the late Respighi, played by Eugene Goossens and the London Philharmonic orchestra. Goossens is the director of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra.

Richard Crooks has recorded the Foster Carling charmer, "All of My Heart," with Wilfred Pelletier's orchestra; Lotte Lehman sings Gretchaninoff's "My Native Land" and "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes."

Fritz Kreisler plays DeFalla's "La Veda Breve" and his own "Liebesfreud" with Franz Rupp at the piano and Paul Robson sings Cadman's "At Dawning" and Bond's "Just a-Wearying for You."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 15 1938

LAST FESTIVAL CONCERT HEARD BY LARGE CROWD

More Elaborate Program Reported Planned for Next Year

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15—The final concert of this Berkshire Symphonic Festival took place yesterday under the finest conditions. The sun shone, and the view over the Stockbridge bowl never seemed more beautiful.

6000 Are Present

More than 6000 people were in the music shed or scattered over the grounds, for one can hear well wherever one happens to be. Already people are discussing the future of the festival and it appears that a meeting of the directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the members of the festival association is scheduled within a few days. One report has it that a three-week season will be held next year, with the Boston Symphony appearing for the usual six concerts and some other form of entertainment taking up the remainder of the time. Another report is that the orchestra may give eight concerts during the usual two-week season. However, it appears definite that there will be additional entertainment next summer.

Two symphonies occupied the major portion of this final program. Schumann's First Symphony in B flat major and the Second Symphony in D major by Brahms. Between these two came the exciting incidental music which Prokofieff wrote for the Soviet film, "Lieut. Kije."

Written in 1933 and published as a suite in 1934, this music reveals Prokofieff at his humorous best. One wonders just how often Prokofieff writes with his tongue in his cheek. He pours forth melody as prodigally as the late Victor Herbert and he knows few equals in the realm of descriptive music. The work portrays the birth, romance, wedding, amusement and burial of the mythical Lieut. Kije. It opens with a horn fanfare off stage, and from that moment it goes its descriptive way, ever mounting in excitement until it reaches its climax in the "Troika" and then the poor lieutenant is buried with the off-stage horn fading away into the distance. It is virile, humorous music, clearly understandable and devastatingly clever.

Schumann Work

Schumann's "Spring Symphony" should never be analyzed. It is so fresh, so vernal and such a consummate creation of beauty that, to enjoy it to the most, one should close the eyes and just listen.

What matters most is the fact that a sensitive, cultured man has given us a graceful and symmetrical work, expressive of all that is alive and beautiful. Dr. Koussevitzky interpreted the work with loving care. The orchestra played with the freshest of tone and radiant color.

It seemed fitting that the Second Symphony of Brahms should be prepared with Schumann's First Symphony. Here is music and full enough to satisfy the most exigent.

The orchestra played the melodies which run in profusion through the measure with matchless beauty of tone and in the final movement built up a tremendous climax, thrilling in its rhythmic sweep and dynamic power.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 14 1938

159

FUTURE OF A FESTIVAL IN AMERICA

By OLIN DOWNES

THE Fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, and the third of these festivals to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, comes to an end this afternoon. This end, however, is evidently the beginning of a new and highly significant period in the festival's history. Two weeks ago in these columns reference was made to Dr. Koussevitzky's conception of the development of the festival as a Summer music center for the United States. It is precisely the time for such a development to take place, since the great European music festivals have so grievously deteriorated because of political and allied social and economic conditions, and there is every indication that the immediate future for music is the United States and the resources and enthusiasm that America brings to the cultivation of great art.

If some immediate proof of this were needed it would be conspicuously present in the proportions of the audiences that gather for the performances at Stockbridge. Here is a music festival that takes place far from any civic center or lines of conveyance, its concerts given by a great orchestra without the presence of any sensational element, even that of a distinguished soloist to add "glamour" to the occasion. The orchestra's distinguished conductor himself is the presiding spirit and prophet of his art. His instrument is the orchestra, which has never surpassed its quality at his hands. The sheer integrity and beauty of this offering represent all that is needed to attract an immense public from all parts of the United States, and one that cheerfully pays prices equal to those of the Winter subscription seasons for the performances. The average size of the audiences last Summer was 5,000 at each concert. This Summer the figures of the first week's attendance indicate an encouraging increase.

* * *

The festival has only just obtained its Music Shed and facilities for performances which can be given independently of the weather, but the public support is such that its future and its artistic standards are secure. More than this—a great momentum of public interest and approval is to be felt underlying the activities of the institution. It is not only firmly entrenched; it has such a place in the public mind that it must go forward in a way commensurate to the things which are expected of it. Fortunate that this festival is directed musically by a great artist who looks far into the future and perceives the true objectives and the things which are to be done. Five years ago, as Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith said in the course of introductory remarks she made at the beginning of the present festival, its status today would have appeared a dream. Dr. Koussevitzky's plans for the expansion of the festival could appear to the conservative as being also a dream, and more extravagant than the earlier one. But that is not so. He sees and he can make others see clearly a practical goal. He has at his side those who understand and sympathize with his aims and will see to it that they are neither obscured nor distorted by the practical problems which will accompany their realization.

The festival has now "Tanglewood" as its home, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, and a place which invites artistic representation and individual response to it. It has also the new Music Shed, not entirely complete, but adequate as regards the essentials for open-air performance. It has its series of concerts, now self-sustaining. Much has been gained and much remains to be done. The Music Shed is the result of private contributions. Fifty-eight thousand dollars more is needed for immediate plans of improvement, which Miss Robinson Smith, president of the festival, has enumerated.

And other funds are needed, and are confidently expected to materialize, as the festival continues to prove itself, and as a wider and wider radius of the country becomes aware and appreciative of its purposes: funds for scholarships for the training of young musicians in the academy for special musical instruction which the festival intends to institute as one part of its cultural activities.

Bentley W. Warren, the president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., referred specifically to such funds and to this future aspect of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival when he answered the address of Miss Robinson-Smith on the opening night. He referred to the manner and the spirit in which Major Henry L. Higginson founded the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1881; of the ways in which the existence of that orchestra had caused the growth of many similar institutions through the land, and, now, of the new vistas unfolding before the conductor, the orchestra and its board of directors, vistas which are only the logical consequences of the achievement of Colonel Higginson in 1881, now awaiting realization.

Mr. Warren's precise words are significant. "Our distinguished conductor," he said, "after fourteen years in this country of his adoption—for he has now become an American citizen—has long cherished a vision of a music center of the first importance. He is convinced that America is now ripe for it. Here he believes it is possible to develop orchestral conductors as accomplished as any that Europe can provide. The personnel of the orchestra contains artists unexcelled anywhere, teachers of advanced pupils in the use of the various instruments. After experience with many amateur choruses, Dr. Koussevitzky believes that the possibilities of choral and community singing are almost unlimited if properly trained leaders are made available. What does all this suggest?

"It is the hope of our conductor—a hope, I am happy to say, shared by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra—that the annual festival may be supplemented by a school or academy holding annual sessions, preceding the concerts themselves, and devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and separate instrumentalists. 'Tanglewood' the ideal location for such a school. The mansion house and other buildings included in Mrs. Brooks's gift will furnish the facilities immediately needed. This auditorium cannot be excelled as a place for the instruction of prospective orchestra conductors with a small but adequate orchestra of some of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra itself, augmented by students attending the school for instruction in the use of their special instruments."

This combination of circumstances, continued Mr. Warren, will greatly reduce the cost of the great program. "Indeed," he went on, "the greatest need will be for scholarships. These will be indispensables, because many of the most promising students are themselves without the means to pay the cost of the higher and specialized instruction for which their talents will qualify them. No one can doubt that from some source the necessary funds will be forthcoming, and it is expected that the detailed arrangements for the school can be completed so that its first session may precede the Berkshire Festival of 1940."

* * *

In this way, with the characteristic lack of exaggeration or of overemphasis that befitted so serious an announcement, did the president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., give notice of the organization's support of Dr. Koussevitzky's project. And here, put down with a passionate sincerity and faith in his aims, is Dr. Koussevitzky's own statement of the festival's future. It is now published for the first time. He had planned to speak these words on the opening night, but confined himself to a brief greeting. Here are words that may well be heeded and pondered:

The Berkshire Music Festival is started and is rapidly growing. However successful and important, it is only the first step toward the ultimate goal—the establishment of the greatest music and art center in the world. The United States of America can and are destined to have such a center. American freedom is the best soil for it. American financial resources will make it eventually possible. Rapid growth of American culture dictates its necessity, as a crowning peak of its unfolding, as a historical mission and perennial contribution of America to human art and culture.

For the Summer the activities of the center will be many and varied. They will consist, first, in a series of symphonic concerts of great music in the performance of a great orchestra, considered peerless in the world. Second, in a series of immortal operas in a perfect ensemble of the finest singers, artists and choruses. Third, in a series of the most important oratorios presented in action. Fourth, in several outstanding ballet performances.

In addition, we plan to give the classical tragedy and comedy with foremost living actors. We expect to re-create the antique Greek theatre in its modern form. For that purpose leading playwriters, composers, scholars and other specialists will be invited. Their collective cooperation promises not only re-creation of the Greek theatre but also a creation of a new and great theatrical art, so persistently yet fruitlessly dreamed of by many visionaries in the nineteenth and in the present century.

We contemplate further to establish the Academy of Music and Arts as a permanent institution. It has to be a creative musical center, where the greatest living composers will teach the art of composition; the greatest virtuosi, the art of perfect performance and technique; the greatest conductors, the mystery of conducting orchestras and choruses. The most eminent thinkers and scholars of Harvard, Yale and other prominent universities will be teaching there, each in his field, so far as it concerns arts and music. A free cooperation of such an élite shall certainly result into a creation of new and great values of art; into radiation of the beams of high culture over a nation and the whole world, and, finally, into education and training of a new generation of American artists.

So visioned, the center will be one of the foremost educational institutions. It will serve the American nation, the world at large and all those who seek hearing and seeing the best in music and related arts; who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personality through the contact with the best in art and with the élite in culture, and those who long for a creative rest in the Summer.

Such an institution will be, no doubt, unique and far greater than any similar institution existing. Only few great visionaries have dared to dream of it. Today this dream is about to come true, if you will be willing to help its creation.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 15 1938

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

38,000 Attendance at Six Concerts.—Opera May Be Added in Future.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday with a total attendance of 38,000 for its six concerts in an auditorium the capacity of which is only 5638 people.

One of the best known of summer music ventures, it attracted music lovers from nearly every State in the Union, and a number of foreign countries. In the audience were many who used to spend their summers at the European festivals, but preferred to take no chances this year with disturbed conditions abroad.

The Berkshire festival will sustain itself, according to George Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee, which directs the work of the 600 volunteers from this neighborhood who do the work of the festival.

The backbone of next year's festival will be Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is possible the festival will expand, perhaps by the addition of opera or more concerts. No announcement has been made so far, beyond the fact that by 1940 a school for orchestral musicians, conductors, and possibly singers as well, will be operating at Tanglewood.

A campaign to obtain money for improving the property will get under way this week, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 15 1938

The Carryall

Sidelights of the Berkshire Symphonic at Tanglewood:

People: Dr. Serge Koussevitsky walking to the podium with stately, measured step for the first concert...the collegiate-looking ushers in white coats...the frantic dowager and her satellites waiting impatiently for their chauffeur...her cry, "He's a dummy, I say he's a dummy," when the poor fellow couldn't maneuver into the traffic line...the little woman beseeching the Legionnaire in the traffic lot with, "Where is 'I'?"

Black-visored chauffeurs straining to catch a glimpse of their passengers...the many reverend fathers in clerical garb...the audience cooling itself with bamboo fans and programs the hot first Sunday, then stretching between numbers to iron out a few bench "wrinkles"...their amazing quietness, particularly at night...black-haired, three-years-old Rachael Carr of Pittsfield who brought her doll, "Blue Belle," to the Sunday concert...stockingless girls, men in polo shirts and loud ties...boys in shorts...women in fantastic hats...men sunburned and hatless...the anonymous gentleman whose resounding "kerchoo" collided with Beethoven's "Ninth."

Lights: From the pale moon shining down on Lake Mahkeenac...from the matches scratched by program readers and cigaret lighters...the glow of cigaret butts...winking fireflies...spotlight on the conductor...his silhouette on the sidewall of the shell during the first of Brahms' "Fourth," making it possible for him to watch himself conduct and the last bench listener to see his hands mold music...the flashing shed lights bringing the listeners from the shadows, the refreshment tent and the main house...blinding flashlight bulbs...red tail lights glowing as cars snailed up the hill into Lenox.

The toad, present for the first performance, hopping gaily about the arcade during intermission to the consternation of the ladies...night chorus of the crickets...soft drink sippers in the shadows...bookshops featuring "Tanglewood Tales"...Springfield people expecting a quagmire, arriving on dry grounds Saturday night with raincoats and umbrellas...the maze of iron girders, the longest 96½ feet and weighing over 16 tons and the largest ever carried by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

Symphony Hall tradition that applause be limited to the close of the symphony was maintained until Sunday, even at the Saturday rehearsal. "The barbarians must clap," exclaimed one symphonic listener. But Dr. Koussevitsky refused to acknowledge it, even Sunday, until Aaron Copland played the piano part of his "Music for the Theater," then he directed it to the composer. Ecstatic in its applause, the concert master was frequently applauded as he walked on.

Wondering whether to sit or stand while joining the St. Cecilia Chorus in the chorale from the cantata, "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott," a good part of the crowd stood up and then gradually sat down. The dedicatory remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra, were inaudible to most of the audience. Dr. Koussevitsky, despite the failure of amplifying apparatus, spoke so distinctly that many of his words were caught at the last bench.

Miss Marion Woodbury, director of the nursing service for the Berkshire Health District, who was on duty during the festival, had three requests for treatment the first night. One person wanted an aspirin, but he was offered baking soda; one woman burned her hand when a box of matches caught fire; a man, overcome by the heat, was carried to the lawn for treatment.

Opinion was expressed that smooth, hard-surfaced roads, replacing the rutty, thank-you-ma'ams, should be an important item not now provided to make Tanglewood complete.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 15 1938

MUSIC FETE ENDS IN THE BERKSHIRES

6,000 Hear Works of Brahms and Schumann in Final—Koussevitzky Directs

38,000 AT SIX CONCERTS

This Year's Program Is Called a Success at Tanglewood—New Music Shed Praised

By H. HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—The Berkshires Symphonic Festival came to an end at Tanglewood here this afternoon. Ideal weather prevailed, and the attendance was more than 6,000 again. The seats in the music shed were filled, and a scattering of visitors sat and reclined on the lawns around the shed. Hundreds of children were in the audience, for Sunday seems to have become the day for the whole family to come to Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded the festival on a romantic note. The ardent, glowing Symphony No. 1 of Schumann and the radiant, spring-like second Symphony of Brahms opened and ended today's program. Between them was Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite.

The Prokofief suite was drawn from a score written for a Soviet film. The motion picture dealt with the birth, full blown, as of a military hero, because the Czar misread a report so as to form a non-existent name and an officer was invented to carry the name. The film is comic, and so is the suite.

Prokofieff Works Appeal

Prokofieff has always been a shrewd, clever composer, and the materials here allow for the full play of his antic themes and his sardonic harmonies. The music has bite and laughter, moments of mock seriousness and others of undisguised slapstick. It is a score that gave Mr. Koussevitzky's men an opportunity to display the assurance of their individual techniques and their mastery of the modern idiom. It is, in fact, a score that should find a recurrent place in the repertoire.

There is no need to discant on the interpretation of the Brahms Second, which for Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra is an oft-told tale. The Schuman Symphony, less frequently heard, was played with warmth and affection. The charm and lift and ingenuousness of the music were irresistible.

At the end of each work there was prolonged applause. But the real ovation was reserved for the conclusion of the program. The audience stood for some minutes, applauded, cheered and waved handkerchiefs and made it clear beyond any possible shadow of doubt that the music is the thing at this festival. It was a fond farewell.

Beethoven "Pastoral" Heard

The performances of the fifth concert last night evoked spontaneous enthusiasm. The freshness and gaiety of the interpretation of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony were received with delighted approval. Then Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique," with the orchestra's communication of the score's grief and frenzy, almost brought down the house. It was a richly merited tribute, for Mr. Koussevitzky conducted this symphony with conviction and with a profound grasp of its racial roots, and his men responded to his wishes with unsurpassable virtuosity.

The second week's audiences have been about 19,000, making a total of about 38,000 for the six concerts of the festival. Financially, this year's program may be pronounced a success. The public support, in fact, has been beyond the expectations of the authorities. As proof, the printing of 30,000 program books was ordered and last night and today they were exhausted.

Of the artistic success of the festival there was no doubt. The new music shed has proved a delight to eye and ear. It was built, primarily, as a protection against rain and storms, but there has been no rain at any of the concerts. The festival authorities were not complaining.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 15 1938

TANGLEWOOD CONCERTS END

Two Weekend Audiences at Berkshire Festival Are Highly Pleased

By C.R.ROSEBERRY

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival passed into history late in a perfect Sunday afternoon with music in a gay and happy mood befitting the eminent success of the series—musically, financially and meteorologically.

The concluding program represented both Brahms and Schumann in their cheerier moods—Brahms with his Second Symphony and Schumann with his first—contrasting their classicism with the advanced idiom of a suite by the contemporary Soviet composer, Serge Prokofieff.

Needless to state, the program was played with the same orchestral virtuosity which had characterized its predecessors. The Prokofieff suite, arranged from a musical score, its composer wrote for a Soviet motion picture, "Lieutenant Kije,' proved both diverting and interesting to the listeners, proving, perhaps, that these Tanglewood audiences are singularly uninhibited by New England conservatism.

The farewell ovation to Serge Koussevitzky and his men was nothing short of vociferous, with persistent applause and a chorus of "Bravos."

From a standpoint of general popularity, as well as one of the most magnificent performances, of the festival, Saturday night's concert was preeminent. In tribute to the late Henry Hadley, American composer-conductor, who founded the Berkshire Festival, the opening selection was the "Angelus" movement from his third Symphony. This led into the "Pastoral" symphony of Beethoven, in which Dr. Koussevitzky lent remarkable descriptive powers to the candid program music, especially the famous thunderstorm scene. He lumped together the last three movements of Beethoven's unconventional five. It was Tschaikowsky's Sixth—the celebrated "Pathetique"—however, which brought the real emotional climax of the festival. The Saturday night audience was experiencing one of those rare moments of true inspiration in musical redition and fell almost hypnotically into its enchantment. In defiance of concert etiquet spontaneous applause rippled over the audience when the horns had done with tossing about the tumultuous theme of the third movement. But it was the anguished wail of the fourth movement, the "suicide music," which wrapped the spacious music shelter in a magic spell so potent that when the last piasissimo strains had died away, not a hand brfioke the stillness until, after long seconds, the conductor dropped his baton with a click on the music stand.

The final reckoning shows approximately 38,000 persons attended the series—making an average of something more than 6,000 at each concert. The seating capacity of the new music shelter is 5,700. The attractive program books, of which 30,000 were printed, began to run out Thursdaynight and for the two weekend concerts single leaflets were hastily run off the press.

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD - NEWS

AUG 15 1938

* * *

Over 38,000 Enjoyed Tanglewood Concerts

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 15, (AP)—The last notes of Brahm's Second Symphony yesterday closed the fifth Berkshire festival, the first to be held in the new "Music Shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its long time conductor, Sergt Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every State in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 15 1938

TANGLEWOOD FETE CLOSES

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Some sort of musical record was established and some special dispensation invoked at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic festival during the past two weeks in allowing the six scheduled concerts to take place without interference by the elements. Last year Wagner was given with sound effects; this year he created his own thunder of applause. In fact, the only near approach to actual storm conditions occurred during the third movement of Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony Saturday night, the proportions of which caused no perceptible drop of the barometer even if its musical prototype did quicken the human pulses.

Saturday night's concert was inaugurated by the inclusion of Henry Hadley's "Angelus" from his third symphony as a memorial to the festival's first conductor. His treatment of the old world religious atmosphere with the far away bells suggesting the peace of a former regime is music of the most melodious kind. His knowledge of orchestration and wealth of melodic invention was evident throughout the work.

The above mentioned "Pastoral" symphony of Beethoven was in direct contrast to the Tschaikowsky "Pathetic." Dr. Koussevitzky's understanding projection of one of the world's great epics of music was one of the thrilling events of the entire festival. The power and dramatic sadness of the final movement cast its spell to the extent of precluding spontaneous applause until the full realization of the beauty of the performance brought the audience back to the idea that a conductor thrives on the applause of his audience.

Sunday's concert was devoted to the Schumann symphony in B-flat, a decided orchestral novelty, "Lieutenant Kiji" by the Soviet composer, Prokofieff and Brams' symphony No. 2. The spritely program music of the modernist Russian and the imaginative tale it illustrates made a decided hit with the audience, sharing applause honors with the majestic performance of the Brahms Second symphony, a fitting climax to the most successful season in the history of the Berkshire symphonic festival. If the "Cabots speak only to the Lodges and the Lodges to God" in the phisical capital of the Bay State, the music of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the summer musical capital of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts speaks to each and every one who attended the most unique music festival in America in a language which knows no social distinctions or which recognizes no boundary lines for those with the determination to improve themselves.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat - Chronicle

AUG 15 1938

Fifth Berkshire Music Festival Ends; Expansion Seen for Future Programs

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass.—(AP)—The last notes of Brahms' Second Symphony yesterday closed the fifth Berkshire Festival, the first to be held in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand persons heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its long-time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every state in the union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the cost of the $80,000 "music shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self-sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the program, however, other than that by 1940 a shool will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

The "shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

During this festival Dr. Koussevitsky explored the entire orchestral literature, from the cantatas of Bach to the gently acrid modernites of Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, which brought many laughs to the audience yesterday afternoon. The program included also a virtuosic performance of Schumann's B Flat (first) Symphony, a work not usually as popular with audiences as it seemed yesterday.

Meanwhile, with his labors finished until the orchestra begins its Boston season early in October, Dr. Koussevitsky looked forward to Aug. 17 when he sails for a vacation abroad.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 15 1938

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

38,000 People Hear Boston Symphony Orchestra, Under Serge Koussevitzky.

SIX CONCERTS IN SERIES

Ticket Sale Alone Made Affair Self Sustaining.—Program May Be Elaborated Next Year

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—The last notes of Brahms's Second Symphony today closed the fifth Berkshire festival, the first to be held in the new "Music Shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its long time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every State in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the $80,000 "Music Shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the program, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

The "Shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

During this festival Dr. Koussevitzky explored the entire orchestral literature, from the cantatas of Bach to the gently acrid modernites of Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, which brought many laughs to the audience this afternoon. Today's program included also a virtuosic performance of Schumann's B flat (first) symphony, a work not usually as popular with audiences as it seemed today.

Meanwhile, with his labors finished until the orchestra begins its Boston season early in October, Dr. Koussevitzky looked forward to Aug. 17 when he sails for a vacation abroad.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 16 1938

The pleasure of attending a concert by the Boston symphony orchestra is always ~~increased~~ by John N. Burk's prigram notes. The programs of the orchestra's concerts of the last season, its 57th, have just been published in a volume of more than 1,000 pages. The historical and desccriptive notes of the 24 concert bulletins are all by Mr. Burk. The volume is bound in a formalt uniform with the rest of the series.

160

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 15 1938

38,000 Attended Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday with a total attendance of 38,000 for its six concerts in an auditorium, the capacity of which is only 5,638 people.

One of the best known of summer music ventures, it attracted music lovers from nearly every state in the union, and a number of foreign countries. In the audience were many who used to spend their summers at the European festivals, but preferred to take no chances this year with disturbed conditions abroad.

The Berkshire festival will sustain itself, according to George Edman, chairman of the coordinating committee, which directs the work of the 600 volunteers from this neighborhood who do the work of the festival.

The backbone of next year's festival will be Serge Koussevitzky and his superb Boston symphony orchestra. It is possible the festival will expand, perhaps by the addition of opera to the program, perhaps in the direction of more concerts. No announcement has been made so far, beyond the fact that by 1940 a school for orchestral musicians, conductors, and possibly singers as well will be operating at Tanglewood.

A campaign to obtain money for improving the property will get underway this week, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced.

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
Aug. 15/38

Music Festival In Berkshires Is Ended

Stockbridge, Mass.— (AP) —The last notes of Brahms' second symphony yesterday closed the fifth Berkshire festival, the first to be held in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston symphony orchestra under its long time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every state in the union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the $80,000 "music shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the proigram, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

The "shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST

AUG 15 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL CLOSES AT PROFIT

Six Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts Draw 38,000 Persons.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14—(AP)—The last notes of Brahms' Second Symphony today closed the fifth Berkshire Festival, the first to be held in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its long-time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every state in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the $80,000 "music shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next Summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the program, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

The "shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 15 1938

Music Festival Ends 5th Season At Stockbridge

Boston Symphony, Conducted by Koussevitzky, Offers Compositions by Bach, Beethoven and Prokofieff

Special to the Herald Tribune

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival this afternoon on the Tanglewood estate, between Stockbridge and Lenox. The festival closed as gloriously as it opened, with more than 6,000 persons from every state in the East and many parts of the West and Canada filling the newly-built music shed.

The festival has been a success, musically and financially. More than 38,000 persons attended this season's concerts, far surpassing last year's attendance. Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, who compose one of the foremost symphonic orchestras in America, presented an unusually broad program which ranged from the solemn cantatas of Bach to the delightfully humorous and modern orchestral suite by Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije." The audience last night reveled in Beethoven's sixth symphony, his "Pastoral" symphony, with its eloquent delineation of the sounds of Nature, but it laughed heartily at "Lieutenant Kije."

Novelty on Program

In addition to "Lieutenant Kije," the program included Schumann's Symphony in B flat, No. 1, and Brahm's second symphony in D major.

The Prokofieff number was perhaps the most notable selection on today's program because of its novelty. The suite was derived from the incidental music which the Russian composed for a Soviet film, "Lieutenant Kije," produced in 1933 in Leningrad. The orchestral suite, completed and published a year later, was first performed in Moscow.

The motion picture "Lieutenant Kije" is not familiar in the United States, but that did not impair the audience's enjoyment of the orchestral suite. The subject of the film is based on an anecdote about Czar Paul I. The Czar misread the report of a military aide so that the last syllable of a Russian officer's name, which ended with "Ki" and the Russiah intensive expletive "Je" (untranslatable by any English word, but similar in position and meaning to the Latin "quidem") formed a non-existent name, Kije. Obsequious courtiers, afraid to tell the Czar of his mistake, thereupon decided to invent an officer by the name of Kije, and this led to all kinds of farcical situations.

Fanfare Introduces Officer

As befits the birth of one who is born in full regimentals in the mind of a Czar, the lieutenant's introduction is depicted with a cornet fanfare off stage, followed by a staccato-like military drum and the shrill sounds of a fife. The other instruments fall in line and the music maintains a characteristic parade-like strut. The second movement describes Lieuteant Kije's romance and the third movement presents his wedding. The melodic character of the third movement suggests that the romantic lieutenant is as sentimental in his nuptials as he was in his courting, while never forgetting for a moment that he was a soldier.

The fourth movement offers another tavern song, which is introduced to an accompaniment suggestive of the motion of the three-horse Russian sleigh. The last movement describes the lieutenant's burial. The fictitious Lieutenant Kije is cheerfully "buried" and in the suite's last movement his career is summarized. A cornet fanfare introduces him again, and the themes of his romance and his wedding are invoked. The piece ends with the sound of a muted cornet vanishing in distance.

While no exact figure is available yet, last night's attendance also was estimated at 6,000.

This evening a group of Dr. Koussevitzky's musicians broke camp on Lake Mahkeenac, near Stockbridge Bowl. Dr. Koussevitzky will sail on August 17 on the French liner Normandie for a European vacation. The consensus indicates that within the next few years the festival will establish a school here and will add opera to the program.

After experience with many amateur choruses, Dr. Koussevitzky believes that the possibilities of choral and community singing are almost unlimited, if properly trained leaders are made available.

Only a few more improvements are needed for the music shed, including a permanent floor and stage.

ANSONIA, CONN.
SENTINEL

161 AUG 15 1938

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL CLOSES WITH 38,000 TOTAL AUDIENCE

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday with a total attendance of 38,000 for its six concerts in an auditorium, the capacity of which is only 5,638 people.

One of the best known of summer music ventures, it attracted music lovers from nearly every state in the Union, and a number of foreign countries. In the audience were many who used to spend their summers at the European festivals, but preferred to take no chances this year with disturbed conditions abroad.

The Berkshire festival will sustain itself, according to George Edman, chairman of the coordinating committee, which directs the work of the 600 volunteers from this neighborhood who do the work of the festival.

The backbone of next year's festival will be Serge Koussevitzky and his superb Boston Symphony orchestra. It is possible the festival will expand, perhaps by the addition of opera to the program, perhaps in the direction of more concerts. No announcement has been made so far, beyond the fact that in 1940 a school for orchestral musicians, conductors, and possibly singers as well will be operating at Tanglewood.

A campaign to obtain money for improving the property will get underway this week, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

AUG 15 1938

38,000 Attend Six Concerts At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Enjoyed By 6,000 at Final Appearance Sunday

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15 — The Berkshires Symphonic Festival came to an end at Tanglewood here Sunday afternoon. Ideal weather prevailed, and the attendance was more than 6,000 again. The seats in the music shed were filled, and a scattering of visitors sat and reclined on the lawns around the shed. Hundreds of children were in the audience, for Sunday seems to have become the day for the whole family to come to Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded the festival on a romantic note. The ardent, glowing Symphony No. 1 of Schumann and the radiant, Spring-like second Symphony of Brahms opened and ended Sunday's program. Between them was Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite.

The performances of the fifth concert Saturday night evoked spontaneous enthusiasm. The freshness and gaiety of the interpretation of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony were received with delighted approval. The Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique," with the orchestra's communication of the score's grief and frenzy, almost brought down the house. It was a richly merited tribute, for Mr. Koussevitzky conducted this symphony with conviction and with a profound grasp of its racial roots, and his men responded to his wishes with unsurpassable virtuosity.

The second week's audiences have been about 19,000, making a total of about 38,000 for the six concerts of the festival. Financially, this year's program may be pronounced a success. The public support, in fact, has been beyond the expectations of the authorities. As proof, the printing of 30,000 program books was ordered and Saturday night and Sunday they were exhausted.

Of the artistic success of the festival there was no doubt. The new music shed has proved a delight to eye and ear. It was built, primarily, as a protection against rain and storms, but there has been no rain at any of the concerts. The festival authorities were not complaining.

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD

AUG 15 1938

SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL CLOSED YESTERDAY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday with a total attendance of 38,000 for its six concerts in an auditorium, the capacity of which is only 5,638 people.

One of the best known of summer music ventures, it attracted music lovers from nearly every state in the union, and a number of foreign countries. In the audience were many who used to spend their summers at the European festivals, but preferred to take no chances this year with disturbed conditions abroad.

The Berkshire festival will sustain itself, according to George Edman, chairman of the coordinating committee, which directs the work of the 600 volunteers from this neighborhood who do the work of the festival.

The backbone of next year's festival will be Serge Koussevitzky and his superb Boston Symphony orchestra. It is possible the festival will expand, perhaps by the addition of opera to the program, perhaps in the direction of more concerts. No announcement has been made so far, beyond the fact that by 1940 a school for orchestral musicians, conductors, and possibly singers as well will be operating at Tanglewood.

A campaign to obtain money for improving the property will get underway this week, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 15 1938

Koussevitzky Gets Ovation As Festival Ends

Pittsfield, Aug. 15 — George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, estimated last night the total attendance as 37,000 at the fifth annual Berkshire music festival, which closed yesterday afternoon. With more than 6500 present, the number of admissions for the sixth and final concert probably was the largest of the series, although about as many were present last night.

The applause of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, reached its maximum at the conclusion of the program. He was recalled five times before the great audience would leave the scene of one of Berkshire's greatest musical triumphs. It was a pleasant mid-August afternoon with a mild southwest breeze. No rain fell at any of the concerts.

Most of the orchestra members, who have been "camping" for two weeks in Berkshire, will leave for Boston today. For the last two weeks of August next year they are to play at the world's fair.

The festival has brought thousands of visitors to Berkshire and first class hotels have done the greatest August business in 25 years. Many patrons have made reservations for the 1939 festival.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 15 1938

Koussevitzky Acclaimed As Music Festival Ends; More Concerts Next Year?

Total Attendance at This Year's Six Concerts More Than 38,000 and Small Balance is Expected—Drive for $58,000 to Add Finishing Touches to Magnificent New Music Shed Gets Impetus From Two Gifts of $1,000 Each—Use of Shed as Summer Theater Suggested—People From Every State and From Foreign Countries Attend This Year—Mrs. Grace Coolidge at Yesterday's Brilliant Concluding Concert.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the distinguished conductor, received the greatest ovation in the five-year history of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at the close of yesterday's sixth and final concert of the 1938 season at Tanglewood, Lenox. Five times he was forced to return to the podium to acknowledge the applause and share it graciously with his musicians before the huge audience would leave the music shed.

There had been prolonged applause at the end of each work but the audience saved the real ovation for the conclusion of the program which also marked the end of the festival. The men and women stood for some minutes, clapped their hands, cheered heartily but discreetly, waved handkerchiefs, all to make it as clear as possible that the farewell they were bidding the master and his Boston Symphony orchestra was a fond one.

Plan $58,000 Drive

Today while the ground crew was clearing up the charming setting for the concerts, plans for the 1939 concerts were being pushed ahead. A $58,000 drive for funds with which to provide the new shed with steel side curtains, additional seats which are badly needed, and casings for the colonnades, is already in progress under the able leadership of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation. Some of the money will go toward improving the approaches and parking areas.

Use as Summer Theater?

Among the plans for 1939 reported being under consideration is one whereby the music shed would be converted into a summer theater for part of the season, but in some circles it is regarded unlikely that the spacious hall will be used for such a purpose. A new theater located in or close to Tanglewood would probably receive consideration first, it is felt.

Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, widow of the President of the United States, motored over from Northampton to join the celebrities at the closing program. She was accompanied by Mrs. Florence B. Adams. They were the guests of Mrs. Lucy Wadhams Dodge of Pittsfield during their stay.

Two $1000 Gifts

A $2000 nest-egg for the drive was provided by Mrs. Alonzo G. Sexton of New York city and John Shepard, Jr., of Boston, who subscribed $1000 each. The festival corporation is to meet in the near future to draft more definite plans for next year when eight concerts may be presented.

Slight Balance Expected

George W. Edman, clerk of the corporation, was able to report today that doubtless there will be slight balance after all accounts are met. He also revealed that the total attendance went above 38,000 for the four evenings and two afternoons although the seating capacity of the shed is only 5,638. The largest attendance was present for the fifth concert on Saturday when Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra evoked spontaneous enthusiasm with Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique." At none of the concerts, however, did the attendance go far above or far below the 6,000 mark.

The per capita cost of presenting the season increased greatly this year, Mr. Edman said. Everything was done on a larger scale. The ground crew was larger than ever before, printing bills shot up and the expenses incidental to putting the music shed into use for the first time were reflected in the overhead.

8,000 Above Last Year

The total attendance was about 8,000 greater than in 1937 when the festival was housed in a huge tent. State police and American Legion men from Pittsfield handled traff under the general direction of Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield formerly of this city who yesterday caused a check to be made which showed 2,502 cars and seven big buses entered the gates for yesterday afternoon's concert. There was no confusion as the cars, along with seven large buses entered and left due to the excellent work of the Sheriff McIntyre police and the 50 or so Legionnaires.

Primary Traffic Difficulty

During the season it became apparent that the problem is not one of getting the cars into and out of the festival grounds or parking them while there. The primary difficulty is caused by the narrowness of all the public roads leading past Tanglewood, none of which is more than two-widths across, and narrow widths at that.

Brisk business was reported in all the down-county hotels and restaurants on Saturday and yesterday. More than one hotel proprietor found today that the past week-end had been the best since July 4th; that business even was 20 per cent ahead of that of the first festival week-end.

Music lovers from all parts of the United States and from a number of foreign countries were drawn to the festival which within five years has gained international recognition as one of the best known of summer music ventures. Not a few of those in the audience on each of the six days used to pass the summer at the time-honored European festivals but remained in this country this year because of disturbed conditions abroad and because they realized the Berkshire series would make a more than acceptable substitute.

Again yesterday the attendance was above 6,000 with many of the visitors reclining on the green around the shed because all of the lower priced seats were gone. Ideal weather prevailed after having favored the festival since the opening concert.

Concluding Concert

Dr. Koussevitsky chose to conclude the history-making series on a romantic note, he and the orchestra offering Schumann's glowing Symphony No. 1; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, which is distinctly in the modern idiom, and for the ending, the radiant and spring-like Brahms Symphony No. 2.

Prokofieff, one of the most engaging musical personalities of modern times, drew his somewhat amazing suite from the score of a Soviet motion picture film dealing with the birth of a military hero as a full-sized man because of Czar's confusion over a list of names. It is a piece full antics, comedy and sardonic laughter which gave Dr. Koussevitzky's men an opportunity to display the assurance of their individual techniques.

Most of the audience obviously enjoyed it heartily but a small group of Russian emigres who were in the shed found it too reminiscent of their country before Communism and remained tense and quietly weeping throughout the reading.

Both the Brahms Second Symphony and the Schumann First were played with warmth and great affection. The charm and lift and ingenuousness of the music were irresistable.

"Life" - Aug. 15, 1938

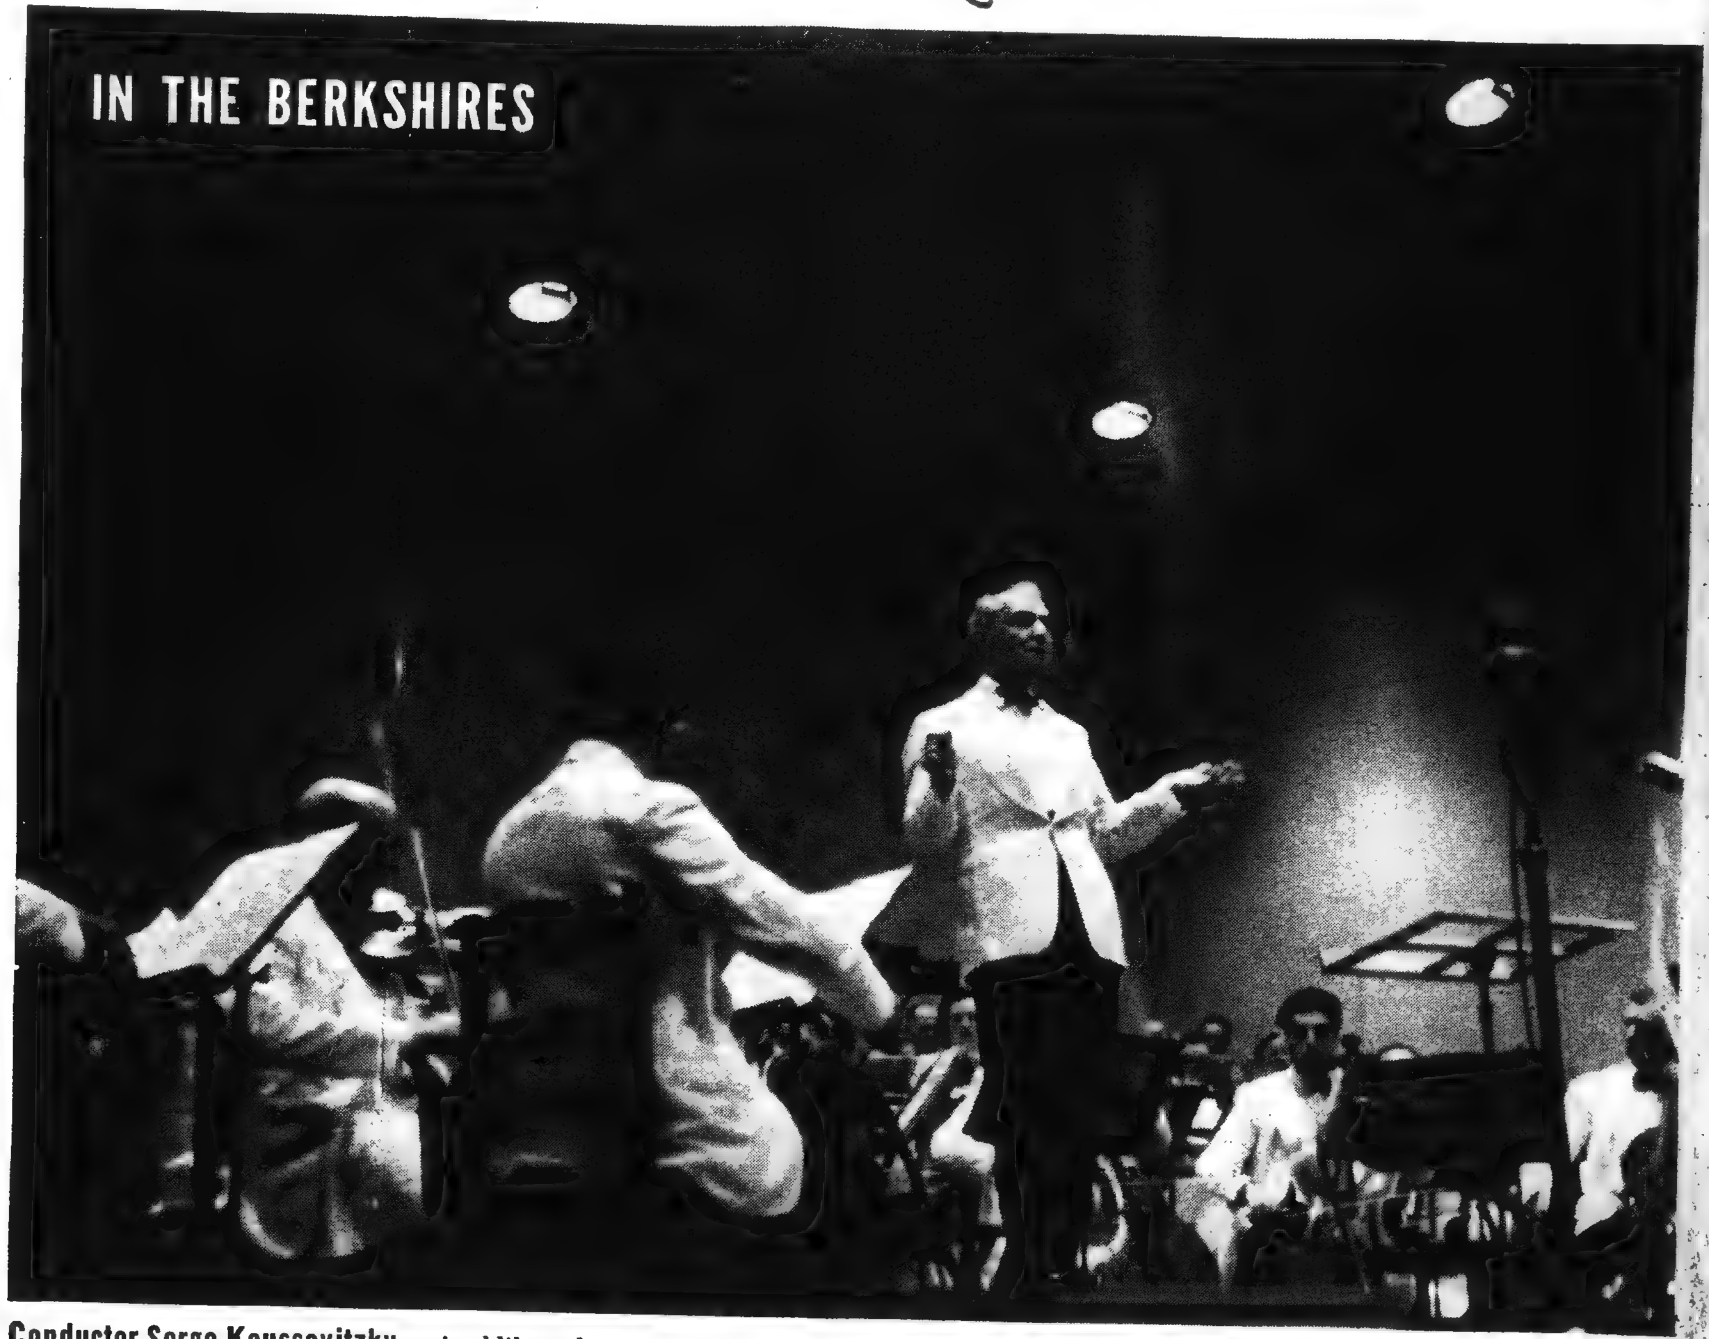
162

Page 10

HEAVY MUSIC IN NEW YORK

When summer music first became popular, conductors seldom dared venture anything weightier than a Strauss waltz. To their surprise, murmurs of "We want Beethoven," "We want Bach" were heard. Given Beethoven and Bach, audiences rapidly grew larger. Today, outdoor music is as heavily classical as anything played indoors. On July 28, 19,000 music-lovers crowded New York's Lewisohn Stadium to hear Jascha Heifetz play a Brahms concerto. At rehearsal that morning, LIFE's photographer took the unique photographs below. The great Heifetz, absorbed in his playing, suddenly becomes disturbed at the conductor's interpretation, stops the whole orchestra to get the point cleared up.

IN THE BERKSHIRES



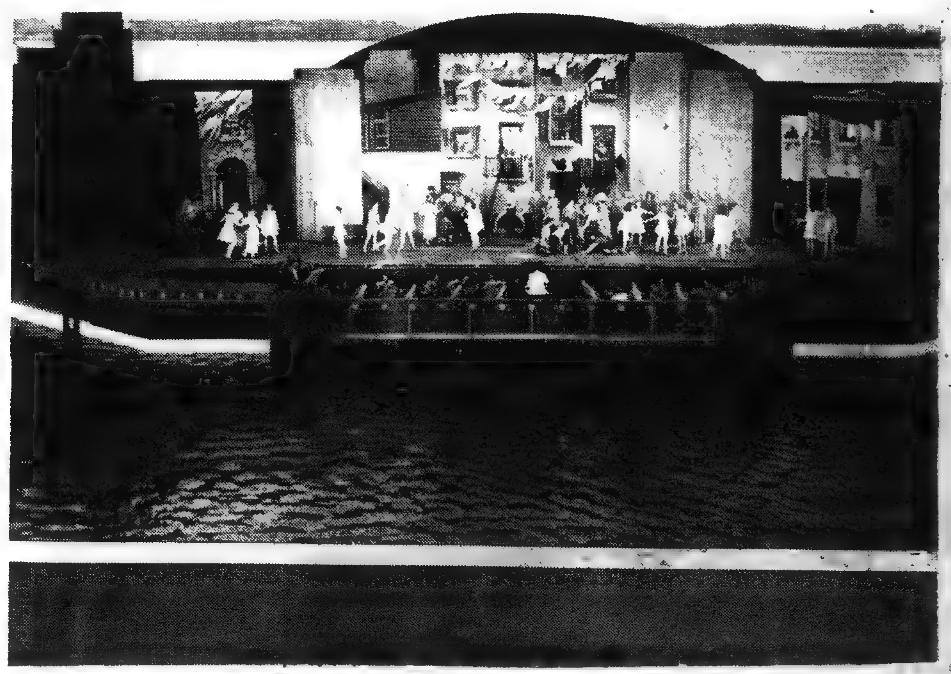
Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, poised like a dancer (above), opened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 4 by leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, chorus and audience in Bach's choral Ein Feste Burg Ist unser Gott. All the 5,700 seats in the new shed were filled, the wildly enthusiastic audience overflowing onto the lawn.

Page 11

Beethoven's choral symphony, the Ninth, was the major item on the opening Berkshire program. The last movement was sung by the Cecilia Society chorus (above). Critics found the performance and acoustics first-rate. Though Berkshire programs are heavily classical, they also include the works of such modernists as Copland and Prokofieff.

LIGHT MUSIC AT JONES BEACH

The delight of summer music lies as much in being outdoors as in hearing the music. The audience, which would sit tense indoors and listen hard, relaxes and lets the music come to its ears. Nowhere is the setting for summer music more pleasant than at Jones Beach, Long Island. There operas and operettas are performed on a big stage, built on piles over a lagoon and entirely surrounded by water. Below, progressive scenes from Sally, Irene and Mary. As night comes on, the surroundings darken and the singers stand out brightly on the stage. When an act is over, no curtain comes down. Instead, all stage lights go out and the audience sees nothing but the border lights reflected in the rippling water.



SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1938

DR KOUSSEVITZKY GIVEN OVATION BY FESTIVAL CROWD

Recalled Five Times Before Audience Leaves Tanglewood — Total of 37,000 at Concerts

Pittsfield, Aug. 14—George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, estimated tonight the total attendance as 37,000 at the fifth annual Berkshire Music festival, which closed this afternoon. With more than 6500 present, the number of admissions for the sixth and final concert probably was the largest of the series, although about as many were present last night.

The applause for Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, reached its maximum at the conclusion of today's program. He was recalled five times before the great audience would leave the scene of one of Berkshire's greatest musical triumphs. It was a pleasant mid-August afternoon with a mild southwest breeze. No rain fell at any of the concerts.

George W. Edman, clerk of the festival corporation and one of its driving forces, said there will be a balance on the right side of the ledger as in the past two years when Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony have held sway. The conductor and Mrs Koussevitzky, who have been staying at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox, will leave Tuesday for New York and Wednesday they are to sail on the Normandie for a six weeks' trip abroad.

Most of the orchestra members, who have been "camping" for two weeks in Berkshire, will leave for Boston tomorrow. For the last two weeks of August next year they are to play at the World's fair.

The extraordinary success of this summer's music festival has surpassed all expectations and at least six boxes have been engaged for next season, no matter how many concerts will be given. The Boston Symphony orchestra has 110 musicians on its pay roll. All the newspaper music critics, of whom 40 were present the first series, had departed by tonight.

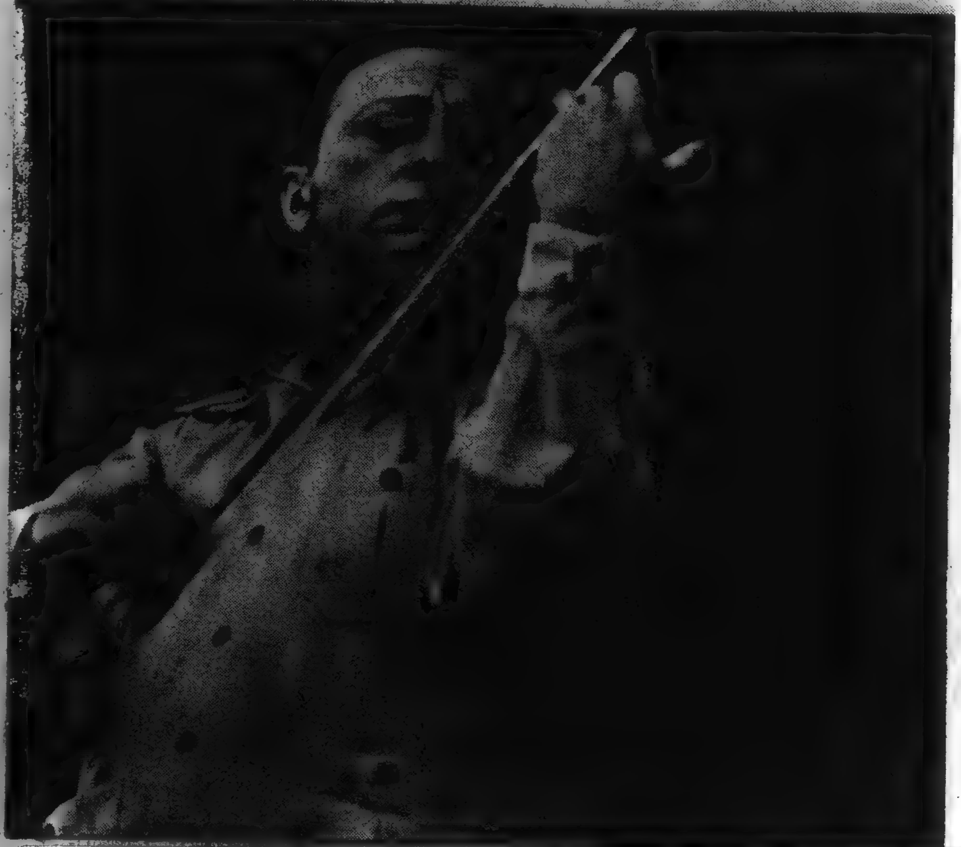
The next important event scheduled for the Tanglewood music shed is the Lenox Kennel club dog show on Saturday, September 3.

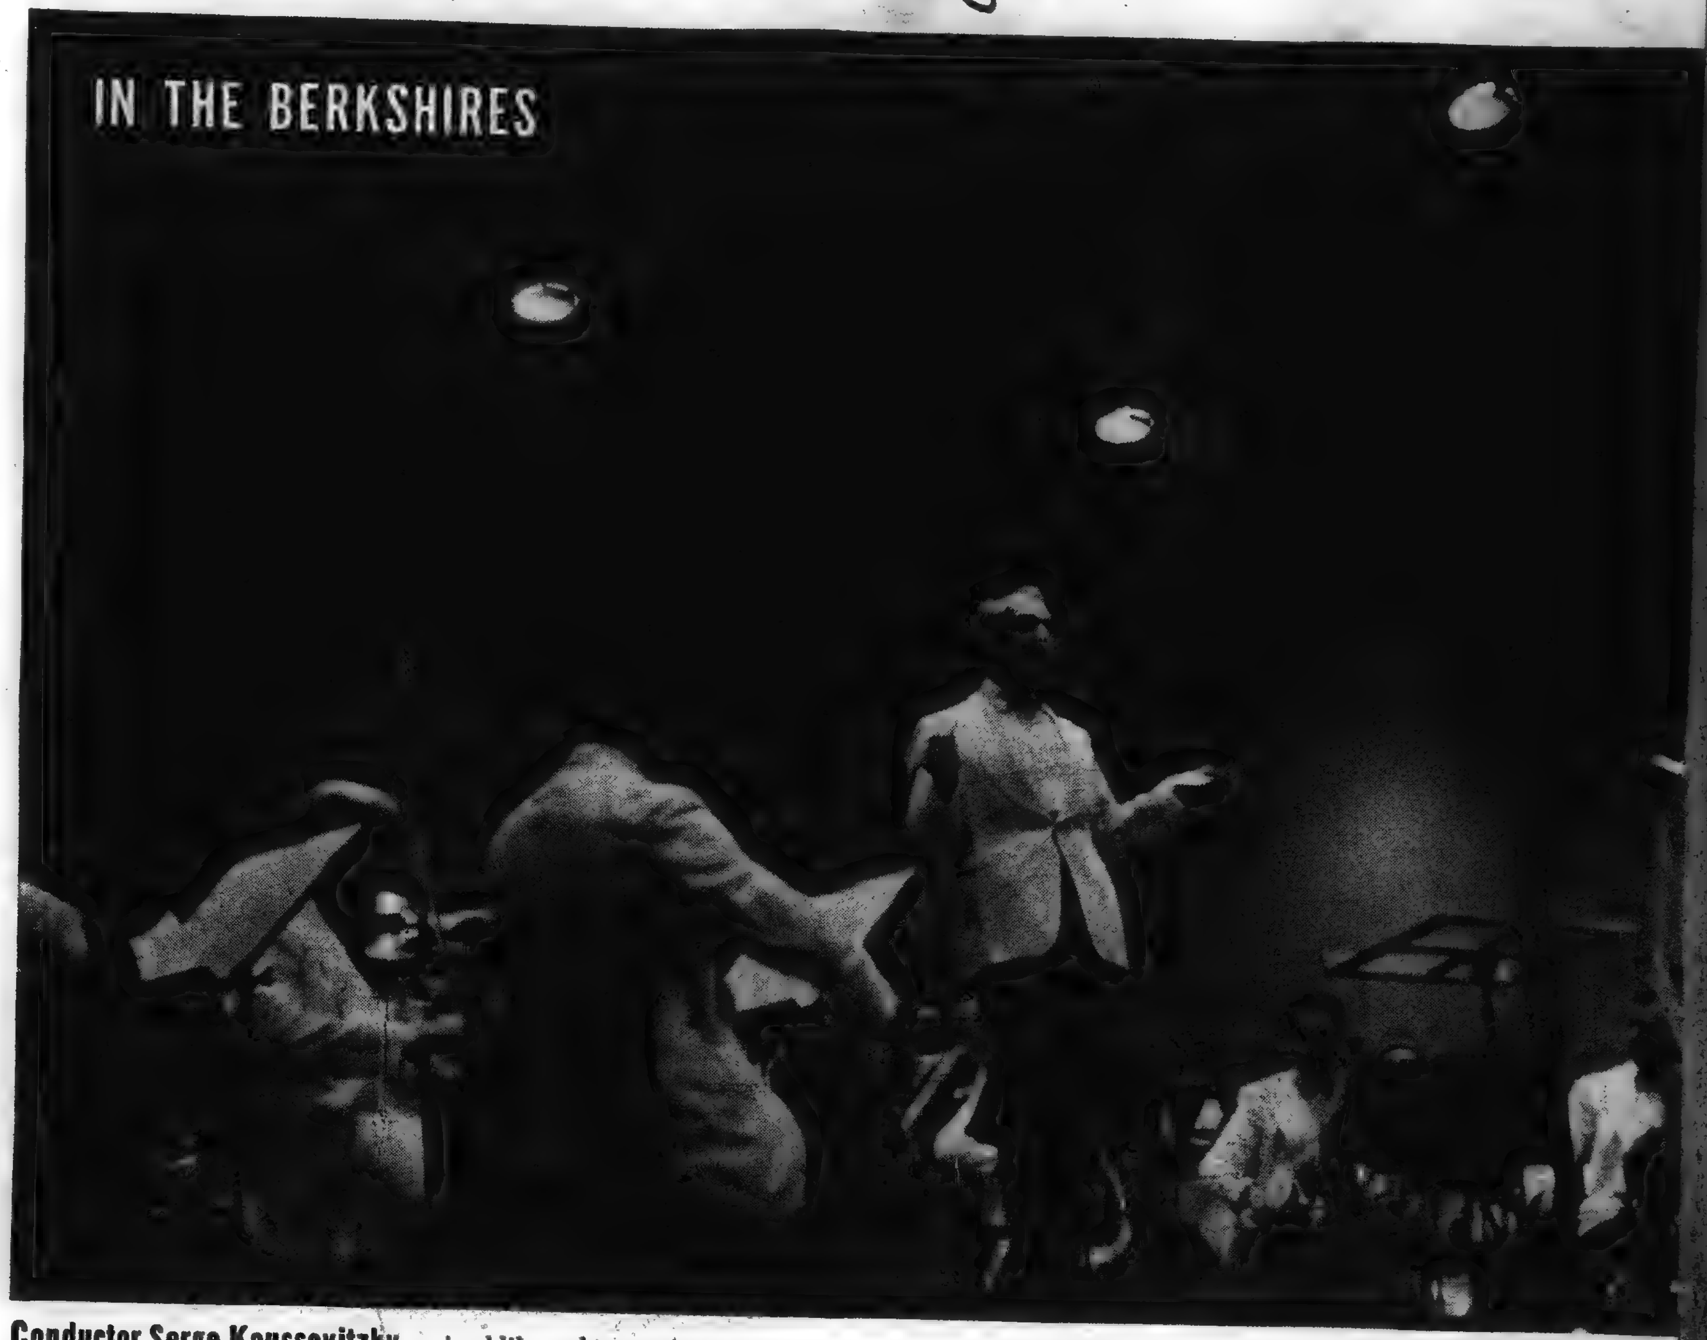
The festival has brought thousands of visitors to Berkshire and first class hotels have done the greatest August business in 25 years. Many patrons have made reservations for the 1939 festival.

"Life" - Aug. 15, 1938

HEAVY MUSIC IN NEW YORK

When summer music first became popular, conductors seldom dared venture anything weightier than a Strauss waltz. To their surprise, murmurs of "We want Beethoven," "We want Bach" were heard. Given Beethoven and Bach, audiences rapidly grew larger. Today, outdoor music is as heavily classical as anything played indoors. On July 28, 19,000 music-lovers crowded New York's Lewisohn Stadium to hear Jascha Heifetz play a Brahms concerto. At rehearsal that morning, LIFE's photographer took the unique photographs below. The great Heifetz, absorbed in his playing, suddenly becomes disturbed at the conductor's interpretation, stops the whole orchestra to get the point cleared up.





Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, poised like a dancer (above), opened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 4 by leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, chorus and audience in Bach's choral Ein Feste Burg Ist unser Gott. All the 5,700 seats in the new shed were filled, the wildly enthusiastic audience overflowing onto the lawn.

Beethoven's choral symphony, the Ninth, was the major item on the opening Berkshire program. The last movement was sung by the Cecilia Society chorus (above). Critics found the performance and acoustics first-rate. Though Berkshire programs are heavily classical, they also include the works of such modernists as Copland and Prokofieff.

LIGHT MUSIC AT JONES BEACH

The delight of summer music lies as much in being outdoors as in hearing the music. The audience, which would sit tense indoors and listen hard, relaxes and lets the music come to its ears. Nowhere is the setting for summer music more pleasant than at Jones Beach, Long Island. There operas and operettas are performed on a big stage, built on piles over a lagoon and entirely surrounded by water. Below, progressive scenes from Sally, Irene and Mary. As night comes on, the surroundings darken and the singers stand out brightly on the stage. When an act is over, no curtain comes down. Instead, all stage lights go out and the audience sees nothing but the border lights reflected in the rippling water.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1938

DR KOUSSEVITZKY GIVEN OVATION BY FESTIVAL CROWD

Recalled Five Times Before Audience Leaves Tanglewood — Total of 37,000 at Concerts

Pittsfield, Aug. 14—George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, estimated tonight the total attendance as 37,000 at the fifth annual Berkshire Music festival, which closed this afternoon. With more than 6500 present, the number of admissions for the sixth and final concert probably was the largest of the series, although about as many were present last night.

The applause for Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, reached its maximum at the conclusion of today's program. He was recalled five times before the great audience would leave the scene of one of Berkshire's greatest musical triumphs. It was a pleasant mid-August afternoon with a mild southwest breeze. No rain fell at any of the concerts.

George W. Edman, clerk of the festival corporation and one of its driving forces, said there will be a balance on the right side of the ledger as in the past two years when Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony have held sway. The conductor and Mrs Koussevitzky, who have been staying at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox, will leave Tuesday for New York and Wednesday they are to sail on the Normandie for a six weeks' trip abroad.

Most of the orchestra members, who have been "camping" for two weeks in Berkshire, will leave for Boston tomorrow. For the last two weeks of August next year they are to play at the World's fair.

The extraordinary success of this summer's music festival has surpassed all expectations and at least six boxes have been engaged for next season, no matter how many concerts will be given. The Boston Symphony orchestra has 110 musicians on its pay roll. All the newspaper music critics, of whom 40 were present the first series, had departed by tonight.

The next important event scheduled for the Tanglewood music shed is the Lenox Kennel club dog show on Saturday, September 3.

The festival has brought thousands of visitors to Berkshire and first class hotels have done the greatest August business in 25 years. Many patrons have made reservations for the 1939 festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1938

6000 ATTEND LAST FESTIVAL CONCERT AT BERKSHIRE SHED

Record Crowd at Tanglewood Hears Boston Orchestra Play Symphony by Brahms

By FRANCIS REGAL

Stockbridge, Aug. 14—The sixth and last concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival was given this afternoon at Tanglewood to an audience of well over 6000 people. It was the largest gathering in the festival's history, and enthusiasm today perhaps ran highest. There was no letting down in program or performance, but on the other hand not the slightest effort at a grand climax had been made, and the warmth of today's tribute may be taken as applause for the high standards maintained. For the last word Mr Koussevitzky elected to leave the lovely, but in no way sensational, D major symphony by Brahms, and to open the final concert with Schumann's first symphony, another exquisite but far from sensational work.

To many the program might have seemed a fairly stiff one, if both symphonies had not been given by the Boston Symphony orchestra in so vital and interesting a way. Yet a concession was made by the insertion, between these great classics, of a delightfully gay and sparkling example of contemporary Russian music. This was the orchestral suite "Lieut Kije," opus 60, by Serge Prokofieff. This gifted composer is one of the most engaging musical personalities of our time, clever and learned, but also full of vivacity and humor. Sometimes he plays at being modernist, sometimes he does ironic homage to the classical style, but whatever he pens has the Prokofieff mark.

His admirers sometimes complain that he does not take himself seriously enough, but his characteristic saucy frivolity needs no excuse in this suite, the music of which was originally composed for a Soviet film comedy, which was produced at Leningrad in 1933 but has not yet reached our country. The theme is one to give Prokofieff's fantastic imagination full play. The lieutenant with the vaguely Nipponese name is even more imaginary than the hero of "The Chocolate Soldier," since he is called into existence by a blunder on the part of Czar Paul I, who misread a military report so as to make the name of an officer out of "ki," at the end of a name, and the intensive expletive "je" which followed.

It was not for Russian courtiers to tell the Czar that he had perpetrated a howler. So a Lieut Kije had to be created, since one did not exist, and Prokofieff has entertainingly chronicled in apt musical terms the story told by the films. The opening allegro tells of the hero's birth—a simple matter, since it took place in the brain of the czar, and brisk and snappy martial music in infinitely varied form provides the musical obligato.

Nor is there sadness in the closing andante, "Burial of Kije," which winds up a good joke with a brilliant musical recapitulation. Between come three episodes, "Romance" (with baritone solo if desired, but strictly instrumented today), "Kije's wedding," another melodious movement, and "Troika," in which the jingle of the Russian three-horse sleigh gives an effective orchestral accompaniment.

For so frivolous a scenario frivolous music was inevitable, and the composer has produced a diverting score, with plenty of "oom-pah" and "rat-a-plan" but also with plenty of the fascinating original tunes in the Russian style of which he seems to have an inexhaustible supply. The orchestration, including a piano, is varied and expressive and not noisy nor very harsh.

This is in fact popular music—almost bourgeois music, though it antedates Stalin's conversion to bourgeois ideals in the arts. But with good foolery goes artistic mastery of a high order and the rare gift of coining musical phrases and evoking musical effects which linger in the memory.

Without sacrifice of the ideal which has given festival-goers eight fine symphonies in six concerts a place can be made now and then for lighter, shorter and slighter works, and the popularity of "Lieut Kije" may be a guide to what the public wants in the way of musical relaxation.

Mrs Calvin Coolidge Guest at Tanglewood

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 14—Mrs Calvin Coolidge attended the Berkshire Music festival concert at Tanglewood this afternoon. She motored over from Northampton with Mrs Florence B. Adams and they were the guests of Mrs Lucy Wadhams Dodge of Guestwick, Pittsfield.

Mrs Edwards Spencer had as guests in her box Mrs Drexel Dahlgren of Newport, Misses Pernette, Julie M. and Roselyne de Viry of Savoie, France. Tonight Mrs Dahlgren was the honored guest at a dinner given by Mrs Spencer at Shipton court, Lenox.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1938

FIFTH BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL CLOSES

38,000 Attend Six Concerts At Stockbridge

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14—(AP)—The last notes of Brahms' Second Symphony today closed the fifth Berkshire festival, the first to be held in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, near here. Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under its long-time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every state in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the $80,000 "music shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self-sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the program, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

The "shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

During this festival Dr. Koussevitzky explored the entire orchestral literature, from the cantatas of Bach to the gently acrid modernities of Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, which brought many laughs to the audience this afternoon. Today's program included also a virtuosic performance of Schumann's B Flat (first) Symphony, a work not usually as popular with audiences as it seemed today.

Meanwhile, with his labors finished until the orchestra begins its Boston season early in October, Dr. Koussevitzky looked forward to Aug. 17 when he sails for a vacation abroad.

UTICA, N. Y.
PRESS

Aug. 15, 1938

RECORD CROWD AT MUSIC FETE

Stockbridge, Mass.— (AP) —The last notes of Brahms' second symphony yesterday closed the fifth Berkshire festival, the first to be held in the new "music shed" at Tanglewood, near here.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston symphony orchestra under its long time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts.

They came from nearly every state in the union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups.

Although the $80,000 "music shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the proigram, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival.

The "shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without major alteration, and an operatic production or so may be had in the future.

Another dinner was given by Mrs George Rockwood of Rosewood lodge, New Lebanon, N. Y., at the Lenox club and among her guests were Mrs Nina L. Duryea, Mrs Donald W. Brown, Mrs W. Henry Harrison, Mrs Ross Winans Whistler and Princess Diana Eristavi, daughter of Mrs Rockwood.

Mrs George K. Livermore entertained at lunchen at Three Acres, Lenox, before the concert in compliment to Mr and Mrs Ernest Franklin Tyler. Among others in the group were Mr and Mrs John H. P. Gould, Mr and Mrs Chauncey C. Loomis and Ferdinand Davis.

Mrs John D. Kennedy gave a luncheon at Stonover farm, Lenox, for Mr and Mrs Alexander Douglas Knox, Mr and Mrs Seymour L. Cromwell and Olin Downes.

Another preconcert luncheon hostess was Mrs Thomas T. Mackie, who had as guests at Pine Cliff, Great Barrington, Dr and Mrs Joe Clemmons, Mr and Mrs Dwight Partridge, Mr and Mrs Edward D. Gaillard and Mr and Mrs David Ives Mackie, Jr.

In a weekend concert house party with Mr and Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont, are Miss Jean K. McClelland, fiancee of Julian S. Barrett; Mr and Mrs Roswell C. Tripp, Mrs F. Lufkin Hunsiker of Rye, N. Y., Mr and Mrs Norman Clement of Buffalo, N. Y., and Mr and Mrs David Crompton of Wilton, N. H.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 15 1938

STOCKBRIDGE MUSIC EVENT SEASON ENDS

38,000 Persons Attend Berkshire Festival Concert Series

Like one at left

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP).—The last notes of Brahms' sec-

---

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 15 1938

Brahms Music Ends Festival In Berkshires

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP).—The last notes of Brahms'

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 15 1938

38,000 Visit Festival In 6 Concerts

Fifth Berkshire Series Ends in Music Shed; Huge Ticket Sales Justify Expansion

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP.)—The lost notes of Brahm's Second Symphony today closed the

---

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1938

FESTIVAL CLOSES SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Dr. Koussevitzky Directs Final Program at Berkshire Music Shed.

BY JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP) The last notes of Brahms' Second symphony today closed the

---

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 15 1938

FIFTH BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL SEASON CLOSES

38,000 People Hear Boston Symphony Orchestra in "Music Shed"

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14—AP—The last notes of Brahms' sec-

---

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR Aug. 15/38

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, ATTENDED BY 38,000 IN SEASON, CLOSED

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—The last notes of Brahms' sec-

---

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ENDS

Brahms' Second Closes Music Series by Boston Symphony

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The last notes of Brahms' Second

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 15 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY AND ORCHESTRA ARE APPLAUDED

Cultural Success of Berkshire Festival Paralleled by The Financial

Stockbridge, Aug. 15—The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival came to a triumphant close yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood, as an enraptured audience of about 6500 persons applauded Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra with a fervor that has not been duplicated in any of the five previous concerts of the series. The cultural success of the series was paralleled by the financial success, and George W. Edman, clerk and "spark plug" of the festival corporation, reported that for the third consecutive year there would be a balance on the right side of the ledger.

The Schumann B flat symphony, the Brahms D major symphony and the orchestral suite from "Lieutenant Kije" by Prokofieff made up yesterday's program. Last Sunday, Dr Kousevitzky did not offer such a stiff program for the large Sunday turnout, but the greeting given the program yesterday gave no indication that the fare yesterday was less welcome. The rib tickling and transparent antics of the imaginary Russian lieutenant provided the audience with great diversion, and was a welcome insertion between the two heavier works.

Again, excellent weather greeted the music lovers. Not once during this year's series was there an opportunity to test the acoustics of the new shed against the driving Berkshire rain, the drumming of which on the tent last year was the straw that led to the construction of the open sided shell this year. The total attendance for this year was reported to be 37,000 by George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra and the weather played a cooperative part in setting this record.

Saturday night, there was an equally large crowd present to hear the two sixth symphonies, Beethoven's "Pastoral," and Tschaikovsky's "Pathetic," and Hadley's "Angelus." The two symphonies have always been great popular favorites, and Dr Koussevitzky's treatment of them was calculated to present them at their best, while it was obvious for sympathetic and musical reasons that the audience appreciated the thoughtful inclusion of the "Angelus" or Second movement from the B minor symphony, in memory of the first conductor of the festival who died last year.

Not only in the execution of the programs, but in the program making has Dr Koussevitzky won for the orchestra new friends, many of whom came thousands of miles for the festival. The program of the opening night was outstanding for a dedication program, offering a unity of musical feeling and brotherhood that would have been hard to surpass.

Unified, though in a different way, was the all Wagner program last Thursday night. The first Sunday of the festival, the program was purposely light, with the exception of the Brahms E minor which endowed the program with all the substance needed. Yesterday, Dr Koussevitzky walked right up to the final concert with no slackening of pace or quality in the program, and the ovation that greeted the orchestra at the end of the afternoon showed that no pandering was needed.

The light touch for the program yesterday was provided by the bright and clever Prokofieff selection, which tells of the birth of a lieutenant, who was created when Czar Paul I misread the report of a subordinate, his subsequent romance, wedding, carefree life, and burial. The army created the officer rather than let the czar's mistake be known, and the music which serves as accompaniment for the Soviet film of the same name is tuneful and chockfull of humor. The off-stage trumpet playing, this time from the birch grove nearby, always, in vaudeville parlance, "brings down the house," and yesterday was no exception.

Although the season was not quite the same, the Schumann "Spring Symphony" was appropriate yesterday for life was indeed stirring in the Berkshires with the same vernal urge that inspired this symphony. The Brahms symphony which had a rocky start with the critics has become standard fare for the orchestras, its intrinsic merit long since having silenced the critics.

The conductor and Mrs Koussevitzky, who have been staying at the Berkshrie Hunt and Country club, Lenox, will leave Tuesday for New York and Wednesday they are to sail on the Normandie for a six weeks' trip abroad.

Most of the orchestra members, who have been "camping" for two weeks in Berkshire, departed for Boston today. For the last two weeks of August next year they are to play at the World's fair.

The extraordinary success of this summer's music festival has surpassed all expectations and at least six boxes have been engaged for next season, no matter how many concerts will be given. The Boston Symphony orchestra has 110 musicians on its pay roll. All the newspaper music critics, of whom 40 were present the first series, had departed by midnight.

The next important event scheduled for the Tanglewood music shed is the Lenox Kennel club dog show on Saturday, September 3.

The festival has brought thousands of visitors to Berkshire and first class hotels have done the greatest August business in 25 years. Many patrons have made reservations for the 1939 festival.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

AUG 15 1938

38,000 HEAR BERKSHIRE MUSIC

Festival Closes; Music Lovers From All Over U. S. Attend The Six Concerts

Stockbridge, Mass. (AP) — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday with a total attendance of 38,000 for its six concerts in an auditorium, the capacity of which is only 5,638 persons.

One of the best known of summer music ventures, it attracted music lovers from nearly every state in the union, and a number of foreign countries. In the audience were many who used to spend their summers at the European festivals, but preferred to take no chances this year with disturbed conditions abroad.

The Berkshire Festival will sustain itself, according to George Edman, chairman of the Co-ordinating Committee, which directs the work of the 600 volunteers from this neighborhood who do the work of the festival.

The backbone of next year's festival will be Serge Koussevitzky and his superb Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is possible the festival will expand, perhaps by the addition of opera to the program, perhaps in the direction of more concerts. No announcement has been made so far, beyond the fact that by 1940 a school for orchestral musicians, conductors, and possibly singers as well will be operating at Tanglewood.

A campaign to obtain money for improving the property will get underway this week, Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, announced.

MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL

AUG 15 1938

38,000 ATTENDED CONCERTS HELD IN BERKSHIRES

Like one above

Stockbridge, Mass. Aug. 15. (AP)—The Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood closed yesterday

---

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 16 1938

SEE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL AGAIN SELF-SUSTAINING

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 16 — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood were self-sustaining for the third consecutive year, it was indicated today by the management, despite increased expenses for soloists, transportation of the Cecilia Chorus from Boston and emergency road building because of wet weather.

It was estimated that 38,000 persons from practically every state, Canada and even Europe attended one or more concerts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1938

All Attendance Records Shattered at Festival

Total of 38,000 for Six Concerts Is 8000 More Than Year Ago—Weather Was Great Boon

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which closed last night at Tanglewood, shattered all records for attendance and weather in the history of the now internationally known event.

The total estimated attendance for the six concerts was 38,000, representing 8000 more than last year. Not one drop of rain fell during any of the concerts this year although it appeared for a time Thursday afternoon as if the all-Wagnerian program scheduled for the evening might be accompanied by thunder showers.

More Autos Than in 1937

By actual count there were 2562 automobiles parked at Tanglewood for the final concert yesterday. On the final day last year there were 1283. The total count yesterday, taken under the direction of Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, would indicate there were twice as many persons at the concert, but this, according to Festival officials, is not so. The attendance was greater but not to that extent. Rather, the increased number of cars was due to more persons coming from greater distances than last year.

Close to 6000 people jammed their way into the Music Shed for the concert Saturday night while about 1000 more heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program on the lawn between the shed and the former Tappan house.

Yesterday afternoon's overflow crowd from the shed found comfort beneath the huge shade trees and one man perched himself high in a tree top to enjoy the afternoon program. All afternoon amateur and professional photographers "shot" Festival pictures from every conceivable angle. Some used tripods, others used high ladders resting against trees. One photgrapher took aerial views of the crowd and automobiles at the conclusion of yesterday's concert from an airplane.

Parking Praised

Little difficulty was experienced in the parking areas at the weekend concerts. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and his force of volunteer traffic men, aided by members of the State and local police who handled traffic on the main highways, were commended after the final concert by the trustees for the greatly improved condition over previous concert days.

The pre-concert and intermission business mounted at the Thursday Morning Club's refreshment tent over the weekend and it was necessary to augment the 25 volunteer workers and representative of beverage concerns yesterday afternoon.

The Berkshire Health District's first aid room in the Tappan house had little activity during all the concerts. Over the weekend nurses in attendance at the house rendered aid to only one patient—a woman, who complained of a headache. First aid equipment for the room was loaned by Fairview Hospital, Great Barrington, the Visiting Nurse Association of that town and J. H. Maloney, Inc., of Great Barrington.

Wheel chairs for the use of invalids were obtained from the House of Mercy by A. L. Bliss.

Photographs Stolen

David Milton Jones of Interlaken, well known Southern Berkshire photographer, reported to police the theft of 50 photographs, all views of the Festival, from a display table in the Tappan house.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival program supply of 30,000 was exhausted at Saturday night's concert and sheets of papers containing the concert programs for Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon's concerts were distributed by the ushers.

The Eagle's music critic, Jay C. Rosenfeld, was one of the first to leave Tanglewood after the concert yesterday, but his anxiety to get ahead of the 2562 cars leading to Lenox failed to take him into the town among the first. With five cars ahead, and about 2000 more behind his car, Mr. Rosenfeld's machine stalled on West Street hill and it wasn't until after hundreds had passed him that a "friend in need" gave him assistance and pushed his machine to the top.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1938

The Note Book

By J. H.

And Now It's Over

AN hour after the conclusion of yesterday's concert Tanglewood was deserted, except for a few loiterers and a caretaker or two. Silence and inactivity were there in marked contrast to the intense life and color of the past two weeks. Once more the Festival was over, and in our feeling of loneliness there was left only the consolation of planning the one next year.

Surely the spirit of Henry Hadley hovered over Tanglewood as his "Angelus" from the Third Symphony was played Saturday night. He wrote it more than 30 years ago while he was summering in Italy. He explains that it is absolute music, that is, he had no particular programme or story in mind as he wrote. However, the suggestion for this second movement came from the sound of the angelus bells echoing every afternoon across the fields as he worked. The piece transcends description. It has in it the peace and beauty of the lazy summer afternoon, with a suggestion of the sacred interwoven.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" is so significant of the countryside here that predictions have been made about its becoming the Symphony of the Berkshires. Composed, as it was, when Beehoven was almost totally deaf, it came from the depths of his memory. He had lived with the hills and with the woods about Vienna for years and all of nature's voices had become familiar to him. These he put into his symphony, even to the various bird calls which were reproduced in an harmonious choir.

As if by special request a full moon rose majestically through the trees during the first half of the program. Tanglewood was at its best for the last evening presentation.

The Tchaikovsky "Pathetic" was the final symphony that night. It is considered autobiographical by many. Tchaikovsky conducted the first performance of it only a few days before his death. He was a fairly young man, 53, and his music was just coming into full flower. Some critics condemn his work because, they say, his sentiment and strong feeling ran away with his judgment and that form is sacrificed. However that may be, this sixth symphony really shows the greatest mastery of symphonic form, with warmth, color and human feeling in abundance.

There are in it strains of deep melancholy, typical of the Slavic people. But there is intense beauty combined with that melancholy. Then there are sudden outbursts of passion and fury when every instrument in the orchestra speaks out in fullest measure. The double bass player never works harder than on a Tchaikovsky symphony.

The meaning of this work never has been entirely clear. There are those who thought there was in it the presentation of the composer's death. Others thought that he meant it to take on national or even international significance in which he speaks of the futility of human hopes. Whatever the explanation may be, this remains as one of the most moving of all his works.

The Schumann B-flat was written in 1840 at the time of his marriage to Clara Wieck. She is given credit for being his inspiration, and, through her, the greatness of his work was realized. Until this time Schumann had composed music chiefly for piano, but he had begun to feel that he needed a more expansive means of expression than the single instrument could provide. This venture into the use of the full orchestra was a happy one, for in it he gave voice to all the richness and beauty he had tried so long to express. He aspired to do great things when he heard the work of Schubert, Beethoven and the others. He eventually found that he could give full rein to his emotions when he had such a selection of instruments to use.

The "Lieutenant Kije" was an orchestral suite originally composed as music for a Russian film. The story of the piece centers about a non-existent officer in the Russian army. His birth, romance, wedding, troika and burial are pictured in best cinema style. The suite calls for a part by trumpet, off-stage. Our trumpeter of the afternoon, who was stationed in mid-field off to the right of the shed, took a bow at the end of the piece.

Closing the program and the festival was the eminently suitable Brahms Symphony No. 2. Brahms is one who can well bear repetition, and his music was as welcome yesterday as it had been on Sunday afternoon a week ago.

Backstage, after the closing, many admirers stopped to greet Dr. Koussevitsky. Soon his man brought the car to the door. He appeared for a moment at the steps, waited to oblige some candid-camera shooters, saying meanwhile, "Quickly, children!" and with a wave to all, was gone.—Jo Ann.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 15 1938

Final Concert At Tanglewood Music Shed

The final concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was given at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, with record attendance for this series and for the festival's five-year history. Again more than 6000 people were present to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitsky, and it is estimated that a total of more than 37,000 people attended the festival.

With the enthusiasm of these audiences to spur them on, the directors of the orchestra and of the festival are planning a gradual expansion of the festival to include opera, oratorio, ballet, and even Greek theatre, as well as a summer school. It is fairly certain that next year will see the festival increased, either to a three week period, or to more concerts in the two week period. In the event of a three week festival, some group of artists other than the Boston sympohny will probably provide the third week's entertainment.

The last two programs of the series were well chosen to fit in with the country setting of the festival. Saturday night's concert was dedicated to the late Dr. Henry opened with the "Angelus" from his opened with te "Angelus" from his third symphony. Beethoven's delightful Pastoral symphony and Tchaikovksy's Pathetic sympohny followed.

Yesterday afternoon Dr. Koussevitsky presented two more symphonies, Schumann's Spring symphony and Brahm's second, and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite. Both symphonies were perfectly suited to the outdoor setting. The tuneful and gay nature of Schumann's work, and the melodic sweetness of Brahms were more than ever enjoyable in the Tanglewood environment.

The "Lieutenant Kije" music, composed for the Russian film by that name, was a bright and amusing contrast to the two older works on the program. It tells the story of the fake lieutenant, created thru the mistake of an emperor and built up by Russian courtiers who dared not tell him of his error. The music is colorful and sparkling, filled with melodic fragments of great charm, and as diverting as music can be.

Looking back over the programs of the six concerts, one finds substantial musical fare of remarkable variety. There are eight symphonies, varying from the gigantic ninth of Beethoven, to many the highest point in the festival, to Schumann's first, and including those if Sibelius, Haydn, Tchaikovsky, and Brahms. The same variety is found in Dr. Koussevitsky's choice of descriptive music, in which a number of modern composers are represented. This list included Ravel, Respighi, Copland, Hadley, Prokofieff, Debussey. Then there were works by Mozart, Bach, and Wagner. It was a representative group of programs, making no cencessions to sentimental taste, but at the same time not holding its audiences to the strictly abstract.

It is a pleasure to notice that Dr. Koussevitsky omitted sensational music from his programs, for the fact that they offered no popular inducements in the line of spectacular music or famous guest artists and yet drew unprecedented crowds is further evidence of its significance as a musical event.

Advocate
Cicero—Ill.

JUL 15 1938

. . . MUSIC . . .

By LILLI GEKA

Writing to his brother, Anatol, on Dec. 13, 1847, P. I. Tschaikovsky says: "I am now completely absorbed in the composition of a pianoforte concerto." After having heard a recording of this concerto with the gifted Russian virtuoso, Artur Rubenstein and the London Philharmonic Symphony under Barbirolli, it is somewhat ironic to believe that so brilliant and fiery a work should have been received so abominably and unsympathetically by Nicholas Rubenstein (the brother of the illustrious Anton), to whom the composer had dedicated the concerto. To Tschaikovsky, Nicholas was a keen, necessary and intelligent critic of all the former's piano composition since he himself was then the Russian master of the keyboard. A friend and severe judge, Nicholas burst into a torrent of relentless abuse and sharp denunciation, finding the concerto musically vulgar, awkward to play, utterly invalid.

Tschaikovsky was informed by his friend that unless a complete and thorough revision were made, he would never consent to play it. Stunned by this adamant refusal, Tschaikovsky's wounded pride impelled him to rededicate the concerto to the celebrated pianist, Hans Von Bulow, who, on the other hand, found it "perfect and mature in form and full of style . . ." Accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Von Bulow gave the concerto its world premiere in America in 1874.

The first movement, Allegro con Spirito, is at times emotionally exuberant, furious, free from the restraint found in other of his writings. The central theme is a gentle, poignant old Russian folk tune recurring frequently. Prominent throughout this first moveemnt is the throbbing of the cellos and basses in agitating pulsating rhythms.

Quite contrasting to the latter is the first portion of the second movement marked Andantino Semplice—a lovely lyric melody first given by the flute, is carried on by the piano. Intimates of the Tschaikovsky household have identified this tune as the refrain of an old French song that Anatol and Peter used to sing in their childhood.

Allegro con Fuoco, the third movement, is more Russian in character than the preceding ones, splendidly alive with striking syncopated rhythms.

The B Flat Minor Concerto remains a rare, brilliant, spirit composition with interesting thermatic material.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1938

Koussevitzky Leaves Berkshires

Sails Tomorrow On Normandie For Europe

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Madame Koussevitsky, took the noon train from Pittsfield today for New York and will sail tomorrow on the Normandie for Europe.

The conductor was pleased at the success of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival and even now is looking forward to another season.

Yesterday the Koussevitskys were luncheon guests of Attorney and Mrs. Bently Wirt Warren in Williamstown. Mr. Warren is president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and attended all of the concerts at Tanglewood.

While in the Berkshires the Koussevitzkys made their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club at Lenox.

Already many reservations for rooms have been made by music lovers who plan to return in 1939 and by members of the orchestra. The Penryhn Inn at Richmond is fully booked already for next year's Festival period. The Curtis Hotel in Lenox has many reservations and the same is true of places in Pittsfield, Dalton, Stockbridge and Great Barrington.

ALAMEDA, CALIF.
TIMES - STAR

AUG 18 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and conducted Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 18 1938

With the applause for its fifth concert series still echoing around Tanglewood, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is already planning for its sixth. Some enthusiasts have already made seat and box reservations, although the exact program for next year's festival has not been arranged.

It is certain that the Boston sympathy orchestra will give concerts two week-ends in August, the 3rd, 5th, 6th, 10th, 12th, and 13th. It is possible that additional concerts will be given on the 2nd and the 9th, or that the festival will be extended a week. The former possibility is considered the more likely.

It is reported that the Festival made money this year, as it has in the past two years. It was also learned that the first contribution toward a scholarship fund for the proposed music school at Tanglewood was made last week. A woman from Pittsburgh gave $100 toward the fund.

164

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1938

All Attendance Records Shattered at Festival

Total of 38,000 for Six Concerts Is 8000 More Than Year Ago—Weather Was Great Boon

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which closed last night at Tanglewood, shattered all records for attendance and weather in the history of the now internationally known event.

The total estimated attendance for the six concerts was 38,000, representing 8000 more than last year. Not one drop of rain fell during any of the concerts this year although it appeared for a time Thursday afternoon as if the all-Wagnerian program scheduled for the evening might be accompanied by thunder showers.

More Autos Than in 1937

By actual count there were 2562 automobiles parked at Tanglewood for the final concert yesterday. On the final day last year there were 1283. The total count yesterday, taken under the direction of Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, would indicate there were twice as many persons at the concert, but this, according to Festival officials, is not so. The attendance was greater but not to that extent. Rather, the increased number of cars was due to more persons coming from greater distances than last year.

Close to 6000 people jammed their way into the Music Shed for the concert Saturday night while about 1000 more heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program on the lawn between the shed and the former Tappan house.

Yesterday afternoon's overflow crowd from the shed found comfort beneath the huge shade trees and one man perched himself high in a tree top to enjoy the afternoon program. All afternoon amateur and professional photographers "shot" Festival pictures from every conceivable angle. Some used tripods, others used high ladders resting against trees. One photgrapher took aerial views of the crowd and automobiles at the conclusion of yesterday's concert from an airplane.

Parking Praised

Little difficulty was experienced in the parking areas at the week-end concerts. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre and his force of volunteer traffic men, aided by members of the State and local police who handled traffic on the main highways, were commended after the final concert by the trustees for the greatly improved condition over previous concert days.

The pre-concert and intermission business mounted at the Thursday Morning Club's refreshment tent over the weekend and it was necessary to augment the 25 volunteer workers and representative of beverage concerns yesterday afternoon.

The Berkshire Health District's first aid room in the Tappan house had little activity during all the concerts. Over the weekend nurses in attendance at the house rendered aid to only one patient—a woman, who complained of a headache. First aid equipment for the room was loaned by Fairview Hospital, Great Barrington, the Visiting Nurse Association of that town and J. H. Maloney, Inc., of Great Barrington.

Wheel chairs for the use of invalids were obtained from the House of Mercy by A. L. Bliss.

Photographs Stolen

David Milton Jones of Interlaken, well known Southern Berkshire photographer, reported to police the theft of 50 photographs, all views of the Festival, from a display table in the Tappan house.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival program supply of 30,000 was exhausted at Saturday night's concert and sheets of papers containing the concert programs for Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon's concerts were distributed by the ushers.

The Eagle's music critic, Jay C. Rosenfeld, was one of the first to leave Tanglewood after the concert yesterday, but his anxiety to get ahead of the 2562 cars leading to Lenox failed to take him into the town among the first. With five cars ahead, and about 2000 more behind his car, Mr. Rosenfeld's machine stalled on West Street hill and it wasn't until after hundreds had passed him that a "friend in need" gave him assistance and pushed his machine to the top.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 15 1938

The Note Book

By J. H.

And Now It's Over

AN hour after the conclusion of yesterday's concert Tanglewood was deserted, except for a few loiterers and a caretaker or two. Silence and inactivity were there in marked contrast to the intense life and color of the past two weeks. Once more the Festival was over, and in our feeling of loneliness there was left only the consolation of planning the one next year.

Surely the spirit of Henry Hadley hovered over Tanglewood as his "Angelus" from the Third Symphony was played Saturday night. He wrote it more than 30 years ago while he was summering in Italy. He explains that it is absolute music, that is, he had no particular programme or story in mind as he wrote. However, the suggestion for this second movement came from the sound of the angelus bells echoing every afternoon across the fields as he worked. The piece transcends description. It has in it the peace and beauty of the lazy summer afternoon, with a suggestion of the sacred interwoven.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" is so significant of the countryside here that predictions have been made about its becoming the Symphony of the Berkshires. Composed, as it was, when Beehoven was almost totally deaf, it came from the depths of his memory. He had lived with the hills and with the woods about Vienna for years and all of nature's voices had become familiar to him. These he put into his symphony, even to the various bird calls which were reproduced in an harmonious choir.

As if by special request a full moon rose majestically through the trees during the first half of the program. Tanglewood was at its best for the last evening presentation.

The Tchaikovsky "Pathetic" was the final symphony that night. It is considered autobiographical by many. Tchaikovsky conducted the first performance of it only a few days before his death. He was a fairly young man, 53, and his music was just coming into full flower. Some critics condemn his work because, they say, his sentiment and strong feeling ran away with his judgment and that form is sacrificed. However that may be, this sixth symphony really shows the greatest mastery of symphonic form, with warmth, color and human feeling in abundance.

There are in it strains of deep melancholy, typical of the Slavic people. But there is intense beauty combined with that melancholy. Then there are sudden outbursts of passion and fury when every instrument in the orchestra speaks out in fullest measure. The double bass player never works harder than on a Tchaikovsky symphony.

The meaning of this work never has been entirely clear. There are those who thought there was in it the presentation of the composer's death. Others thought that he meant it to take on national or even international significance in which he speaks of the futility of human hopes. Whatever the explanation may be, this remains as one of the most moving of all his works.

The Schumann B-flat was written in 1840 at the time of his marriage to Clara Wieck. She is given credit for being his inspiration, and, through her, the greatness of his work was realized. Until this time Schumann had composed music chiefly for piano, but he had begun to feel that he needed a more expansive means of expression than the single instrument could provide. This venture into the use of the full orchestra was a happy one, for in it he gave voice to all the richness and beauty he had tried so long to express. He aspired to do great things when he heard the work of Schubert, Beethoven and the others. He eventually found that he could give full rein to his emotions when he had such a selection of instruments to use.

The "Lieutenant Kije" was an orchestral suite originally composed as music for a Russian film. The story of the piece centers about a non-existent officer in the Russian army. His birth, romance, wedding, troika and burial are pictured in best cinema style. The suite calls for a part by trumpet, off-stage. Our trumpeter of the afternoon, who was stationed in mid-field off to the right of the shed, took a bow at the end of the piece.

Closing the program and the festival was the eminently suitable Brahms Symphony No. 2. Brahms is one who can well bear repetition, and his music was as welcome yesterday as it had been on Sunday afternoon a week ago.

Backstage, after the closing, many admirers stopped to greet Dr. Koussevitsky. Soon his man brought the car to the door. He appeared for a moment at the steps, waited to oblige some candid-camera shooters, saying meanwhile, "Quickly, children!" and with a wave to all, was gone.—Jo Ann.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 15 1938

Final Concert At Tanglewood Music Shed

The final concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was given at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, with record attendance for this series and for the festival's five-year history. Again more than 6000 people were present to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitsky, and it is estimated that a total of more than 37,000 people attended the festival.

With the enthusiasm of these audiences to spur them on, the directors of the orchestra and of the festival are planning a gradual expansion of the festival to include opera, oratorio, ballet, and even Greek theatre, as well as a summer school. It is fairly certain that next year will see the festival increased, either to a three week period, or to more concerts in the two week period. In the event of a three week festival, some group of artists other than the Boston sympohny will probably provide the third week's entertainment.

The last two programs of the series were well chosen to fit in with the country setting of the festival. Saturday night's concert was dedicated to the late Dr. Henry opened with the "Angelus" from his opened with te "Angelus" from his third symphony. Beethoven's delightful Pastoral symphony and Tchaikovksy's Pathetic sympohny followed.

Yesterday afternoon Dr. Koussevitsky presented two more symphonies, Schumann's Spring symphony and Brahm's second, and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite. Both symphonies were perfectly suited to the outdoor setting. The tuneful and gay nature of Schumann's work, and the melodic sweetness of Brahms were more than ever enjoyable in the Tanglewood environment.

The "Lieutenant Kije" music, composed for the Russian film by that name, was a bright and amusing contrast to the two older works on the program. It tells the story of the fake lieutenant, created thru the mistake of an emperor and built up by Russian courtiers who dared not tell him of his error. The music is colorful and sparkling, filled with melodic fragments of great charm, and as diverting as music can be.

Looking back over the programs of the six concerts, one finds substantial musical fare of remarkable variety. There are eight symphonies, varying from the gigantic ninth of Beethoven, to many the highest point in the festival, to Schumann's first, and including those if Sibelius, Haydn, Tchaikovsky, and Brahms. The same variety is found in Dr. Koussevitsky's choice of descriptive music, in which a number of modern composers are represented. This list included Ravel, Respighi, Copland, Hadley, Prokofieff, Debussey. Then there were works by Mozart, Bach, and Wagner. It was a representative group of programs, making no cencessions to sentimental taste, but at the same time not holding its audiences to the strictly abstract.

It is a pleasure to notice that Dr. Koussevitsky omitted sensational music from his programs, for the fact that they offered no popular inducements in the line of spectacular music or famous guest artists and yet drew unprecedented crowds is further evidence of its significance as a musical event.

Advocate
Chicago Ill.

JUL 15 1938

... MUSIC ...

By LILLI GEKA

Writing to his brother, Anatol, on Dec. 13, 1847, P. I. Tschaikovsky says: "I am now completely absorbed in the composition of a pianoforte concerto." After having heard a recording of this concerto with the gifted Russian virtuoso, Artur Rubenstein and the London Philharmonic Symphony under Barbirolli, it is somewhat ironic to believe that so brilliant and fiery a work should have been received so abominably and unsympathetically by Nicholas Rubenstein (the brother of the illustrious Anton), to whom the composer had dedicated the concerto. To Tschaikovsky, Nicholas was a keen, necessary and intelligent critic of all the former's piano composition since he himself was then the Russian master of the keyboard. A friend and severe judge, Nicholas burst into a torrent of relentless abuse and sharp denunciation, finding the concerto musically vulgar, awkward to play, utterly invalid.

Tschaikovsky was informed by his friend that unless a complete and thorough revision were made, he would never consent to play it. Stunned by this adamant refusal, Tschaikovsky's wounded pride impelled him to rededicate the concerto to the celebrated pianist, Hans Von Bulow, who, on the other hand, found it "perfect and mature in form and full of style . . ." Accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Von Bulow gave the concerto its world premiere in America in 1874.

The first movement, Allegro con Spirito, is at times emotionally exuberant, furious, free from the restraint found in other of his writings. The central theme is a gentle, poignant old Russian folk tune recurring frequently. Prominent throughout this first moveemnt is the throbbing of the cellos and basses in agitating pulsating rhythms.

Quite contrasting to the latter is the first portion of the second movement marked Andantino Semplice—a lovely lyric melody first given by the flute, is carried on by the piano. Intimates of the Tschaikovsky household have identified this tune as the refrain of an old French song that Anatol and Peter used to sing in their childhood.

Allegro con Fuoco, the third movement, is more Russian in character than the preceding ones, splendidly alive with striking syncopated rhythms.

The B Flat Minor Concerto remains a rare, brilliant, spirit composition with interesting thermatic material.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1938

Koussevitzky Leaves Berkshires

Sails Tomorrow On Normandie For Europe

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accompanied by Madame Koussevitsky, took the noon train from Pittsfield today for New York and will sail tomorrow on the Normandie for Europe.

The conductor was pleased at the success of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival and even now is looking forward to another season.

Yesterday the Koussevitskys were luncheon guests of Attorney and Mrs. Bently Wirt Warren in Williamstown. Mr. Warren is president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and attended all of the concerts at Tanglewood.

While in the Berkshires the Koussevitzkys made their headquarters at the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club at Lenox.

Already many reservations for rooms have been made by music lovers who plan to return in 1939 and by members of the orchestra. The Penryhn Inn at Richmond is fully booked already for next year's Festival period. The Curtis Hotel in Lenox has many reservations and the same is true of places in Pittsfield, Dalton, Stockbridge and Great Barrington.

ALAMEDA, CALIF.
TIMES - STAR

AUG 18 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and conducted Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 16 1938

With the applause for its fifth concert series still echoing around Tanglewood, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is already planning for its sixth. Some enthusiasts have already made seat and box reservations, although the exact program for next year's festival has not been arranged.

It is certain that the Boston sympathy orchestra will give [illegible] two week-ends in August, the 3rd. 5th, 6th, 10th, 12th, and 13th. It is possible that additional concerts will be given on the 2nd and the 9th, or that the festival will be extended a week. The former possibility is considered the more likely.

It is reported that the Festival made money this year, as it has in the past two years. It was also learned that the first contribution toward a scholarship fund for the proposed music school at Tanglewood was made last week. A woman from Pittsburgh gave $100 toward the fund.

165

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 16 1938

The Trumpeter of "Kije"

—Photo by Betty Kimpton

Roger Voisin, trumpeter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens the "Lieutenant Kije" Suite played by ~~the Boston~~ orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sunday. He is standing near the fringe of trees east of the music shed and direction from Conductor Serge Koussevitzky is relayed by two other men hidden from the audience's view. Lloyd Harkema, an usher, is the human music rack.

RADIO WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 17 1938

TOSCANINI APPROVES RCA VICTOR RECORDING OF HAYDN'S SYMPHONY

CAMDEN, N. J., Thursday—The RCA Mfg. Co. reports that it has just received by cable the approval from Arturo Toscanini of his new recording of the Haydn Symphony No. 13 in G Major, which he recorded with the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

An RCA Victor official points out that dealers have an impatient and eager market awaiting this album set, which was created by the enormously wide interest in Mr. Toscanini's conducting of the NBC Symphony. "We feel sure," he declared, "that the thousands who attended his broadcasts, whether or not they loved and understood the music, or those who wished to learn something about it, or even for anyone who merely desires one of the greatest thrills of a lifetime, will appreciate the opportunity of obtaining this masterpiece set. It is safe to say that no other set in years has been awaited with such anticipation."

RCA Victor also announces the releases of "Lieutenant Kiji," a suite by S. Prokofieff, noted modern Russian composer, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. This music is taken from the score of a new Russian sound film. The recordings are being released to coincide with the presentation of the work by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass. RCA Victor claims for this music "humor, tunefulness, originality, brilliance and color." On an extra side of the recordings are the march and scherzo from Prokofieff's "Love for Three Oranges."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 15 1938

Berkshire Festival Ends In Triumph

Large Audience Hears Musicians In Two Concerts

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Special to The Hartford Times

Stockbridge, Mass.—With a return to its purely instrumental function the Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded ~~the~~ 1938 Berkshire Festival with two concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The programs have been long, each comprising two symphonies or the equivalent, and more. Attendance has broken all records, the total of listeners falling not much short of 40,000; the increasing number of Hartford listeners has been impressive. The tone and temper of the musical proceedings have been truly festive, mutually stimulating between the cultured thousands who are coming to depend upon the "Tanglewood" pilgrimage and the artistic sensitivity of the orchestra's personnel with its patrician leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Final Ovation

The series closed at the peak of this flight into the musical ether with Sunday's presentation of Schumann's B flat Symphony, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" Suite, which the Bostonians played in Hartford last winter, and the D major Symphony of Brahms. At the close there was the most prolonged and fervent demonstration that the Festival has yet witnessed, which is saying a great deal. Not content with conventional applause, the entire audience stood shouting something between a campus cheer and a roaring "bravo!" while Koussevitzky returned again and again and finally with a happy solemnity shook hands not only with his concert master, Richard Burgin, but with all the first desk men within reach. The soloists in the "Kije" music were all made to take individual bows and the Festival came to an end with everybody quite happy.

Re-introducing Kije

The Prokofieff character picture wears well. From its beginning, with the off-stage cornet this time ensconced in the thicket with the katydids to the impudently resolved dissonances of its more romantic measures it had a waggish suspense and charm that goes with a story that will twice bear telling. It was the essence of modernism with its free melodic and rhythmic interest and each repetition traces the promise that it is likely to become a repertory piece.

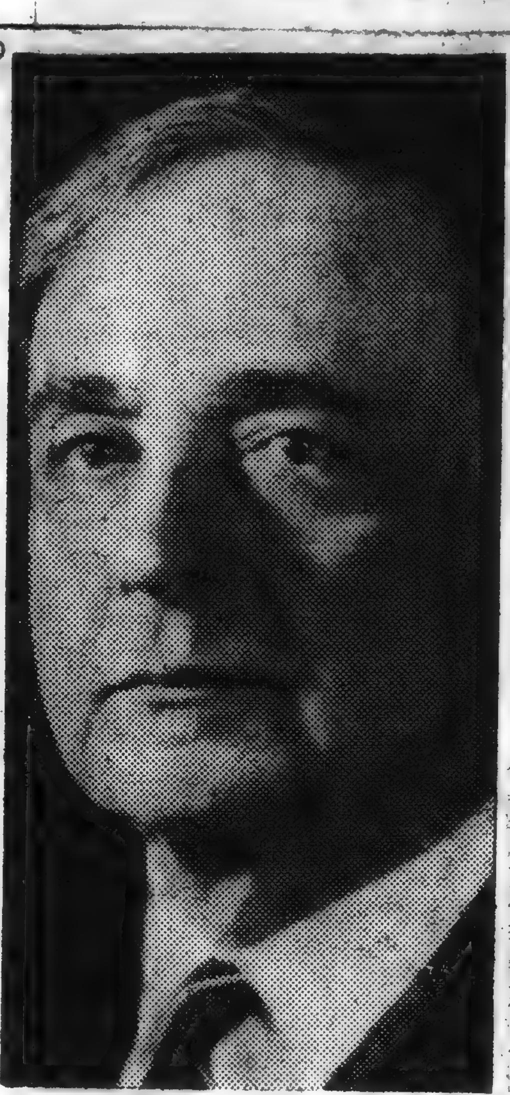
The choice of Schumann's first symphony and the second of Brahms suggested that Koussevitzky has given a fanciful eye to his outdoor program making. Each of these large works has an affinity with nature—the first a burgeoning quality which suggests April green and vivid sunlight, the latter an autumnal, yet halcyonic, atmosphere, neither of them to be dissociated from trees, blue altitudes and bosky retreats.

Although the horns had a nervous afternoon, the general performance from an executive standpoint reached the high level that has come to be taken for granted at "Tanglewood." The opening measures of the Schumann work were particularly impressive and highest honors were due the first movement of the Brahms symphony, its finale having all the gay noisiness that was written into it and which went so well with a scene of general jubilation.

SATURDAY'S CONCERT

It was the late Henry Hadley who conducted the first two Berkshire concerts and, as a tribute to his recent passing, the second movement of his third symphony, called "Angelus" opened the concert Saturday night.

The elegaic character of this program was intensified by the darkly painted "Pathetique Symphony" of Tschaikowsky. Between them, however, was the sunny and ingenuously rustic Sixth Symphony of Beethoven, a work for which the Boston Orchestra is justly famous, and the only one which Dr. Koussevitzky has honored with two performances during his 15 concerts in the Berkshires.



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

A Tribute Paid

Hadley's excerpt was given a presentation that was more than a perfunctory wreath to his memory. Reverently treated, it was permitted to soar on strong wings to lyrical heights that reminded one of Liszt in his more devout moods.

It was inspiring to know that the power of this great orchestra does not lie entirely in its unrivalled technical perfection. Dr. Koussevitzky must be eternally confronted with the temptation to give free play to its gifts for brilliance and display. He can say No, however. Except for the flashing rhythmical puissance of the third movement in Tschaikowsky's B minor, the texts dealt with matter either subjective or delicate which depended for eloquence upon refinement and exquisiteness, equally the talents of Koussevitzky's men.

It all comes under the head of interpretation, a field in which the Russian leader exercises unquestioned dominion. The quaint humors of the Beethoven scherzo, the storm episode which was judiciously made to skirt the edge of realism without becoming literal and the wholesome songfulness of the finale were eminently satisfying and worthy.

Restoring Tschaikowsky

Tschaikowsky's threnody was purged of all the sins which cling like barnacles to every popular work. If we had no other need of great artists there would still be that essential function of periodically purifying the exalted music upon which lesser men had laid violent hands. It is sometimes difficult to see why the great mass of people have taken certain strains to their hearts until the music is restored and revealed as this symphony was on Saturday.

Perhaps it is this power of restoration and revelation which makes the Berkshire Festival the vital event that it has come to be and wherein lies the arresting power of its limitless promise.

Candid Shots

Mishel Piastro of the New York Philharmonic conversing with Richard Burgin during intermission...and speaking of concert maestri, George Heck of the Hartford Orchestra and Mrs. Heck... Somewhere in the crowd are all those Hartford people who have been calling 2-0111 during last week for information about programs, ticket arrangements and motor routes to Lenox...the distracted woman who in the midst of the traffic dim at 11:30 Saturday night along Route 183 accosted one of the blue-uniformed state policemen with "My good man, have you seen a Buick? I've lost my car!"...Jacques Gordon, seen at all of the concerts except those on Sunday when his own quartet was holding forth at Music Mountain...Mrs. Normand F. Allen celebrating her 75th birthday with a family party at the first Saturday night concert...honorable mention along with the American Legion men who did traffic duty, the women of the Thursday Morning Club who served among other things a chicken salad sandwich that was the most toothsome morsel in the county...the pretty cigarette girls who didn't expect tips...the intermission bell hung in a tree, as melodious, when it didn't get caught in the leaves, and rural as those which call the threshing gang to dinner from an Illinois oats field...the applause that always greeted Burgin's entrance...the prospect of another Berkshire Festival next August.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 16 1938

The Future of Tanglewood

The Berkshire Symphonic festival has just concluded its most successful year, and music lovers not only in this vicinity, but throughout the country, are watching with interest to see what action will be taken at the forthcoming meeting of the trustees regarding next year.

Enthusiastic boosters have termed the Stockbridge festival "An American Salzburg." It is scarcely that. Both are devoted to music, and the Austrian shrine has a glorious history, but the Stockbridge center has a glorious future. Furthermore, those who go to the Berkshires each summer will be able to hear programs that are designed and presented exclusively for music lovers, not subject to the ukase of culture directors whose scientific and musical knowledge are blighted by inhuman racial theories. Some who have been to Austria say that the scenery across the water can hold no candle to the setting that provided Hawthorne with the inspiration for his "Tanglewood Tales."

It is all but unbelievable that in five years, so much progress could have been made, particularly in a spot that seems far from the crowded centers of population. Actually, Stockbridge is not a small place. Yet, even the secretary of its Chamber of Commerce would not claim that its citizens had provided the majority of the 6000 persons who attended each of the six concerts. Those music lovers came from an amazing variety of places. A check on the license plates seen in the parking lots is a lesson in both geography and music appreciation.

The truth of the matter is that the directors had a good plan. They got a good director and a good orchestra to help, and the financial problem almost solved itself. The transition from the tent of last year to the huge shed of this year is no idle accomplishment, and music is a success when people are willing to translate their enthusiasm into money to help such a project.

Money, of course, does not do everything. The festival had the luck to have behind it people with intelligence, imagination and stick-to-itiveness. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith was an excellent leader. To pick out other names would be unfair to several outstanding subcommittees. No one, however, will begrudge a word for the top notch work of George W. Edman, clerk of the festival corporation, chairman of the coordinating committee and general "spark plug" of the affair. The name "publicity man" has not always had a welcome connotation, but Edman's work and his personality have contributed in large measure to the success of those details without which many an equally equipped project has failed.

The decision of the trustees when they meet with the trustees of the Boston orchestra will be front page ne~~ws in any~~ man's newspaper. More concerts for next year, the starting of a school for conductors, and promising young musicians, the development of choral music, all of these are subjects that will receive due consideration from the members.

Those who have the good fortune to live in Western Massachusetts are justly proud of their luck. Recently the Council for Western Massachusetts has been doing grand work in coordinating the work of boosting the advantages of this part of the country. Add now to its permanent resources a summer music shrine second to none!

News of Art, Music and the Theater

A Tuesday Page

The Berkshire Festival

By L. A. Sloper

Stockbridge, Mass.

There can be no doubt of the success of the fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held for the first time in its new home at Tanglewood. Six concerts were given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky between Aug. 4 and 14. The attendance figures for the whole series are not available as these lines are written, but 19,000 persons attended the first three concerts, an average of more than 6,000. The listeners, moreover, expressed their pleasure not only by handclapping but by cheers.

And so far as Prof. Richard D. Fay, the expert from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology is concerned, no fault is to be found with the acoustics as tested with the auditorium filled. "It is gratifying to be able to report," he said, "that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Substantial perfection would indeed be gratifying to find in any phase of human activity, but we must remember that substantial perfection in the reception of sound as sound, from the viewpoint of the natural scientist, and substantial perfection in the reception of sound in the form of music, from the viewpoint of the music lover, are not quite the same thing.

Undoubtedly the tones arrived, for the most part, at their destination, but they did not always sound as they should sound when representing the compositions that were listed on the programs. I mentioned this problem last week. Hearing of additional concerts has brought out other thoughts on the subject, both in confirmation and in modification of the opinion then expressed.

* * *

It turned out that the strings playing alone are heard to much better advantage in this outdoor auditorium than in combination with the other instrumental choirs. Apparently their tone does not carry as well out of doors as the tone of the brass and percussion; that is, they cannot compete with the brass or the percussion. But the Mozart "Kleine Nachtmusik," played at the third concert with a delicacy and flexibility never surpassed in this listener's experience, came through with the utmost clarity and balance. Moreover, Debussy's "La Mer," which was an item of the second program, and Ravel's "Mother Goose" and Second "Daphnis and Chloe" suites were heard more satisfactorily than the Ninth Symphony had been. But in symphonies of Brahms and Sibelius, where there is not only heavy scoring but many a fortissimo passage, there was the same drowning out of the strings.

Nevertheless, it is quite possible that this shortcoming may be corrected, at least in part. In the first place, Dr. Koussevitzky may learn to temper his brass to the shorn strings. In the second place, he may be able, another year, to build up his string sections to full strength. For a check-up revealed that the string sections had been reduced to a greater degree than had been apparent at the first concert, with the chorus crowding the instruments together. There really were not enough strings to balance the other choirs even in a concert hall.

* * *

Yet it remains doubtful, in the opinion of this observer, if the Festival can hope to reproduce in an open auditorium the actual effect of music in a hall. The playing of certain instruments out of doors under unfavorable climatic conditions presents great difficulties. The French horn in particular, an unreliable instrument under the best circumstances, is evidently all but impossible to handle under these extra handicaps. In really wet weather, the audience might keep dry, but the strings would be affected more than they are indoors.

Then there are distractions. Crickets and birds sing in competition with the instrumentalists. On the outer edges of the auditorium people think it permissible to move about and to whisper. And in all parts of the auditorium smoking is permitted during the performance. You cannot give proper attention to symphonic music with such disturbances. If an audience is not to be expected to be quiet, then you might as well play Pop Concert programs.

What Dr. Koussevitzky has played so far has been a selection from the standard repertory. This year he introduced concert versions of scenes from "Walküre" and "Siegfried." Otherwise he offered, in addition to the works already mentioned, such matters as Schumann's "Spring" Symphony, the Beethoven "Pastoral," the Tchaikovsky "Pathétique," the Brahms Second and Fourth, the Sibelius First. It must be confessed that there was nothing here to draw a seasoned symphony-goer to the Berkshire hills in summer. The most recent works on the six programs were the Copland "Music for the Theater," composed in 1925, and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kijé" suite, from some film music written in 1933. The Copland item is mildly amusing but already dated. The Prokofieff is witty but not very substantial.

* * *

Possibly, later, Dr. Koussevitzky will be able to inject more modern or more novel ingredients. At present, presumably, he feels that with an audience composed in considerable part of persons to whom symphonic music is not a regular diet he cannot advance too rapidly. This of course leaves the concerts somewhere between radio and the concert hall. Certainly it is better to hear music at first hand, even out of doors, than to hear it in mechanical transmission, and for those with no better means of listening, this series is admirable. It offers much less to those who are in the habit of hearing symphony concerts regularly in the winter. When the unpracticed part of the audience has been educated so that programs can be made more interesting, when the orchestra has been brought to full strength, when balance of parts under outdoor conditions has been achieved and when means have been found to overcome the added difficulties in playing out of doors, the Festival will take on an even wider interest.

Of other events held in connection with the Festival, I had the pleasure of attending two. One was a concert in a series being presented by the South Mountain String Quartet at the Temple of Music on South Mountain in Pittsfield, Mass. This series is one of the many musical beneficences of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

This concert was a delight. The South Mountain Quartet, now made up of Kathleen Parlow, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held and Willem Willeke, plays with unanimity and with exceptional vitality. Hindemith's Quartet in F minor (op. 10) was done with full realization of its underlying romantic quality. In the Brahms Piano Quintet the Quartet was assisted by Gunnar Johansen, who instead of dominating the ensemble merged himself into it with musicianly understanding. Miss Parlow (an exceptionally gifted quartet leader) and Mr. Willeke also played with great virtuosity in the Handel-Halvorsen Passacaglia.

Is it complained that this, too, is outdoors music? Not quite, for the Temple of Music is a building with four walls. Doors and windows are open, but the sound is retained within the walls. Incidentally, South Mountain always has the finest audience to be found; no disturbance here, except from an occasional airplane.

At the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge "Stage Door" was performed, with Jane Wyatt—who began her stage career at this theater in 1930—as guest star. The production was a close copy of that given on Broadway, as to both settings and direction. The performance was excellently timed and paced. The only outstanding player in it, apart from Miss Wyatt, was Miss Kathleen Slagle, a delightfully acidulous Susan.

(This is the second of two articles)

Bay Region Chamber Music

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

San Francisco

July was a peak month in the brilliant schedule of summer chamber music on campuses in the suburbs of San Francisco.

At the University of California, in Berkeley, the Kolisch String Quartet, presented free to campus and public by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, ended its Schubert-Bartók cycle with Bartók's Fourth and Fifth Quartets and with Schubert's A minor and G minor. The Schubert sounded lovelier than ever in proximity to Bartók's strident, crabbed elaborations. The Bartók Fourth, on single hearing, seemed more freakishly cerebral than expressive. The Fifth, however, contained considerable intimation of charm, originality, and color. The Kolisch performances were fine-grained and immensely skillful. Their tone, on the whole, needed a healthier glow. Its finesse sometimes became pinched.

The six-concert Wednesday night Beethoven cycle of the Pro Arte String Quartet at Mills College was progressively eloquent until its thrilling end. The Belgian ensemble this year played with exhilarating boldness and freedom. Its unity remained all but perfect. Its emotional power was unhindered by the risk of harsh tone and blundered intonation. A tower of strength in the Pro Arte group (which, by the way, has now been before the public 25 years) is its masterly cellist, Robert Maas. While his style is superbly vivid, he adapts it consummately to every requirement of ensemble.

At Stanford University, to the south, the Roth String Quartet has completed a schedule of nine events donated in part by Mrs. Coolidge and in part by local guarantors.

In the Mendelssohn Octet, guest artists were a local ensemble of four young women, the El Camino String Quartet. Other guests took part in the Roth ensemble's Monday night series, among them Carlton Smith, New York librarian and flutist, who likewise has been teaching for the summer at Stanford, and Ernst Toch, European composer-pianist, lately a resident of Hollywood.

Mr. Toch had just completed, on commission of Mrs. Coolidge, a Piano Quintet. He took part in its world première. Derived largely from the neo-classic fashion, with its busy intricacies of rhythmic and melodic pattern, the Toch Quintet is nevertheless relatively lyrical. Its touch is generally fluent, even idyllic. It has sweet, though not sentimental, moments of whimsicality. It even approaches, in its slow movement, the temperamental intensity of lyrical Scriabin. But its dramatic Finale, at first hearing, seemed rather pointless.

The Roth performances on the whole were of the first rank. The ensemble is beautifully and carefully unified. Yet it happens that Feri Roth's tone is more keenly conspicuous, at times, than that of his fellow-artists. And in Mozart especially, he spoiled his style by an excess of portamento.

South African Contemporary Art

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Durban, South Africa

This year's exhibition of the Natal Society of Artists showed considerable progress in both number and quality of exhibits. Artists from all parts of the Union were represented.

Outstanding were Mary A. Stainbank's sculpture in stone and bronze. Her native studies showed complete mastery of her subject. "Ezitokozela," in soapstone, brought out the simplicity, submissiveness and humor characteristic of native women in South Africa. And her large Flatpan-stone plaque, "Fate," was a beautiful composition.

A feature of the exhibition was the way in which many of the conservative artists had modernized their style, but it must be admitted that the result of these experiments was not always happy. Nils Anderson, whose paintings of ships have always delighted, had several experiments in design, but these lacked the beauty of color and restfulness of his "Durban Bay," done in his old style. Miss Nita Spilhaus, one of the pioneers of South African art, sent three lovely oils from the Cape. Miss Allerley Glossop, another South African pioneer, is trying out new effects in gouache, her subjects being of Basuto cattle and ponies, with a background of mountains. Her studies are always virile, but her oils are better than her gouache experiments. Forceful were Amshowitz's paintings from Johannesburg, but Hugo Naude seems temporarily to have lost himself in a medley of modern experiments. Other painters who exhibited were Merlyn Evans, a newcomer, and Gregoire Boonzaier, who is scarcely fulfilling his youthful promise. Some posthumous work of Leo Francois was also shown.

The Arts and Crafts section was better than in former years. Specially notable were exhibits of rug weaving from the Ashburton School of Weaving. There was some good pewter work by Mrs. Robertson of Zululand, and a dish of hand-raised and repoussé copper by Miss Irene Vyvyan was a fine piece of craftsmanship.

Etchings and black-and-white drawings were on the whole disappointing, although interesting exhibits were sent by the Natal Technical College, Natal University College and Natal Society of Artists' Sketch Club.

PILCHER
Organs Write for literature. Henry Pilcher's Sons, Inc., Louisville, Ky.

Hewett; Imogen Cunningham

Artists Who Appeared at the Bennington Festival of the Dance

Charles Weidman and Martha Graham (Above); Hanya Holm and Doris Humphrey (Below)

Bennington Curtain

By Margaret Lloyd

Bennington, Vt.

The Bennington Festival of Modern Dance took its final curtain call in the State Armory on the evening of Aug. 10, when the second edition of the program by Charles Weidman and his concert and apprentice groups and Martha Graham, supported by a similar company, an actor, Houseley Stevens, Jr., and a summer student from the Ballet Caravan, Erick Hawkins, brought it to a close.

Next year the Bennington School of the Dance, with approximately the present faculty, will hold its six-weeks session at Mills College, Oakland, Calif., minus festival events.

Mills College is already renowned for an important summer session of its own, having courses in sculpture, painting, drawing, creative writing, French, music, drama, dance, and sports. The Bennington School visit, for one session only, will make its highly specialized personnel and program accessible to the large number of students and teachers up and down the West who are interested in the modern dance movement.

* * *

What the summer of 1940 will bring forth is still open to conjecture. There are rumors of a center of performing arts in a new theater building to be established on the college grounds here. Whatever the outward shape or extension into allied arts, the Bennington School, now ending its first five-year plan in full flood of popularity, will in some form, assuredly go on.

"Nothing can stop it now," said Miss Mary Jo Shelly, administrative director of the School, viewing an audience that overflowed aisle steps and window ledges after hundreds of visitors had been turned away for lack of even standing room only.

Fists had been banging on the balcony railing, feet tattooing on the floor in a vast percussion choir of applause for Mr. Weidman's antic "Opus 51" and Miss Graham's surprising "American Document," both new works prepared for the occasion. The Festival was over. Long live the Festival.

Among the 4000 people who did find a place in the incommodious Armory during the six days of festival performances were many distinguished visitors and press representatives from all parts of the United States and from foreign lands.

* * *

The object of the festival productions, which now attract an audience of connoisseurs, was originally to give qualified students of the School an opportunity to take active part in the staging, lighting, costuming and presentation of the modern dance, to summarize in a show the achievements of a season's concentrated work. Under the artists chosen to lead and mold the student material, the productions, which in ordinary hands would have been routine school events, have taken on professional tone.

In previous years, the dancers who make up this season's leadership list—Martha Graham, Doris Humphrey, Charles Weidman and Hanya Holm, rotating in office in order named—have each led a workshop group through the session to the final production objective. Last year the appointment of three Fellows to enjoy the hospitality of the School for independent, creative work—José Limon, Anna Sokolow, and Esther Junger—added a fillip to the programs. This year the combination of the four leading dancers with three new Fellows—Eleanor King, Louise Kloepper, and Marian Van Tuyl—all with associated concert or apprentice groups, in one great co-operative production series, carried the present resources of the School to a logical conclusion.

That the performance preparations became more competitive than co-operative, that the enforced change of festival dates from Aug. 8 to 13 to Aug. 4 to 10, shortened the time for preparation and lengthened the hours of training and rehearsal, that dissenting voices were raised in criticisms, just and unjust, frankly made, were only part of the problems that the human equation brings to any big undertaking.

For the idea of the Bennington School is bigger than its realization, its essential aim and influence more significant than actual accomplishment.

* * *

Its chief value so far has been in opening up new paths through free experimentation in dance and its allied arts — music, stage design, lighting and costuming; in setting a national standard (which has barely averted becoming a stamp) for the American dance forms; in coloring modern American music by scores written especially for the dance—scores sometimes feeble, inconsequential, sometimes powerful, nearing the mark, but mostly useful for their experimental quality; and finally, in stirring new and more general interest in the dance and in turning out a large number of young women and a few young men who may not and need never be professional dancers, but who have learned that dance is an integrating cultural and recreational part of life.

The Bennington School of the Dance has at last outgrown itself. It must expand into new and larger forms. It requires new faces. And not only in the student body.

The new set-up should include new modern dance teachers and other branches of dance. Ballet, even tap-dancing, would be permissible in the trend toward theater. Music and drama critics, who may be called upon to serve in their individual capacities anyway, would be helpful in expressing the laymen's response to dance.

And unless the modern dance appeals directly to the layman, without cult or pretense, without artificial bogs of information to plow through, it is not fulfilling its obligations or possibilities as art.

(This is the first of three articles)

New Direction at Malvern

By Harold Hobson

Malvern, England

It had long been known that this year the Malvern Festival would be different from its predecessors. Two changes had come over it. Sir Barry Jackson, its munificent founder and patron, still resides at Colwall, within a few miles of the town, but in a broadcast address he had announced that during the summer of 1938 he would be unable to take part in the Festival's direction; and with the departure of Sir Barry went that scheme of program-building which made each annual Festival in some sort a historical review of the development of English drama, from the medieval moralities to the latest production of Bridie or Shaw.

* * *

Yet, to the visitor arriving in Malvern, these changes seem to have had small effect. On a first view, at least, all appears to be as it has been for ten years past. The setting, for example, remains unaltered. Malvern, today as always, enjoys the enduring charm of its unique situation, which arises from its being a mountain town built in the center of a plain; its hillsides are still criss-crossed with streets meeting at an angle and an elevation that makes driving a motor car a hundred yards a feat of high adventure.

Nor, in its beginnings, is the Festival itself greatly altered. To find Professor Boas delivering a Monday morning lecture in the cinema that adjoins the Winter Gardens and the theater was a delight that might have occurred in Malvern in any August since 1931. Dr. Boas still wears that M.A. gown which, as he himself says, "adds a pleasant touch of formality to the proceedings, and, at the same time, hides any deficiencies of clothings." The same impression of continuity from previous Festivals held throughout the opening afternoon, when Capt. Roy Limbert, the new director, held a large garden party on the lawns of the County Hotel beneath the shadow of the hills and the noble bulk of the great Abbey, whose bells rang out in the blazing sunshine a joyous peal that for a long time drowned the less robust noises offered in unequal competition by the hotel orchestra.

* * *

Sir Barry Jackson invested the Malvern Festival with great social appeal. To come to this theater was like joining a club. It made the theatergoer free of the friendship of 900 others like himself, and of a dozen or so somewhat more distinguished. Captain Limbert has entered upon this heritage like a prince determined that the luster of a previous reign shall be rivalled, if not eclipsed; and after his afternoon party he gave an even more ambitious midnight reception. Here the ordinary, modest stall holder who paid for his seat at each of the six productions of the Festival could gaze with admiration mingled with awe upon the massive brows of Mr. J. B. Priestley, Mr. James Bridie, Mr. C. K. Munroe, and Lord Dunsany, four of the dramatists represented upon the Malvern stage.

Between the reception and the garden party there was a play written by the only man in the world who would lift the curtain upon his last act at 9:58 p. m., and not let it fall until 11:40. "Geneva" is a work upon which Mr. Shaw is known to have been engaged for seven years. This is indeed apparent from internal evidences, for it satirizes the League of Nations at a period when Herr Hitler was only an apprentice at dictatorship compared with his brother-in-arms of the Berlin-Rome axis.

The two dictators in the play, Mr. Battler and Signor Bombardone, are portrayed as an enormous, a titanic joke. The hysteria and sentimentality of Mr. Battler are perhaps a trifle overdone, but the magnificant bumptiousness, which is not without an engaging grasp upon realities, of Signor Bombardone (superbly played by Mr. Cecil Trouncer) makes the preposterous length of the third act not only bearable, but positively pleasant. There is also in "Geneva" a British Foreign Secretary (Mr. Ernest Thesiger) who, like most of the upper-class Englishmen of Mr. Shaw's imagination, is incapable of thought, but who can nevertheless, in his vague, amateurish and absurdly self-confident way, draw rings round all his diplomatic opponents. He, too, is a source of great delight.

* * *

The scene of this last act is the Court of International Justice at The Hague, whither the dictators have been summoned to answer for their misdemeanors to the League. The devices by which this judicial inquiry is brought about belong to the realm of farce and pantomine, and reveal Mr. Shaw at somewhere near the bottom of his form. The early part of the play is a clumsy satire on the League's Committee of International Co-operation, which appears to consist of a solitary typist. At this stage "Geneva" has neither characterization nor plot, and one doubts whether even its subsequent successes are enough to neutralize its initial ineptitude.

A New Opera From Strauss

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Munich, Germany

Again we have had a Strauss operatic première. Was it truly a sensation this time? Scarcely so in the purely artistic aspect, although one might designate as sensational for Strauss the partly "military character" of the music (as Strauss himself has expressed it) and also its frequently outcropping tendency toward a nationalist appeal. But that is as little important for this great artist as is the very timely choice of a subject from German history, a subject which is the basis for the effective libretto by Joseph Gregor: one and all, these are merely stages in "going to Canossa," whereby Strauss has made his peace with the Germany of Adolf Hitler, a peace which was broken four years ago.

"Der Friedenstag," a one-act opera—another one-act production, "Daphne," will have its first performance in Dresden this fall—takes place on the last day of the Thirty Years War, in 1648. The commander of a fortress which is almost starved out and shot to pieces sees only victory or destruction, and victory is out of the question. Not only the city's inhabitants but also the soldiers are demanding that the commander put an end to the needless sacrifice by immediate surrender.

Apparently complying with the demand, he makes every preparation with a few loyal supporters to blow up the citadel. His wife makes another vain attempt to persuade him to more humane action. Everything seems to have come to an end when there is a sudden sound of the ringing of bells, pealing louder and louder—peace has been concluded, and the enemy enter the city with hands outstretched in reconciliation. The blaring fanfares of a military march in the orchestra mingle with the chorus, "Ein'feste Burg ist unser Gott," introducing a rousing choral hymn in C major, which in its primitive homophony embodies the new nationalistic vein of the composer.

The subject and the symbolical import of the action—the glorification of the soldierly sense of honor—correspond with the art-philosophy and world-philosophy of National Socialism, as do the reveling of the music in triads, the alternation between expressive exuberance and military-heroic marching rhythms, and the poster-like simplification of the melody here and there. The orchestral effects, the harmonies, the placing of characteristic accents, and the feeling for dramatic climaxes reveal the ability of a master, now as before, and at the same time overshadow the undoubted deficiency in real power of impression, in musical substance. The cultivated atmosphere of thought of an "Ariadne auf Naxos," of a "Rosenkavalier," and of an "Arabella," with their countless interspersed chamber-music refinements, has given way to a lapidary concreteness and—one might say—primitiveness.

Even though there is no doubt that "Der Friedenstag" from the standpoint of its artistic importance, does not belong among the composer's significant works, the first performance was a triumphant success, and Strauss was lauded as seldom before. The praise extended also to the distinguished presentation on the part of the State Opera: to the Strauss director par excellence, Clemens Krauss, to Herr Hartman, stage manager, to the effective stage settings by Ludwig Sievert, and to the singers of the principal roles, Hans Hotter and Viorica Ursuleac.

Enjoy Music
Taught with sympathetic understanding. ORGAN. PIANO. VIOLIN. VOICE, HARMONY.
School of Music Education
(7th season)
Carolyn M. Cramp, M.A., F.A.G.O., Dir.
160 West 73rd St., New York City
Traf. 7-6700

New Shows on Cape Ann

By Dorothy Grafly

Gloucester, Mass.

The Gloucester Society of Artists scores again in its second exhibition of the season in its introduction of fresh, new art personalities, coming forward with provocative work by Aimé Lamb, Willard Cummings, Katherine Wilkins, Nathaniel C. Burwash, Yovan Radenkovitch, and such former headliners as Gifford Beal, Umberto Romano and Herbert Barnett.

Radenkovitch, in particular, reveals the impact of European training. His stroke is strong, although sensitively handled. His color is rich. "The Road" is a rhythmic composition of poetic feeling. Great russet-trunked trees with sensitive foliage masses arch to a Gothic point over a roadway on which three tiny figures, woman, man and child, are trudging, their bodies poised in rythmic answer to the trees; their shadows in short, backward diagonals stressing the direction of the road.

The sketches of the Dalmatian coast, with boats in harbor, are assured in both composition and color, although they are less sensitive than "The Road." In all, however, you feel the touch of a definite art personality who knows what he wants and how to get it.

Gifford Beal's little sketches of "Fiesta"—doubtless the St. Peter's fête of the fisher folk staged in June—lend rich bits of color, with skill in the compositional handling of many figures.

* * *

While it is true that the good things must be sought out from a mass of dross, they shine the more brightly for their surroundings. There is, for example, Willard Cummings's "Herb," the study of a young man in brown dreaming with elbow on small table against a background of steel blue. He is a slim, piquant young man with the wistfulness of youth, which Cummings has intensified. His two other portrait sketches, while sufficiently facile, do not measure up to the character insight or paint quality of "Herb."

Aimé Lamb, with several paintings to her credit, reveals a buoyant viewpoint. Her work smiles, without being satiric. "Hair Dresser" is an excellent little canvas, with the maid in blue and white bending over an auburn-haired mistress in an interior delicate with silvery tones and the faint yellow of curtains. The touch of humor is there, as well as nice appreciation for the modulation of color tones.

Humor smiles again in the same painter's water colors of children playing in city parks.

Outstanding among the water colors, also, are "Barn Yard" and "New England Brook," by Katherine Wilkins, and the tree suggestions of Nathaniel C. Burwash.

Lawrence Beall Smith, better represented in the earlier exhibition, contributes only a small black-and-white, "The Skaters," in which amusingly active postures of street urchins are given the satiric support of haphazard ash cans. Interesting, also, in the black-and-white section are Umberto Romano's "Reclining Nude," and the Gloucester and Yarmouth dock and harbor compositions by John Lonergan.

Gordon Grant's "Dory Mates," Anthony Thième's "Old Mexico" and Herbert Barnett's head composition, "Resting," present another trio of able canvases.

Sculpture, though more interesting than in the previous show, lacks originality. In subject matter it varies from the jewel laden "La Belle Africaine," by Margaret D. Nelson, to "Elan," by Mary Elizabeth Sears, a slim figure cutting diagonally downward in a smooth dive.

* * *

One of the outstanding contributions to the second section of the Rockport Art Association's annual, on the other hand, is Viggo Brandt-Ericksen's chess set. As Scandinavian in his feeling for form as Radenkovitch is Slavic in color appreciation, Brandt-Ericksen is the most individual of the Cape Ann sculptors exhibiting.

Stronger in its black-and-whites than in its oils, the Rockport show is distinctly disappointing. There are no highlights. The nearest approaches, perhaps, may be found in "Lucretia," by Esther Williams, a pastel-toned composition of seated girl in pink against blue-gray wheelbarrow beneath the arch of a tree branch; and in the same painter's "Halt by the Pond." To both these canvases the artist has brought a studied quaintness, as if Victoria and Watteau were hovering somewhere in the background.

Most tense in color, and the most stimulating contribution from a painter's standpoint, is "Still-Life Between Rooms" by Susumu Hirota, contrasting in its juiciness and paint succulence with the tight, dry "Studio Interior," by Wade White. The two paintings, in fact, present two opposite schools in contemporary still-life conception.

Occasionally an artist crops up whose individuality is stronger than his technical grasp. "Winter Morning" and "Twin Lights," by Alice Harold Murphy, have a distinctly personal flavor that is unfortunately denied the support of mature craftsmanship.

Other interesting compositions include "Houses on the Adriatic Coast," by Anthony Thième, a study in brilliant white sunshine; "Circus Acrobats," a trifle by Jon Corbino; "September Northeaster," by Yarnall Abbott, shown in memoriam; "Road to the Quarry," by John Huntington; "The Harbor," by Herbert Barnett, and "Eyes for Two," by Jane Freeman. Facile mountainscapes and seascapes also abound.

166

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
AUG 15 1938

In Tanglewood Shed

Although summer music in the U. S. has increased in quantity and quality in recent years, until last week no U. S. orchestra has had both a dignified summer home of its own and a socialite summer audience. Then, in the Berkshire hills near Stockbridge, Mass., into a large, new pavilion, nearly 6,000 people trooped for the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Seated, the audience beamed at the Boston Symphony. The Boston Symphony, pleased with its new summer home—called, with Brahmin deprecation, a Music Shed—beamed back. Speeches were made by Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky, the orchestra's President Bentley Wirt Warren, Festival President Gertrude Robinson Smith. The audience, accompanied by the orchestra, sang the Luther-Bach chorale, Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott. Thus was dedicated the permanent home of the latest candidate for an "American Salzburg."

Tanglewood, a large Stockbridge estate where Author Nathaniel Hawthorne used to live, was deeded by its owners to the Boston Symphony two years ago. After a concert was spectacularly rained out of a large tent last summer, energetic President Smith started a drive to raise $100,000 for permanent quarters. Glad to get $[illegible],000, the Festival committee commissioned Finnish Architect Eliel Saarinen to design the Shed—a fan-shaped, open-sided building covering an acre and a half, its roof supported by three interior pillars and a colonnade. The Shed's acoustics are so excellent that an orchestral pianissimo can be heard by an overflow audience outside the colonnade. Last week, during the first of this season's six concerts, Miss Smith launched a campaign for $58,000 to curtain the sides of the Shed with iron (for storms), to complete the stage, etc. Future Tanglewood projects: opera, a music school.

I. D. Sisson

CONDUCTOR KOUSSEVITZKY
Everybody beamed.

◆

Ravinia Results

Customers of hot-weather music have no very intense convictions about what is played to them. This fact is known to every conductor, every musician who plays Beethoven's Fifth Symphony with his eyes shut. In Chicago's Ravinia Park last fortnight, to give the program committee some ideas for next summer's series by the Chicago Symphony, questionnaires were handed to the 8,000 people who went to concerts during the week. Only 550 bothered to answer the questionnaire.

Favorite Ravinia composers proved to be Beethoven, Wagner, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Franck, Bach, Sibelius—in that order. This suggested nothing new to the committee, since Wagner, Brahms and Beethoven were most frequently played at Ravinia this summer. Only 4% were bored by any one number, only 8% enjoyed one just moderately. The rest enjoyed everything greatly, except for five people who were bored by a whole program, ten by half of a program. One person asked for a special number next summer—"Roosevelt's Funeral March." The committee decided to look elsewhere than in questionnaires for program ideas.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 17 1938

James William, top French exhibition parachutist, killed Sunday at Lons-Le-Saulnier, France, when he dropped 3,000 feet. Ripcord of his chute failed to work.

Stockbridge (Mass.), music festival at Tanglewood, with Boston Symp. orch, closed Sunday (14) with more than 6,000 present. Total attendance was 38,000 at five performances.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 16 1938

Koussevitzky Anticipates Greatest Culture Center

In Prepared But Undelivered Speech Noted Conductor Points the Way to Future Development at Tanglewood, Including Symphonic Concerts, Operatic Productions, and Great Choruses—Contemplates Establishment of Academy of Music and Arts Where Greatest Composers, Conductors, Scholars, Artists, Virtuosi, and Thinkers Will Teach.

In a speech prepared for broadcasting from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood the opening night of the Festival, but which was not delivered because of lack of time, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, points the way to future development, including symphonic concerts, operatic productions and great choruses.

Plans for the future will be considered by the boards of the Festival and the orchestra and the recommendations of the conductor will have a bearing on what the uture will be. The acoustics of the hed, perfect for symphonic music, not so good for the voice, will be important in guiding the two boards in making their decision.

Koussevitzky's Speech

Dr. Koussevitzky's prepared peech is as follows:

"The Berkshire Music Festival is tarted and is rapidly growing. lowever successful and important, is only the first step toward the ltimate goal—the establishment of ne greatest music and art center the world. The United States of merica can and are destined to ave such a center. American freeom is the best soil for it. America nancial resources will make it ventually possible. Rapid growth American culture dictates its ecessity, as a crowning peak of its nfolding, as a historical mission nd perennial contribution of merica to human art and culture.

Activities Listed

"For the summer the activities of he center will be many and varied. They will consist, first, in a series f symphonic concerts of great nusic in the performance of a reat orchestra, considered peeress in the world. Second, in a eries of immortal operas in a perfect ensemble of the finest singers, artists and choruses. Third, in a series of the most important oratorios presented in action. Fourth, n several outstanding ballet performances.

"In addition, we plan to give the classical tragedy and comedy with foremost living actors. We expect to re-create the antique Greek theater in its modern form. For that purpose leading play-writers, composers, scholars and other specialists will be invited. Their collective co-operation promises not only re-creation of the Greek theater but also a creation of a new and great theatrical art, so persistently yet fruitlessly dreamed of by many visionaries in the nineteenth and in the present century.

Music Academy

"We contemplate further to establish the Academy of Music and Arts as a permanent institution. It has to be a creative musical center, where the greatest living composers will teach the art of composition; the greatest virtuosi, the art of perfect performance and technique; the greatest conductors, the mystery of conducting orchestras and choruses. The most eminent thinkers and scholars of Harvard, Yale and other prominent universities will be teaching there, each in his field, so far as it concerns arts and music. A free co-operation of such an elite shall certainly result into a creation of new and great values of art; into radiation of the beams of high culture over a nation and the whole world, and, finally, into education and training of a new generation of American artists.

"So visioned, the center will be one of the foremost educational institutions, It will serve the American nation, the world at large and all those who seek hearing and seeing the best in music and related arts; who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personality through the contact with the best in art and with the elite in culture, and those who long for a creative rest in the summer.

"Such an institution will be, no doubt, unique and far greater than any similar institution existing. Only a few great visionaries have dared to dream of it. Today this dream is about to come true, if you will be willing to help its creation."

B. Her. - Aug. 16/38

Many Bostonians Are Guests At Berkshire Summer Resorts

Now that the long anticipated Symphonic Festival is over, the throngs that arrived from nearly every state in the Union to hear the series of six concerts, have departed from the Berkshires, and the various towns that housed the 38,000 people, are getting back to normal. However, the many summer activities are still in full swing, and the rest of this month will be filled with pleasant social affairs.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Warren Street, Brookline, and her daughters, Miss Daphne and Miss Violet, returned yesterday to their summer home at Dublin, N. H., from Lenox, where they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana at Birchwood for the second series of festival concerts. Tanglewood, where the concerts were held, was established as an estate by Mrs. Brooks' grandfather, Mr. William Aspinwall Tappan, and her mother, Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, planned the beautiful gardens.

Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren had as their guests at one of the festival concerts Dr. and Mrs. Harry Augustus Garfield of Duxbury, who are spending the month of August at the Williamstown home of their son-in-law and daughter, Prof. and Mrs. John Preston Comer, who are traveling in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Dartmouth Street had as their guests at the second series of festival concerts Mr. and Mrs. John Noble of Cambridge.

Recent arrivals at the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge include Mrs. Jaffray de Hauteville Bell, Mrs. Augustus Hemenway, Miss Faith Richardson, Mrs. H. Nickerson Sears and Mrs. Philip M. Clark.

Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., will pour at the tea at the Stockbridge Golf Club next Saturday.

Miss Natalie Bayard Merrill, who landed in New York recently from London with her aunt, Mrs. Nicholas Brown, will arrive Wednesday for a month's sojourn at Merry Lodge, her mother's cottage in Stockbridge.

Following a visit with Mr. and Mrs. George B de Gersdorff at the Old Rectory, Stockbridge, Miss Madeleine Lawrence of Bay State Road, departed for the Adirondacks.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 16 1938

Koussevitzky Will Sail To Europe for Short Stay

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is resting at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club at Lenox after his two strenuous weeks at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He will sail Aug 17 on the Normandie for a short vacation in Europe. He will return to Boston in September to conduct rehearsals for the Symphony Hall season which opens Oct. 8.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1938

le

City
Edition
2 P. M. Quotations

18 Pages— Price Three Cents

Roaring Ovation Ends Brilliant Festival Series

Crowd Shouts Approval as Koussevitzky and Men Conclude Concerts

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

AMIDST a mounting roar of bravos and huzzahs and shouts, the curtain was lowered on the fifth Berkshire Festival yesterday afternoon. The final chord of the Brahms second symphony was the signal to unloose such a demonstration of enthusiasm as this observer seldom has witnessed. The entire audience, rising to its feet, joined in the tumultuous ovation accorded the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their peerless leader, Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts of which yesterday ~~afternoon's was~~ the final. We suspect, though, that, in the outburst of enthusiasm, there was an implication of appreciation for those behind the scenes who made the Festival possible and through whose work that which was visible and audible could be enjoyed.

Koussevitzky Sees Great Things Ahead

Opera, Choruses, Greek Drama, Possibilities

In a speech prepared for broadcasting from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood the opening night of the Festival, but which was not delivered because of lack of time, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, points the way to future development, including symphonic concerts, operatic productions and great choruses.

Plans for the future will be considered by the boards of the Festival and the orchestra and the recommendations of the conductor will have a bearing on what the future will be. The acoustics of the shed, perfect for symphonic music, not so good for the voice, will be important in guiding the two boards in making their decision.

Koussevitzky's Speech

Dr. Koussevitzky's prepared speech is as follows:

The Berkshire Music Festival is started and is rapidly growing. However successful and important, it is only the first step toward the ultimate goal—the establishment of the greatest music and art center in the world. The United States of America can and are destined to have such a center American freedom is the best soil for it. America financial resources will make it eventually possible. Rapid growth of American culture dictates its necessity, as a crowning peak of its unfolding, as a historical mission and perennial contribution of America to human art and culture.

Activities Listed

For the summer the activities of the center will be many and varied. They will consist, first, in a series of symphonic concerts of great music in the perfomance of a great orchestra, considered peerless in the world. Second, in a series of immortal operas in a perfect ensemble of the finest singers, artists and choruses. Third, in a series of the most important oratorios persented in action. Fourth, in several outstanding ballet performances.

In addition, we plan to give the classical tragedy and comedy with foremost living actors. We expect to re-create the antique Greek theater in its modern form. For that purpose leading play-writers, composers, scholars and other specialists will be invited. Their collective co-operation promises not only re-creation of the Greek theater but also a creation of a new and great theatrical art, so persistently yet fruitlessly dreamed of by many visionaries in the nineteenth and in the present century.

Continued From First Page

Music Academy

We contemplate further to establish the Academy of Music and Arts as a permanent institution. It has to be a creative musical center, where the greatest living composers will teach the art of composition; the greatest virtuosi, the art of perfect performance and technique; the greatest conductors, the mystery of conducting orchestras and choruses. The most eminent thinkers and scholars of Harvard, Yale and other prominent universities will be teaching there, each in his field, so far as it concerns arts and music. A free co-operation of such an elite shall certainly result into a creation of new and great values of art; into radiation of the beams of high culture over a nation and the whole world, and, finally, into education and training of a new generation of American artists.

So visioned, the center will be one of the foremost educational institutions. It will serve the American nation, the world at large and all those who seek hearing and seeing the best in music and related arts; who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personality through the contact with the best in art and with the elite in culture, and those who long for a creative rest in the summer.

Such an institution will be, no doubt, unique and far greater than any similar institution existing. Only few great visionaries have dared to dream of it. Today this dream is about to come true, if you will be willing to help its creation.

Shed Not Tested

Favored by propitious weather for each of the six concerts, spread over two week-ends, the new shed was not put to the test which caused last year's equipment to be discarded. There were showers dangerously close to concert time on a couple of occasions, but not a raindrop fell on the shed while a Festival audience or a rehearsal audience was under it. This dedicatory record will be a hard one to equal in other years.

Exciting Program

The program yesterday was an exciting one, and, strange to relate, the interest of the audience probably was most stimulated by the novelty on the list, the "Lieutenat Kije" suite of Serge Prokofieff, a modern Russian composer, known in this country as a pianist as much as by his compositions. The suite originally was written as incidental music for a moving picture, a type of satirical farce of which the apochryphal hero was the namesake of the title of the suite. Without the explanation which the program notes afforded, the music does not stand alone, but its superficiality is effective.

The first of the five episodes opens with a trumpet sounded far afield announcing the birth in full regimentals of the young hero. In the ensuing Romance occurs a feat which is most rare in orchestral works, a solo for the bass-viol. This must have gratified Koussevitzky especially for the stories of his personal exploits on that instrument are many. The fact that the solo was not done well is not so important, for as Samuel Johnson said in speaking of the dog that stood on its hind legs, the remarkable part was that he could do it at all. In fact, it has been a bit of a holiday for the bass-viols, for in the previous concert during the Pastoral when the storm breaks, all eyes were riveted on the bass-viol section as the players there vigorously milked the necks of their fiddles for the desired effect.

The orchestration of Prokofieff's suite is ingenious. His sense of instrumental values becomes apparent continually. There is no particular harmonic nor rhythmic originality, but it was amusing and a delightfully light interlude between the more serious symphonies of Schumann and Brahms.

The orchestra deserves only panegyrics for its performance during this last concert. From the magnificent maestoso of the Schumann introduction to the final note of the Brahms, there was a type of orchestral playing at which one can not cavil. Every phrase, every movement, every note was so right. The members of the Boston Orchestra gave us a performance such as they give when most earnestly in the midst of their season in Symphony Hall.

Saturday Night Perfect

Saturday night the weather was perfect; the air was so fresh and invigorating; the sunlight on arriving and the moon during intermission and after the concert, both functioned with theatrical effectiveness, and even the program had all the analogous elements of the atmosphere.

The concert opened with the slow movement from the third symphony of Henry Hadley, the conductor of the Festival's first two years. It was a touching gesture on the part of Koussevitzky to play his late colleague's music as a tribute to his memory, and we even felt he did it with no little affection.

Hadley conducted the two concerts of the first Festival five years agow ith the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at the close of its Stadium concerts. The following year, desirous of advancing the Festival time, that orchestra was not available, and a heterogeneous one was assembled, all from established orchestras to be sure, but in no way drilled or unified. Hadley, it was learned later, was in the merciless grip of a malady from which he was suffering almost un-

Continued on Second Page

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
AUG 15 1938

In Tanglewood Shed

Although summer music in the U. S. has increased in quantity and quality in recent years, until last week no U. S. orchestra has had both a dignified summer home of its own and a socialite summer audience. Then, in the Berkshire hills near Stockbridge, Mass., into a large, new pavilion, nearly 6,000 people trooped for the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Seated, the audience beamed at the Boston Symphony. The Boston Symphony, pleased with its new summer home—called, with Brahmin deprecation, a Music Shed—beamed back. Speeches were made by Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky, the orchestra's President Bentley Wirt Warren, Festival President Gertrude Robinson Smith. The audience, accompanied by the orchestra, sang the Luther-Bach chorale, Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott. Thus was dedicated the permanent home of the latest candidate for an "American Salzburg."

Tanglewood, a large Stockbridge estate where Author Nathaniel Hawthorne used to live, was deeded by its owners to the Boston Symphony two years ago. After a concert was spectacularly rained out of a large tent last summer, energetic President Smith started a drive to raise $100,000 for permanent quarters. Glad to get $80,000, the Festival committee commissioned Finnish Architect Eliel Saarinen to design the Shed—a fan-shaped, open-sided building covering an acre and a half, its roof supported by three interior pillars and a colonnade. The Shed's acoustics are so excellent that an orchestral pianissimo can be heard by an overflow audience outside the colonnade. Last week, during the first of this season's six concerts, Miss Smith launched a campaign for $58,000 to curtain the sides of the Shed with iron (for storms), to complete the stage, etc. Future Tanglewood projects: opera, a music school.

I. D. Siesen

CONDUCTOR KOUSSEVITZKY
Everybody beamed.

◆

Ravinia Results

Customers of hot-weather music have no very intense convictions about what is played to them. This fact is known to every conductor, every musician who plays Beethoven's Fifth Symphony with his eyes shut. In Chicago's Ravinia Park last fortnight, to give the program committee some ideas for next summer's series by the Chicago Symphony, questionnaires were handed to the 8,000 people who went to concerts during the week. Only 550 bothered to answer the questionnaire.

Favorite Ravinia composers proved to be Beethoven, Wagner, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Franck, Bach, Sibelius—in that order. This suggested nothing new to the committee, since Wagner, Brahms and Beethoven were most frequently played at Ravinia this summer. Only 4% were bored by any one number, only 8% enjoyed one just moderately. The rest enjoyed everything greatly, except for five people who were bored by a whole program, ten by half of a program. One person asked for a special number next summer—"Roosevelt's Funeral March." The committee decided to look elsewhere than in questionnaires for program ideas.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 17 1938

James William, top French exhibition parachutist, killed Sunday at Lons-Le-Saulnier, France, when he dropped 3,000 feet. Ripcord of his chute failed to work.

Stockbridge (Mass.), music festival at Tanglewood, with Boston Symp. orch, closed Sunday (14) with more than 6,000 present. Total attendance was 38,000 at five performances.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 16 1938

Koussevitzky Anticipates Greatest Culture Center

In Prepared But Undelivered Speech Noted Conductor Points the Way to Future Development at Tanglewood, Including Symphonic Concerts, Operatic Productions, and Great Choruses—Contemplates Establishment of Academy of Music and Arts Where Greatest Composers, Conductors, Scholars, Artists, Virtuosi, and Thinkers Will Teach.

In a speech prepared for broadcasting from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood the opening night of the Festival, but which was not delivered because of lack of time, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, points the way to future development, including symphonic concerts, operatic productions and great choruses.

Plans for the future will be considered by the boards of the Festival and the orchestra and the ecommendations of the conductor vill have a bearing on what the uture will be. The acoustics of the hed, perfect for symphonic music, ot so good for the voice, will e important in guiding the two oards in making their decision.

Koussevitzky's Speech

Dr. Koussevitzky's prepared peech is as follows:

"The Berkshire Music Festival is tarted and is rapidly growing. owever successful and important, is only the first step toward the ltimate goal—the establishment of e greatest music and art center the world. The United States of merica can and are destined to ave such a center. American freeom is the best soil for it. America nancial resources will make it ventually possible. Rapid growth American culture dictates its ecessity, as a crowning peak of its nfolding, as a historical mission nd perennial contribution of merica to human art and culture.

Activities Listed

"For the summer the activities of he center will be many and varied. hey will consist, first, in a series symphonic concerts of great husic in the performance of a reat orchestra, considered peeress in the world. Second, in a eries of immortal operas in a perect ensemble of the finest singers, rtists and choruses. Third, in a eries of the most important oraorios presented in action. Fourth, n several outstanding ballet performances.

"In addition, we plan to give the classical tragedy and comedy with foremost living actors. We expect to re-create the antique Greek theater in its modern form. For that purpose leading play-writers, composers, scholars and other specialists will be invited. Their collective co-operation promises not only re-creation of the Greek theater but also a creation of a new and great theatrical art, so persistently yet fruitlessly dreamed of by many visionaries in the nineteenth and in the present century.

Music Academy

"We contemplate further to establish the Academy of Music and Arts as a permanent institution. It has to be a creative musical center, where the greatest living composers will teach the art of composition; the greatest virtuosi, the art of perfect performance and technique; the greatest conductors, the mystery of conducting orchestras and choruses. The most eminent thinkers and scholars of Harvard, Yale and other prominent universities will be teaching there, each in his field, so far as it concerns arts and music. A free co-operation of such an elite shall certainly result into a creation of new and great values of art; into radiation of the beams of high culture over a nation and the whole world, and, finally, into education and training of a new generation of American artists.

"So visioned, the center will be one of the foremost educational institutions, It will serve the American nation, the world at large and all those who seek hearing and seeing the best in music and related arts; who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personality through the contact with the best in art and with the elite in culture, and those who long for a creative rest in the summer.

"Such an institution will be, no doubt, unique and far greater than any similar institution existing. Only a few great visionaries have dared to dream of it. Today this dream is about to come true, if you will be willing to help its creation."

B. Her. - Aug. 16/38

Many Bostonians Are Guests At Berkshire Summer Resorts

Now that the long anticipated Symphonic Festival is over, the throngs that arrived from nearly every state in the Union to hear the series of six concerts, have departed from the Berkshires, and the various towns that housed the 38,000 people, are getting back to normal. However, the many summer activities are still in full swing, and the rest of this month will be filled with pleasant social affairs.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Warren Street, Brookline, and her daughters, Miss Daphne and Miss Violet, returned yesterday to their summer home at Dublin, N. H., from Lenox, where they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana at Birchwood for the second series of festival concerts. Tanglewood, where the concerts were held, was established as an estate by Mrs. Brooks' grandfather, Mr. William Aspinwall Tappan, and her mother, Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, planned the beautiful gardens.

Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Wirt Warren had as their guests at one of the festival concerts Dr. and Mrs. Harry Augustus Garfield of Duxbury, who are spending the month of August at the Williamstown home of their son-in-law and daughter, Prof. and Mrs. John Preston Comer, who are traveling in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Dartmouth Street had as their guests at the second series of festival concerts Mr. and Mrs. John Noble of Cambridge.

Recent arrivals at the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge include Mrs. Jaffray de Hauteville Bell, Mrs. Augustus Hemenway, Miss Faith Richardson, Mrs. H. Nickerson Sears and Mrs. Philip M. Clark.

Mrs. John Shepard, Jr., will pour at the tea at the Stockbridge Golf Club next Saturday.

Miss Natalie Bayard Merrill, who landed in New York recently from London with her aunt, Mrs. Nicholas Brown, will arrive Wednesday for a month's sojourn at Merry Lodge, her mother's cottage in Stockbridge.

Following a visit with Mr. and Mrs. George B. de Gersdorff at the Old Rectory, Stockbridge, Miss Madeleine Lawrence of Bay State Road, departed for the Adirondacks.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 16 1938

Koussevitzky Will Sail To Europe for Short Stay

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is resting at the Berkshires Hunt and Country club at Lenox after his two strenuous weeks at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. He will sail Aug 17 on the Normandie for a short vacation in Europe. He will return to Boston in September to conduct rehearsals for the Symphony Hall season which opens Oct.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 15 1938

le

City
Edition
2 P. M. Quotations

18 Pages — Price Three Cents

Roaring Ovation Ends Brilliant Festival Series

Crowd Shouts Approval as Koussevitzky and Men Conclude Concerts

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

AMIDST a mounting roar of bravos and huzzahs and shouts, the curtain was lowered on the fifth Berkshire Festival yesterday afternoon. The final chord of the Brahms second symphony was the signal to unloose such a demonstration of enthusiasm as this observer seldom has witnessed. The entire audience, rising to its feet. joined in the tumultuous ovation accorded the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and their peerless leader, Serge Koussevitzky for the six concerts of which yesterday ~~afternoon's was~~ the final. We suspect, though, that, in the outburst of enthusiasm, there was an implication of appreciation for those behind the scenes who made the Festival possible and through whose work that which was visible and audible could be enjoyed.

Shed Not Tested

Favored by propitious weather for each of the six concerts, spread over two week-ends, the new shed was not put to the test which caused last year's equipment to be discarded. There were showers dangerously close to concert time on a couple of occasions, but not a raindrop fell on the shed while a Festival audience or a rehearsal audience was under it. This dedicatory record will be a hard one to equal in other years.

Exciting Program

The program yesterday was an exciting one, and, strange to relate, the interest of the audience probably was most stimulated by the novelty on the list, the "Lieutenat Kije" suite of Serge Prokofieff, a modern Russian composer, known in this country as a pianist as much as by his compositions. The suite originally was written as incidental music for a moving picture, a type of satirical farce of which the apochryphal hero was the namesake of the title of the suite. Without the explanation which the program notes afforded, the music does not stand alone, but its superficiality is effective.

The first of the five episodes opens with a trumpet sounded far afield announcing the birth in full regimentals of the young hero. In the ensuing Romance occurs a feat which is most rare in orchestral works, a solo for the bass-viol. This must have gratified Koussevitzky especially for the stories of his personal exploits on that instrument are many. The fact that the solo was not done well is not so important, for as Samuel Johnson said in speaking of the dog that stood on its hind legs, the remarkable part was that he could do it at all. In fact, it has been a bit of a holiday for the bass-viols, for in the previous concert during the Pastoral when the storm breaks, all eyes were riveted on the bass-viol section as the players there vigorously milked the necks of their fiddles for the desired effect.

The orchestration of Prokofieff's suite is ingenious. His sense of instrumental values becomes apparent continually. There is no particular harmonic nor rhythmic originality, but it was amusing and a delightfully light interlude between the more serious symphonies of Schumann and Brahms.

The orchestra deserves only panegyrics for its performance during this last concert. From the magnificent maestoso of the Schumann introduction to the final note of the Brahms, there was a type of orchestral playing at which one can not cavil. Every phrase, every movement, every note was so right. The members of the Boston Orchestra gave us a performance such as they give when most earnestly in the midst of their season in Symphony Hall.

Saturday Night Perfect

Saturday night the weather was perfect; the air was so fresh and invigorating; the sunlight on arriving and the moon during intermission and after the concert, both functioned with theatrical effectiveness, and even the program had all the analogous elements of the atmosphere.

The concert opened with the slow movement from the third symphony of Henry Hadley, the conductor of the Festival's first two years. It was a touching gesture on the part of Koussevitzky to play his late colleague's music as a tribute to his memory, and we even felt he did it with no little affection.

Hadley conducted the two concerts of the first Festival five years agow ith the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at the close of its Stadium concerts. The following year, desirous of advancing the Festival time, that orchestra was not available, and a heterogeneous one was assembled, all from established orchestras to be sure, but in no way drilled or unified. Hadley, it was learned later, was in the merciless grip of a malady from which he was suffering almost un-

Continued on Second Page

Koussevitzky Sees Great Things Ahead

Opera, Choruses, Greek Drama, Possibilities

In a speech prepared for broadcasting from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood the opening night of the Festival, but which was not delivered because of lack of time, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, points the way to future development, including symphonic concerts, operatic productions and great choruses.

Plans for the future will be considered by the boards of the Festival and the orchestra and the recommendations of the conductor will have a bearing on what the future will be. The acoustics of the shed, perfect for symphonic music, not so good for the voice, will be important in guiding the two boards in making their decision.

Koussevitzky's Speech

Dr. Koussevitzky's prepared speech is as follows:

The Berkshire Music Festival is started and is rapidly growing. However successful and important, it is only the first step toward the ultimate goal—the establishment of the greatest music and art center in the world. The United States of America can and are destined to have such a center American freedom is the best soil for it. America financial resources will make it eventually possible. Rapid growth of American culture dictates its necessity, as a crowning peak of its unfolding, as a historical mission and perennial contribution of America to human art and culture.

Activities Listed

For the summer the activities of the center will be many and varied. They will consist, first, in a series of symphonic concerts of great music in the perfomance of a great orchestra, considered peerless in the world. Second, in a series of immortal operas in a perfect ensemble of the finest singers, artists and choruses. Third, in a series of the most important oratorios persented in action. Fourth, in several outstanding ballet performances.

In addition, we plan to give the classical tragedy and comedy with foremost living actors. We expect to re-create the antique Greek theater in its modern form. For that purpose leading play-writers, composers, scholars and other specialists will be invited. Their collective co-operation promises not only re-creation of the Greek theater but also a creation of a new and great theatrical art, so persistently yet fruitlessly dreamed of by many visionaries in the nineteenth and in the present century.

Continued From First Page

Music Academy

We contemplate further to establish the Academy of Music and Arts as a permanent institution. It has to be a creative musical center, where the greatest living composers will teach the art of composition; the greatest virtuosi, the art of perfect performance and technique; the greatest conductors, the mystery of conducting orchestras and choruses. The most eminent thinkers and scholars of Harvard, Yale and other prominent universities will be teaching there, each in his field, so far as it concerns arts and music. A free co-operation of such an elite shall certainly result into a creation of new and great values of art; into radiation of the beams of high culture over a nation and the whole world, and, finally, into education and training of a new generation of American artists.

So visioned, the center will be one of the foremost educational

167

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky and His Audience

Springfield, Mass. Aug. 18/38

(As given over WSPR Radio Station)

We were seated a few rows from the front. Not the ideal spot to be sure. Had we been in the ideal spot—say, where Mrs. Calvin Coolidge was seated—I would have missed the thrill of my life.

I was a part of an audience composed of 6,000 people, yet the minute the great leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made his appearance and the first notes of Schumann's Symphony in B-flat resounded in the huge shed I became separated from the crowd and in an atmosphere created by the greatness of both composer and conductor I lived in a world of subtle emotion and joy. Not that I understand music in all its technicalities but like painting and other arts there seems to come to the mind something that was in the soul of the artist at the time of his creations. A conductor that can give us, through his own effort and imagination, the true concept back of music notes becomes a great conductor. It has been admitted that Schumann's first symphony is not as sensational and easy to respond to, yet the greatness and perfection of sounds are enough to start the mind on its own symphony.

The program ended with Brahms D major symphony, exquisite like the first and like the first far from being sensational. Most of us enjoyed the novelty on the program, the "Lieutenant Kije'' by Serge Prokofieff, a modern Russian composer, better known in this country as a pianist. How I wish I had known the story of "Lieutenant Kije" last Sunday afternoon! And then again I would have missed my own story. When I listen to music I suggest to my mind a given situation and then freely, without any will, let the music do the rest. In this particular music I was back in the court of France during the reign of Marie Antoinette. The splendor, the frivolities, the childishness of the queen became as pictures and then followed the Revolution and the guillotine. In one passage of the selection a great moment arose. It resembled the passing from life to death. The stillness of 6,000 people, the earnestness of the musician, the skill of the conductor, the ingenuity of the composer and the willingness to surrender on my part made the guillotine pale and unimportant. I, too, in this great moment, would surrender my head to it. And I saw myself being led not as a fearful human mite but as a self-possessed queen—and then an odor of a most abominable tobacco came to my nostrils. The man seated in back of me was smoking a cigar. Had he smoked it at any other time I would have forgiven him. What kind of a cigar could it have been? It was perfectly obnoxious. I looked around, yes, three other cigars were being consumed. I quieted myself by saying—aren't you lucky they are not seated together? A man who can't refrain from smoking a cigar at such a place should be given a package of cigarettes to be smoked on the premises in place of cigars. They are not half as bad.

The real story of "Lieutenant Kije," is far from mine. To begin with the music was written as incidental music for a moving picture. "The lieutenant, with the vaguely Nipponese name, is even more imaginary than the hero of 'The Chocolate Soldier,' since he is called into existence by a blunder on the part of Czar Paul I, who misread a military report so as to make the name of an officer out of 'ki' at the end of a name, and the intensive 'je' which followed."

It was not for Russian courtiers to tell the Czar that he had perpetrated a howler. So a Lieutenant Kije had to be created, since one did not exist, and the Russian composer has entertainingly chronicled in apt musical terms the story told by the films. The opening allegro tells of the hero's birth—a simple matter, since it took place in the brain of the Czar, and brisk and snappy martial music in infinitely varied form provides the musical obligato.

Nor is there sadness in the closing andante, 'Burial of Kije,' which winds up a good joke with a brilliant musical recapitulation. Between come three episodes, 'Romance,' 'Kije's Wedding,' and 'Troika.' "In romance," says Mr. Rosenfeld of the Berkshire Evening Eagle, "occurs a feat which is most rare in orchestral works, a solo for the bass-viol. This must have gratified Koussevitsky especially for the stories of his personal exploits on that instrument are many. The fact that the solo was not done well is not so important, for as Samuel Johnson said in speaking of the dog that stood on its hind legs, the remarkable part was that he could do it at all."

And now for the thrill. As I have said Brahms was the last chord not only of the afternoon concert but of the Fifth Berkshire Festival. Though privileged to have been present the years before this was the first time that I had witnessed the close. Never in my life have I seen such a roaring ovation. The shouts of enthusiasm made me turn not to Koussevitzky and his players but to the standing audience. As I have said I was near the front so as I turned I saw a scene never to be forgotten. It was the audience that thrilled me this time. Some were waving their handkerchiefs as if to attract the attention of someone. A woman held two packages and hoping that they would make more noise rubbed them one against the other. Shouts of joy; smiles of satisfaction; outbursts of genuine enthusiasm changed the audience in an ocean of appreciation.

Dr. Koussevitsky has great hopes for tomorrow. In a speech prepared for a radio broadcast, but which he did not give because of lack of time, Serge Koussevitzky said:

The Berkshire Music Festival is started and is rapidly growing. However successful and important, it is only the first step toward the ultimate goal—the establishment of the greatest music and art center in the world. The United States of America can and are destined to have such a center. American freedom is the best soil for it. America's financial resources will make it eventually possible. Rapid growth of American culture dictates its necessity, as a crowning peak of its unfolding, as a historical mission and perennial contribution of America to human art and culture.

I am indeed glad to have this opportunity to broadcast over this station, WSPR, Dr. Koussevitzky's great dream—may it come true.

LUCIA MARINARO-FERRARI

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 17 1938

Delays Violinist's Case To Help Berkshire Festival

WARE, Aug. 17. — Armand Bernard, a first violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, pleaded ~~nolo~~ in District Court yesterday to a charge of speeding and was fined $10.

Bernard, on his way to Tanglewood to play in the Berkshire Festival last Friday, was stopped by Motorcycle Officer Oliver Denis and ordered to appear in court Saturday morning.

When Bernard informed the orchestra leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of his plight, the director called Edward Brannigan, clerk of the District Court, and told him it was impossible for his first violinist to appear if he was to take part in the morning rehearsal. The clerk took the matter up with Judge James R. Nolan, who agreed with the director that the "show must go on."

Bernard expressed his own and Koussevitzky's appreciation for the courtesy extended to him.

Max Cohen, Main Street merchant, pleaded not guilty to a speeding charge but following the testimony of Motorcycle Officer Joseph Bator was found guilty and paid a find of $10.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

AUG 19 1938

The World Of Music

NEW YORK.—(UP)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Lenox, Mass., having succeeded in presenting two long weekends of superior music with the Boston Symphony orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, are entitled to rest on their laurels. Even so, however, they already are plotting new courses for next year.

Reaction of critics and audience to the six concerts, given for the first time this year in the new acoustic shell, was unanimous. The rolling hills of Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales," as the festival's sponsors claim, may become the Salzburg of America.

More than 19,000 attended the first series which was highlighted by Beethoven's Ninth symphony, with the Cecilia chorus of Boston assisting the orchestra. Koussevitsky also gave a truly inspired reading of Debussy's "La Mer," a performance which some critics said was the greatest of modern times.

Attendance records for the fifth of the annual festivals broke all previous marks. Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," with the composer at the piano, was another feature of the first series.

Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the designers of the "music shed," said that "the most optimistic" predictions of the designers had been fulfilled. He checked the reception of the concerts from all angles and reported that there was not a dead spot to be found.

Opera of Richard Wagner and the music of Henry Hadley, one of the founders of the festival, featured the second series.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
MORNING NEWS

AUG 19 1938

MUSIC
By
Dr. BRUNO DAVID USSHER

VIOLINISTS have been complaining often and loud over the dearth of new works by means of which they could display their skill and their soul. It seems to me that this complaint is not justified, because Sibelius, Elgar, Respighi, Dohnanyi, not to forget John Alden Carpenter, the Chicago composer, have made contributions to the cause of violin music that prove fruitful for performer and public. More names could be added to the routine list of classic works ending with Tschaikowsky and Brahms. I will mention only Serge Prokofieff, the Russian modernist, whose second concerto for violin and orchestra, written three years ago, well merits attention of those who can risk playing it.

* * *

HOW fine in every respect and how difficult Prokofieff's violin concerto No. 2 in G-minor, opus 63, is can now be judged by everyone, thanks to a truly engaging RCA-Victor recording (M-450), made by Jascha Heifetz and the Boston symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

Enjoyment of the second Prokofieff concerto and of its protagonist, Heifetz, rests on two conditions. First of all the phonograph must be adjusted to a proper medium volume of tone, neither too high nor too low dynamically. The music then takes care of itself, because the composition travels the full [illegible] of pitch, of strength and [illegible] I would [illegible] not to [illegible] there be [illegible] to play [illegible] sides through not only once but twice.

This should not frighten listeners, but assure them that this, as other truly worthwhile music, gains upon acquaintance. Here is a more mellow Prokofieff than of yore, a simpler Prokofieff in some regard, and one who has gained in depth without dispensing with his often all too dazzling skill of thematic and harmonic detail.

* * *

A VIOLINIST hearing Heifetz in this recording may well feel inclined, in a mood of self-criticism, to scratch the second Prokofieff concerto from his own repertoire list. I doubt whether any one but this Russian-American could sing and scintillate as he does in a performance which is at once immense and deeply moving. Koussevitzky and his wonderful Boston orchestra plus RCA-Victor's accousticians have done a first class complementary job, despite the uncommon combination of instrumental color and intensity.

* * *

It does seem as if Prokofieff, the intellectual, had suffered a change of heart. He has composed principal themes of intriguingly emotional and poetic nature. From time to time he still sounds sardonic and acrid, but in this work these characteristics sound more convincing as actual expression from within than in most earlier scores. The Russian modernist often curbs his modernism. There is a descending chord passage in the first movement which reminds me of Puccini's Scarpia theme in "Tosca" and Sibelius has not been without influence on this opus.

All in all, here is an important contemporary score, although in no sense a tonal preachment for or against social tendencies of today. It is simply fascinating music, in the slow movement somewhat Mozartian, while the third at first, ironically macabre, flies freely along the wings of dramatic imagination.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 19 1938

The World of Music

New York, Aug. 19—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at

---

READING, PA.
TIMES

AUG 19 1938

WITH her daughter, Emily, Mrs. Isaac Hiester, of "Hawthorne," Mineral Spring road, is in Stockbridge, Mass., attending The Berkshire Festival, in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with [illegible] Koussevitzky conducting, is appearing.

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y.
Adirondack Enterprise

[illegible] 8 1938

CONCERT GIVEN AT TRUDEAU BY CLUB ENSEMBLE

A capacity crowd attended the concert yesterday afternoon presented by the Lake Placid Club ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Trudeau sanatorium

Returning for his second season with the ensemble was Francesco Zecchino, 15, who delighted the audience with his violin selections. He is considered to be one of the outstanding young artists of the day and was recalled again and again by the audience.

Members of the ensemble who presented the program of classical music are: Julius Theodorowicz, conductor and first violin; Frank Macdonald, concert-master; Louis Artieres, viola; Hazel Theodorowicz, cello; Henri Girard, double bass; Walter Knight, Jr, flute; Joseph Lukas, oboe; Victor Polatschek, clarinet; Paul Keaney, French horn; Roman Szulc, tympani; Carl Lamson, piano and organ.

Among the seelctions that were played were: Overture to "Ruslan and Ludmilla" by Glinka, Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn and Carnival of the Animals by Saint-Saens which included descriptive melodies on the animal kingdom. The ensemble played several encores in appreciation of the ovation they received.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

[illegible] 20 1938

Festival Self-Sustaining Again This Year

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 20.—At the meeting of trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, incomplete reports were submitted on the Festival concerts but from these incomplete reports it is believed the concerts will be self-sustaining for the third year in succession.

A number of recommendations regarding drainage of parking areas, parking, fencing and the building were referred to committees. The question of using the music shed for attractions other than the Festival was referred to a committee from the Festival trustees and the Boston Symphony trustees.

167

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky and His Audience

Springfield, Mass. Aug. 18/38

(As given over WSPR Radio Station)

We were seated a few rows from the front. Not the ideal spot to be sure. Had we been in the ideal spot—say, where Mrs. Calvin Coolidge was seated—I would have missed the thrill of my life.

I was a part of an audience composed of 6,000 people, yet the minute the great leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made his appearance and the first notes of Schumann's Symphony in B-flat resounded in the huge shed I became separated from the crowd and in an atmosphere created by the greatness of both composer and conductor I lived in a world of subtle emotion and joy. Not that I understand music in all its technicalities but like painting and other arts there seems to come to the mind something that was in the soul of the artist at the time of his creations. A conductor that can give us, through his own effort and imagination, the true concept back of music notes becomes a great conductor. It has been admitted that Schumann's first symphony is not as sensational and easy to respond to, yet the greatness and perfection of sounds are enough to start the mind on its own symphony.

The program ended with Brahms D major symphony, exquisite like the first and like the first far from being sensational. Most of us enjoyed the novelty on the program, the "Lieutenant Kije'' by Serge Prokofieff, a modern Russian composer, better known in this country as a pianist. How I wish I had known the story of "Lieutenant Kije" last Sunday afternoon! And then again I would have missed my own story. When I listen to music I suggest to my mind a given situation and then freely, without any will, let the music do the rest. In this particular music I was back in the court of France during the reign of Marie Antoinette. The splendor, the frivolities, the childishness of the queen became as pictures and then followed the Revolution and the guillotine. In one passage of the selection a great moment arose. It resembled the passing from life to death. The stillness of 6,000 people, the earnestness of the musician, the skill of the conductor, the ingenuity of the composer and the willingness to surrender on my part made the guillotine pale and unimportant. I, too, in this great moment, would surrender my head to it. And I saw myself being led not as a fearful human mite but as a self-possessed queen—and then an odor of a most abominable tobacco came to my nostrils. The man seated in back of me was smoking a cigar. Had he smoked it at any other time I would have forgiven him. What kind of a cigar could it have been? It was perfectly obnoxious. I looked around, yes, three other cigars were being consumed. I quieted myself by saying—aren't you lucky they are not seated together? A man who can't refrain from smoking a cigar at such a place should be given a package of cigarettes to be smoked on the premises in place of cigars. They are not half as bad.

The real story of "Lieutenant Kije," is far from mine. To begin with the music was written as incidental music for a moving picture. "The lieutenant, with the vaguely Nipponese name, is even more imaginary than the hero of 'The Chocolate Soldier,' since he is called into existence by a blunder on the part of Czar Paul I, who misread a military report so as to make the name of an officer out of 'ki' at the end of a name, and the intensive 'je' which followed."

It was not for Russian courtiers to tell the Czar that he had perpetrated a howler. So a Lieutenant Kije had to be created, since one did not exist, and the Russian composer has entertainingly chronicled in apt musical terms the story told by the films. The opening allegro tells of the hero's birth—a simple matter, since it took place in the brain of the Czar, and brisk and snappy martial music in infinitely varied form provides the musical obligato.

Nor is there sadness in the closing andante, 'Burial of Kije,' which winds up a good joke with a brilliant musical recapitulation. Between come three episodes, 'Romance,' 'Kije's Wedding,' and 'Troika.' "In romance," says Mr. Rosenfeld of the Berkshire Evening Eagle, "occurs a feat which is most rare in orchestral works, a solo for the bass-viol. This must have gratified Koussevitsky especially for the stories of his personal exploits on that instrument are many. The fact that the solo was not done well is not so important, for as Samuel Johnson said in speaking of the dog that stood on its hind legs, the remarkable part was that he could do it at all."

And now for the thrill. As I have said Brahms was the last chord not only of the afternoon concert but of the Fifth Berkshire Festival. Though privileged to have been present the years before this was the first time that I had witnessed the close. Never in my life have I seen such a roaring ovation. The shouts of enthusiasm made me turn not to Koussevitzky and his players but to the standing audience. As I have said I was near the front so as I turned I saw a scene never to be forgotten. It was the audience that thrilled me this time. Some were waving their handkerchiefs as if to attract the attention of someone. A woman held two packages and hoping that they would make more noise rubbed them one against the other. Shouts of joy; smiles of satisfaction; outbursts of genuine enthusiasm changed the audience in an ocean of appreciation.

Dr. Koussevitsky has great hopes for tomorrow. In a speech prepared for a radio broadcast, but which he did not give because of lack of time, Serge Koussevitzky said:

The Berkshire Music Festival is started and is rapidly growing. However successful and important, it is only the first step toward the ultimate goal—the establishment of the greatest music and art center in the world. The United States of America can and are destined to have such a center. American freedom is the best soil for it. America's financial resources will make it eventually possible. Rapid growth of American culture dictates its necessity, as a crowning peak of its unfolding, as a historical mission and perennial contribution of America to human art and culture.

I am indeed glad to have this opportunity to broadcast over this station, WSPR, Dr. Koussevitzky's great dream—may it come true.

LUCIA MARINARO-FERRARI

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 17 1938

Delays Violinist's Case To Help Berkshire Festival

WARE, Aug. 17. — Armand Bernard, a first violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, pleaded ~~nolo~~ in District Court yesterday to a charge of speeding and was fined $10.

Bernard, on his way to Tanglewood to play in the Berkshire Festival last Friday, was stopped by Motorcycle Officer Oliver Denis and ordered to appear in court Saturday morning.

When Bernard informed the orchestra leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, of his plight, the director called Edward Brannigan, clerk of the District Court, and told him it was impossible for his first violinist to appear if he was to take part in the morning rehearsal. The clerk took the matter up with Judge James R. Nolan, who agreed with the director that the "show must go on."

Bernard expressed his own and Koussevitzky's appreciation for the courtesy extended to him.

Max Cohen, Main Street merchant, pleaded not guilty to a speeding charge but following the testimony of Motorcycle Officer Joseph Bator was found guilty and paid a find of $10.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

AUG 19 1938

The World Of Music

NEW YORK.—(UP)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Lenox, Mass., having succeeded in presenting two long weekends of superior music with the Boston Symphony orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, are entitled to rest on their laurels. Even so, however, they already are plotting new courses for next year.

Reaction of critics and audience to the six concerts, given for the first time this year in the new acoustic shell, was unanimous. The rolling hills of Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales," as the festival's sponsors claim, may become the Salzburg of America.

More than 19,000 attended the first series which was highlighted by Beethoven's Ninth symphony, with the Cecilia chorus of Boston assisting the orchestra. Koussevitsky also gave a truly inspired reading of Debussy's "La Mer," a performance which some critics said was the greatest of modern times.

Attendance records for the fifth of the annual festivals broke all previous marks. Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," with the composer at the piano, was another feature of the first series.

Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the designers of the "music shed," said that "the most optimistic" predictions of the designers had been fulfilled. He checked the reception of the concerts from all angles and reported that there was not a dead spot to be found.

Opera of Richard Wagner and the music of Henry Hadley, one of the founders of the festival, featured the second series.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 19 1938

American universities.
art, "Under the guise interest in world

New York. Aug. 19—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at

---

READING, PA.
TIMES

AUG 19 1938

WITH her daughter, Emily, Mrs. Isaac Hiester, of "Hawthorne," Mineral Spring road, is in Stockbridge, Mass., attending The Berkshire Festival, in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with ~~Serge~~ Koussevitsky conducting, is appearing.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
MORNING NEWS

AUG 19 1938

MUSIC

By

Dr. BRUNO DAVID USSHER

VIOLINISTS have been complaining often and loud over the dearth of new works by means of which they could display their skill and their soul. It seems to me that this complaint is not justified, because Sibelius, Elgar, Respighi, Dohnanyi, not to forget John Alden Carpenter, the Chicago composer, have made contributions to the cause of violin music that prove fruitful for performer and public. More names could be added to the routine list of classic works ending with Tschaikowsky and Brahms. I will mention only Serge Prokofieff, the Russian modernist, whose second concerto for violin and orchestra, written three years ago, well merits attention of those who can risk playing it.

* * *

HOW fine in every respect and how difficult Prokofieff's violin concerto No. 2 in G-minor, opus 63, is can now be judged by everyone, thanks to a truly engaging RCA-Victor recording (M-450), made by Jascha Heifetz and the Boston symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

Enjoyment of the second Prokofieff concerto and of its protagonist, Heifetz, rests on two conditions. First of all the phonograph must be adjusted to a proper medium volume of tone, neither too high nor too low dynamically. The music then takes care of itself, because the composition travels the full ange of pitch, of strength and oftness of tone. Next I would dvise fellow record fans not to ay the concerto until there be me to play the six sides through not only once but twice.

This should not frighten listeners, but assure them that this, as other truly worthwhile music, gains upon acquaintance. Here is a more mellow Prokofieff than of yore, a simpler Prokofieff in some regard, and one who has gained in depth without dispensing with his often all too dazzling skill of thematic and harmonic detail.

* * *

A VIOLINIST hearing Heifetz in this recording may well feel inclined, in a mood of self-criticism, to scratch the second Prokofieff concerto from his own repertoire list. I doubt whether any one but this Russian-American could sing and scintillate as he does in a performance which is at once immense and deeply moving. Koussevitzky and his wonderful Boston orchestra plus RCA-Victor's accousticians have done a first class complementary job, despite the uncommon combination of instrumental color and intensity.

* * *

It does seem as if Prokofieff, the intellectual, had suffered a change of heart. He has composed principal themes of intriguingly emotional and poetic nature. From time to time he still sounds sardonic and acrid, but in this work these characteristics sound more convincing as actual expression from within than in most earlier scores. The Russian modernist often curbs his modernism. There is a descending chord passage in the first movement which reminds me of Puccini's Scarpia theme in "Tosca" and Sibelius has not been without influence on this opus.

All in all, here is an important contemporary score, although in no sense a tonal preachment for or against social tendencies of today. It is simply fascinating music, in the slow movement somewhat Mozartian, while the third at first, ironically macabre, flies freely along the wings of dramatic magination.

SARANAC LAKE, N. Y.
Adirondack Enterprise

1938

CONCERT GIVEN AT TRUDEAU BY CLUB ENSEMBLE

A capacity crowd attended the concert yesterday afternoon presented by the Lake Placid Club ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Trudeau sanatorium.

Returning for his second season with the ensemble was Francesco Zecchino, 15, who delighted the audience with his violin selections. He is considered to be one of the outstanding young artists of the day and was recalled again and again by the audience.

Members of the ensemble who presented the program of classical music are: Julius Theodorowicz, conductor and first violin; Frank Macdonald, concert-master; Louis Artieres, viola; Hazel Theodorowicz, cello; Henri Girard, double bass; Walter Knight, Jr, flute; Joseph Lukas, oboe; Victor Polatschek, clarinet; Paul Keaney, French horn; Roman Szulc, tympani; Carl Lamson, piano and organ.

Among the seelctions that were played were: Overture to "Ruslan and Ludmilla" by Glinka, Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by Mendelssohn and Carnival of the Animals by Saint-Saens which included descriptive melodies on the animal kingdom. The ensemble played several encores in appreciation of the ovation they received.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

938

Festival Self-Sustaining Again This Year

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 20.—At the meeting of trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday, incomplete reports were submitted on the Festival concerts but from these incomplete reports it is believed the concerts will be self-sustaining for the third year in succession.

A number of recommendations regarding drainage of parking areas, parking, fencing and the building were referred to committees. The question of using the music shed for attractions other than the Festival was referred to committee from the Festival trustees and the Boston Symphony trustees.

168

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

[illegible] 1938

Ina Gerschefski Wins $300 Prize for Overture Played By New York Philharmonic At Silvermine Festival

BY MADELIN BARTLETT

Special to The Hartford Times

Silvermine, Norwalk—The second annual festival of music opened officially Thursday evening with Eugene Ormandy and the New York Philharmonic sharing the light with Old Newgate Prison.

Hartford's historical suburb came forward via the prize winning composition sponsored by the Silvermine Artists Guild which was won by Ina Gerschefski of Bridgeport, Graduate of the Yale school of music, whose overture, "Incident at Old Newgate," was played as a special feature of the program. The prize, $300, was offered for the best overture based on a romantic incident in New England history. Her husband, Edwin Gerschefski, won honorable mention, with his composition, "Save the Saugatuck."

The guild ground made an effective setting for the program, which was applauded enthusiastically by an estimated 5,300 persons from Connecticut and several other states. The seats were placed on the sloping lawn down to the lagoon, across which the orchestra was seated on a raised platform with a plywood back drop which curved over their heads. Even the stars agreed to co-operate with the air of festivity created by colored lanterns and huge lights.

The Newgate overture describes the incaration of the first prisoner in the copper mines. When his jailers visited him after several days neglect, they found he had disappeared, and later learned that a woman in the village had lowered a bucket through a concealed opening and hauled him to safety.

It proved a shrewd modern version of the horror of Newgate, in brief, descriptive phrases some times dissonant and at others, acid in their characterization, with the underlying theme of hope and ultimate reprieve melodically told.

Mrs. Alma Simpson Chandler, chairman of the music festival, presented the prize to the winner, and praised the excellence of her work. She also said Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra deserved a bouquet for preparing the score on 24-hour notice and agreeing to give it as the first performance at the opening concert.

The programmed works for the evening consisted of the familiar Leonore overture of Beethoven, Brahms Symphony No. 4 in E. Minor, introduction of Act III of Lohengrin, Wotan's Farewell and Magic fire music from Die Walkuere with David Blair McCloskey as baritone soloist, and introduction to Act III, Dance of The Apprentices and entrance of the Masters from Die Meistersinger, all by Wagner.

Comparison is unavoidable when two festivals follow so closely, but it is only fair to remember that the Silvermine festival is a very young sister of the Stockbridge series, and must have continued backing and enconragement to attain Boston Symphony's present status.

The most noticeable difference is the lack of accoustics at Silvermine, for despite the amplifying system, installed to offset the tonal disadvantages of an outdoor concert, success was only moderate, and Wagner came out best. An insistent symphony of katydids played their own antiphonal program throughout and often were more penetrating than the strings. An airplane during the Brahms symphony was no help to the orchestra, either.

The main difficulty seemed to be old story of lack of balance. Horns echoed and re-echoed, and basses drowned the violas more than once. Brahms, too, suffered by blurrings and a curious muffling of climaxes, probably caused by the "ceiling" of the stage. Despite the unavoidable handicaps, however, Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra gave a performance of the magnificent fourth that had many moments of sheer beauty.

As the program went on, the difficulties always presented by a guest conductor nad limited time for rehearsals resolved itself into a mutual smoothness which made the second half of the program, thanks partly to Wagner's instrumentation, thoroughly satisfying. Mr. Ormandy's conducting needs no introduction, to Hartford music lovers. It was a typical Ormandian evening except that the night air diminished the effect of his efforts.

Mr. McClosky had the doubtful benefit of a closely placed microphone so that his solo soared above the orchestra with power and considerable ease. His sonorous Wotan was movingly sung, disclosing a sure, rich voice, backed by intelligent handling of the music and the thought. It could hardly be called a perfect performance, inasmuch as the microphone gave his voice too much prominence, and made the orchestra no better than an off-stage accompaniment. Yet the mood was set, and maintained throughout and made the solo one of the evening's high lights.

John Vassos, president of the Silvermine Guild of Artists, welcomed the audience to this festival of the arts in a brief speech at the beginning of the program. Commenting on the other features of the four-day program, which include morning programs by the Roth Quartet, lectures by eminent speakers, and exhibits of painting and sculpture by noted artists, he pleaded that the artist be given a chance to bring peace into the very disturbed world of today.

The enthusiasm of the gala audience last night indicated full co-operation with his wish.

The second concert this evening will be conducted by Jose Iturbi.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 21 1938

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

(Times-Union Music Critic)

As the last notes of Brahms Second Symphony closed the fifth Berkshire Festival, the first to be held in the new "Music Shed" at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, it became increasingly apparent that the series next year might be extended to three weeks.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under its long time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts. They came from nearly every state in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups. Although the $80,000 "Music Shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale, alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of elaborations of the program, however, other than that by 1940 a school will be operated at Tanglewood in connection with the festival. The "Shed" is so arranged that an operatic stage can be added without alteration. and an operatic production or so may be included in the future.

During this festival, Dr. Koussevitzky explored the entire orchestral literature, from the cantatas by Bach to the gently acrid modernities of Serge Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite, which brought many laughs to the audience during its performance.

Meanwhile, with his labors finished until the orchestra begins its Boston season early in October, Dr. Koussevitzky looked forward to August 17 when he sails for a vacation abroad. Dr. Artur Rodzinky, conductor of the Cleveland orchestra, while technically a resident of Stockbridge, having purchased a large estate there in which to spend his holidays, was conspicuous by his absence. A call to Portland, Oregon in connection with orchestral duties prevented him from attending the series. Dr. Rodzinsky and the Cleveland orchestra will be heard in Albany on February 15 under the auspices of the Albany Civic Music association.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

[illegible]

THE DOUBLE BASS

Of the ten double basses used by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra Vaclav Jiskra, principal, is shown below. This instrument, largest of the strings, is not, as so many people call it, a bass viol. It came into general use with the appearance of the violin. Two types of double bass have been employed, one with three strings, another with four, the former now practically obsolete. Four of our own basses have five strings, the rest four. The music is written an octave higher than the sounds produced. As the strings are thicker than those of other strings, and their pitch lower—involving slower vibrations—the double bass does not lend itself to technical dexterity. Nevertheless, some brilliant music has been composed for it—the concertos of Dragonetti (Venice, 1763—London, 1846) and Bottesini (Crema, 1822—Parma, 1889). In the field today Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is an outstanding virtuoso.

Up to the time of Beethoven, the double bass in the orchestra had been given parts of extreme simplicity. This was due in a large measure to the poor technique of the players and that few composers had studied its possibilities. A new era began with Beethoven who made great demands upon the skill of performers.

Independent
Kansas City, Mo.

AUG 20 1938

* * *

The Berkshire Festival is on in Massachusetts. The new pavilion, made possible through gifts from twenty-eighth states, was dedicated formally on August first. With Dr. S. Koussewitzky, conductor, the Boston Symphony played two Chorales by Bach and the Saint Cecelia Society of Boston assisted in Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony." Other programs will feature excellent vocalists in excerpts from "Die Walkure" and"Siegfried" (Wagner). The Boston Symphony is permanently located on a dignified beautiful old estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his immortal "Tanglewood Tales." The Taconic Range is in the background of this Massachusetts setting. It is conceded by most of the renowned musicians that the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky stands first among American orchestras. And the group, a permanent feature of the Berkshire Festival, is fast lending great importance to this American summer music fest. In fact it has been stated in musical magazines lately that in the near future the Berkshire Festival will be the world mecca for summer music lovers, the glory of Salzburg and Bayreuth gradually fading out because of recent developments under German regime.

ST. LOUIS, MO
POST DISPAT

AUG 2

PLANS FOR AN

A blight of adverse p tions has fallen upon th tivals, which formerly a yond the seas. Salzbur shadow of its former s
Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists. Dr. Koussevitzky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will still be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will be not a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 23 1938

Conductor Back From Haiti

Arthur Fiedler, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned on the Santa Rosa of the Grace Line yesterday. He brought back from Haiti a voodoo drum, which he plans to use in a new symphony, "The Drums of Haiti," by William Grant Still, Negro composer.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1938

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will again play in Ann Arbor next season as part of the 1938-'39 Choral union series of concerts and recitals. Lawrence Tibbett, baritone, opens the course on Oct. 27. ¶ Other events are the Cleveland orchestra, Artur Rodzinski, conductor; José Iturbi, pianist; Kirsten Flagstad, soprano; Josef Hofmann, pianist; the Budapest university chorus, Viktor Vaszy, conductor; Yehudi Menuhin, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and the Roth quartet.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1938

Reports from Tanglewood, Mass., after the first concert of the Berkshire festival are full of praise for the acoustics of the newly constructed music shed. The festival, consisting of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, ended last Sunday.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 19 1938

Ina Gerschefski Wins $300 Prize for Overture Played By New York Philharmonic At Silvermine Festival

BY MADELIN BARTLETT

Special to The Hartford Times

Silvermine, Norwalk—The second annual festival of music opened officially Thursday evening with Eugene Ormandy and the New York Philharmonic sharing the light with Old Newgate Prison.

Hartford's historical suburb came forward via the prize winning composition sponsored by the Silvermine Artists Guild which was won by Ina Gerschefski of Bridgeport, Graduate of the Yale school of music, whose overture, "Incident at Old Newgate," was played as a special feature of the program. The prize, $300, was offered for the best overture based on a romantic incident in New England history. Her husband, Edwin Gerschefski, won honorable mention, with his composition, "Save the Saugatuck."

The guild ground made an effective setting for the program, which was applauded enthusiastically by an estimated 5,300 persons from Connecticut and several other states. The seats were placed on the sloping lawn down to the lagoon, across which the orchestra was seated on a raised platform with a plywood back drop which curved over their heads. Even the stars agreed to co-operate with the air of festivity created by colored lanterns and huge lights.

The Newgate overture describes the incaration of the first prisoner in the copper mines. When his jailers visited him after several days neglect, they found he had disappeared, and later learned that a woman in the village had lowered a bucket through a concealed opening and hauled him to safety.

It proved a shrewd modern version of the horror of Newgate, in brief, descriptive phrases some times dissonant and at others, acid in their characterization, with the underlying theme of hope and ultimate reprieve melodically told.

Mrs. Alma Simpson Chandler, chairman of the music festival, presented the prize to the winner, and praised the excellence of her work. She also said Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra deserved a bouquet for preparing the score on 24-hour notice and agreeing to give it as the first performance at the opening concert.

The programmed works for the evening consisted of the familiar Leonore overture of Beethoven, Brahms Symphony No. 4 in E. Minor, introduction of Act III of Lohengrin, Wotan's Farewell and Magic fire music from Die Walkuere with David Blair McCloskey as baritone soloist, and introduction to Act III, Dance of The Apprentices and entrance of the Masters from Die Meistersinger, all by Wagner.

Comparison is unavoidable when two festivals follow so closely, but it is only fair to remember that the Silvermine festival is a very young sister of the Stockbridge series, and must have continued backing and enconragement to attain Boston Symphony's present status.

The most noticeable difference is the lack of accoustics at Silvermine, for despite the amplifying system, installed to offset the tonal disadvantages of an outdoor concert, success was only moderate, and Wagner came out best. An insistent symphony of katydids played their own antiphonal program throughout and often were more penetrating than the strings. An airplane during the Brahms symphony was no help to the orchestra, either.

The main difficulty seemed to be old story of lack of balance. Horns echoed and re-echoed, and basses drowned the violas more than once. Brahms, too, suffered by blurrings and a curious muffling of climaxes, probably caused by the "ceiling" of the stage. Despite the unavoidable handicaps, however, Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra gave a performance of the magnificent fourth that had many moments of sheer beauty.

As the program went on, the difficulties always presented by a guest conductor nad limited time for rehearsals resolved itself into a mutual smoothness which made the second half of the program, thanks partly to Wagner's instrumentation, thoroughly satisfying. Mr. Ormandy's conducting needs no introduction, to Hartford music lovers. It was a typical Ormandian evening except that the night air diminished the effect of his efforts.

Mr. McClosky had the doubtful benefit of a closely placed microphone so that his solo soared above the orchestra with power and considerable ease. His sonorous Wotan was movingly sung, disclosing a sure, rich voice, backed by intelligent handling of the music and the thought. It could hardly be called a perfect performance, inasmuch as the microphone gave his voice too much prominence, and made the orchestra no better than an off-stage accompaniment. Yet the mood was set, and maintained throughout and made the solo one of the evening's high lights.

John Vassos, president of the Silvermine Guild of Artists, welcomed the audience to this festival of the arts in a brief speech at the beginning of the program. Commenting on the other features of the four-day program, which include morning programs by the Roth Quartet, lectures by eminent speakers, and exhibits of painting and sculpture by noted artists, he pleaded that the artist be given a chance to bring peace into the very disturbed world of today.

The enthusiasm of the gala audience last night indicated full co-operation with his wish.

The second concert this evening will be conducted by Jose Iturbi.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 21 1938

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

(Times-Union Music Critic)

As the last notes of Brahms Second Symphony closed the fifth Berkshire Festival, the first to be held in the new "Music Shed" at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, it became increasingly apparent that the series next year might be extended to three weeks.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under its long time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts. They came from nearly every state in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups. Although the $80,000 "Music Shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale, alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of

---

EXPLANATION

columnist felt run down, and lo
the result of too much night life.
addition, the columnist tottered int

complained, "I don't feel well. Th
ly wrong with me. I tire easily, I your pulse," interrupted the doctor over the columnist's wrist. Se

the columnist sat erect.
e, doc," he protested. "That's no
ng. You have your hand on my

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

[illegible]

THE DOUBLE BASS

Of the ten double basses used by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra Vaclav Jiskra, principal, is shown below. This instrument, largest of the strings, is not, as so many people call it, a bass viol. It came into general use with the appearance of the violin. Two types of double bass have been employed, one with three strings, another with four, the former now practically obsolete. Four of our own basses have five strings, the rest four. The music is written an octave higher than the sounds produced. As the strings are thicker than those of other strings, and their pitch lower—involving slower vibrations—the double bass does not lend itself to technical dexterity. Nevertheless, some brilliant music has been composed for it—the concertos of Dragonetti (Venice, 1763—London, 1846) and Bottesini (Crema, 1822—Parma, 1889). In the field today Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is an outstanding virtuoso.

Up to the time of Beethoven, the double bass in the orchestra had been given parts of extreme simplicity. This was due in a large measure to the poor technique of the players and that few composers had studied its possibilities. A new era began with Beethoven who made great demands upon the skill of performers.

Independent
Kansas City Mo.

AUG 20 1938

The Berkshire Festival is on in Massachusetts. The new pavilion, made possible through gifts from twenty-eighth states, was dedicated formally on August first. With Dr. S. Koussewitzky, conductor, the Boston Symphony played two Chorales by Bach and the Saint Cecelia Society of Boston assisted in Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony." Other programs will feature excellent vocalists in excerpts from "Die Walkure" and"Siegfried" (Wagner). The Boston Symphony is permanently located on a dignified beautiful old estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his immortal "Tanglewood Tales." The Taconic Range is in the background of this Massachusetts setting. It is conceded by most of the renowned musicians that the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky stands first among American orchestras. And the group, a permanent feature of the Berkshire Festival, is fast lending great importance to this American summer music fest. In fact it has been stated in musical magazines lately that in the near future the Berkshire Festival will be the world mecca for summer music lovers, the glory of Salzburg and Bayreuth gradually fading out because of recent developments under German regime.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 23 1938

Conductor Back From Haiti

Arthur Fiedler, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned on the Santa Rosa of the Grace Line yesterday. He brought back from Haiti a voodoo drum, which he plans to use in a new symphony, "The Drums of Haiti," by William Grant Still, Negro composer.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 20 1938

PLANS FOR AN AMERICAN SALZBURG.

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists. Dr. Koussevitzky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will still be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will be not a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1938

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will again play in Ann Arbor next season as part of the 1938-'39 Choral union series of concerts and recitals. Lawrence Tibbett, baritone, opens the course on Oct. 27. Other events are the Cleveland orchestra, Artur Rodzinski, conductor; José Iturbi, pianist; Kirsten Flagstad, soprano; Josef Hofmann, pianist; the Budapest university chorus, Viktor Vaszy, conductor; Yehudi Menuhin, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and the Roth quartet.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1938

Reports from Tanglewood, Mass., after the first concert of the Berkshire festival are full of praise for the acoustics of the newly constructed music shed. The festival, consisting of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, ended last Sunday.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 19 1938

Ina Gerschefski Wins $300 Prize for Overture Played By New York Philharmonic At Silvermine Festival

BY MADELIN BARTLETT

Special to The Hartford Times

Silvermine, Norwalk—The second annual festival of music opened officially Thursday evening with Eugene Ormandy and the New York Philharmonic sharing the light with Old Newgate Prison.

Hartford's historical suburb came forward via the prize winning composition sponsored by the Silvermine Artists Guild which was won by Ina Gerschefski of Bridgeport, Graduate of the Yale school of music, whose overture, "Incident at Old Newgate," was played as a special feature of the program. The prize, $300, was offered for the best overture based on a romantic incident in New England history. Her husband, Edwin Gerschefski, won honorable mention, with his composition, "Save the Saugatuck."

The guild ground made an effective setting for the program, which was applauded enthusiastically by an estimated 5,300 persons from Connecticut and several other states. The seats were placed on the sloping lawn down to the lagoon, across which the orchestra was seated on a raised platform with a plywood back drop which curved over their heads. Even the stars agreed to co-operate with the air of festivity created by colored lanterns and huge lights.

The Newgate overture describes the incaration of the first prisoner in the copper mines. When his jailers visited him after several days neglect, they found he had disappeared, and later learned that a woman in the village had lowered a bucket through a concealed opening and hauled him to safety.

It proved a shrewd modern version of the horror of Newgate, in brief, descriptive phrases some times dissonant and at others, acid in their characterization, with the underlying theme of hope and ultimate reprieve melodically told.

Mrs. Alma Simpson Chandler, chairman of the music festival, presented the prize to the winner, and praised the excellence of her work. She also said Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra deserved a bouquet for preparing the score on 24-hour notice and agreeing to give it as the first performance at the opening concert.

The programmed works for the evening consisted of the familiar Leonore overture of Beethoven, Brahms Symphony No. 4 in E. Minor, introduction of Act III of Lohengrin, Wotan's Farewell and Magic fire music from Die Walkuere with David Blair McCloskey as baritone soloist, and introduction to Act III, Dance of The Apprentices and entrance of the Masters from Die Meistersinger, all by Wagner.

Comparison is unavoidable when two festivals follow so closely, but it is only fair to remember that the Silvermine festival is a very young sister of the Stockbridge series, and must have continued backing and encouragement to attain Boston Symphony's present status.

The most noticeable difference is the lack of accoustics at Silvermine, for despite the amplifying system, installed to offset the tonal disadvantages of an outdoor concert, success was only moderate, and Wagner came out best. An insistent symphony of katydids played their own antiphonal program throughout and often were more penetrating than the strings. An airplane during the Brahms symphony was no help to the orchestra, either.

The main difficulty seemed to be old story of lack of balance. Horns echoed and re-echoed, and basses drowned the violas more than once. Brahms, too, suffered by blurrings and a curious muffling of climaxes, probably caused by the "ceiling" of the stage. Despite the unavoidable handicaps, however, Mr. Ormandy and the orchestra gave a performance of the magnificent fourth that had many moments of sheer beauty.

As the program went on, the difficulties always presented by a guest conductor nad limited time for rehearsals resolved itself into a mutual smoothness which made the second half of the program, thanks partly to Wagner's instrumentation, thoroughly satisfying. Mr. Ormandy's conducting needs no introduction, to Hartford music lovers. It was a typical Ormandian evening except that the night air diminished the effect of his efforts.

Mr. McClosky had the doubtful benefit of a closely placed microphone so that his solo soared above the orchestra with power and considerable ease. His sonorous Wotan was movingly sung, disclosing a sure, rich voice, backed by intelligent handling of the music and the thought. It could hardly be called a perfect performance, inasmuch as the microphone gave his voice too much prominence, and made the orchestra no better than an off-stage accompaniment. Yet the mood was set, and maintained throughout and made the solo one of the evening's high lights.

John Vassos, president of the Silvermine Guild of Artists, welcomed the audience to this festival of the arts in a brief speech at the beginning of the program. Commenting on the other features of the four-day program, which include morning programs by the Roth Quartet, lectures by eminent speakers, and exhibits of painting and sculpture by noted artists, he pleaded that the artist be given a chance to bring peace into the very disturbed world of today.

The enthusiasm of the gala audience last night indicated full co-operation with his wish.

The second concert this evening will be conducted by Jose Iturbi.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 21 1938

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

(Times-Union Music Critic)

As the last notes of Brahms Second Symphony closed the fifth Berkshire Festival, the first to be held in the new "Music Shed" at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, it became increasingly apparent that the series next year might be extended to three weeks.

Thirty-eight thousand people heard the Boston Symphony orchestra under its long time conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in the six concerts. They came from nearly every state in the Union, many staying for the six concerts, divided into two weeks and groups. Although the $80,000 "Music Shed" was met by gifts and is not charged against the "take" of the festival, ticket sale, alone made the concerts self sustaining and justified expansion next summer. No announcement has been made of

---

EXPLANATION

columnist felt run down, and lo
the result of too much night life.
ndition, the columnist tottered int

complained, "I don't feel well. Th
ly wrong with me. I tire easily. I

our pulse," interrupted the doctor
over the columnist's wrist. Se
the columnist sat erect.
e, doc," he protested. "That's no
ng. You have your hand on my

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

AUG 20 1938

THE DOUBLE BASS

Of the ten double basses used by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra Vaclav Jiskra, principal, is shown below. This instrument, largest of the strings, is not, as so many people call it, a bass viol. It came into general use with the appearance of the violin. Two types of double bass have been employed, one with three strings, another with four, the former now practically obsolete. Four of our own basses have five strings, the rest four. The music is written an octave higher than the sounds produced. As the strings are thicker than those of other strings, and their pitch lower—involving slower vibrations—the double bass does not lend itself to technical dexterity. Nevertheless, some brilliant music has been composed for it—the concertos of Dragonetti (Venice, 1763—London, 1846) and Bottesini (Crema, 1822—Parma, 1889). In the field today Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is an outstanding virtuoso.

Up to the time of Beethoven, the double bass in the orchestra had been given parts of extreme simplicity. This was due in a large measure to the poor technique of the players and that few composers had studied its possibilities. A new era began with Beethoven who made great demands upon the skill of performers.

Independent
Kansas City Mo.

AUG 20 1938

The Berkshire Festival is on in Massachusetts. The new pavilion, made possible through gifts from twenty-eighth states, was dedicated formally on August first. With Dr. S. Koussewitzky, conductor, the Boston Symphony played two Chorales by Bach and the Saint Cecelia Society of Boston assisted in Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony." Other programs will feature excellent vocalists in excerpts from "Die Walkure" and "Siegfried" (Wagner). The Boston Symphony is permanently located on a dignified beautiful old estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his immortal "Tanglewood Tales." The Taconic Range is in the background of this Massachusetts setting. It is conceded by most of the renowned musicians that the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky stands first among American orchestras. And the group, a permanent feature of the Berkshire Festival, is fast lending great importance to this American summer music fest. In fact it has been stated in musical magazines lately that in the near future the Berkshire Festival will be the world mecca for summer music lovers, the glory of Salzburg and Bayreuth gradually fading out because of recent developments under German regime.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

AUG 20 1938

PLANS FOR AN AMERICAN SALZBURG.

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of [illegible] and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists. Dr. Koussevitzky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will still be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will be not a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 23 1938

Conductor Back From Haiti

Arthur Fiedler, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned on the Santa Rosa of the Grace Line yesterday. He brought back from Haiti a voodoo drum, which he plans to use in a new symphony, "The Drums of Haiti," by William Grant Still, Negro composer.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1938

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will again play in Ann Arbor next season as part of the 1938-'39 Choral union series of concerts and recitals. Lawrence Tibbett, baritone, opens the course on Oct. 27. Other events are the Cleveland orchestra, Artur Rodzinski, conductor; José Iturbi, pianist; Kirsten Flagstad, soprano; Josef Hofmann, pianist; the Budapest university chorus, Viktor Vaszy, conductor; Yehudi Menuhin, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and the Roth quartet.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 21 1938

Reports from Tanglewood, Mass., after the first concert of the Berkshire festival are full of praise for the acoustics of the newly constructed music shed. The festival, consisting of six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, ended last Sunday.

169

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

AUG 21 1938

Mrs. Herbruck Attends Festival; Miss Schwarz At Bennington School

BY VIRGINIA D. STURM

MRS. Ralph A. Herbruck, of Dayton, president of the Ohio Federation of Music clubs was a visitor at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass. The picture shows Mrs. Herbruck in the large "shed" which was built through the inspiration of Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The orchestra appears annually at Berkshire Festival, and the event has now become one of the mosts important music festivals in the world. With the ending of tourist travel to some European festivals, the opportunity for development has come to American festivals, and the attendance at the Berkshire Festival this summer proves that the finest music, one of the world's greatest orchestras and the attention of the country's leading musicians is the answer to the great festival idea.

Federal Music Project Orchestra

ALFRED HEIN, Director

March—Pozieres	Alex. Lithgow
Overture—Fest	Leutner
Selection—Rose Marie	Friml
Butterfly (Ballet)	Densmore
Jungle Dance	Rapee
INTERMISSION
March—U. S. A.	Reuben Haskin
(Mr. Haskin is the pianist of the orchestra)
Selection—Good Times	Hubbel
Hungary	Moskowski
Waltz—Gold and Silver	Lehar
Danse Venetienne	Ponchielli

* * *

Monday, Walnut Hills; Thursday, Oakwood stadium; Friday, Island Park. Time, 7:30 p. m.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Jeannette Vreeland and Paul Althouse singing the prominent solo parts, and the Boston Cecelia Society singing the choral portions, was the highlight of the festival.

Haydn, Sibelius, Debussy, Mozart, Brahms, Wagner, Beethoven Sixth, Tschaikowsky and Schumann were the composers whose works held the important place on the program for the Berkshire Festival.

The novelty of the programs was the presentation of "Lieut. Kije," by Prokofeiff. The composition is an orchestral piece, which sounds like descriptive music all the way through. Five movements which tell of the great events in the life of the lieutenant. For instance the "Birth of Kije," is the first movement. The second and so on are "Romance," "Kije's Marriage," "Troika" and the last is "The Burial of Kije."

The Boston Symphony orchestra made a recording of this affair for Victor, and in as much as Prokofieff is an extreme modernist, one may anticipate most anything!

The setting in the Berkshires is very lovely, and the musicians who gather there are representative of the country's finest as to performers and patrons.

The board meeting of the National Federation of Music clubs which is scheduled for Chicago, Sept. 7 to 10 has a program made up of sundry business sessions, a tea, a formal banquet and an opera performance, "The Brownings Go to Italy" by Eleanor Everett Freer.

Mrs. Herbruck is a member of the national board, and will attend the meetings. The headquarters are at the Medinah club.

THE following is a portion of a letter received from Josephine Schwarz who has been attending the festival of dancing at Bennington, Vt., and is so descriptive of the affair that it is well to pass it along to you.

The affair is the Fifth Bennington Festival of the Modern Dance and Martha Graham, the Humphrey dancers as well as the Hanya group and Charles Weidman were presented by the Bennington school.

Follows Miss Schwarz' letter (in part):

"An amazing experience and a beautiful one, this festival. After three splendid programs by the leading modern dancers of America one realizes fully that our country is the center of dancing in the world today. And of course that delights my soul. Those of us who are not in New York at the very heart of the dance world are grateful beyond words to the powers that be that make this festival each year, possible.

"Everyone of importance that is connected with the dance world is on the staff here and give classes during the six weeks of the summer school. The ultimate aim and final climax is the festival. Three nights of performances in which the four leading dance artists of America present the works that they have created during the course as part of the class work. It gives also people who would otherwise never have the opportunity to perform with or work under these people a chance to do so.

"The performances are given in the Bennington armory, an impossible place if it were not for the fact that it is transformed by excellent electrical equipment and ingenius stage setting. The very people who work both along those lines and those who do the costuming and musical compositions for the artists during the winter in New York are members of the faculty during the summer course and work for the festival as everyone does.

"The performances were thrilling. Aside from the concert groups of Humphrey, Weidman, Graham and Holmes, dancers from the school were chosen to work in the productions. Consequently the groups were enormous. Being very well trained and excellent dancers the group things were very exciting to watch.

"The most beautiful choreography and the most interesting experiments in combining the dance and the speaking and singing voice were performed. When I get home I shall tell you more about it all."

State President Visits Festival

MRS. RALPH A. HERBRUCK in the Music Shed at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

DUBUQUE, IA.
CATHOLIC TRIBUNE

AUG 23 1938

'Drums of Haiti' To Be Unique Symphony

NEW YORK.—(TP)—The assistant conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, Arthur Feidler, arrived in New York aboard the liner Santa Rosa today with the script for what he said would be a unique symphony production

The music is entitled "Drums of Haiti." Feidler said it would be played for Boston audiences next season. Feidler spent several months in Haiti studying Negro music and customs

---

COMMERCE, TEXAS
JOURNAL

AUG 24 1938

WORDS WIT UT MUSIC

By LOUIS

(Music Features & Ph Syndicate)

Only noted symphonic organization within our memory to show what it could do with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" is the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On a Saturday night a few years back, by way of celebrating the Fourth of July, the Boston band tore into the march. It was ten minutes of uncommon spine-tingling.

BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

AUG 21 1938

The World of Music

(By the United Press)

New York, Aug. 20.—(U.P.)—The makers of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Lenox, Mass., having succeeded in presenting two long week ends of superior music with the Boston symphony orchestra, and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, are entitled to rest on their laurels. Even so, however, they already are plotting ne wsources for next year.

Reaction of critics and audience to the six concerts, given for the first time this year in the new acoustic shell, was unanimous. The rolling hills of Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales," as the festival's sponsors claim, may become the Salzburg of America.

More than 19,000 attended the first series which was highlighted by Beethoven's Ninth symphony, with the Cecilia chorus of Boston assisting the orchestra. Koussevitsky also gave a truly inspired reading of Debussy's "La Mer," a performance which some critics said was the greatest of modern times.

Attendance records of the fifth of the annual festivals broke all previous marks. Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," with the composer at the piano, was another feature of the first series.

Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the designers of the "music shed," said that "the most optimistic" predictions of the designers had been fulfilled. He checked the reception of the concerts from all angles and reported that there was not a dead spot to be found.

Opera of Richard Wagner and the music of Henry Hadley, one of the founders of the festival, featured the second series.

Lotte Lehmann, Metropolitan Opera soprano who made an extended tour of England and the continent this summer, has returned to New York to begin a late summer tour of this country. Her first engagement is Aug. 16 at Colorado Springs, Colo. Her tour also includes Milwaukee, Santa Barbara, the Hollywood Bowl and other summer music centers.

Leo Slezak, famed Czech tenor of another day and well known to American audiences during the "golden age" of Caruso and Scotti, is visiting in the United States, his first trip here in 25 years.

He is expected to give one or two radio concerts, but the chief purpose of his visit is to see his son, Walter, the comedy star of the current Broadway musical, "I Married an Angel." The elder Slezak is best remembered at the Metropolitan for his "Otello."

The Budapest University Chorus, which made a goodwill tour of the United States last year with considerable artistic success, and the Yvonne Georgi Ballet will arrive in New York in January for a joint tour. It will be the first American appearance for the famous dancing troupe.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

AUG 21 1938

The Music World And Its People

New York, Aug. 20 (UP).—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., having succeeded in presenting two long weekends of superior music with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, are entitled to rest on their laurels. Even so, however, they already are plotting new courses for next year.

Reaction of critics and audience to the six concerts, given for the first time this year in the new acoustic shell, was unanimous. The rolling hills of Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales," as the Festival's sponsors claim, may become the Salzburg of America.

More than 19,000 attended the first series, which was highlighted by Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with the Cecilia Chorus of Boston assisting the orchestra. Koussevitsky also gave a truly inspired reading of Debussy's "La Mer," a performance which some critics said was the greatest of modern times.

Attendance records for the fifth of the annual festivals broke all previous marks. Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," with the composer at the piano, was another feature of the first series.

Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the designers of the "music shed," said that "the most optimistic" predictions of the designers had been fulfilled. He checked the reception of the concerts from all angles and reported that there was not a dead spot to be found.

Opera of Richard Wagner and the music of Henry Hadley, one of the founders of the Festival, featured the second series.

TRIBUNE
Salt Lake City Uta

AUG 21 1938

Berkshire Festival Success, Report S

NEW YORK (UP) — The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Lenox, Mass., having succeeded in presenting two long week ends of superior music with the Boston Symphony orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, are entitled to rest on their laurels. Even so, however, they already are plotting nev courses for next year.

Reaction of critics and audienc to the six concerts, given for th first time this year in the nev acoustic shell, was unanimous. Th rolling hills of Tanglewood, wher Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "Th House of the Seven Gables" an "Tanglewood Tales," as the festival's sponsors claim, may become th Salzburg of America.

More than 19,000 attended th first series, which was highlighte by Beethoven's Ninth symphony with the Cecilia chorus of Bostor assisting the orchestra. Koussevitsky also gave a truly inspired reading of Debussy's "La Mer," a performance which some critics said was the greatest of modern times.

Attendance records for the fifth of the annual festivals broke all previous marks. Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," with the composer at the piano, was another feature of the first series.

Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the designers of the "music shed," said that "the most optimistic" predictions of the designers had been fulfilled. He checked the reception of the concerts from all angles and reported that there was not a dead spot to be found.

Opera of Richard Wagner and the music of Henry Hadley, one of the founders of the festival, featur the second series.

ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 21 1938

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK (U.P.)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., having succeeded in presenting two long week-ends of superior music with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, are entitled to rest on their laurels. Even so, however, they already are potting new courses for next year.

Reaction of critics and audience to the six concerts, given for the first time this year in the new acoustic shell, was unanimous. The rolling hills of Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales," as the Festival's sponsors claim, may become the Salzburg of America.

More than 19,000 attended the first series which was highlighted by Beethoven's Ninth symphony, with the Cecilia Chorus of Boston assisting the orchestra. Koussevitsky also gave a truly inspired reading of Debussy's "La Mer," a performance which some critics said was the greatest of modern times.

Attendance records for the fifth of the annual festivals broke all previous marks. Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," with the composer at the piano, was another feature of the first series.

Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the designers of the "music shed," said that "the most optimistic" predictions of the designers had been fulfilled. He checked the reception of the concerts from all angles and reported that there was not a dead spot to be found.

Opera of Richard Wagner and the music of Henry Hadley, one of the founders of the Festival, featured the second series.

AKRON, O.
TIMES PRESS

AUG 21 1938

Notes On World Of Music

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Promised For Repetition Next Season

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—The mak-

ETC.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

AUG 21 1938

MUSIC NOTES HERE, ABROAD

(United Press)

New York, Aug. 20.—The mak-

ETC.

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

AUG 21 1938

Sponsors of Berkshire Festival Plan 'American Salzburg'

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—(UP)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Lenox, Mass., having succeeded in presenting two long week-ends of superior music with the Boston Symphony orchestra and its distinguished conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, are entitled to rest on their laurels. Even so, however, they already are plotting new courses for next year.

Reaction of critics and audience to the six concerts, given for the first time this year in the new acoustic shell, was unanimous. The rolling hills of Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales," as the festival's sponsors claim, may become the Salzburg of America.

More than 19,000 attended the first series which was highlighted by Beethoven's Ninth symphony, with the Cecilia chorus of Boston assisting the orchestra. Koussevitsky also gave a truly inspired reading of Debussy's "La Mer," a performance which some critics said was the greatest of modern times.

Attendance records for the fifth of the annual festivals broke all previous marks. Aaron Copeland's "Music for Theater," with the composer at the piano, was another feature of the first series.

Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the designers of the "music shed," said that "the most optimistic" predictions of the designers had been fulfilled. He checked the reception of the concerts from all angles and reported that there was not a dead spot to be found.

Opera of Richard Wagner and the music of Henry Hadley, one of the founders of the Festival, featured the second series.

CELINA, OHIO
DAILY STANDARD

AUG 20 1938

WORLD OF MUSIC

New York, (UP)—The makers of the

ETC.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

AUG 22 1938

Musical Murmurings

NEW YORK (U.P.)—The makers of

ETC.

NEW CASTLE, IND.
COURIER - TIMES

AUG 22 1938

The World of Music

NEW YORK (UP)—The makers of the

ETC.

COLUMBIA, PA.
NEWS

AUG 22 1938

NEW YORK, (UP). — The makers of the Berkshire Sympho-

ETC.

STATE COLLEGE, PA.
CENTRE TIMES

AUG 22 1938

THE MUSIC WORLD

NEW YORK—(UP)—The makers of the Berk-

MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

AUG 21 1938

The World Of Music

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (U.P.)—The makers of the Berkshire Sym-

COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE

AUG 22 1938

The World of Music

New York, Aug. 21—(UP)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic

OSHKOSH, WIS.
NORTHWESTERN

AUG 20 1938

The World of Music

New York—(U.P.)—The makers of

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

AUG 20 1938

The World of Music

New York, Aug, 20—(U.P.)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphon-

---

N. TONAWANDA, N. Y.
EVENING NEWS

AUG 20 1938

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK (UP)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphonic Fes-

HOLDENVILLE, OKLA.
NEWS

AUG 21 1938

The World of Music

NEW YORK, Aug. 20 (U.P.)—The makers of the Berkshire

WILMINGTON, CAL.
PRESS

AUG 22 1938

The World Of Music . .

By United Press

NEW YORK, Aug. 22.—(U.P.)—The makers of the Berkshire Symphon-

---

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 21 1938

America's Great Festival

THE BERKSHIRE Symphonic Festival is over. For many it replaced the Salzburg festival as a musical pilgrimage. In the six concerts on two successive weekends at "Tanglewood," memorial gift to the venture last year, in the heart of the beautiful Berkshire country, thirty-eight thousand men and women heard symphonic music, under conditions of unparallelled acoustic and festival facilities.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, immaculate at his last concert, last Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, was given a ten minute ovation at its close. Applause, calls of "bravo, bravo" recalled the famous Salzburg concerts familiar to so many of the patrons this year. Ten minutes is a long time to sustain such sign of approval and appreciation, and the dynamic conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had his men rise again and again to share with him the storm of applause and cheers. It was a wonderful program, and those who were under the great top of the music shed for this last concert of the year 1938 will remember it for years to come for its perfection in every respect. It was hot but not too hot, with the shed open on all sides, every seat a good one for music and comfort throughout the brilliant two-hour-long program. The 25 minute intermission will be one of the cherished traditions with its opportunity to stroll about, greet friends (if you can find them in that throng) and enjoy the grounds that surround the music shed.

It was perfect weather this year but in case of storms next season, good friends of the festival are making a note to do something immediately about that and other things to finish the building. With iron roll curtains against inclement weather, to cover, panel and paint the inside walls, to encase the steel columns, replace benches with chairs and put in more, permanently light parking fields and grounds, completing the stage and shell and doing some landscaping will please patrons. This will be done through the Boston Symphony office of the Berkshire Festival, but George Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee in Stockbridge, Lenox and Lee, says that the festival this year has sustained itself.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 22 1938

Rare Orchid Arrives

A rare white orchid with crimson and purple spots, believed to be a new species, and a voodoo drum from Haiti were brought to New York today aboard the Grace Liner Santa Rosa. The orchid is one of 6,000 plants brought from Colombia and Venezuela by Norman A. MacDonald, Jr., and Frank McKay, botanists of Nutley, N. J. The drum, brought in by Arthur Feidler, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be used in a new symphony, "The Drums of Haiti."

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

AUG 20 1938

The World Of Music

NEW YORK (U.P.)—The makers

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 2 1 1938

BARRING APPLAUSE

Practice of Forbidding the Audience to Express Approval Between Movements

By OLIN DOWNES

AT the last but one of the Boston Symphony performances at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival a situation arose which is frequent today at orchestral concerts, but nonetheless deplorable for that. We mean the ridiculous banning and absence of applause between the movements of symphonies.

This modern form of snobbery has gained widespread support in late seasons. A symphonic movement may be never so brilliant and exciting; it may come to an end with a finality that concludes a mood as well as a musical development in a most emphatic and unmistakable manner: the audience is NOT to applaud.

It is not to applaud, although it is perfectly clear that the movement has come to an end, with no indication, explicit or implicit, that the following movement may have relation to what has been heard, either in thematic substance or expressive intention. Therefore the conductor does not turn to bow. The audience rustles for a moment uncomfortably, twists about, cranes its collective neck, whispers, or what not, to fill in a gap and relieve a tension which is felt by everybody, and has no business to be there.

The musical hiatus would normally be filled by the applause. The audience would have had the opportunity to release the emotion and enthusiasm that the music engendered, which was precisely what the composer intended, and by which the performers as well as listeners would have benefited. Then, with the relief and the relaxation afforded by those normal processes, the listeners would have composed themselves anew and the orchestra addressed itself with renewed mind to its task. But no! This would not be the proper way for an audience highly educated in symphonies, and in dead earnest to absorb some more culture of the same sort, to behave.

* * *

The symphony was Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique." Its third movement is one of the wildest and most fantastical in the literature of the art. From the mysterious opening till the end the great and terrible march gathers momentum and power, until it concludes with the earth-shaking descent, with roaring brass and pounding drums, to the final chord in the low registers of the instruments.

On this particular occasion Dr. Koussevitzky was not able completely to stifle the applause. Few conductors can, in this place. Part of the audience broke loose, but almost as quickly subsided. The conductor made a gesture of command, paused and mopped his face, collected himself for a moment, then began the last movement of the symphony.

Now that movement is a dirge, slow, somber, elegiac, music of a momental resignation and despair. The dirge came to an end, dying away till the softest of pianissimos of basses and 'celli had faded into complete silence. No one wanted to applaud then, and no one should have. But it was the end of the symphony, therefore time to applaud. The audience, still under the spell of Tchaikovsky's matchless threnody, was silent for some seconds, then began to demonstrate.

The manner in which the applause gathered strength was no doubt satisfactory to the conductor. Some may have considered it an instance of the effect of his exceptional interpretive powers. But applause at the end of the "Symphonie pathétique" can constitute shallowness and vandalism, while applause after the march movement is the normal, sincere, unaffected response to the work. Why should a conductor thus get directly between the audience and the music, as if it were his music and not theirs, and his the responsibility of dictating an audience's response?

Let not these remarks be construed as a criticism of Dr. Koussevitzky's personal actions or motives toward his art. There is no more zealous interpreter or champion of music before the public. It is against the meretricious custom that protest is made. Today all the conductors do it—Toscanini, Stokowski, Klemperer, and the small fish as well as the leviathans of the baton likewise. But what nonsense!

How anti-musical it is! Snobism in excelsis! An unnatural and sterile exhibition in the name of high art! The movement that should arouse frantic excitement is hearkened to as if it were the funeral of a statesman, where every one should wear black and walk with muffled tread. The great dirge, one of the noblest and most poignant of lamentations, is thus vulgarized and desecrated where an audience, if it really meant what it did, would depart in silence, deep in thought.

On the other hand, there are symphonies which have musical as well as emotional connection between movements, where there is no pardon for applause. The pains Mendelssohn used at the end of the first movement of the violin concerto to prevent the interruption of applause by the sustained tone which connects it with the following movement is well known and observed by discriminating violinists.

It is an elementary device. Symphonists of the romantic or modern period go much farther. The cyclic symphonic form relates separate movements by recurrent themes; or it telescopes two movements into one, like Franck in the middle movement of his symphony in D minor; or it connects movements by musical bridgework.

* * *

There is a subtler connection than that between the slow movement and scherzo of Schumann's "Spring" symphony, which Dr. Koussevitzky performed at his last Berkshire concert. The first movement is brilliant and complete in itself. The slow movement ends otherwise. Its apparent conclusion comes with a half cadence, giving the intentional effect of incompleteness, as it ceases with the dominant chord of the key in which the next movement is to begin, suspended, as it were, in the air. This is one of the loveliest places in the symphony—the tender reverie, the unanswered question that finds its only possible completion in the square-toed vigor of the ensuing scherzo, which thus furnishes the real reply. At this point there is a pause, indicated by the composer in the score, which, by Dr. Koussevitzky, was fittingly observed. But we maintain that the composer's intention was not followed at all after the first movement, so gay, so buoyant and lyrical, and ablaze with the glory and the shouting trumpets of Spring. The last exuberant chord crashed from the orchestra. Again the audience broke out, but was even more quickly snubbed than at the previous Tchaikovsky performance. A warning gesture from the leader; a frightened relapse into silence, and more furtive whispering and glancing about till the violins took up the song of the slow movement. Both movements of the Schumann symphony were thus treated in the same undiscriminating manner, so that a measure of the delicate and intimate effect that Schumann wanted in the middle but not at the beginning of his score was lost, as well as a measure of the contrast of mood that he wished to emphasize.

It is not good. It does not speak well for the genuineness and thoughtfulness of many who profess to love music and desire to serve it. Does any one really think that Haydn, when he composed a symphony, for Esterházy or for Salomon in London, didn't intend his audience to applaud? Quite obviously he did. Quite obviously most of eighteenth and nineteenth century music was created with an eye, or a deep instinct, for time values and the reaction we call applause. Music is composed for people. People are not assembled merely to observe a musical ritual. But a conductor rules otherwise. So the audience behaves like the well-trained flunkey that it is in the interpreter's presence. But if Beethoven were there he might be dismayed. He might think that his music did not contain the freedom and the overflowing wine of life that he thought he had poured into its measures. And think of poor Mozart! He used to exult when he hit it off with an audience or a friend. He had not false pride. He liked to give people beauty and joy. How depressed that child of heaven would be, if he had the "Jupiter" symphony played and watched the careful, attentive, yet sepulchral behavior of those who listened. He would have said, "What have I done? I thought I had made some music. Are they mad, or have I no genius?"

There are situations where no applause should be permitted, and most conductors know what they are. But why should not a little common sense, a little choice, a little ordinarily good taste be substituted for the pretentious decorum with which it is ordained that all of us should behave, taking off not only our hat but our shoes in the Presence which seems to frighten us so much—that of Art.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES

AUG 2 1 1938

Reviewer's Notebook

Co-operation in music, art and literature is the aim of the new Department of Cultural Relations established by charter from the Department of State late in July. Dr. Ben M. Cherington is to direct it. With special effort toward Latin America, the department is counted upon to help bring national cultures and individuals into working harmony.

Eleanor Woodforde is endeavoring to bring about a local working harmony between artists with the formation of an American Artists Association. One concert in the Ebell Club last season started the ball rolling and the second program is now scheduled for September 21. There is to be a performance each month, with the performers chosen by audition. Miss Woodforde's address is 740 North Orlando street, Los Angeles.

Lysbeth LeFevre, violoncellist, was soloist with the Santa Barbara Federal Symphony, conducted by Warwick Evans. She played the Boccherini Concerto in B flat and the audience response was warmly approving.

Squire Coop sends programs from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival conducted by Koussevitzky in the new "Music Shed" at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills. The demand is evidently for orchestral music back there, for on the six programs there were no soloists.

Alec Templeton, the young blind pianist, now resident here, played the Rachmaninoff second concerto with the Chicago Symphony at Ravinia Park yesterday.

Bessie Fuhrer Erb, violinist and concert-master of the Woman's Symphony, is taking a year's leave from the orchestra to write a new method of violin study which she has used successfully the past twenty-five years in her teaching.

WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

AUG 2 1 1938

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

New York, Aug. 20 — (UP) — Concert agencies and managers in New York have decided jointly that hereafter the revenue from free tickets given to students, musicians and teachers shall go to the artist instead of to Uncle Sam.

Passes have been suspended, it was announced. Previously, especially for debuts and recitals by artists without a large public following, hundreds of free tickets were distributed to avoid having the artist face a comparatively empty house.

The recipients paid a federal tax amounting to 20 cents each on $2 orchestra seats. The artist got none of it. From now on, the same recipients will be offered good orchestra seats at 25 cents each and balcony seats at 15 cents.

No tax is payable on tickets at those prices, so that the money derived will go direct to the artist. A joint announcement of the managers said the system was tried out at a Town Hall recital in New York with gratifying results, and that an unnamed artist had a box office sale of about $200 on student tickets, which under the old pass system would have yielded him nothing.

Six concerts by Boston Symphony orchestra musicians were played for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which began August 4, at the beautiful 200-acre Tanglewood estate at Stockbridge, Mass.

With the orchestras appeared the Cecilia Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists. Concerts were given August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston symphony was conductor.

Since the concert series began in 1934, the festival has been evolving gradually into an institution—typically American — establishing its own traditions with realization that, to merit continued support of a discriminating public, artistic performance is of major importance.

Immediately after last year's series, the festival trustees enlisted the aid of its many friends and raised more than $80,000 within a few months for a music shed. Now the building is completed to the point called for by plans for this year. Eventual completion, including a permanent floor and stage, will come when more money is received.

Two years ago Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented Tanglewood, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived while in the Berkshires, to the Boston Symphony orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

THE SHED AT STOCKBRIDGE

Balt Sun
Aug 21/38

What is a shed? The authorities of the Berkshire festival have applied this lowly word to the magnificent structure where so many people have recently listened to the splendid thoughts of Beethoven and Brahms. Most of us use the word in connection with a small, shabby building, slightly larger than that which graced a respectable household in pre-plumbing days, where we keep our own or conceal the neighbor's lawnmower.

A shed is a dusty, disreputable shack crowded with agricultural and other inanimate objects. A human being might live in a shack; but he would not stay for long, far less listen to two hours of music, in a shed.

Yet is there not something attractively modest about applying the term shed to the functional glory of the Berkshire festival's auditorium? An English columnist has congratulated us for sticking to the word fair, instead of exhibition, in connection with New York's widely publicized jamboree next year. Webster, with poetic alliteration, says that a shed is "a structure for shelter or storage, as for wagons or wood."

Yes, there is a certain Yankee honesty and pride about calling so handsome a building for so noble a purpose a shed.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 2 3 1938

IN TANGLEWOOD SHED

(Time)

Although summer music in the United States has increased in quantity and quality in recent years, until last week no United States orchestra has had both a dignified summer home of its own and a socialite summer audience. Then, in the Berkshire hills near Stockbridge, Mass., into a large, new pavilion, nearly 6000 people trooped for the opening of the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival. Seated, the audience beamed at the Boston Symphony. The Boston Symphony, pleased with its new summer home—called, with Brahmin deprecation, a music shed—beamed back. Speeches were made by Conductor Sergei Koussevitzky, the orchestra's president, Bentley Wirt Warren, Festival President Gertrude Robinson Smith. The audience, accompanied by the orchestra, sang the Luther-Bach chorale, Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott. Thus was dedicated the permanent home of the latest candidate for an "American Salzburg."

Tanglewood, a large Stockbridge estate where Author Nathaniel Hawthorne used to live, was deeded by its owners to the Boston Symphony two years ago. After a concert was spectacularly rained out of a large tent last summer, energetic President Smith started a drive to raise $100,000 for permanent quarters. Glad to get $80,000, the festival committee commissioned Finnish Architect Eliel Saarinen to design a shed—a fan-shaped, open sided building covering an acre and a half, its roof supported by three interior pillars and a colonnade. The shed's acoustics are so excellent that an orchestra pianissimo can be heard by an overflow audience outside the colonnade. Last week, during the first of this season's six concerts, Miss Smith launched a campaign for $58,000 to curtain the sides of the shed with iron (for storms), to complete the stage, etc. Future Tanglewood projects: Opera, a music school.

WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS - SUN

AUG 27 1938

Miscellaneous Notes and News Of Music World

Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass. Features Boston Orchestra.

New York (U.P.)—The makers of

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 22 1938

Sylvia Sidney Arrives Today

Bride Returns for Film While Adler Remains in London's 'Golden Boy.'

Sylvia Sidney, screen star and recent bride, returns to native shores today aboard the Queen Mary, following a brief sojourn in London, during which she married Luther Adler, who is playing the title role in "Golden Boy" there. Adler is expected back shortly, and his wife's return without him is due to the fact that she soon has to start work on the screen version of "...one third of a nation..."

Also on the Queen Mary are Erskine Caldwell, the dramatist and novelist, who is co-author of "Tobacco Road," and the well-known photographer, Margaret Bourke-White. The pair have been making a series of photographs in Czechoslovakia for the last two months.

Theodore Dreiser, the novelist, also gets in today, his ship being the Laconia, while the Santa Rose brings in Arthur Feidler, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been studying native music in Haiti.

172

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
AUG 21 1938

RECORDS IN REVIEW

Toscanini Conducts First Recording by NBC Orchestra of Haydn Symphony — Bayreuth Festival Group Gives 'Parsifal' Under Karl Muck.

By Roderick O. Williams

THE infant prodigy of symphony orchestras, NBC's distinguished ensemble, thrilled a million music lovers who listened to last season's broadcasts. Among the highspots of the series was a concert which included a stunning performance of the Haydn G Major Symphony No. 13. Victor has put that performance definitely on the record in a worthy album released this month. Musical savants may say what they will in deprecating the idolization of Toscanini by his multiude of followers.

Recent matriculation at the Berkshire Festival caused your correspondent to be impressed by a similar cult among the Brahmins of Back Bay for their worthy Koussevitzky. Philadelphians are no less obsessed with the qualities of "Fire Bird" Stokowski. It is true that these two Russians excel in certain types of music and it is no exaggeration to state that in the classics, where innate musical taste and sheer perfection of detail are the indispensable handmaidens to a Grade-A performance, Toscanini stands alone, unchallenged.

It is difficult to read into this early work of Haydn any emotion save that of serene happiness; any significance other than its entertainment value. It is simply pure music and as such the quality of its performance lies in direct proportion to the technical perfection of its execution. This is not meant to infer that Toscanini is a mere mechanic. The qualities which make his interpretations of Wagner and Beethoven so justly famous stand him in good stead in his conception of this musical confection.

Most outstanding feature of this performance is the remarkable dynamic control which the conductor achieves. So perfectly balanced are the sudden pianissimi and the shaded crescendi and decrescendi, that one finds it difficult to believe that Mr. Toscanini wields a baton and not a volume control button. The unusual but perfectly executed accents with which the Minuet are punctuated are extremely effective in projecting the awkward, peasant flavor of this movement. The marvellously wrought Largo, the acme of tasteful phrasing in this performance, is in direct contrast to the opening movement following the usual Adagio introduction and the Finale. Both of these are sprightly to a degree and combine the not always compatible features of refined delicacy and dashing exuberance.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 24 1938

It's This Way • • •

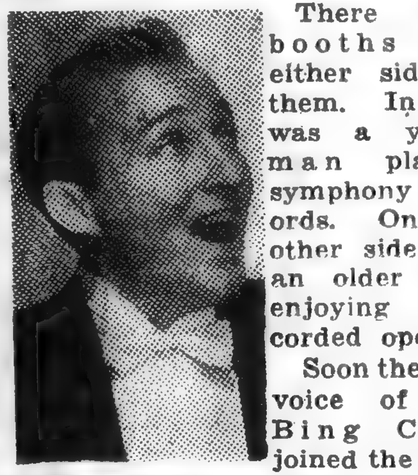
Opera, Symphony Lovers Fall In Musical Battle

By HOWARD C. HOSMER

WHAT happened in a Main Street music store the other day only goes to show that momentous struggles sometimes come to pass unseen by the hurrying throng, unnoticed by shoppers and business men on their way to lunch.

For a battle of great musical import was fought and only a few people live to tell the tale.

It seems that two young ladies bent on buying records for another young lady took a lot of recordings into a booth to play. It was a task toward which they leaned with some pleasure. Not only that, they considered it a duty.



Bing Crosby

There were booths on either side of them. In one was a young man playing symphony records. On the other side was an older man enjoying recorded opera.

Soon the solid voice of Mr. Bing Crosby joined the overtones of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and crashed indescribably against a background of "The Barber of Seville."

The young ladies have since admitted that the result was horrible. Being appreciative of both operatic and symphonic music, they found their feelings were torn three ways. They smarted under stormy looks given them on both sides. Yet they stuck doggedly to their duty, selecting Mr. Crosby's records for their absent friend.

The opera player gave up first, storming out of his booth and plumping himself into a chair, there to sit and bite his fingernails until the carnage was over. He sat through Mr. Tommy Dorsey and Mr. Benny Goodman and their instrumentalists. He grimaced like a man in great pain but hung on through a couple of numbers by a Negro musician named Fats Waller. He paled at the vocal calisthenics of Miss Mildred Bailey. Like a true soldier, he gritted his teeth, and let the enemy play itself out.

The symphony addict rose even more nobly to the occasion. He didn't play the waiting game, our observer reports, but turned up his phonograph and tried to drown out Mr. Goodman, an heroic attempt, even with the Boston Symphony behind him.

Finally, he, too, fell. Left alone and triumphant in the field, the young ladies made their selection, bought the records and sneaked out.

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
AUG 25 1938

MER IN THE EAST.

I[illegible] Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kel[illegible]ternationally noted musici[illegible] and members of the Cincinn[illegible] Conservatory of Music faculty, are spending a delightful summer in the East. During the past weeks they have been enjoying the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

Their hostess, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, is a member of the Board of Trustees of this charming music festival which offered six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, and Olin Downes, eminent music critic of the New York Times, in a series of four lectures.

From Tanglewood the Stillman Kelleys are going on to Maine for a brief visit and from there they will journey to Chicago for a meeting of the board of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Among those present at this convention will be Mrs. R. A. Herbruck of Dayton, President of the Ohio Federation of Music Clubs, and Miss Etelka Evans of Cincinnati, who is National Junior Counselor for the federation.

SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

Symphonic Festival Is Produced In Stockbridge

By ALICE HUGHES

(Copyright, 1938, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—My second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to this pore old body and peace to this troubled soul, for it took me to Stockbridge, Mass., for the second half of the symphonic festival for 1938. So cool was it in those beautiful and everlasting Berkshire Hills that we slept beneath blankets at night, and the sweet sounds emitted by the Boston Symphony sounded sweeter and grander than ever in the new $80,000 "shed"—oh, these modest Brahmins!—just built on the beautiful estate called "Tanglewood," where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, labored and looked at one of the most beautiful views in this land.

It's mature and gracious land, up there at the western end of Massachusetts, with its green hills, its blue lakes and murmuring streams. Nearly 6,000 people heard the music nightly—mostly swells from the big estates, music-mad pilgrims from everywhere, and just people like me. Dear old ladies, wearing their wardrobes of the eighties, are literally wheeled in to hear the concerts. Never was there a finer setting for Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," or Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphonies, both of which I heard. To my great regret I missed the deathless Ninth.

One of my brothers-in-law, Pierre Mayer, is a valued fiddler with that almost worshipped band, and so rehearsals and other perquisites were open to us. We sat in the second row at an all-Wagner program, which was like getting thumped over the head with a club, and which produced amusing sidelights. First, my Cornell sophomore niece, Barbara, slept through an hour and five minutes of the stormy "Siegfried" music, and at the finale of the "Die Walkuere" excerpts Maestro Koussevitzky shot out his left fist and came within two inches of popping tenor soloist Paul Althouse right on the nose. These trivial episodes helped lighten the chi-chi always attendant on deep-dish concerts.

* * *

GIRL ABOUT STOCKBRIDGE—This Boston orchestra is unique in our country. No organization is so lauded, or so regarded with an almost superstitious awe. Its conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky, is a formidable personage in his territory, respected even by those who do not precisely love him. Interestingly, a great power behind the band is his lady wife, a small, retiring person whose influence is incalculable. . . .

One of the Wagner soloists was blonde Anna Kaskas, pride of Hartford, Conn. (along with Katie Hepburn, of course). Anna is now a Metropolitan songbird, and certainly has one of the loveliest, richest mezzo-sopranos to come along in years. . . .

Symphony rehearsals are much more fun than the actual concerts, with the boys wearing what they choose and Koussy behaving less like a conductor than a college cheer-leader, whooping on the lads in several languages, including growls and roars. These are a sort of musical Esperanto. . . .

There is much gossip before the rehearsal and during the breathing spells—shop talk, family and professional gibble-gabble. One sunny morning the men were loitering outside the "shed" (which is open to the breezes on all sides) when Koussevitzky's valet turned up, toting the maestro's tweed cape and a load of scores. The violinist with whom I had been chatting noted his approach. "Ah," he said, "Papa comes!" and away he trotted with his fiddle, like a good little boy. . . .

The orchestra wives usually turn up at rehearsals. Some listen, and a good many knit. As Papa coaxed and whipped the boys through Beethoven, I felt like tacking a sign on the podium, which would read, simply, "110 Men at Work." For that's what they are doing—making great beauty on order. . . .

The finest looking woman in all the thousands at Stockbridge was, in my opinion, Mrs. George Mager, wife of the first trumpeter. Her gray hair is done in a close shingle, and she is very simple and gracious. And lovely.

* * *

In the Berkshires we stayed at the simple home of Mr. and Mrs. U. S. A. Houk. He's a retired traveling salesman who opens his house, like all the rest, to the pilgrims during August. My poor old spouse found great joy in rising at seven and breakfasting with the family, trading reminiscenses of Kansas City and St. Louis and Des Moines and other places both had touched in their various ramblings. He also enjoyed the five Houk cats, ranging from small, jittery tigers to a long, lean, black and white tom with the loudest, best-carrying voice in New England!

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

A Woman's New York

Echoes From The City Of The Seven Million

By Alice Hughes

ETC

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—My second headlong attack

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
AUG 25 1938

A Woman's New York

By ALICE HUGHES

ETC

New York, Aug. 24—My second headlong attack on New England

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
AUG 25 1938

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Aug. 24.
MY SECOND headlong attack on New England brought comfort to

ETC.

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 25 1938

Woman's New Yor

My second headlong attack on

ETC. like above

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

ALICE HUGHES

• "A Woman's New York"

Writer attends symphonies in Berkshire Hills . . . Conductor Koussevitzky is an interesting personality . . . The orchestra wives knit while husbands work.

Copyright, 1938, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—My second headlong attack on New England

ETC

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

Wheel-Chairs Take Ladies To Concerts

New England Offers Cool Summer Nights With Wagner Music

BY ALICE HUGHES.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—My second headlong attack on New England

ETC.

MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
AUG 25 1938

A WNG PA

My second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to this pore

ETC.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
AUG 26 1938

Symphonic Festival Big Success

Nearly 6,000 Music Lovers At Concerts Nightly

By ALICE HUGHES

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—My second headlong attack on New England

ETC.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
AUG 21 1938

RECORDS IN REVIEW

Toscanini Conducts First Recording by NBC Orchestra of Haydn Symphony — Bayreuth Festival Group Gives 'Parsifal' Under Karl Muck.

By Roderick O. Williams

THE infant prodigy of symphony orchestras, NBC's distinguished ensemble, thrilled a million music lovers who listened to last season's broadcasts. Among the highspots of the series was a concert which included a stunning performance of the Haydn G Major Symphony No. 13. Victor has put that performance definitely on the record in a worthy album released this month. Musical savants may say what they will in deprecating the idolization of Toscanini by his multitude of followers.

Recent matriculation at the Berkshire Festival caused your correspondent to be impressed by a similar cult among the Brahmins of Back Bay for their worthy Koussevitzky. Philadelphians are no less obsessed with the qualities of "Fire Bird" Stokowski. It is true that these two Russians excel in certain types of music and it is no exaggeration to state that in the classics, where innate musical taste and sheer perfection of detail are the indispensable handmaidens to a Grade-A performance, Toscanini stands alone, unchallenged.

It is difficult to read into this early work of Haydn any emotion save that of serene happiness; any significance other than its entertainment value. It is simply pure music and as such the quality of its performance lies in direct proportion to the technical perfection of its execution. This is not meant to infer that Toscanini is a mere mechanic. The qualities which make his interpretations of Wagner and Beethoven so justly famous stand him in good stead in his conception of this musical confection.

Most outstanding feature of this performance is the remarkable dynamic control which the conductor achieves. So perfectly balanced are the sudden pianissimi and the shaded crescendi and decrescendi, that one finds it difficult to believe that Mr. Toscanini wields a baton and not a volume control button. The unusual but perfectly executed accents with which the Minuet are punctuated are extremely effective in projecting the awkward, peasant flavor of this movement. The marvellously wrought Largo, the acme of tasteful phrasing in this performance, is in direct contrast to the opening movement following the usual Adagio introduction and the Finale. Both of these are sprightly to a degree and combine the not always compatible features of refined delicacy and dashing exuberance.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 24 1938

It's This Way . . .

Opera, Symphony Lovers Fall In Musical Battle

By HOWARD C. HOSMER

WHAT happened in a Main Street music store the other day only goes to show that momentous struggles sometimes come to pass unseen by the hurrying throng, unnoticed by shoppers and business men on their way to lunch.

For a battle of great musical import was fought and only a few people live to tell the tale.

It seems that two young ladies bent on buying records for another young lady took a lot of recordings into a booth to play. It was a task toward which they leaned with some pleasure. Not only that, they considered it a duty.

Bing Crosby

There were booths on either side of them. In one was a young man playing symphony records. On the other side was an older man enjoying recorded opera.

Soon the solid voice of Mr. Bing Crosby joined the overtones of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and crashed indescribably against a background of "The Barber of Seville."

The young ladies have since admitted that the result was horrible. Being appreciative of both operatic and symphonic music, they found their feelings were torn three ways. They smarted under stormy looks given them on both sides. Yet they stuck doggedly to their duty, selecting Mr. Crosby's records for their absent friend.

The opera player gave up first, storming out of his booth and plumping himself into a chair, there to sit and bite his fingernails until the carnage was over. He sat through Mr. Tommy Dorsey and Mr. Benny Goodman and their instrumentalists. He grimaced like a man in great pain but hung on through a couple of numbers by a Negro musician named Fats Waller. He paled at the vocal calisthenics of Miss Mildred Bailey. Like a true soldier, he gritted his teeth, and let the enemy play itself out.

The symphony addict rose even more nobly to the occasion. He didn't play the waiting game, our observer reports, but turned up his phonograph and tried to drown out Mr. Goodman, an heroic attempt, even with the Boston Symphony behind him.

Finally, he, too, fell. Left alone and triumphant in the field, the young ladies made their selection, bought the records and sneaked out.

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
AUG 25 1938

MER IN THE EAST.

I[illegible] Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kel[illegible]ternationally noted musici[illegible] and members of the Cinn[illegible] Conservatory of Music faculty, are spending a delightful summer in the East. During the past weeks they have been enjoying the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

Their hostess, Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller, is a member of the Board of Trustees of this charming music festival which offered six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, and Olin Downes, eminent music critic of the New York Times, in a series of four lectures.

From Tanglewood the Stillman Kelleys are going on to Maine for a brief visit and from there they will journey to Chicago for a meeting of the board of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Among those present at this convention will be Mrs. R. A. Herbruck of Dayton, President of the Ohio Federation of Music Clubs, and Miss Etelka Evans of Cincinnati, who is National Junior Counselor for the federation.

SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

Symphonic Festival Is Produced In Stockbridge

By ALICE HUGHES

(Copyright, 1938, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—My second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to this pore old body and peace to this troubled soul, for it took me to Stockbridge, Mass., for the second half of the symphonic festival for 1938. So cool was it in those beautiful and everlasting Berkshire Hills that we slept beneath blankets at night, and the sweet sounds emitted by the Boston Symphony sounded sweeter and grander than ever in the new $80,000 "shed"—oh, these modest Brahmins!—just built on the beautiful estate called "Tanglewood," where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, labored and looked at one of the most beautiful views in this land.

It's mature and gracious land, up there at the western end of Massachusetts, with its green hills, its blue lakes and murmuring streams. Nearly 6,000 people heard the music nightly—mostly swells from the big estates, music-mad pilgrims from everywhere, and just people like me. Dear old ladies, wearing their wardrobes of the eighties, are literally wheeled in to hear the concerts. Never was there a finer setting for Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," or Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphonies, both of which I heard. To my great regret I missed the deathless Ninth.

One of my brothers-in-law, Pierre Mayer, is a valued fiddler with that almost worshipped band, and so rehearsals and other perquisites were open to us. We sat in the second row at an all-Wagner program, which was like getting thumped over the head with a club, and which produced amusing sidelights. First, my Cornell sophomore niece, Barbara, slept through an hour and five minutes of the stormy "Siegfried" music, and at the finale of the "Die Walkuere" excerpts Maestro Koussevitzky shot out his left fist and came within two inches of popping tenor soloist Paul Althouse right on the nose. These trivial episodes helped lighten the chi-chi always attendant on deep-dish concerts.

* * *

GIRL ABOUT STOCKBRIDGE—This Boston orchestra is unique in our country. No organization is so lauded, or so regarded with an almost superstitious awe. Its conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky, is a formidable personage in his territory, respected even by those who do not precisely love him. Interestingly, a great power behind the band is his lady wife, a small, retiring person whose influence is incalculable. . . .

One of the Wagner soloists was blonde Anna Kaskas, pride of Hartford, Conn. (along with Katie Hepburn, of course). Anna is now a Metropolitan songbird, and certainly has one of the loveliest, richest mezzo-sopranos to come along in years. . . .

Symphony rehearsals are much more fun than the actual concerts, with the boys wearing what they choose and Koussy behaving less like a conductor than a college cheer-leader, whooping on the lads in several languages, including growls and roars. These are a sort of musical Esperanto. . . .

There is much gossip before the rehearsal and during the breathing spells—shop talk, family and professional gibble-gabble. One sunny morning the men were loitering outside the "shed" (which is open to the breezes on all sides) when Koussevitzky's valet turned up, toting the maestro's tweed cape and a load of scores. The violinist with whom I had been chatting noted his approach. "Ah," he said, "Papa comes!" and away he trotted with his fiddle, like a good little boy. . . .

The orchestra wives usually turn up at rehearsals. Some listen, and a good many knit. As Papa coaxed and whipped the boys through Beethoven, I felt like tacking a sign on the podium, which would read, simply, "110 Men at Work." For that's what they are doing—making great beauty on order. . . .

The finest looking woman in all the thousands at Stockbridge was, in my opinion, Mrs. George Mager, wife of the first trumpeter. Her gray hair is done in a close shingle, and she is very simple and gracious. And lovely.

* * *

In the Berkshires we stayed at the simple home of Mr. and Mrs. U. S. A. Houk. He's a retired traveling salesman who opens his house, like all the rest, to the pilgrims during August. My poor old spouse found great joy in rising at seven and breakfasting with the family, trading reminiscenses of Kansas City and St. Louis and Des Moines and other places both had touched in their various ramblings. He also enjoyed the five Houk cats, ranging from small, jittery tigers to a long, lean, black and white tom with the loudest, best-carrying voice in New England!

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

A Woman's New York

Echoes From The City Of The Seven Million

By Alice Hughes

ETC

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—My second headlong attack

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
AUG 25 1938

A Woman's New York

By ALICE HUGHES ETC

New York, Aug. 24—My second headlong attack on New England

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
AUG 25 1938

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Aug. 24.

MY SECOND headlong attack on New England brought comfort to

ETC.

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS
AUG 25 1938

Woman's New Yor

My second headlong attack on

ETC. like above

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

ALICE HUGHES

• "A Woman's New York"

Writer attends symphonies in Berkshire Hills . . . Conductor Koussevitzky is an interesting personality . . . The orchestra wives knit while husbands work.

Copyright, 1938, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—My second headlong attack on New England

Etc

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 25 1938

Wheel-Chairs Take Ladies To Concerts

New England Offers Cool Summer Nights With Wagner Music

BY ALICE HUGHES.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—My second headlong attack on New England

ETC.

MUNCIE, IND.
STAR
AUG 25 1938

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

My second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to this pore

ETC.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
AUG 26 1938

Symphonic Festival Big Success

Nearly 6,000 Music Lovers At Concerts Nightly

By ALICE HUGHES

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—My second headlong attack on New England

ETC.

173

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
EVENING TRIBUNE

AUG 25 1938

As a Woman Looks at It

By Alice Hughes

Music in The Berkshires

New York.

MY second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to this pore old body and peace to this troubled soul, for it took me to Stockbridge, Mass., for the second half of the symphonic festival for 1938. So cool was it in those beautiful and everlasting Berkshire hills that we slept beneath blankets at night, and the sweet sounds emitted by the Boston Symphony sounded sweeter and grander than ever in the new $80,000 "shed"—oh, these modest Brahmins!—just built on the beautiful estate called "Tanglewood," where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, labored and looked at one of the most beautiful views in this land.

It's mature and gracious land, up there at the western end of Massachusetts, with its green hills, its blue lakes and murmuring streams. Nearly 6,000 people heard the music nightly—mostly swells from the big estates, music-mad pilgrims from everywhere, and just people like me. Dear old ladies, wearing their wardrobes of the eighties, are literally wheeled in to hear the concerts. Never was there a finer setting for Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," or Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphonies, both of which I heard. To my great regret I missed the deathless Ninth.

One of my brothers-in-law, Pierre Mayer, is a valued fiddler with that almost worshipped band, and so rehearsals and other per perquisites were open to us. We sat in the second row at an all-Wagner program, which was like getting thumped over the head with a club, and which produced amusing sidelights. First, my Cornell sophomore niece, Barbara, slept through an hour and five minutes of the stormy "Siegfried" music, and at the finale of the "Die Walkuere" excerpts Maestro Koussevitzky shot out his left fist and came within two inches of popping tenor soloist Paul Althouse right on the nose. These trivial episodes helped lighten the chi-chi always attendant on deep-dish concerts.

Dr. Koussevitzky.

* * *

GIRL ABOUT STOCKBRIDGE—This Boston orchestra is unique in our country. No organization is so lauded, or so regarded with an almost super[redacted]ts conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky, is a formidable personage in his territory, respected even by those who do not precisely love him. Interestingly, a great power behind the band is his lady wife, a small, retiring person whose influence is incalculable....

One of the Wagner soloists was blonde Anna Kaskas, pride of Hartford, Conn. (along with Katie Hepburn, of course). Anna is now a Metropolitan songbird, and certainly has one of the loveliest, richest mezzo-sopranos to come along in years....

Symphony rehearsals are much more fun than the actual concerts, with the boys wearing what they choose and Koussy behaving less like a conductor than a college cheer-leader, whooping on the lads in several languages, including growls and roars. These are a sort of musical Esperanto....

There is much gossip before the rehearsal and during the breathing spells—shop talk, family and professional gibble-gabble. One sunny morning the men were loitering outside the "shed" (which is open to the breezes on all sides) when Koussevitzky's valet turned up, toting the maestro's tweed cape and a load of scores. The violinist with whom I had been chatting noted his approach. "Ah!" he said, "Papa comes!" and away he trotted with his fiddle, like a good little boy....

The orchestra wives usually turn up at rehearsals. Some listen, and a good many knit. As Papa coaxed and whipped the boys through Beethoven, I felt like tacking a sign on the podium, which would read, simply, "110 Men at Work." For that's what they are doing—making great beauty on order....

The finest looking woman in all the thousands at Stockbridge was, in my opinion, Mrs. George Mager, wife of the first trumpeter. Her gray hair is done in a close shingle, and she is very simple and gracious. And lovely.

* * *

IN the Berkshires we stayed at the simple home of Mr. and Mrs. U. S. A. Houk. He's a retired traveling salesman who opens his house, like all the rest, to the pilgrims during August. My poor old spouse found great joy in rising at seven and breakfasting with the family, trading reminiscences of Kansas City and St. Louis and Des Moines and other places both had touched in their various ramblings. He also enjoyed the five Houk cats, ranging from small, jittery tiger to a long, lean, black and white tom with the loudest, best-carryin voice in New England!

HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT

AUG 26 1938

CHATTER

By MARGARET BECKER KULP

THE SUMMER symphony season is over. Throughout the country summer concerts by symphony orchestras have already closed or will close this week. Each major orchestra began its summer season this year with an added incentive, for the question as to where the treasure-house of music, symphony, opera, chamber music, great voices and great instrumentalists will appear henceforth in a superb summer festival, has been paramount since Salzburg, in Austria, fell under Nazi rule.

Somewhere there will eventually be another Salzburg of the world, and whether or not the famous festival will remain in Europe, or be held in America, is the question. And, of course, America hopes to win the honors.

Music critics are venturing to guess just where an American "Salzburg" may find a center. A number of them are most favorable to Chautauqua, which has often been called the American Salzburg, and has been a great musical center for the last quarter century, and it is now making plans to develop extensively a summer musical festival under the direction of Dr. Arthur E. Bestor, president of the Chautauqua Institution.

This center, so close to Pennsylvania, will be popular with music lovers in this city and, in fact, all over the State, for many local residents spend a part af each season at this famous resort just to hear the concerts.

* * *

OR, to come closer to home, there is the summer symphony season of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Harrisburg's musical foster child, whose concerts are held in the delightful natural setting of Robin Hood Dell in Fairmount Park. While the Philadelphia organization does not have the old summer music tradition that Chautauqua has, nevertheless it is one of the top-ranking orchestras in the major symphonies of the United States, and it does produce an excellent summer concert series under outstanding conductors and with noted vocal and instrumental guest artists.

* * *

THE SAME thing may be said of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra just completing its twenty-first season of summer concerts at Lewisohn Stadium in New York City. This orchestra is also one of the first water, playing under famous conductors and with internationally famous guest artists. New York is also a mecca for music lovers from all over the world.

* * *

AND we must not forget the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood where the Boston Symphony Orchestra is building up one of the greatest symphonic summer seasons in America. This group has worked hard all summer long to perfect the setting for its outdoor concerts, and it bids fair to inherit the mantle which has slipped from the shoulders of Mozart's birthplace since the German regime in Austria will effectively end the annual old Salzburg summer music festival by banning Jews from participation in it.

CINCINNATI, O.
RADIO DIAL

AUG 26 1938

Symphonic Strains

BY CLINTON BROOKS

When the famous German philosopher, Nietzsche, turned his back on his former idol, Richard Wagner, for reasons more personal than poetic, he set up Bizet's "Carmen" as a model of what an opera should be. One phrase, the English critic Ernest Newman reminds us Nietzsche coined with regard to Bizet and music in general, "Music must be Mediterraneanized." What he meant was that music must get away from the foggy philosophizing of the North to be really effective.

Whatever he actually felt about Bizet personally, it is certain he understood Bizet's musical charm. Bizet, by the way, was an almost fanatical admirer of Wagner and helped popularize his music in France, where for many years the German composer was outlawed by intellectual and financially wealthy snobs. Bizet's own musical output was comparatively small. A serious throat trouble from which he suffered all his life contributed to an early death. When he died in June, 1875, he was only 37 years old. Had he lived, the world's musical vocabulary doubtless would have been enriched with many more famous operas besides "Carmen," and perhaps, too, a number of important orchestral and piano works.

Music lovers generally have only begun to learn, in fact, that Bizet was the composer of something else besides "Carmen." The Ballet Russe, for instance, recently revived an orchestrated version of Bizet's two-piano piece "Jeux d'Enfants" (Children's Games), with some rather exotic scenery by Prince A. Schervachidze and choreography by Leonide Massine. Several years ago, Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra premiered his First Symphony in C Major. The youthfully simple but musically attractive work has just been recorded on phonograph discs, and the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony, directed by Howard Barlow will give its radio premiere Sunday.

Few people have heard other Bizet operas than "Carmen." An oriental fantasy, "The Pearl Fishers," has been revived several times at the Metropolitan in New York—in 1896 for Emma Calve, most famous of Carmens, and just before the World War for Enrico Caruso. Symphony orchestras frequently include excerpts from music which he composed for Alphonse Daudet's drama "L'Arlesienne." That is virtually the sum total of the Bizet repertoire in the United States.

The composer was fancifully named Alexander Cesar Leopold Bizet by his parents—his father, a singing teacher, Francois Alexandre Delsarte. The fact the composer is usually called Georges Bizet, came from a nickname given him by his godfather.

Bizet was born in October 1838, in the midst of the colorful reign of France's "Citizen King," Louis Philippe. In the time when composers spent their time between studies at the Paris Conservatoire, performing in the salons of the nobility and the "nouveaux riches," and writing vaudeville sketches and operettas for the Boulevard theaters, Bizet was launched at the famous Bouffes Parisiennes theater by Jacques Offenbach, composer of "The Tales of Hoffmann.' The event was the performance of a prize opera written jointly with Lecoque, "Doctor Miracle." Certain musical critics were unsparing in their comments on this effort, principally because the operetta failed miserably. Fortunately for Bizet, however, he wrote a "lyric scene" that same year which won for him the Prix de Rome and gave him an opportunity for study in Italy. There he became familiar with the works of Mozart, Rossini, Cimarosa, and others.

Fortune never smiled devastatingly on Bizet during his lifetime. One opera which he wrote, the subject of which Rimsky-Korsakoff later put on the stage, "Ivan the Terrible," Bizet burned because it was so severely criticised. His "Pearl Fishers" only ran to eighteen performances. Another, "The Fair Maid of Perth" rated twenty-one productions. A third, "Djamileh," was withdrawn from the stage after ten hearings. The score of an opera bouffe, "Don Procopio," was lost for many years and not produced until 1906 at Monte Carlo, thirty one years after the composer was dead. It is said "Carmen" was such a failure at first that it hastened his death. The statement is not exactly true, for though a few critics were not lavish in its praise, it had fifty performances within eleven months after its composition. Following a few skirmishes in Germany recently, because it was thought Bizet was not altogether Aryan, music lovers proceeded to discard prejudices and restore "Carmen' to its original position near the top of their operatic preferences. The opera probably rates more performances throughout the world today, in Italy, France, Germany, England, and the United States, than any other.

Music lovers who have had some compunctions about the change in personnel at Salzburg festivals in Europe have discovered they could stay at home and hear music of equally high calibre. This week, the Columbia Broadcasting System will transport its listeners to Norwalk, Conn., for the second annual Silvermine Music Guild Festival. The "piece de resistance" will be Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony No. 9 in A Minor, with Eugene Ormandy, regular conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, directing the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, assisted by a notable group of soloists familiar to Cincinnatians. The performance should rival another Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky several weeks ago at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival near Stockbridge, Mass.

SHREVEPORT, LA.
JOURNAL

AUG 27 1938

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

My second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to

ETC. as above

Advocate
Chicago Ill

AUG 26 1938

Americanesque

CELIA ADLER (Jewish Art Theatre) was married the first time at fifteen ... CARL LAEMMLE is a Ben Brither ... MAESTRO SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY, Boston Symphony Director is a graduate of Harvard Law School ... Note to BILL KRUGLY: DR. NATHAN KRASS is a Zeta Beta Tau ... SO WHAT DEPARTMENT: We have in the clan, gynecologists ... anthropologists ... pathologists ... oto-rhino-laryngologists ... gastroenterologists ... neuropsychiatrists ... geophysicists ... roentgenologists ... ophthalmologists ... and the Research Department has now uncovered a Jewish Ichthyologist ... Some Stuff ...

BLUMEY ... (HAROLD I. BLUMENTHAL) ... formerly exec director at Temple Sholom is the new Menorah President ... that boy will bear watching ... he's going places. ...

173

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
EVENING TRIBUNE

AUG 25 1938

As a Woman Looks at It

By Alice Hughes

Music in The Berkshires

New York.

MY second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to this pore old ody and peace to this troubled soul, for it took me to Stockbridge, Mass., for the second half of the symphonic festival for 1938. So cool was it in those beautiful and everlasting Berkshire hills that we slept beneath blankets at night, and the sweet sounds emitted by the Boston Symphony sounded sweeter and grander than ever in the new $80,000 "shed"—oh, these modest Brahmins!—just built on the beautiful estate called "Tanglewood," where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, labored and looked at one of the most beautiful views in this land.

It's mature and gracious land, up there at the western end of Massachusetts, with its green hills, its blue lakes and murmuring streams. Nearly 6,000 people heard the music nightly—mostly swells from the big estates, music-mad pilgrims from everywhere, and just people like me. Dear old ladies, wearing their wardrobes of the eighties, are literally wheeled in to hear the concerts. Never was there a finer setting for Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," or Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphonies, both of which I heard. To my great regret I missed the deathless Ninth.

One of my brothers-in-law, Pierre Mayer, is a valued fiddler with that almost worshipped band, and so rehearsals and other per perquisites were open to us. We sat in the second row at an all-Wagner program, which was like getting thumped over the head with a club, and which produced amusing sidelights. First, my Cornell sophomore niece, Barbara, slept through an hour and five minutes of the stormy "Siegfried" music, and at the finale of the "Die Walkuere" excerpts Maestro Koussevitzky shot out his left fist and came within two inches of popping tenor soloist Paul Althouse right on the nose. These trivial episodes helped lighten the chi-chi always attendant on deep-dish concerts.

Dr. Koussevitzky.

* * *

GIRL ABOUT STOCKBRIDGE—This Boston orchestra is unique in our country. No organization is so lauded, or so regarded with an almost super[illegible]ts conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky, is a formidable personage in his territory, respected even by those who do not precisely love him. Interestingly, a great power behind the band is his lady wife, a small, retiring person whose influence is incalculable. . . .

One of the Wagner soloists was blonde Anna Kaskas, pride of Hartford, Conn. (along with Katie Hepburn, of course). Anna is now a Metropolitan songbird, and certainly has one of the loveliest, richest mezzo-sopranos to come along in years. . . .

Symphony rehearsals are much more fun than the actual concerts, with the boys wearing what they choose and Koussy behaving less like a conductor than a college cheer-leader, whooping on the lads in several languages, including growls and roars. These are a sort of musical Esperanto. . . .

There is much gossip before the rehearsal and during the breathing spells—shop talk, family and professional gibble-gabble. One sunny morning the men were loitering outside the "shed" (which is open to the breezes on all sides) when Koussevitzky's valet turned up, toting the maestro's tweed cape and a load of scores. The violinist with whom I had been chatting noted his approach. "Ah!" he said, "Papa comes!" and away he trotted with his fiddle, like a good little boy. . . .

The orchestra wives usually turn up at rehearsals. Some listen, and a good many knit. As Papa coaxed and whipped the boys through Beethoven, I felt like tacking a sign on the podium, which would read, simply, "110 Men at Work." For that's what they are doing—making great beauty on order. . . .

The finest looking woman in all the thousands at Stockbridge was, in my opinion, Mrs. George Mager, wife of the first trumpeter. Her gray hair is done in a close shingle, and she is very simple and gracious. And lovely.

* * *

IN the Berkshires we stayed at the simple home of Mr. and Mrs. U. S. A. Houk. He's a retired traveling salesman who opens his house, like all the rest, to the pilgrims during August. My poor old spouse found great joy in rising at seven and breakfasting with the family, trading reminiscences of Kansas City and St. Louis and Des Moines and other places both had touched in their various ramblings. He also enjoyed the five Houk cats, ranging from small, jittery tig[illegible] [illegible] lean, black and white tom with the loudest, best-carry[illegible] [illegible] in New England!

HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT
AUG 26 1938

CHATTER

By MARGARET BECKER KULP

THE SUMMER symphony season is over. Throughout the country summer concerts by symphony orchestras have already closed or will close this week. Each major orchestra began its summer season this year with an added incentive, for the question as to where the treasure-house of music, symphony, opera, chamber music, great voices and great instrumentalists will appear henceforth in a superb summer festival, has been paramount since Salzburg, in Austria, fell under Nazi rule.

Somewhere there will eventually be another Salzburg of the world, and whether or not the famous festival will remain in Europe, or be held in America, is the question. And, of course, America hopes to win the honors.

Music critics are venturing to guess just where an American "Salzburg" may find a center. A number of them are most favorable to Chautauqua, which has often been called the American Salzburg, and has been a great musical center for the last quarter century, and it is now making plans to develop extensively a summer musical festival under the direction of Dr. Arthur E. Bestor, president of the Chautauqua Institution.

This center, so close to Pennsylvania, will be popular with music lovers in this city and, in fact, all over the State, for many local residents spend a part af each season at this famous resort just to hear the concerts.

* * *

OR, to come closer to home, there is the summer symphony season of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Harrisburg's musical foster child, whose concerts are held in the delightful natural setting of Robin Hood Dell in Fairmount Park. While the Philadelphia organization does not have the old summer music tradition that Chautauqua has, nevertheless it is one of the top-ranking orchestras in the major symphonies of the United States, and it does produce an excellent summer concert series under outstanding conductors and with noted vocal and instrumental guest artists.

* * *

THE SAME thing may be said of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra just completing its twenty-first season of summer concerts at Lewisohn Stadium in New York City. This orchestra is also one of the first water, playing under famous conductors and with internationally famous guest artists. New York is also a mecca for music lovers from all over the world.

* * *

AND we must not forget the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood where the Boston Symphony Orchestra is building up one of the greatest symphonic summer seasons in America. This group has worked hard all summer long to perfect the setting for its outdoor concerts, and it bids fair to inherit the mantle which has slipped from the shoulders of Mozart's birthplace since the German regime in Austria will effectively end the annual old Salzburg summer music festival by banning Jews from participation in it.

CINCINNATI, O.
RADIO DIAL

AUG 26 1938

Symphonic Strains

BY CLINTON BROOKS

When the famous German philosopher, Nietzsche, turned his back on his former idol, Richard Wagner, for reasons more personal than poetic, he set up Bizet's "Carmen" as a model of what an opera should be. One phrase, the English critic Ernest Newman reminds us Nietzsche coined with regard to Bizet and music in general, "Music must be Mediterraneanized." What he meant was that music must get away from the foggy philosophizing of the North to be really effective.

Whatever he actually felt about Bizet personally, it is certain he understood Bizet's musical charm. Bizet, by the way, was an almost fanatical admirer of Wagner and helped popularize his music in France, where for many years the German composer was outlawed by intellectual and financially wealthy snobs. Bizet's own musical output was comparatively small. A serious throat trouble from which he suffered all his life contributed to an early death. When he died in June, 1875, he was only 37 years old. Had he lived, the world's musical vocabulary doubtless would have been enriched with many more famous operas besides "Carmen," and perhaps, too, a number of important orchestral and piano works.

Music lovers generally have only begun to learn, in fact, that Bizet was the composer of something else besides "Carmen." The Ballet Russe, for instance, recently revived an orchestrated version of Bizet's two-piano piece "Jeux d'Enfants" (Children's Games), with some rather exotic scenery by Prince A. Schervachidze and choreography by Leonide Massine. Several years ago, Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra premiered his First Symphony in C Major. The youthfully simple but musically attractive work has just been recorded on phonograph discs, and the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony, directed by Howard Barlow will give its radio premiere Sunday.

Few people have heard other Bizet operas than "Carmen." An oriental fantasy, "The Pearl Fishers," has been revived several times at the Metropolitan in New York—in 1896 for Emma Calve, most famous of Carmens, and just before the World War for Enrico Caruso. Symphony orchestras frequently include excerpts from music which he composed for Alphonse Daudet's drama "L'Arlesienne." That is virtually the sum total of the Bizet repertoire in the United States.

The composer was fancifully named Alexander Cesar Leopold Bizet by his parents—his father, a singing teacher, Francois Alexandre Delsarte. The fact the composer is usually called Georges Bizet, came from a nickname given him by his godfather.

Bizet was born in October 1838, in the midst of the colorful reign of France's "Citizen King," Louis Philippe. In the time when composers spent their time between studies at the Paris Conservatoire, performing in the salons of the nobility and the "nouveaux riches," and writing vaudeville sketches and operettas for the Boulevard theaters, Bizet was launched at the famous Bouffes Parisiennes theater by Jacques Offenbach, composer of "The Tales of Hoffmann." The event was the performance of a prize opera written jointly with Lecoque, "Doctor Miracle." Certain musical critics were unsparing in their comments on this effort, principally because the operetta failed miserably. Fortunately for Bizet, however, he wrote a "lyric scene" that same year which won for him the Prix de Rome and gave him an opportunity for study in Italy. There he became familiar with the works of Mozart, Rossini, Cimarosa, and others.

Fortune never smiled devastatingly on Bizet during his lifetime. One opera which he wrote, the subject of which Rimsky-Korsakoff later put on the stage, "Ivan the Terrible," Bizet burned because it was so severely criticised. His "Pearl Fishers" only ran to eighteen performances. Another, "The Fair Maid of Perth" rated twenty-one productions. A third, "Djamileh," was withdrawn from the stage after ten hearings. The score of an opera bouffe, "Don Procopio," was lost for many years and not produced until 1906 at Monte Carlo, thirty one years after the composer was dead. It is said "Carmen" was such a failure at first that it hastened his death. The statement is not exactly true, for though a few critics were not lavish in its praise, it had fifty performances within eleven months after its composition. Following a few skirmishes in Germany recently, because it was thought Bizet was not altogether Aryan, music lovers proceeded to discard prejudices and restore "Carmen' to its original position near the top of their operatic preferences. The opera probably rates more performances throughout the world today, in Italy, France, Germany, England, and the United States, than any other.

Music lovers who have had some compunctions about the change in personnel at Salzburg festivals in Europe have discovered they could stay at home and hear music of equally high calibre. This week, the Columbia Broadcasting System will transport its listeners to Norwalk, Conn., for the second annual Silvermine Music Guild Festival. The "piece de resistance" will be Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony No. 9 in A Minor, with Eugene Ormandy, regular conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, directing the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, assisted by a notable group of soloists familiar to Cincinnatians. The performance should rival another Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky several weeks ago at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

---

SHREVEPORT, LA.
JOURNAL

AUG 27 1938

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

My second headlong attack on New England brought comfort to

ETC. as above

Advocate
Chicago Ill

AUG 26 1938

Americanesque

CELIA ADLER (Jewish Art Theatre) was married the first time at fifteen . . . CARL LAEMMLE is a Ben Brither . . . MAESTRO SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY, Boston Symphony Director is a graduate of Harvard Law School . . . Note to BILL KRUGLY: DR. NATHAN KRASS is a Zeta Beta Tau . . . SO WHAT DEPARTMENT: We have in the clan, gynecologists . . . anthropologists . . . pathologists . . . oto-rhino-laryngologists . . . gastroenterologists . . . neuropsychiatrists . . . geophysicists . . . roentgenologists . . . ophthalmologists . . . and the Research Department has now uncovered a Jewish Ichthyologist . . . Some Stuff . . .

BLUMEY . . . (HAROLD I. BLUMENTHAL) . . . formerly exec director at Temple Sholom is the new Menorah President . . . that boy will bear watching . . . he's going places. . . .

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

AUG 27 1938

Orchestra Led By Toscanini Plays Haydn No. 13

PUT down on your "must" list, the Haydn Symphony No. 13 in G Major as recorded by the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra and Arturo Toscanini for RCA-Victor. These black discs pour out a precious fabric, revealing the essence of Haydn in his most richly creative moments.

Those effects for which Toscanini is best-known—sudden contrasts in dynamics, glowing color, passionate concentration on the inner message of the music—abound. But by no stretch of the imagination can they be described as the works of performers bent solely upon displaying virtuosity. This is no "fussy"—interpretation in which detail is sharpened to the exclusion of the soul's light. What Toscanini and the orchestra accomplish seems spontaneous and deeply felt.

The largo moment has a symmetrical loveliness of form, a melodic voluptuousness lingering long after the music has ceased. Man, here, is revealed in the image of his maker. He attains a god-like quality, summoning out of the void and darkness a glorious vision to uplift the weary and discouraged spirit.

* * *

ANOTHER masterpiece — the Prokofieff "Concerto No. 2 in G Minor," said to be one of the six greatest violin concertos—receives a dashing interpretation by Jascha Heifetz and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Besides faultless technique in the face of the greatest intricacies, Heifetz imbues his playing with fervor and insight. The sad despair of the first theme and the soaring song in the second, he richly voices.

The allegro assai movement has a barbaric tang. Plucked strings sound like the tinkle of bells on distant sledges, while the plaintive song of the violin flows on. The sinster rumble of the tympani as a background for the solo instrument strikes a highly original note. Stimulating, acrid music this is, strangely fascinating to listen to.

Bruno Walter and his "liquidated" Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra give a more or less satisfactory interpretation of Mozart's "Prague" Symphony in D Major (K.504). Virile, and richly imaginative readings of the Sibelius Symphony No. 4 in A Minor, the Legend for Orchestra (Lemminhainen Zieht Heimwarts) and "The Tempest," as played by the London Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, complete a rewarding budget of RCA-Victor records.—G. M.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 26 1938

HEAR! HEAR!

Sir Henry Wood, the eminent conductor, is a man after our own heart. He thinks that orchestra leaders should be heard and not seen. "If anyone says to me," says he, "'I've been to see a conductor' I reply, 'And what did you hear?'" Which, naturally, puts most listeners in a hole, because the average listener, like the average voter, hasn't much of an idea of what the struggle is all about.

Sir Henry has a scheme in mind. A corker. He'd like to be put behind a screen with five or six other conductors, each conductor to take a turn at leading the orchestra. He thinks that the critics, much less the audience, couldn't tell which was which. We're sure he's right.

But getting six of these temperamental fellows behind one screen might imperil the orchestra. We'd be content to screen just one at a time, even if that one were our own excellent Dr. Koussevitzky, because it is only by a [illegible] effort of will that we can keep from watching him in his more agonized appeals for help. And that, as Sir Henry says, spoils the music.

To be sure, a body can always close his eyes. But that also, we've noticed, has certain perils.

FERDE GROFE EXPRESSES A HOPE

Merit Still Supreme Need of American Composers

B. Post Aug. 28/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

"THAT forgotten man, the American composer," writes Ferde Grofe in a letter to Dr. Nikolai Sokoloff, national director of the Federal Music Project, applauding a forthcoming index of some 1600 American music-makers. "If the time comes," thus Mr. Grofe, "when American orchestra conductors, imported or native, quit the practice of interluding the infrequently heard compositions by Americans between the old and familiar works of Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky or Debussy, and thus give a fresh, new utterance half a Chinaman's chance, the whole cause of the American composer will be advanced by seven league strides."

* * * *

If the time ever comes when the American composer produces music with the universal appeal of that of the masters aforementioned, and of the others who make up the staple orchestral repertory, he will need neither special pleaders nor special consideration. What Mr. Grofe and other champions of the native product do not always consider is the obligation of the orchestral conductor to his public. That public primarily pays its money, not to further the cause of art or of any composer or group of composers, but to be entertained, using that word, of course, in its broadest sense.

Take the case of Dr. Koussevitzky who, in his first years in Boston, went far ahead of most of his colleagues in his zeal to give the contemporary composer, both American and European, a representative hearing. All went well, in spite of a deal of protest, oral and written, until the advent of what is still known as The Depression. Then the subscribers began to fall away to an alarming extent and the conductor had to modify his policy. Result: a few seasons in which the established composers had the field nearly to themselves and revivals were more plentiful than novelties.

* * * *

In the season just past, Dr. Koussevitzky, taking courage, played more new music than he had in some time and, happily, was more applauded than condemned for so doing. At that most of the new pieces proved of no great consequence. Such a work as Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto stood out conspicuously as one of the few which promised to have abiding interest.

The subsidized orchestras and other organizations of the Federal Music Project have done yeoman service for the American composer. And more power to them. Here there is little or no obligation toward a prejudiced and national paying public and obligation aplenty toward the country which makes possible their functioning.

Another faithful worker in the American musical vineyard is Dr. Howard Hanson of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester. During the past few seasons, with the aid of the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, he has given a hearing to 77 American composers many of them not previously known to fame. And now comes Howard Barlow, conductor for the Columbia Broadcasting Company, with his promise, already bearing fruit, to give a break to the John Does and Richard Roes.

* * * *

It will be recalled that Fabien Sevitzky, as conductor of the People's Symphony Orchestra of Boston, made a practice of playing one American composition at every concert, a policy he is now continuing in his present post of conductor of the Indianapolis Symphony. And yet those who had their weather eye on the box office receipts were not always enthusiastic over Mr. Sevitzky's programmes, believing that they did not cater sufficiently to the taste of his audience. The conductor's lot in this respect, as was suggested above, like that of the policeman in "The Pirates" "is not a happy one."

Mr. Grofe, to return to the letter which prompted this discussion, expresses himself in favor of all-American programmes. Yet Edward MacDowell, who had quite as much at stake as the composer of the "Mississipi Suite" and "Tabloid" always opposed such coddling, declaring that the American composer should take his chances with the rest.

Elsewhere Mr. Grofe, and with a long list of titles to support him, voices the cheering thought that the younger American composer does not confine himself to interpreting the machine age but finds much of his inspiration in the gentler and also the earlier phases of the American scene.

In conclusion Mr. Grofe waxes poetical: "It is no fantastic fancy this: When many of our sturdy schools and bridges and public buildings have passed with the weight of years, some of this music brought performance by government intervention in a relief emergency may still be played and sung by generations of Americans."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

AUG 28 1938

Mountain Climbing Makes Rendezvous Of Crawford Notch

Crawford House Is Mecca for Tourists, Out for Day of Golf or Hiking

Special to the Herald Tribune

CRAWFORD NOTCH, N. H., Aug. 27.—The Crawford House, besides having a throng of guests, is the daily objective for many tourists, who pass the day there and play golf or ascend Mount Willard over the new motor road. Children are brought to ascend the mountain on burros, a pack of which are available at Saco Lake. Picnic suppers there have attained great popularity since the summit was made more easily accessible.

The younger set at Crawford have turned to mountain climbing and are passing much time on the trails.

Parties ascend Elephant's Head daily, and Mount Avalon and Mount Webster offer good trails, while the old Crawford bridle path to the summit of Mount Washington, or the nearer climb to Mount Clinton, have attracted many this week. Mr. Edmund S. Childs took a party up Clinton on Sunday, and on Tuesday, a group motored to the Inn Unique in Crawford Notch, thence taking the Crawford Trail to Mount Crawford summit where a picnic luncheon was served.

Concert programs are given here daily by the Boston Symphony Orchestral Ensemble.

The autumn season at Crawford Notch will extend over October 1, and during the season's last three days, the annual conferences of educational opinion, attended by prominent college professors and educators. Important events of the coming month are the quarterly meeting of the New England Council, which will be held at the Crawford House on September 15, 16 and 17, with more than 100 members expected.

Mrs. Margaret Cushing and Miss Nell Todd, of Newburyport, are expected soon to visit Mrs. William Andros Barron at the Crawford House. Mr. and Mrs. William A. Barron jr., with Mr. William A. Barron 3d and Master Richard Barron, were greeted by many friends on their return here from Labrador, where they visited the Grenfell Mission this month. They passed the week end at Crawford's, returning Monday to their North Shore summer home at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

AUG 27 1938

Time has come to gie a bit giftie to the hostesses who have suffered our week-end company all summer. Poking around, I find such bits as aluminum playing cards for outdoors, a rubber flashlight with an unbreakable lens for the same, and a leather-bound photofolio, each page of which holds 28 snapshots. So if these won't do, let's just send the girls our love, thanks, and deep sympathy.

There is much gossip before the rehearsal and during the breathing spells—shop talk, family and professional gibble-gabble. One sunny morning the men were loitering outside the "shed" (which is open to the breezes on all sides) when Koussevitzky's valet turned up, toting the maestro's tweed cape and a load of scores. "Ah!" he said, "Papa comes!" and away he trotted with his fiddle, like a good little boy. . . .

(Copyright, 1938)

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 27 1938

* * *

THE auditorium which is used for the Berkshire Festival performances, is built on the historic farm where Hawthorne wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." It nestles beside a beautiful lake in the picturesque Berkshire hills between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. The four previous festivals have been held under canvas at Tanglewood farm but this year it was deeded to the Boston Symphony as a permanent site for an annual summer series. The new auditorium was built to accommodate more than 5,000 people.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN

AUG 28 1938

School Plans Follow Fete In Berkshires

BY DOROTHY DUNIWAY RYAN
Exclusive Dispatch to The Oregonian

NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (Special)—The great success of this season's fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival has permanently established this project as a summer music center for the United States.

Music lovers from all parts of the country attended the series of six concerts in which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The artistic importance of the festival is so widely acknowledged that plans are going forward for increasing the number of concerts next season, and for supplementing the project by a school or academy "devoted to the cultivation of the highest standards in the work of orchestral conductors, choral leaders and separate instrumentalists."

Arrangements for the school may be completed in time to hold an opening session in the summer of 1940, preceding the festival concerts. Enthusiastic interest already is being shown in the school by those who attended this summer's fetival and heard the plans as outlined by Bentley W. Warren, the president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. One of the immediate needs is for scholarships. If the directors of the festival project are as successful in this respect as in raising funds to carry on the festival, it should be safe to predict that in a few years young musicians of exceptional promise will find at Tanglewood an ideal place to carry on their studies in the summer.

Beauty of Setting Outstanding

The unusual beauty of the setting at Tanglewood enchanted the thousands who attended this season's festival. In contrast to last season's unfavorable weather, the concerts this year took place on auspiciously lovely summer nights, with soft, gentle breezes and clear skies. All reserved seats were sold in advance and only standing room was available at the opening of each concert. The audiences averaged about 6000.

The new building to protect orchestra and audience from sun and rain fulfills its purpose admirably, without detracting from the natural beauties of the surroundings. Except for the orchestra shell, the fan-shaped structure is open to the winds, thus preserving the illusion of an outdoor auditorium, and at the same time providing shelter from the sudden thunder storms which last year provided too-realistic a background for Wagner.

The building will lend itself readily to expansion, especially backstage. This is important in view of Dr. Koussevitzky's hope to present opera at the festival. The stage, as used now, is the same in size and shape as the one in Symphony hall, Boston.

The large and enthusiastic audiences which these concerts attracted this season are considered all the more remarkable in that the programs are presented without noted guest soloists, which seem to be the drawing card in metropolitan centers this summer.

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony opened the festival, and the programs throughout were of the superlatively high quality for which Dr. Koussevitzky is noted.

As the festival plan develops, it is hoped to present, in addition to symphonic concerts and operas, a series of important oratorios and ballets. The festival may be expanded later to include even the drama.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 28 1938

One of the programs of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the recent Berkshire festival was dedicated to the memory of the late Henry Hadley. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the American composer's "Angelus" on that occasion.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 28 1938

Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenoff, duo-pianists, will appear as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Oct. [illegible] and 25. They will play the Mozart concerto in E flat major.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES

AUG 28 1938

Record Review

Mozart's "Prague" Symphony No. 38 in D major is presented this month by Victor in album M-457. Bruno Walter conducts the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra in this favorite from the pen of Mozart. It is fortunate, indeed, that recordings have been made with Bruno Walter conducting, as the combination will not be duplicated in the near future.

Bruno Walter is noted as one of the greatest living interpreters of Mozart, and the Vienna Philharmonic also has a marked sympathy for the composer's works.

When Arthur Fiedler lets go with the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, the result is bound to please a popular audience. Fiedler has outdone himself in a single disc 4395 entitled "Old Times Night at the 'Pops.'" You will, doubtless, be able to recognize old favorites, including "Ta-Ra-Ra Boom-De-Ay," "The Bowery," "The Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "Daisy Bell," "Little Annie Rooney," "The Band Played On," "After the Ball," and "A Hot Time."

Seriously speaking, Arthur Fiedler turns his attention to a magnificent recording of Rossini's ever-popular "William Tell" Overture. While officially the recording is made by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, it is a matter of common knowledge that the organization is in reality the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the result is all that could be expected of the orchestra under the more august name. C. L. B.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES

AUG 28 1938

HOFMANN LAUDS HILSBERG PUPILS

Local Pedagogue Honored by Master

Ignace Hilsberg, concert pianist and teacher, has opened new studios on North Orange Grove Drive. For ten years a member of the faculty of the Juilliard Foundation, New York, he located in Hollywood about a year ago.

Hilsberg has appeared as soloist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, Klemperer conducting, and with the New York Philharmonic, Boston Symphony and Buffalo Symphony orchestras.

Josef Hofmann, while visiting this city, accepted two Hilsberg students as scholarship students at the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia. Subsequently he asked Mr. Hilsberg to help him select promising young local pianists as potential material for the Curtis Institute. "We recognize you as an outstanding authority in the field of music and in particular in pianism," he wrote.

175

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

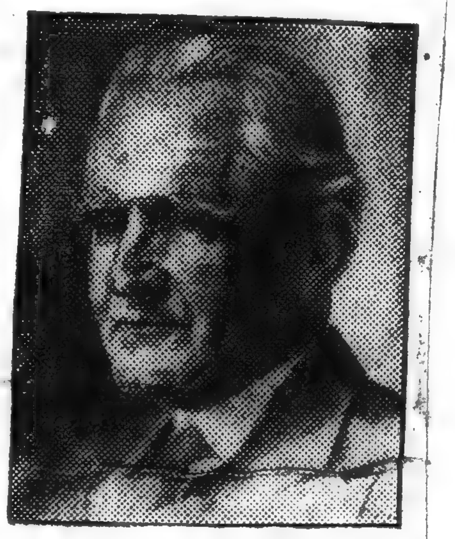
AUG 28 1938

Convention of Applause Is Illogical Procedure

Olin Downes Errs in His Dictum That a Conductor Has No Right to Impose Silence Between Movements of a Symphony.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

In his leading article last Sunday, Olin Downes, music critic for the New York Times, waxed indignant over "the ridiculous banning and absence of applause between the movements of symphonies" and placed the blame for "this modern form of snobbery" upon the conductor who interposes himself between the music and the audience, "as if it were his music and not theirs, and his the responsibility of dictating an audience's response." The direct cause of his discourse was the action of Sergei Kusevitzki in suppressing applause at the Berkshire Festival after the third movement of Chaikovski's B minor symphony and the first movement of Schumann's B flat major symphony.



RAY C. B. BROWN.

"The musical hiatus would normally be filled by applause," writes Mr. Downes. "The audience would have had the opportunity to release the emotion and enthusiasm that the music engendered, which was precisely what the composer intended, and by which the performers as well as listeners would have benefited. Then, with the relief and the relaxation afforded by those normal processes, the listeners would have composed themselves anew and the orchestra addressed itself with renewed mind to its task. But no! This would not be the proper way for an audience highly educated in symphonies, and in dead earnest to absorb some more culture of the same sort, to behave.

"It is not good. It does not speak well for the genuineness and thoughtfulness of many who profess to love music and desire to serve it. Does any one really think that Haydn, when he composed a symphony, for Esterhazy or for Salomon in London, didn't intend his audience to applaud? Quite obviously he did. Quite obviously most of eighteenth and nineteenth century music was created with an eye, or a deep instinct, for time values and the reaction we call applause. Music is composed for people. People are not assembled merely to observe a musical rite. But a conductor rules otherwise. So the audience behaves like the well-trained flunkey that it is in the interpreter's presence. But if Beethoven were there, he might be dismayed. He might think that his music did not contain the freedom and the overflowing wine of life that he thought he had poured into its measures."

* * * *

On this point Mr. Downes is as wrong as it is possible for a critic to be. He has indulged in some confused thinking; he has made unwarranted assumptions about the intentions of composers; he has not distinguished between the composer's and the interpreter's shares in applause, and he has not made the least examination of the phenomenon of applause itself. Had he questioned the ultimate reasonableness of applause, he would not have written his concluding sentences: "There are situations where no applause should be permitted, and most conductors know what they are. But why should not a little common sense, a little choice, a little ordinarily good taste be substituted for the pretentious decorum with which it is ordained that all of us should behave, taking off not only our hat, but our shoes in the presence which seems to frighten us so much—that of Art."

Applause in the concert hall is one of those habitual human actions which we take for granted, and, like some other almost automatic reflexes, it will not stand logical analysis. We do not applaud masterpieces of painting, nor would we do so if we were privileged to watch the artist at work on the canvas. We do not drop the book that we are reading in order to clap our hands in admiration of a passage which has delighted us. Neither do we raise a racket when we are enjoying music informally on those private occasions when performers and auditors are friends with a common purpose. When we contemplate artistic creations as individuals we are easily able to sublimate our emotions without disturbing ourselves or our neighbors by noisy demonstrations.

But when we individuals congregate by hundreds and by thousands in the concert hall, we become a crowd and we are affected in varying degrees by mass excitement. We submit ourselves to the convention that emotional tension requires a release through physical movement—a convention which may be true in the case of such a violent emotion as anger, but is not valid when applied to aesthetic emotion. We listen in silence while the music establishes a mood, and the moment the music stops we dissipate the mood by making a tumult. This procedure is completely illogical.

When we honestly seek the motivation of applause, we find that the approving noise is directed not at the music, but at the performers. Overwhelming evidence proves that admiration for personalities outweighs all other factors. One needs only to attend a recital by some popular operatic or radio singer to observe that the same volume of applause follows a lyric masterpiece or a commonplace song; the thing most important to the audience is not the program, but the singer. Similarly, a famous conductor and a distinguished orchestra will be applauded vigorously after the performance of some new modern work which three-quarters of the auditors do not understand or even like. There, if you are looking for it, is "this modern form of snobbery."

Since the interpreter is the applaudee, he has the right to ask for silent attention when he wants it. I do not believe that Mr. Downes would be offended by a recitalist who might request, either verbally from the stage or by means of a printed note on the program, that the performance of Schubert's song cycle, "Die Winterreise," be uninterrupted by applause. Why, then, should he resent the action of a conductor who motions for silence betweeen the movements of a symphony? A composer does not divide his symphony into movements for the purpose of allowing auditors "the opportunity to release the emotion and the enthusiasm that the music has engendered," but for artistic reasons of his own. A conductor is entirely within his rights when he asks that a work of art be heard in its integrity, without irruptions of disturbing noise.

As for the "pretentious decorum" that bothers Mr. Downes, I am sure that many music-lovers will concur in my wish that we might be still more decorous in the concert hall. Enjoyment of music would be greatly enhanced if we should establish a new convention that applause be reserved for definite periods in the program—the intermission and the close of a symphonic concert, and the intervals when a recitalist leaves the stage. The only possible injury would be to the vanity of the musicians, and if they are true artists, the hurt would not be deep. "In so far as they are not fools," says Albert Guerard, "performers are compelled to realize that they are mere interpreters; the applause that goes to them must be shared."

* * * *

The sincere musical artist, devoted to his art, is more humble than vain about his accomplishments. Did he not appreciate applause in its proper place, he would be something more than human, but he can not be other than discomposed when untimely adulation distracts him from the concentration essential to faithful interpretation. He is sufficiently sensitive not to need applause at all to tell him when he is in rapport with his auditors. He knows intuitively when the silence of an audience indicates indifference or coldness and when it means that emotions have been profoundly stirred.

WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

AUG 28 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY AND PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRAS TO PLAY IN PITTSBURGH

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 27—A record of achievement that is unique in American symphonic music is that held by the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, which is now entering upon its twenty-third season of presenting visiting orchestras to the Pittsburgh public. It has fostered the love for this form of music to the extent of outgrowing Carnegie Music Hall, where the visiting orchestras first played. All concerts for a number of years have been held at Syria Mosque, where the visiting orchestras play many times to capacity audiences. During its years of service in Pittsburgh, the association has brought to this city not only the Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago orchestras, but all the other orchestras of the country, including the New York Philharmonic, the New York Symphony, the Minneapolis Orchestra, the National Symphony, the Cincinnati, the Detroit and the Cleveland orchestras.

Another unique feature of the association is the fact that Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., has served as its only president, and May Beegle as the only manager. Children's concerts were also first established and successfully given under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Orchestra association, with Mrs. Nathaniel Spear as chairman.

The association will sponsor but five concerts by visiting orchestras this season, two by the Boston Symphony, and three by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat - Chronicle

AUG 29 1938

MUSIC UNIT LISTS STARS FOR SEASON

Kreisler to Open Series Oct. 21 At Eastman

What is claimed the most impressive array of artists and musical organizations ever to be presented in Rochester will appear on the Eastman Theater stage during the 1938-39 concert season.

The list of artists and organizations is virtually a Who's Who of the world's musical great. According to directors of the Civic Music Association never in the 10-year history of the group has such a program been scheduled.

Fritz Kreisler, Jascha Heifetz, Lawrence Tibbett, Marian Anderson and Serge Rachmaninoff will return to the Eastman, according to a booklet being distributed to members of the Civic Music Association, sponsor of the evening concert series. A new artist here but a ranking favorite on three continents is Arthur Rubinstein, pianist, who will make his local debut.

Kreisler, who will give the opening performance of the season, Friday, Oct. 21, has always been a great favorite with Rochester audiences. Always he has played to packed houses. It has been some years since he has visited this city.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky will return for the third successive season while widely heralded new Ballet Russe with Leonide Massine, will make its first appearance here.

Metropolitan Opera stars will take the leading roles in "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Madame Butterfly," which are included in the series.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES

AUG 29 1938

By adding different quantities of aluminum to gold, that precious metal can be made to take on such colors as purple, ruby and pink . . .

After paying $25,000 for publication rights to Compton Mackenzie's life of the Duke of Windsor, the London Sunday Pictorial chucked it in the wastebasket. The principal reason, the editor explained, was a chapter on the duke's ancestry, which he characterized as the "most bitter and uncontrolled denunciation of the ancestors of the present king and queen that has disgraced a single volume." . . .

A recent study shows that in the course of a girls' basketball game, the participants will run between two and two and a half miles while in action.

Anonymous: The second highest mountain peak in the world, which rises 28,250 feet in Tibet, is unnamed, but is designated on maps as K-2 . . .

Observation of an eminent psychologist: "Pets are good for adults because grown-ups need something they can love very much. If they love children, they spoil them." . . .

One of the amusement concessions at New York's 1939 World Fair will enable thrill seekers to drop 250 feet in parachutes from the top of a tower . . .

When Brown university, at a special ceremony, conferred an honorary degree on the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, he responded, not with a speech, but by performing a short concert on his double bass . . .

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 31 1938

STARS TO SING IN BENEFIT AT TOTEM LODGE

Huge Bazaar and Concert To Be Staged Over Week-End For Refugees from Nazis

Stars of the opera and concert stage will combine their talents in a huge benefit show to assist German and Austrian refugees Saturday night at Totem lodge in Averill Park, under direction of David N Katz.

Appearing on the program will be Carmello, soprano; Nino Martinell, tenor; Goeta Ljunberg, soprano; Titto Ruffo, baritone; Marina Yurlowa, Spanish dancer; Rosa Raisa, soprano; Reginald Werrenrath, baritone; Loretta Bellini, soprano; Louise Taylor, soprano; Catherine Bacon, pianist; Max Pantellaieff, baritone; Harry Braun, violinist, and Robert Schulman, pianist.

Governor Lehman heads the list of sponsors, including Governor Wilbur L. Cross of Connecticut, Joseph M. Proskauer, Irving Lehman, Dr. Seymour M. Katz, Thomas Mann, Sol M. Stroock, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Lord Duveen, Mrs. James Roosevelt, George Gordon Battle, Mrs. Felix M. Warburg, Dr. Samuel H. Goldenson, George Roosevelt, Margaret Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Hugh Grant Straus, Samuel D. Levy, Mrs. Abram I. Elkus, Kenneth O'Brien, Dr. Stephen S. Wise, J. E. Brulatour, Arde Bulova, Mrs. Isaac Gimbel, Charles F. Noyes, Mrs. Simon Frankel, J. Frederick Talcott, Dr. Harold Korn, Mrs. Leopold Auer.

The musicians' committee includes Pablo Casals, Albert Einstein, Mischa Elman, Jascha Heifetz, Bronislaw Huberman, Serge Koussevitzky, Josef Lhevinne, Giovanni Martinelli, Grace Moore, Lily Pons, Leopold Stokowski, Arturo Toscanini, Lawrence Tibbett, Ernest Bloch, Frederick A. Stock, Marion Talley, Katherine Bacon, Goeta Jjungberg, Pierre Luboshutz, Genia Nemenoff, Mrs. Clara Gabrilowitsch, Reginald Werrenrath.

A Monte Carlo Bazaar will also be staged from tomorrow night to Monday. Admission to the concert will be $5.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat - Chronicle

AUG 30 1938

This Year's Concerts

Rochester's winter musical season this year will include two series of evening concerts at the Eastman Theater and twelve concerts by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, in four of which distinguished visiting soloists will appear. The announcement of these attractions is, as always, news of first importance to that vast body of citizens that helps to support the Rochester Civic Music Association and that shares in the programs thus made possible.

The two evening series this year are so well balanced that patrons will have difficulty in choosing between them. Purchase of both series is obviously the only sure way out of the problem. Fritz Kreisler, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Heifetz, Rachmaninoff, Tibbett represent established excellence in their respective fields; there is no question of their artistic position nor of their place with the public.

176

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST ✓
AUG 29 1938

Dr. Mason's Vacation Over--He Wrote a Book

In New Canaan Scholar Finishes 'Music In My Time,' Before Returning to Columbia

BY ETHEL BECKWITH

HE FINISHED his book, and now Daniel Gregory Mason is ready to go back to work as head of the music faculty at Columbia university.

His "Music in My Time," Dr. Mason said at his home in New Canaan last night, will be published by Macmillan in October. By that time he will have begun his 30th year on Columbia's faculty.

Dr. Mason, 65, calls his book an informal collection of memoirs. To the question of whether SWING has a place on his platform, the author emitted a "No!" that probably comes as near as this gentle professor ever will be to a personal interpretation of Brunnhilde's cry.

"That," he said when he had calmed to more philosophic tone, is old hat!"

But while he is a closed book to floy-floy, he devotes a chapter to what he calls American music. He is interested, he says, in the serious efforts of composers and urges that more orchestra conductors encourage them.

A procession of attractive people appear in his book. Among these George Santayana, with whom he studied at Harvard when Santayana was content to remain brilliantly in his metier of philosophy and before he was affected by a novel-writing virus ("The Last Puritan") which brought little augmentation to his name.

Others are William James, Josiah Royce, William Vaughn Moody, Edwin Arlington Robinson, Winthrop Ames, Charles Macomb Flandrau (well remembered in Woolcott's First Reader) all these Harvard associations.

In New York he meets—and they congregate in his book—Paderewski, Gabrilowitsch, Dohnanyi. As he becomes a composer we are introduced to the interpreters of his work—Percy Grainger, Stock, Koussevitsky, Hofmann, Bruno Walter.

There are also reminiscences of his fellow composers, Debussy, D'Indy and Florent Schmitt in France, Vaughan Williams in England, Casella and Malipiero in Italy, and in America Douglas Moore, John Powell, Edward Burlingame Hill, Randall Thomson. Portraits, autographs and letters help to make these memoirs personal.

Dr. Mason, who has honorary degrees from Tufts, Oberlin and University of Rochester, entered Columbia faculty in 1909. He recently was elected to the American Institute of Arts and Letters whose president is Walter Damrosch and whose "inner" Academy includes Van Wyck Brooks of Westport.

With Mrs. Mason he attended Silvermine Festival to hear Maganini conduct his "Chanticleer" overture in the children's concert. A year ago the New York-Philharmonic played the premiere of his symphony, "Abraham Lincoln."

DANIEL GREGORY MASON . . . whose "Music in My Time" ignores swing . . . "that's old hat" he says.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 31 1938

East

Seventeenth link in the chain of New York theatres owned, operated or controlled by the Shuberts was forged when Lee Shubert, in behalf of his Select Theatres Corp., took a year's lease on the Mansfield theatre.

Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony, off to London to conduct five operas at Covent Garden, first of which is skedded Oct. 5. Returns late in the fall to fulfill engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symph late in November.

Annual summer concerts given at Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y., by the New York Philharmonic will continue to be subsidized by the Lewisohn family. Sam A. Lewisohn, only son of the late philanthropist, has been named an honorary chairman of the Stadium concerts. Also revealed that he donated $10,000 to reduce this year's deficit.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN
AUG 30 1938

Timbermans Are Back in Town Again

WE chatted for a few moments yesterday with Mrs. Andrew Timberman about the trip from which she and Dr. Timberman have just returned. For a mixture of pure pleasure and things worth while you couldn't top it.

They motored first to North Conway, N. H. where they met their daughter Anne and her two children. She's summering there while her husband, Lieutenant Clayton Mullins, completes his post graduate work at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

At three different points. . . . Patagonia, N. Y., Pecketts Sugar Hill, N. H., and Magnolia, Mass. . . . they attended performances given by the Jitney Players. This group of troupers, under the management of young Ethel Barrymore Colt, numbers among its personnel the Timbermans' daughter. . . . Miss Elizabeth, who plays character parts.

These thespians rove around from town to town, presenting a repertoire of four plays. "Miss Colt is a remarkable girl," Mrs. Timberman told us. "She has an amazing amount of business ability and a great deal of personal charm."

For a lover of fine music such as Mrs. Timberman, the fact that she was one of that vast audience which heard the first performance of the Berkshire Festival in the new open air auditorium at Lenox, Mass., was the high spot of the journey. For four years she served as president of our local Women's Music Club and she is always in attendance when there is good music to be heard here.

"The Boston Symphony played the opening concert," she said. "It's a beautiful spot. The auditorium is covered overhead and open at the sides. It seats 3000 people and at least that many stood outside to hear the music."

The Timbermans visited the McDowell colony and she was greatly enthused over the idea of artists creating in the peace and quiet of rural New England. "It's on a sound business basis now," she added, "and I think that anyone must work better in such beautiful surroundings with no distractions."

The travelers also paid a visit to their two grandchildren who are camping in Maine. Young Susan Wright. . . . daughter of the Francis J. Wrights of N. Stanbery-av. . . . is at Camp Merrymeeting. And just a couple of miles down the road at Camp Boothbay is Billy Smith, son of Mrs. Lelia Timberman Smith.

"And the remainder of the time we just spent roaming around the White Mountains," Mrs. Timberman concluded.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
AUG 30 1938

Rochester is justly proud of its annual concert series. Announcement of the artists of the 1938-39 season leaves no doubt as to the brilliance of the concerts. Kreisler, Heifetz, Tibbett, Hofmann, Rachmaninoff, Rubinstein—any one of them would lend distinction to an entire season. And to these must be added the Boston Symphony, the Ballet Russe and grand opera with Metropolitan stars.

VICTORIA, TEX.
ADVOCATE
AUG 29 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. —When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR
AUG 31 1938

Moment Musicale

By MAUD WELIN

38,000 Festival Guests

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, drew over 38,000 interested music lovers this Summer. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were at their best in the series of concerts given in the new music shed. The shed, built primarily as a protection against rain and thunder storms, proved highly satisfactory. Financially the season was pronounced a success.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS
AUG 28 1938

LONDON FESTIVAL

London is to celebrate its first Music Festival in 1939. Leading conductors will be Arturo Toscanini, Bruno Walter, Sir Thomas Beecham, Sir Adrian Boult, and Dr. Malcolm Sargent. London's most famous orchestras will play and visiting soloists will include Kreisler, the new Hungarian Quartet, the Lener Quartet and a number of others. Opera, ballet, orchestral concerts, choral concerts and chamber concerts will be included in the festival program. Concerts will be presented at the principal London concert halls, the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, Sadler's Wells and places of historical interest.

At Stratford-on-Avon, the old Vic, and at Regent's park open air theatre, special performances of Shakespeare will be given. The festival which will begin on April 23, will end on May 23.

NEW MUSIC SHED

The erection of the new music shed which will from now on shelter the performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, was celebrated at the opening exercises of the Berkshire Symphonic festival recently at "Tanglewood" in Strockbridge, Mass. The new edifice seats 6,000 and has a fan shaped auditorium with a stage a little larger than the Symphony Hall in Boston.

ST. MARYS, O.
EVENING LEADER
AUG 30 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. —INS— When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

EAST LIVERPOOL, O.
REVIEW
AUG 31 1938

Audience Joins Chorus

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — When the Boston Symphony orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Is Unser Gott."

NYACK, N. Y.
JOURNAL - NEWS
AUG 29 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

BOSTON, Aug. 29. (INS) — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Carles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

ROSCOE, N. Y.
WEEKLY REVIEW
AUG 25 1938

Lester M. Diehl has returned from a visit to Richmond, Mass. While there he attended two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchesra. Another evening was spent at the Berkshire Playhouse, near Stockbridge, where "Susan and God", a play by Rachel Crothers, was presented.

Festivalizing in America

The spirit of musical festivalizing is growing apace in this country, with the past summer showing more such celebrations than at any previous time in American tonal history. Symphonic, operatic and folk performances took place in numerous localities, some of them totally new to such enterprises. From all of them came reports of the deep public interest manifested and the satisfactory takings at the box office. The fall will see more festivals and already the advance bulletins tell of local expectancy and large advance sales.

The reasons for the increase of such activities are simple, aside from the growing musical appreciation in all American communities. The glamor of the best known German and Austrian festivals has gone with the wind, owing to the voice of politics and the absence of famed conductors and singers who were associated with those performances in the past. Then too, the war clouds hanging low over Europe, deter many Americans from leaving their own land for summer travel, and in consequence that season is able to draw upon thousands of music lovers who hitherto were unavailable because of presence overseas.

Practical persons were quick to take advantage of the changed conditions, and so numerous musical undertakings came to life which otherwise might never have been started.

It is not too optimistic a thought that future years may bring us festivals of the magnitude and artistic importance of those at Salzburg and Bayreuth. We have the talent (and can import more), the sites and —the money. The time is ripe to employ those three essential factors for the building up of the world's greatest series of festivals of music. Let us do so.

Music at Sea

Present-day uncertainty as to where the next step in music shall take composers is largely owing to the fact that there have been so many developments in varying directions within recent years. It is easy to follow a broad, straight path, but more difficult to know what to do at the cross-roads.

As Humphrey Searle points out in a suggestive article in the Musical Times (London) for July, "the fundamental basis of music itself always remains the same, however much new ground is conquered by experiment." The problem now is to find some solid general basis upon which international musical science shall rest.

But whereas until the present century there was, more or less, a main road which was easily detected because progress did not occur usually so rapidly and in such diverse directions, in the period 1910-1930 the international musical arena seemed a great stretch of sand which many feet had trampled in what resembled a stampede away from the conventional.

"The expansion of tradition," says Mr. Searle, "up to about 1910 was a fairly homogeneous process, even allowing for the side-line developed by Debussy and Ravel, and it is only in the last twenty-five years that the divergences have become more acute.

"The reaction against the previous homogeneity was due partly to the conviction that the Strauss-Mahler line of development could be carried no farther, and partly to the general unsettling of standards which took place about the time of the war.

"This process gave rise to some desperate methods; though the whole-tone scale had been more or less stillborn, men of the calibre of Busoni began experimenting with other arbitrary subdivisions of the octave. And the cult of the exotic and primitive was brought to its highest pitch by the early Stravinsky—since when it has been dying lingeringly in the hands of his compatriot Shostakovitch . . . and others."

This writer finds three main trends in the innovations of the last quarter-century, and these he labels "modality," "polytonality" and "atonality." The first is "really a modified form of the cult of the exotic; it is an attempt to breathe fresh life into our tonal system by using some melodic and harmonic effects borrowed from the five discarded mediaeval modes." The objection might be made that some of these had not really been discarded, except in formal composition, but had lived on in beautiful and characteristic effects in much of the folk music of various countries. Such composers as Vaughan Williams and other modern British writers have borrowed from this rich well-spring with notable success. But Mr. Searle thinks that "exotic scales are only useful for effects of color, and cannot provide a satisfactory basis for musical construction."

As for polytonality, it is "not a revolt against tradition at all. In fact, one can actually say that it has no existence at all except on paper, for the simple reason that the ear is incapable of hearing music as in more than one key at a time." This seems like a drastic pronouncement, since so much modern music has taken the direct opposite as an axiom, beginning with the fairly conservative uses of such methods by Strauss, d'Indy and others in certain passages of their work. "The ear will always hear the result as a unity," says Mr. Searle, and his ruling is more or less buttressed by the scientific data in a recent study, Music and Sound, by L. S. Lloyd, who finds that the human hearing apparatus tends to blend even tones and their overtones into a single sound, as in the well-known case of church bells.

Atonality, as practised by Schönberg, Webern, Krenek et al., insists that the twelve tones of the chromatic scale shall be used freely, and related only to one another, with no one predominating. But the present writer declares that "the theory remains untenable . . . because the equal use of all the twelve notes contradicts the actual nature of music. . . . It is through instinctive necessity and not mere custom that the ear hears all music from a tonal point of view. . . ." The reason why some works in this style are intelligible is that unconsciously they establish some sort of harmonic center from which the ear can appraise the compositions.

The attempt of Hindemith, in a recent theoretical treatise, to reconcile tonal and atonal music in one system based on twelve scales of twelve equal semitones, is only partially satisfactory. One reason is that the ear instinctively corrects the approximations of the tempered scale, and actually hears according to the "pure" system.

The search for a theorist who will re-establish music on a sound theoretical basis, taking in all the modern developments, is still open, although the English writer believes that the system of Heinrich Schenker could be so used.

Meanwhile the teachers of harmony in our schools are hard put to it to explain the divergencies in theory and practise to their pupils. If these young tyros are logical, they will conclude either that the school dicta are out of date, or that much modern composition is not music at all.

The Summer's Gains

Approaching autumn sounds its warning in the coming of—slightly—cooler days. Aside from some trying weather, the summer has been one of gratifying nature in the artistic field. Rains deluged the open-air stadia and put summary ends to not a few orchestral and operatic programs, but these series carried on. In some cases, there was notable richness and variety in the fare offered.

Surely it is symptomatic that success in the New York area rewarded the planners of the events at Dunrovin and Silvermine, Conn., that the public answered the challenge of new centers of the sort established this year on a larger scale than formerly.

Something also is indicated in the fact that the Pacific Coast has seen sustained interest in three chamber music cycles presented by as many notable string quartets in the San Francisco region, that the series at Carmel and Pasadena in the same state were well patronized, and that the veteran Hollywood Bowl opened this year with so ambitious a production as Die Walküre.

These are but the two extremes of our great continent. In between there were many gratifying evidences of strong public liking for open-air symphonic and other manifestations, from the National Capital northward to New England and even beyond that, in the chief musical cities of Canada.

The autumn thus does not follow upon a dreary period when Omphale's musical wheel ceased to spin, but merely speeds up the tempo with the familiar surge that is to be expected as September and early October arrive. Wide-awake artists, who take advantage of modern methods of bringing their accomplishments to the attention of the public, find more demand than at any previous time for their services in the new era of all-year musical plenitude. That is an excellent sign of progress in the development of national resources. Artistic enjoyment has come to possess new value and prestige since the government has set its sponsoring seal upon art projects, notably including that of music. Thus the public learns to value the work of those who do not create in brick and mortar but the more precious and intangible edifices of the mind and soul.

Lowell Courier-Citizen
Page Twenty Sept.8

Koussevitzky Plans for 15th Season in America

Music Editors of Newspapers Guests of Boston Symphony Orchestra Management to Hear Arrangements

On the invitation of Manager George E. Judd of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the music editors of the Boston and several New England newspapers met at luncheon with the members of the Symphony Hall staff at the Harvard Club in Boston yesterday afternoon in pleasantly informal fashion. This gave opportunity for Mr. Judd to outline some of the plans for the coming season. Among the music reviewers from outside of Boston were writers from Springfield, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; Hartford, Ct., Pittsfield and Lowell, Mass. Through visits to other cities or by reason of increasing patronage from them for the oBston concerts the Boston Symphony orchestra has become a New England institution.

It was disclosed that word had just been received from Serge Koussevitzky, who is vacationing at Bourget-du-Lac, France, that the opening program of his 15th season, on October 7 and 8, will include in the first half three numbers with which he opened his first Boston program in 1924, —Vivaldi's Concerto for orchestra in D minor, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. Dr. Koussevitzky's period of conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra exceeds by several years any previous conductor of this organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky will return at the end of the month to assemble the orchestra for the usual preliminary rehearsals. This summer be divided his vacation between Saratoga Springs, the White Mountains and Aix-les-Bains, previous to the Berkshire Festival which he conducted last month.

During the fourteen years which Dr. Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony orchestra, he has conducted not less than 1400 concerts, an average of 100 a year. The coming season will be no exception, when he will again undertake to prepare and conduct the usual 100 concerts. During two weeks this coming season Dr. Koussevitzky has asked Igor Stravinsky to appear as composer—conductor, as well as piano soloist in the performance of his own works. Before Dr. Koussevitzky returns from France, he will confer with Stravinsky about the programs, although it is understood that one will include a revival of the composer's oratorio, "Oedipus Rex."

Soloists who will appear during the season will include Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, J. M. Sanroma, Ruth Posselt, Jascha Heifetz, Zlatko Balokovic and Gregor Piatigorsky.

George Enesco will be guest conductor for a week in January. Eugene Gossens will direct the orchestra for a week in November. In March Igor Stravinsky will be guest conductor during the weeks beginning the 12th and 19th.

The regular Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts will be supplemented by shorter series on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons each month, as was the case last season.

177

Festivalizing in America

The spirit of musical festivalizing is growing apace in this country, with the past summer showing more such celebrations than at any previous time in American tonal history. Symphonic, operatic and folk performances took place in numerous localities, some of them totally new to such enterprises. From all of them came reports of the deep public interest manifested and the satisfactory takings at the box office. The fall will see more festivals and already the advance bulletins tell of local expectancy and large advance sales.

The reasons for the increase of such activities are simple, aside from the growing musical appreciation in all American communities. The glamor of the best known German and Austrian festivals has gone with the wind, owing to the voice of politics and the absence of famed conductors and singers who were associated with those performances in the past. Then too, the war clouds hanging low over Europe, deter many Americans from leaving their own land for summer travel, and in consequence that season is able to draw upon thousands of music lovers who hitherto were unavailable because of presence overseas.

Practical persons were quick to take advantage of the changed conditions, and so numerous musical undertakings came to life which otherwise might never have been started.

It is not too optimistic a thought that future years may bring us festivals of the magnitude and artistic importance of those at Salzburg and Bayreuth. We have the talent (and can import more), the sites and —the money. The time is ripe to employ those three essential factors for the building up of the world's greatest series of festivals of music. Let us do so.

Music at Sea

Present-day uncertainty as to where the next step in music shall take composers is largely owing to the fact that there have been so many developments in varying directions within recent years. It is easy to follow a broad, straight path, but more difficult to know what to do at the cross-roads.

As Humphrey Searle points out in a suggestive article in the Musical Times (London) for July, "the fundamental basis of music itself always remains the same, however much new ground is conquered by experiment." The problem now is to find some solid general basis upon which international musical science shall rest.

But whereas until the present century there was, more or less, a main road which was easily detected because progress did not occur usually so rapidly and in such diverse directions, in the period 1910-1930 the international musical arena seemed a great stretch of sand which many feet had trampled in what resembled a stampede away from the conventional.

"The expansion of tradition," says Mr. Searle, "up to about 1910 was a fairly homogeneous process, even allowing for the side-line developed by Debussy and Ravel, and it is only in the last twenty-five years that the divergences have become more acute.

"The reaction against the previous homogeneity was due partly to the conviction that the Strauss-Mahler line of development could be carried no farther, and partly to the general unsettling of standards which took place about the time of the war.

"This process gave rise to some desperate methods; though the whole-tone scale had been more or less stillborn, men of the calibre of Busoni began experimenting with other arbitrary subdivisions of the octave. And the cult of the exotic and primitive was brought to its highest pitch by the early Stravinsky—since when it has been dying lingeringly in the hands of his compatriot Shostakovitch . . . and others."

This writer finds three main trends in the innovations of the last quarter-century, and these he labels "modality," "polytonality" and "atonality." The first is "really a modified form of the cult of the exotic; it is an attempt to breathe fresh life into our tonal system by using some melodic and harmonic effects borrowed from the five discarded mediaeval modes." The objection might be made that some of these had not really been discarded, except in formal composition, but had lived on in beautiful and characteristic effects in much of the folk music of various countries. Such composers as Vaughan Williams and other modern British writers have borrowed from this rich well-spring with notable success. But Mr. Searle thinks that "exotic scales are only useful for effects of color, and cannot provide a satisfactory basis for musical construction."

As for polytonality, it is "not a revolt against tradition at all. In fact, one can actually say that it has no existence at all except on paper, for the simple reason that the ear is incapable of hearing music as in more than one key at a time." This seems like a drastic pronouncement, since so much modern music has taken the direct opposite as an axiom, beginning with the fairly conservative uses of such methods by Strauss, d'Indy and others in certain passages of their work. "The ear will always hear the result as a unity," says Mr. Searle, and his ruling is more or less buttressed by the scientific data in a recent study, Music and Sound, by L. S. Lloyd, who finds that the human hearing apparatus tends to blend even tones and their overtones into a single sound, as in the well-known case of church bells.

Atonality, as practised by Schönberg, Webern, Krenek et al., insists that the twelve tones of the chromatic scale shall be used freely, and related only to one another, with no one predominating. But the present writer declares that "the theory remains untenable . . . because the equal use of all the twelve notes contradicts the actual nature of music. . . . It is through instinctive necessity and not mere custom that the ear hears all music from a tonal point of view. . . ." The reason why some works in this style are intelligible is that unconsciously they establish some sort of harmonic center from which the ear can appraise the compositions.

The attempt of Hindemith, in a recent theoretical treatise, to reconcile tonal and atonal music in one system based on twelve scales of twelve equal semitones, is only partially satisfactory. One reason is that the ear instinctively corrects the approximations of the tempered scale, and actually hears according to the "pure" system.

The search for a theorist who will re-establish music on a sound theoretical basis, taking in all the modern developments, is still open, although the English writer believes that the system of Heinrich Schenker could be so used.

Meanwhile the teachers of harmony in our schools are hard put to it to explain the divergencies in theory and practise to their pupils. If these young tyros are logical, they will conclude either that the school dicta are out of date, or that much modern composition is not music at all.

The Summer's Gains

Approaching autumn sounds its warning in the coming of—slightly—cooler days. Aside from some trying weather, the summer has been one of gratifying nature in the artistic field. Rains deluged the open-air stadia and put summary ends to not a few orchestral and operatic programs, but these series carried on. In some cases, there was notable richness and variety in the fare offered.

Surely it is symptomatic that success in the New York area rewarded the planners of the events at Dunrovin and Silvermine, Conn., that the public answered the challenge of new centers of the sort established this year on a larger scale than formerly.

Something also is indicated in the fact that the Pacific Coast has seen sustained interest in three chamber music cycles presented by as many notable string quartets in the San Francisco region, that the series at Carmel and Pasadena in the same state were well patronized, and that the veteran Hollywood Bowl opened this year with so ambitious a production as Die Walküre.

These are but the two extremes of our great continent. In between there were many gratifying evidences of strong public liking for open-air symphonic and other manifestations, from the National Capital northward to New England and even beyond that, in the chief musical cities of Canada.

The autumn thus does not follow upon a dreary period when Omphale's musical wheel ceased to spin, but merely speeds up the tempo with the familiar surge that is to be expected as September and early October arrive. Wide-awake artists, who take advantage of modern methods of bringing their accomplishments to the attention of the public, find more demand than at any previous time for their services in the new era of all-year musical plenitude. That is an excellent sign of progress in the development of national resources. Artistic enjoyment has come to possess new value and prestige since the government has set its sponsoring seal upon art projects, notably including that of music. Thus the public learns to value the work of those who do not create in brick and mortar but the more precious and intangible edifices of the mind and soul.

Lowell Courier-Citizen
Page Twenty Sept.8

Koussevitzky Plans for 15th Season in America

Music Editors of Newspapers Guests of Boston Symphony Orchestra Management to Hear Arrangements

On the invitation of Manager George E. Judd of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the music editors of the Boston and several New England newspapers met at luncheon with the members of the Symphony Hall staff at the Harvard Club in Boston yesterday afternoon in pleasantly informal fashion. This gave opportunity for Mr. Judd to outline some of the plans for the coming season. Among the music reviewers from outside of Boston were writers from Springfield, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; Hartford, Ct., Pittsfield and Lowell, Mass. Through visits to other cities or by reason of increasing patronage from them for the oBston concerts the Boston Symphony orchestra has become a New England institution.

It was disclosed that word had just been received from Serge Koussevitzky, who is vacationing at Bourget-du-Lac, France, that the opening program of his 15th season, on October 7 and 8, will include in the first half three numbers with which he opened his first Boston program in 1924, —Vivaldi's Concerto for orchestra in D minor, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. Dr. Koussevitzky's period of conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra exceeds by several years any previous conductor of this organization.

Dr. Koussevitzky will return at the end of the month to assemble the orchestra for the usual preliminary rehearsals. This summer be divided his vacation between Saratoga Springs, the White Mountains and Aix-les-Bains, previous to the Berkshire Festival which he conducted last month.

During the fourteen years which Dr. Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony orchestra, he has conducted not less than 1400 concerts, an average of 100 a year. The coming season will be no exception, when he will again undertake to prepare and conduct the usual 100 concerts. During two weeks this coming season Dr. Koussevitzky has asked Igor Stravinsky to appear as composer—conductor, as well as piano soloist in the performance of his own works. Before Dr. Koussevitzky returns from France, he will confer with Stravinsky about the programs, although it is understood that one will include a revival of the composer's oratorio, "Oedipus Rex."

Soloists who will appear during the season will include Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, J. M. Sanroma, Ruth Posselt, Jascha Heifetz, Zlatko Balokovic and Gregor Piatigorsky.

George Enesco will be guest conductor for a week in January. Eugene Gossens will direct the orchestra for a week in November. In March Igor Stravinsky will be guest conductor during the weeks beginning the 12th and 19th.

The regular Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts will be supplemented by shorter series on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons each month, as was the case last season.

FIFTH BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL ENDS AT 'TANGLEWOOD'

38,000 Attend Series of Six Concerts by Boston Symphony Under Baton of Koussevitzky—New Auditorium Pronounced "Substantially Perfect"

By GRACE MAY STUTSMAN

LENOX, MASS., Aug. 15.

WITH the accumulated plaudits of 38,000 persons, and the immediate acclaim of an audience of 6,000, the Boston Symphony and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, brought the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a close on the afternoon of Aug. 14. The locale of the series of six concerts was 'Tanglewood', the permanent summer home of the orchestra, through the generosity of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, a regular winter patroness of the orchestra in Boston.

This festival formally opened the huge Music Shed, newly erected at the foot of a sloping lawn upon which the mansion of 'Tanglewood' faces. The concerts further inaugurated a new epoch in the history of orchestras which offer symphonic programs during the summer season.

Koussevitzky's "Speech" Printed

In a previous article, the physical aspect of the festival which occupied the two week ends of Aug. 4-6-7 and Aug. 11-13-14, was discussed. Also there were excerpts from the addresses of Gertrude Robinson-Smith, president of the festival, and Bently Warren, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony, which were appropriate to the dedication of the Shed on the opening night of Aug. 4. It was intended that Dr. Koussevitzky should also make a brief speech, outlining his plans for the highest realization of the musical potentialities of this Berkshire Symphonic Festival, but Dr. Koussevitzky is not yet on intimate terms with the English language. Furthermore, his intuition as to the temper of his audience stood him well. People were there, after all, to hear music, not speeches. His decision to have the speech printed was cannily made. In it, however, he made a point worth emphasizing, and although Mr. Warren glanced at the subject during the course of his address, Dr. Koussevitzky enlarged upon it, namely, the establishment of a permanent school for conductors, choral and symphonic, together with opportunity for talented young performers upon orchestral instruments, to further their instruction under expert guidance during the period of the festival. There seems to be nothing which quite approaches Dr. Koussevitzky's scheme of combining a top notch school of this type with a major festival of symphonic music.

An Airplane View of 'Tanglewood', Home of the Berkshire Festival

As the festival progressed, various facts were impressed upon the visitor, notably that the Shed has everything which Richard F. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology claims for it. "It is gratifying to be able to report that the most optimistic predictions have been realized," he announced after extensive tests. "The entire auditorium is free from dead spots and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

Debussy, Mozart, Well Performed

Yet the "substantial perfection" of Prof. Fay and that of the listener trained to arrive at critical estimates may honestly differ. Thus one found Debussy's 'La Mer', the Mozart 'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik' and the Ravel 'Daphnis et Chloé' sheer delight, but when the strings were heavily augmented, as in the Beethoven Ninth, the prelude of the Brahms symphony and the Sibelius Symphony No. 1, the listener too often became uncomfortably aware of the more penetrating tones of the wind section. Having been obliged to experiment considerably with the acoustic properties of the Shed, Dr. Koussevitzky will no doubt be prepared another year to offer the music in proportions more nearly approximating those which we are accustomed to hear during the winter season in Boston.

Vreeland, Kaskas, Hober, Cordon and Althouse Are the Soloists in Beethoven Symphony and Concert Performances of 'Walküre' and 'Siegfried'

The program units themselves did not comprise material especially exciting to the seasoned listener, as a glance at the following revised list will disclose:

Thursday Evening, Aug. 4

First Chorus from the Cantata, 'Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott' No. 80..........Bach
Chorale from Cantata, 'Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" ....Bach
Symphony No. 9 in D Minor......Beethoven
Cecilia Society (Arthur Fiedler, conductor)

Soloists

Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass.

Saturday Evening, Aug. 6

Symphony in E Flat, No. 99..........Haydn
'La Mer' ....Debussy
Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39..Sibelius

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 7

'Eine Kleine Nachtmusik' (K. No. 525).Mozart
Symphony in E Minor, Op. 98, No. 4..Brahms
'Music for the Theatre'................Copland
'Ma Mere l'Oye'.........................Ravel
'Daphnis et Chloe' Suite No. 2........Ravel

Thursday Evening, Aug. 11

'Die Walküre' ....Wagner

Act I, Final Scene

Siegmund, Paul Althouse; Sieglinde, Beal Hober.

'Siegfried' ....Wagner

Act III (Complete)

The Wanderer, Norman Cordon; Erda, Anna Kaskas; Siegfried, Paul Althouse; Brünhilde, Beal Hober.

Saturday Evening, Aug. 13

'The Angelus' ....Hadley
(In memory of the composer-conductor)
Symphony No. 6 in F.............Beethoven
Symphony No. 6 in B Minor....Tchaikovsky

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 14

Symphony No. 1..................Schumann
'Lieutenant Kije' Suite..............Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2 in D..................Brahms

It is understood that these symphonic festivals are to be extended eventually, to encompass choral and operatic works. Possibly as a further bit of experimentation, the Beethoven Ninth and the Wagnerian excerpts were selected by Dr. Koussevitzky. The Prokofieff and the Copland were doubtless offered as a gesture toward novelty. The Prokofieff derived unexpected piquancy by virtue of stationing a trumpeter in an open field, from whence floated with engaging subtlety, the trumpet solos which open and close the piece. It was a clever bit of strategy which captured the listeners, who applauded the young trumpeter lustily as he appeared with Dr. Koussevitzky at his elbow. If the opus did not gain additional stature, it at least provided capital entertainment for the uninitiated.

(Continued on page 27)

Berkshire Festival

(Continued from page 14)

Perfect Setting for 'Siegfried'

The reviewer has heard Wagnerian music dramas under a variety of conditions, including an entire performance of 'Siegfried' which was given, literally under the stars, but no performance has been provided with so perfect a setting as that at 'Tanglewood'. Dare I write that the brilliant full moon answered its cue like a veteran and well trained super-luminary? The effect was entrancing. As for the actual performance the concert version is not wholly satisfying, especially to those who enjoy the trappings of the opera house.

The honors undeniably went to Miss Kaskas and Mr. Althouse, yet the enthusiasm of the audience was such that singers, conductor, chorus and orchestra responded to a literal rain of applause, a more welcome storm than that which last year blocked the performance of Wagner for which Dr. Koussevitzky fought . . . and finally won.

In considering the program for Saturday evening, Aug. 13, it is fitting that a word be written in recognition of the work which Henry Hadley expended upon the early programs of the festival. It was really his vision and his overwhelming belief in the idea of a symphonic festival, that made possible the gala occasion in the Berkshires this year.

As a tribute to Mr. Hadley, Dr. Koussevitzky included the 'Andante tranquillo' from his Symphony No. 3 in B Minor. There is a peculiar fitness in thus honoring the American composer to whom the thousands attending the festival owe a real debt of gratitude.

Ovation Follows the Tchaikovsky

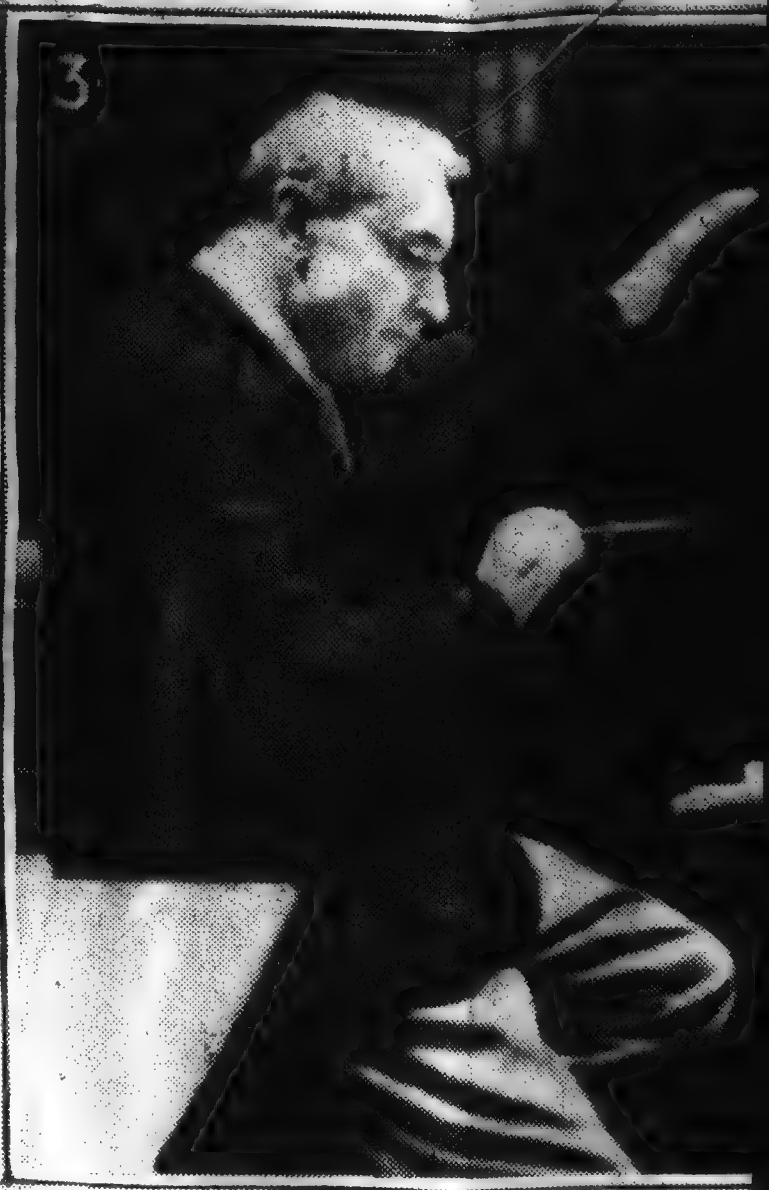
The ovation which followed the performance of the Tchaikovsky was well earned and wholly merited. The cheers and "bravos" which concluded the festival left no possible doubt but that success had rewarded the efforts of Dr. Koussevitzky and his men. There continues to be the problem of interesting material, however. Persons to whom symphonic music is unfamiliar, except by radio or disc, should undoubtedly be offered the classic masterpieces of orchestral literature, but in offering these works, must the more valuable representations of the newer music be ignored? Many obstacles face Dr. Koussevitzky. The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays an enormously heavy season, during the winter, followed by two supplementary seasons for at least two thirds of the men. The orchestra at the festival this year is not full strength, therefore this needs to be remedied. The full complement of players is none too great for a proper demonstration of the ability of this organization. Dr. Koussevitzky has wrought well, this summer, with the material at hand; it is to be hoped that he may be able, eventually, to present works and performances which embody an even wider appeal.

A word of appreciation for Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Edman: Mrs. Edman is executive vice-president of the festival, and he, among other things, is chairman of the coordinating committee. No detail, seemingly, has been too small or too insignificant for either of them to consider. Miss Robinson-Smith's tribute to this remarkable couple was a generous recognition of an undeniable talent for "getting things done."

Famed Maestro Snapped Conducting Symphony

DR. SERGEI KOUSSEVITSKY, L.; VIOLINIST RICHARD BURGIN

"GET READY THERE"



"CAREFUL NOW, CAREFUL"

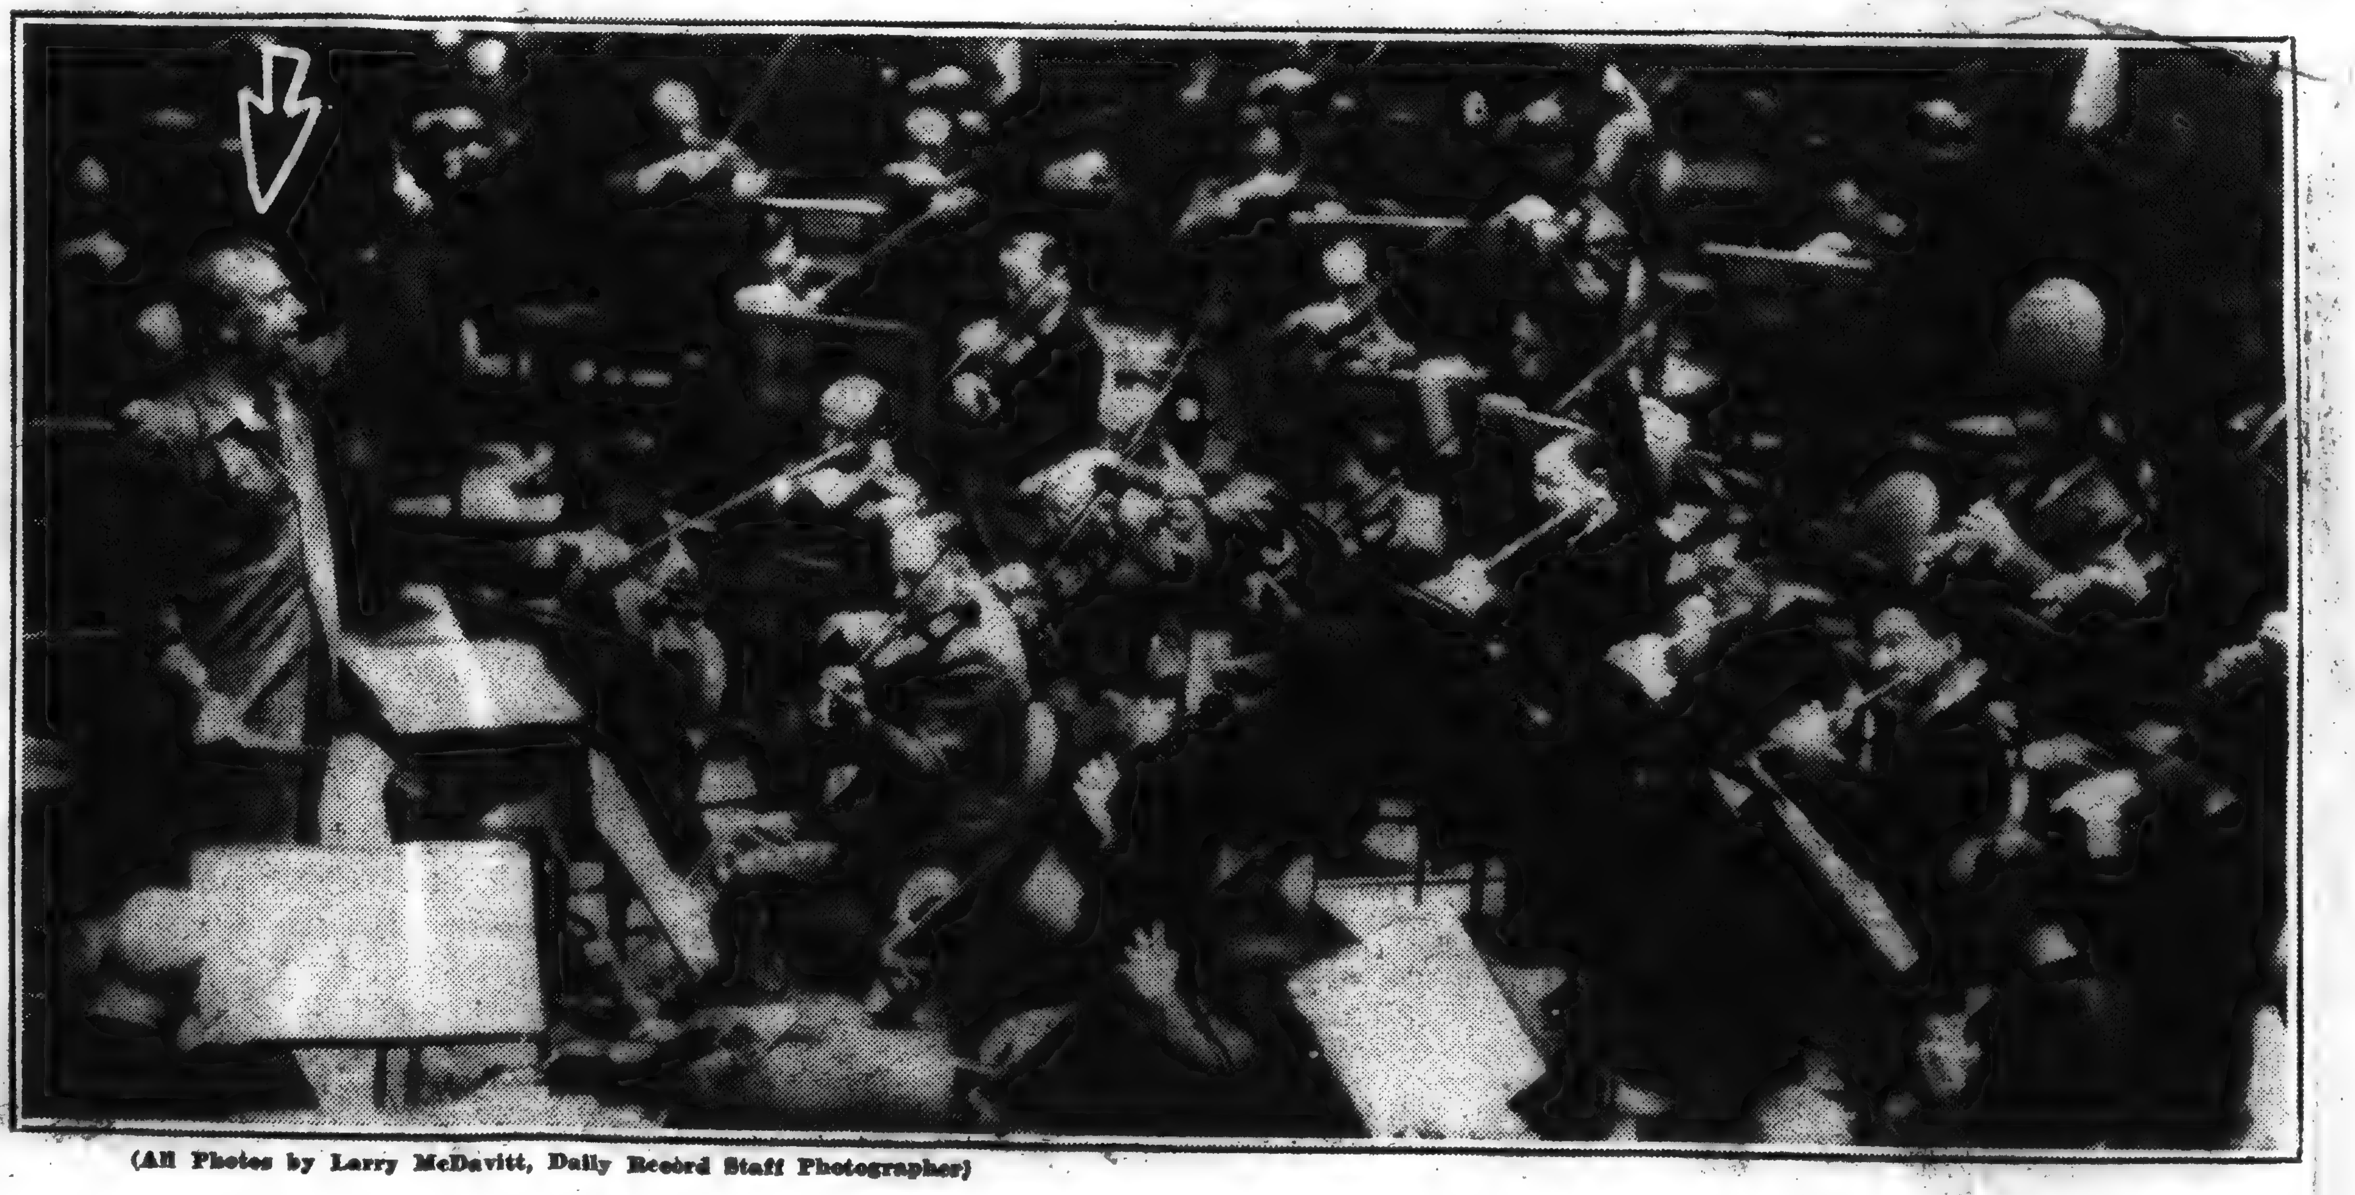
"LET'S HAVE THAT MELODY"

"VERY NICE—VERY NICE"

"MAKE THOSE VIOLINS SING"

Exclusive

Pictured for first time ever, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Sergei Koussevitsky, famous conductor, is seen in these photos made during rehearsal of the group yesterday. →



Candid

Dr. Koussevitsky, indicated by arrow, as he led his group in rehearsal yesterday. Annual series at Symphony Hall includes performances each Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

(All Photos by Larry McDavitt, Daily Record Staff Photographer)

New England and Boston News

Second Section

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

BOSTON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1938  R

Closing Stocks
Pages 14-15
Bonds — Curb

When Koussevitzky Swings the Baton at a Symphony Rehearsal

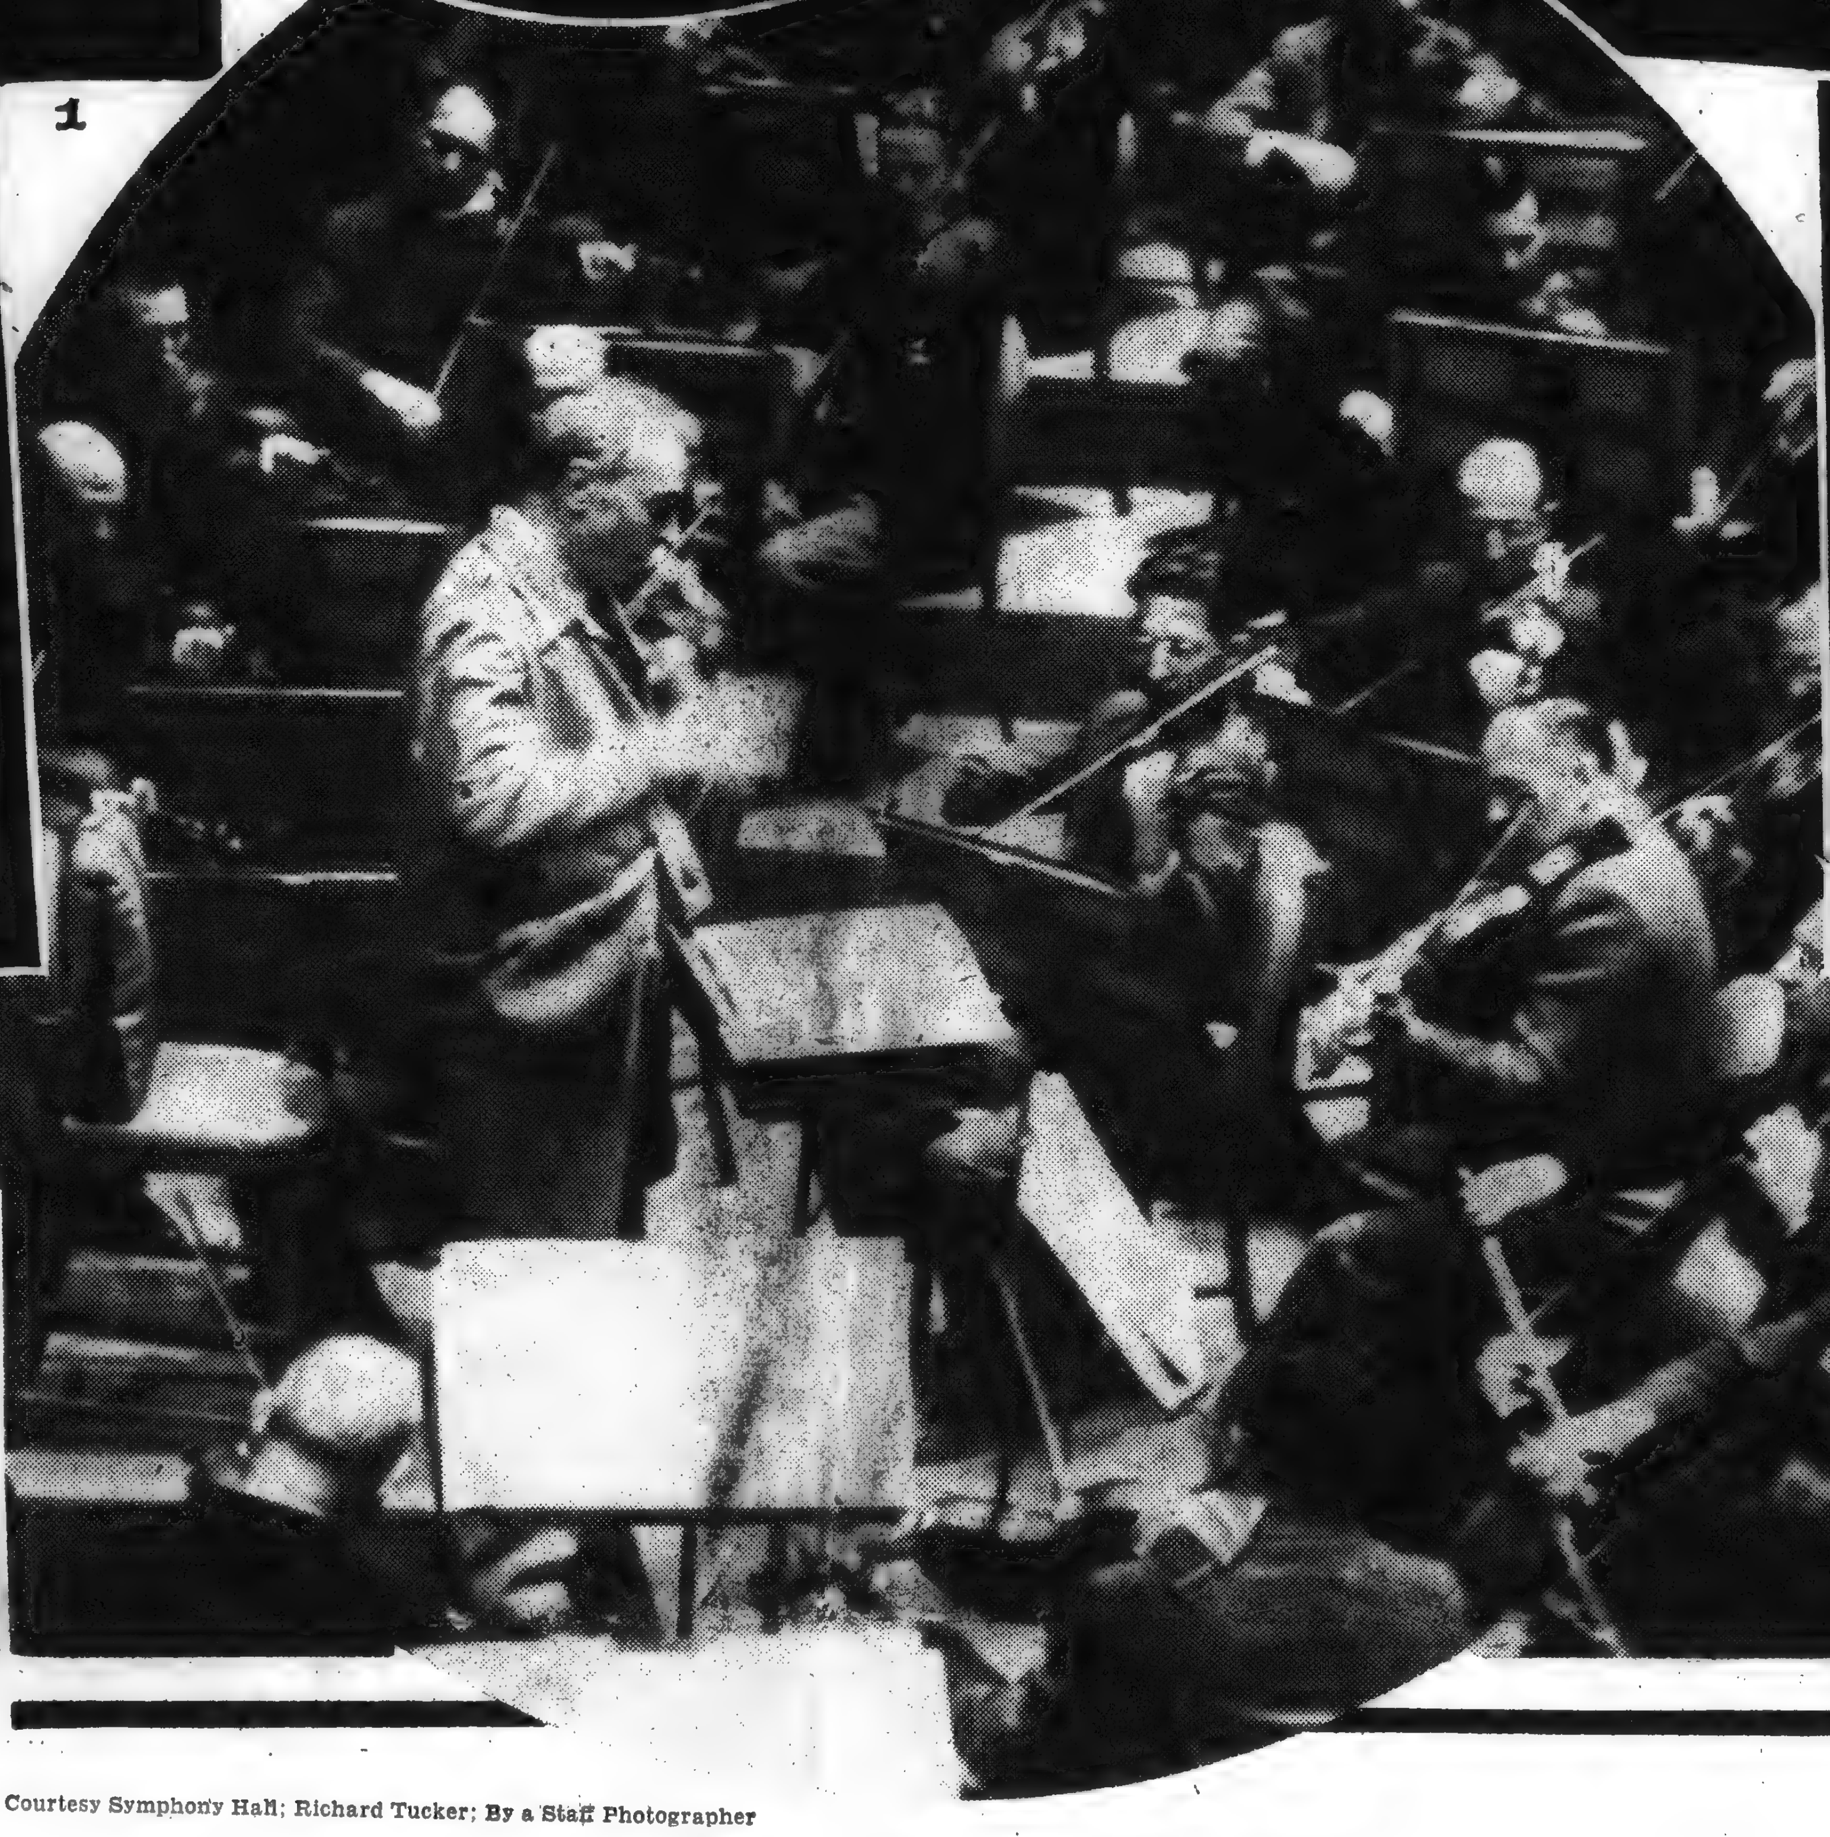
1

2

3

4

5

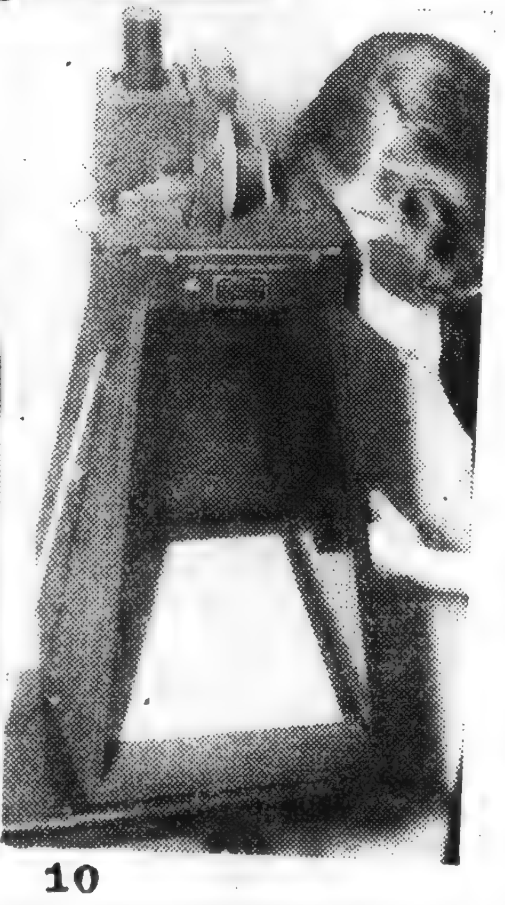


6

7

8

9



10

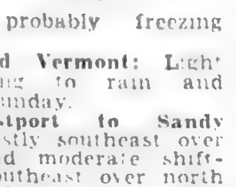
Courtesy Symphony Hall; Richard Tucker; By a Staff Photographer

Scenes at Symphony Hall in Boston

1. Instead of rapping with the baton on his music stand, Dr. Koussevitzky raises his arm quietly to signal the musicians to attention. 2. "Dolce. . . ." 3. "Stac-catto! ! ! !" 4. "Singen. . . . Let it sing . . ." 5. "Più piano possibile. . . ." 6. The conductor's hand is quicker than the camera's eye. Although his face is calm, Dr. Koussevitzky's hands move with lightning speed and drive. An exciting moment in Beethoven's "Fifth." 7. "More tone, violas. . . ." 8. Compiler of the Symphony's current newspaper history shows the contrast between old and new styles of keeping records. A whole page of scrapbook can be reduced to a picture about the size of a special delivery stamp. 9. Studying history in a peep show. The projection machine in which transparent positives are shown. 10. Enlarged images are projected from the spool of film above onto the screen below.

Weather

U. S. Weather Bureau Report



Boston and vicinity: Cloudy and warmer tonight, probably with light brief freezing rain, lowest temperature tonight in the upper 30's: Sunday rain and warmer, generally thawing; moderate variable to southeasterly winds.

Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island: Rain beginning late tonight and Sunday with rising temperature, probably freezing rain in the interior.

New Hampshire and Vermont: Light snow probably turning to rain and warmer tonight and Sunday.

Atlantic Coast—Eastport to Sandy Hook: Fresh winds mostly southeast over the south portion and moderate shifting winds becoming southeast over north portion; cloudy, probably rain over south and snow over north portion beginning late tonight or Sunday.

Official Temperatures

	A	B		A	B
Boston	17	17	Minneapolis	32	32
Bermuda	60	58	New Orleans	60	56
Chicago	48	46	New York	34	26
Denver	32	22	Norfolk	46	42
Helena	32	30	Philadelphia	30	26
Kansas City	36	36	St. Louis	52	50
Los Angeles	66	64	San Francisco	56	54
Miami	64	66	Washington	34	34

A—7:30 a. m., E. S. T., Dec. 3.
B—Minimum Dec. 2.

High Tides at Boston

Saturday, 7:47 p. m.; height, 8.6 feet.
Sunday, 8:0[illegible] a. m.; height, 9.8 feet.
Sunday, 8:3[illegible] p. m.; height, 8.8 feet.
Monday, 8:56 a. m.; height, 10.3 feet.
Light all vehicles by 4:42 p. m.
Light all vehicles by 4:42 p. m., Sunday.

Boston Events

The Boston Events listing usually found in this space will be found on Page 10 of this edition.

Amherst Frats Win Dining-Room Appeal —And Save $1,700

AMHERST, Mass. (AP)—Lord Jeff fraternity men have won a battle of the dining room—and are $1,700 a year to the good.

John W. Wright, Co-operative Business Manager of Amherst's 13 fraternities, announced Dec. 1 that exemption from the Massachusetts state unemployment tax had been secured, amounting to 2.7 per cent of the pay roll for student waiters, janitors, and chefs employed by the fraternities.

The fraternities, however, still must pay the Federal old-age insurance taxes, and fraternities operating dining rooms must pay a Federal unemployment excise tax.

But Mr. Wright said there also was some hope of obtaining an abatement of the Federal taxes, following protests by fraternities of Amherst, Williams, and other colleges to the Social Security Board.

Weinstein to Speak

Lewis H. Weinstein, General Counsel of the Boston Housing Authority and Assistant Corporation Counsel of Boston, will be guest speaker at the Ford Hall monthly business meeting in Kingsley Hall, Ford Building, tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

Film Records Koussevitzky's Boston Career

By John D. Beaufort
*Staff Writer of
The Christian Science Monitor*

Behind one of those mysteriously noncommittal doors that run along the first balcony corridors of Symphony Hall, a glamorous 15 years of musical history is being prepared for recording on film. The history was written by Serge Koussevitzky with the pen point of an eloquent baton. It was recorded by dozens of industrious newspaper critics and reporters. And now, its events are being reduced to the size of postage stamps for preservation and for posterity.

Symphony officials say that this is the first time that the new film recording device has been used to perpetuate the historic highlights of a symphony orchestra. The plan is to take outstanding pages from the ponderous Symphony Hall scrapbooks and photograph them in micro-film. Later, positive prints on transparent celluloid can be projected and enlarged in a hooded machine which looks like a cross between a peep show and a miniature of Edison's "Black Maria." Thus, 15 years of Koussevitzky history—reported in 7,500 columns of newspaper comment—can be reduced to 400 feet of film. The great advantage of this "boiling down," besides portability, is that the records are saved from the onslaughts of time, dust, and heat—to which the most impregnable scrap books are not impervious.

Can Be "Blown Up"

Besides being printed on transparent positives, the miniature film negatives can also be "blown up" into enlarged prints for reading or even for future newspaper reproduction.

Armed with a number of these enlargements, a Symphony Hall envoy and the writer plowed through the snowdrifts on a recent afternoon to Dr. Koussevitzky's home in Brookline with the purpose of finding out what the conductor might say about them.

The old clippings showed that even before Dr. Koussevitzky had arrived for his first Boston concert on Oct. 10, 1924, advance reports had stirred the imaginations of American editors. For one thing, he was the world's only Russian conductor. For another, he had encouraged the moderns, even the "demons of dissonance," as Philip Hale called them. Furthermore, Dr. Koussevitzky had said a kind word for jazz. This was picked up, quoted—and misquoted—far and wide until some readers must have gained the impression that the newcomer would conduct with a saxophone clinging to his neck. He was described as "the lightning conductor," the conductor of "volcanic temperament. . . ."

"The Russian invasion begins!" shouted one prankish headline.

Wide Range of Interests

Philip Hale, going over the conductor's Paris concerts from 1921-23, found, however, that they revealed a catholicity of taste rather than a complete devotion to any one "school." Here, side by side, were Scriabin, Bach, Moussorgsky, Haydn, Prokofieff, Brahms, Stravinsky, Debussy, Honneger, Beethoven, Borodin, and Weber. It is a curious reflection upon Parisian taste that Dr. Koussevitzky introduced to the audiences of that highly intellectual city the Brahms Fourth Symphony—and this was scarcely more than 10 years ago!

But perhaps it is not too difficult to see why the women of the Friday afternoon series awaited Dr. Koussevitzky's first program with anticipation, perhaps some trepidation—a little fiddling with gloves and patting of bonnets. Even Symphony Hall felt it necessary to issue a statement of his good intent to calm Bostonian apprehension.

Their concern was to a large degree unfounded. The orchestra played Vivaldi's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra; Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture; Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Honneger's "Pacific 231" and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy." It was typical of Koussevitzky's catholicity in program making.

Conductor Looks Back

Dr. Koussevitzky, seated in a dull red rocking chair hard by a table on which stood a beautiful 16th century Russian ikon, smiled at the reminders of his "invasion."

"I was considered ultra-modern," he said, "because I gave the first performances in Paris of certain modern composers' works. So they said: 'Ah, Koussevitzky is an apostle of this modern school.' But I have continued to be interested in the new composers. And those composers who were once revolutionary have changed. Stravinsky, for instance. His latest concerto is in Bach's style—but in Stravinsky's own language."

Dr. Koussevitzky was asked why the Brahms Fourth had never been played in Paris before his arrival.

"The French like the original, not the emotional," he said. "When you read a Brahms score, you find the score itself not original. Brahms's music is the interpretation of the great music of Bach, Beethoven, even of Mozart. What is original in Brahms is the emotion. When a conductor understands and interprets Brahms, the public will not realize that the music itself is unoriginal. The French like Schumann, but not Brahms. And that may account for some critics, too," he added with a smile.

Musicians Persuaded

Even some of his musicians did not like Brahms when they first played his music.

"But now they adore him," said the conductor, raising his hands and his eyes.

Dr. Koussevitzky's eyes are the most remarkable feature of his face. They shine always with enthusiasm and when he becomes particularly moved or excited, they widen. His hands, which he uses a good deal when speaking, move with strong, easy grace. He is a slight man, smaller than one would expect from seeing him on the platform. He talks slowly, deliberately for the most part, so that his accent is not confusing if one listens intently. Occasionally, he hesitates for a word. Once during the interview he asked for help from his secretary. But usually, he finds his own expression.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who has conducted in Russia (at the age of 12), France, Germany, Austria, England, Spain and other countries, considered the question of musical taste here and abroad.

American Advantage

"America has not the tradition which one finds in Europe," he said. "That is why America can grow more quickly. For example, Germany traditionally hates new music. It takes an extraordinary time and work to play new music in Germany. In 1912, I attended a Brahms festival at Wiesbaden. The public was completely divided. Even today, the war in Germany between Brahms's admirers and Wagner's admirers is still going on. Germany took 50 years to accept Wagner. America accepted Wagner right away. The Germans think that German music is the highest and the best. They don't want to hear any other. Sibelius is unknown in Germany. In France there is a highly cultivated musical minority, which is extremely open-minded, but musical culture is not a thing of the masses."

Dr. Koussevitzky told about "one of the greatest German conductors" whom he visited backstage not long ago after a concert in Paris. The conductor said he had been asked to play a Sibelius symphony and as he did not know any of them, would Dr. Koussevitzky suggest one that would be "interesting?"

"I told him that all seven were "interesting," said Dr. Koussevitzky.

Masses Better Educated

"The masses in America are musically much better educated than the masses in any other country—

(Continued on Page 11, Column 3)

Granite State Reaps Vacation Dividends

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 3—The Department of Interior has released figues compiled by the National Forest Service which show that expenditures in retail trade by vacation travelers in New Hampshire for the year 1937 amounted to $22,500,000.

This means that travelers spent $43.79 for each person in New Hampshire in 1937, ranking the State 17th in the country as a vacation-land on the basis of per capita retail expenditures.

While the State Planning and Development Commission reported it has no figures of its own to compare to the Federal figures, it placed the New Hampshire recreational business at $75,000,000 for 1937. The latter figure includes not only retail expenditures but also the cost of country homes and camps purchased or rented, and expenditures to maintain or improve these properties.

The Boston Globe

Published by GLOBE NEWSPAPER COMPANY
242 Washington St. Boston, Mass.
(Established March 4, 1872. Evening edition first issued March 7, 1878. Sunday edition first issued Oct. 14, 1877.)

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1938

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

	Daily Per Mo.	Daily Per Yr.	Sunday Per Mo.	Sunday Per Yr.
Boston Postal Zone	.75	9.00	.55	6.50
Zones 1, 2, 3 (including New York city and all New England except Northern Maine)	.50	6.00	.50	6.00
Elsewhere in U. S. and Canada..	.80	9.60	.70	8.40

(Please do not send cash. Use money orders or checks.)

BACK NUMBERS (Per Copy)

	Daily	Sunday
Under three months old..........	5c	15c
Three to six months old..........	10c	20c
Six to nine months old..........	15c	25c
Nine months to one year..........	25c	50c
More than one year old.........	Out of Print

The Associated Press is exclusively entitled to the use for publication of all news dispatches credited to it or not otherwise credited in this paper and also the local news published herein. All rights of republication of special dispatches herein are also reserved.

Globe Man's Daily Story

The other day Representative W. P. Lambertson of Kansas was invited to dinner at the White House. He replied that he didn't have any dress clothes and wouldn't buy any. Marvin McIntyre, secretary to the President, said how about that blue serge. Will Rogers once came in blue serge. Mr. Lambertson said he wasn't Will Rogers, and how about asking him to something where he wouldn't have to wear dress clothes.

So he was asked to lunch Easter Sunday. And he wore his blue serge.

CATHEDRAL IN A SHED

In his prologue to "The Scarlet Letter" Hawthorne imagines the scorn of his bleak Puritan ancestors could they have known the calling of their descendant: "A writer of story-books? . . . Why, the degenerate fellow might as well have been a fiddler!"

This morning, nearly ninety years later, members and friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on their way to the acres in Lenox where Hawthorne lived and wrote. Their errand is to see work in progress and to test acoustics in the new Music Shed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which is to be held, as annually, next August. In measurement of the distance traveled between the two points—these festivals and the abhorrence of secular music noted in Hawthorne's preface on the Salem Custom House—recall that when the first pipe organ was erected in a New England meeting-house, at Beverly, it was stigmatized by the righteous as "an ungodly kist o' whistles" (chest of whistles); and that likewise, when the first bass viol (an instrument on which Dr. Koussevitzky is a virtuoso) was brought into a church in New Hampshire to assist the psalmody, scandalized rustics called it "a hog trough."

Symphonic Festivals on ground where in 1851 Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" unite music and literature into a pair of binoculars whose historic focus is toward the future of these arts in America. Beethoven, the first composer to earn his living by his pen, died in 1827; within a dozen years afterward the first American to earn his living by writing novels of indubitably high artistic rank was embarked on his labors. His living was not easy, nor did he earn all of it by writing, and his year at Lenox, though prolific mentally, was financially slim pickings. For company he had another American novelist, not then much in esteem, but who now, thanks largely to the late Philip Hale, is coming to be regarded by his fellow-countrymen as having been as great an author as Hawthorne if not a greater. Herman Melville was living close by and working hard over "Moby Dick." This gentle roysterer of the seas was the one man who ever came anywhere near to penetrating Hawthorne's stand-offishness (to call it by no harsher name), perhaps because Melville, too, was fighting the same lonely battle of a novelist fiddling for his livelihood in a Puritan meeting-house—a battle so forlorn that he finally gave it up.

And yet before the 19th century was ended Americans had done creditably in letters. Whitman, Thoreau, and Emerson (to name them in their now-assigned order of eminence): let our own dear century match them! What prospect have we of doing so?

The fiddlers and other instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are today among the most admired and respected artists in America. Hardly less useful than the music they make is the disquieting surmise which their art now presses in upon a once self-complacent mercantocracy, the surmise that these musical artists may be much more valuable citizens than those who have hitherto been accustomed to consider themselves some pumpkins.

What, then, is to be the future of America in music? Good beginnings are being made. The gains in general diffusion of musical knowledge and taste even since 1920 are startling. As against these, the habit of passive listening fostered by radio and phonograph instead of active music-making by amateurs in their own homes is a nip-and-tuck contest not yet decided; but music schools and school music are sowing crops of young players, while academic choral societies are filling the land with young men and women who, in order to be completely happy, must sing. There seems reason to hope that as 19th century America did unexpectedly well in letters, the art in which 20th century America excels may be music.

Cathedrals were built in an age of violence. When the murderous feuds over property between modern nations are remembered only with loathing, the works of artists will be cherished with grateful reverence. America is only just beginning to build its cathedrals. The Berkshire Symphonic Festivals may be one of them.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

A Fine Career

The career of Edward Tuck, who died i at the ripe age of 95, is an outstanding ex of a New Hampshire boy who not only " good" on his own account but also accomplis tremendous amount of good in two hemisph
In 1860 he was a student at Dartmouth, having tered that institution from Phillips Exeter Ac
emy. Robert Lincoln, son of Abraham, was th an Exeter boy. It was on his way to visit son that Lincoln stopped in New York city deliver the famous Cooper Union speech.
Exeter he was a guest of Amos Tuck, Edward father, who had been in Congress with the nex
President and became one of the staunchest sup porters of Lincoln in the East.

In 1865 President Lincoln appointed Edward Tuck American Vice Consul in Paris. It was his residence in the French capital that pointed Edward's feet into international banking in which he amassed a fortune. Having become rich, Mr. Tuck sought ways to put his wealth to beneficial use. Dartmouth profits by its Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finance.

The French received even larger gifts from this American who dwelt among them, but as late as 1925 he spent large sums in this country in what he believed to be defense of freedom of thought and expression here.

Camille Flammarion, the astronomer, named a new planet "Tuckia" in honor of Edward Tuck, which gives him about as much security to fame as mortal man can have.

Homeward Bound

Members of Congress seem to be afflicted with an epidemic of nostalgia which causes them to feel that home is best. They are anxious to dispose of public matters as quickly as possible, if not more so, in order to return to their states and districts where they can gaze on the old familiar faces.

Curiously enough this homesickness only troubles the statesmen in the even numbered years. In the other years, those which end in one, three, five, seven or nine, there is no such yearning. Instead there is a strong disposition to see the world or at least to visit various distant parts of their own country.

The difference is accounted for by the fact that elective changes in the national Legislature are made in the years which will divide by two. What these lawmakers want to know is how they are going to stand with the voters in primaries or nominating conventions and in the balloting to follow.

When they manage to get away from Washing ton it will be to meet rather mixed reception
It may be that some of them will feel that Wash ington is rather more homelike than home itself
Even so they must be brave. That is why they hurry.

Wonder of the World

South Africa must be a splendid place to come from, but not in the usually accepted sense of this saying. It is credibly reported that the part of the British Commonwealth of Nations that lies at the bottom of the Dark Continent is actually desirous of having native sons return from other parts of the world because there is work for them to do in South Africa.

An example is an engineer who has been on relief in Alberta in the Dominion of Canada for the past two years. His home Government has sent $800 to enable him, his wife and two children to return to South Africa, where he is to receive steady employment on a railroad.

More interesting still is the fact that this is no isolated case but part of a native-sons repatriation scheme of the Government. Of course, such as he are expected to make return of what has been advanced for passage, but that is not asking much.

If this keeps on the rest of the world will be sending scouting expeditions of economists to find out how a country gets into a condition where it wants to have people come back.

EDITORIAL POINTS

This new autogyro, which can fly sidewise, may be all very well, but the perfect plane will be the one which can be parked up in the sky.

Designers are now trying to figure out how to take half-inches off the 1938 bathing suits, and the one who succeeds can fill Einstein's thinking cap.

In a wiser and more tolerant world than this, persons with ideas for the possible economic betterment of their fellows would not be reviled as enemies of their country.

Aunt Lizzie Devers of Oklahoma, 107 years old and willing to marry again, eclipses in spirit the woman who wanted to live to be shot at 92 by a jealous husband.

When the President takes a cruiser for a fishing trip it's to be assumed that he's going after the fierce ones.

It's too bad that the M. I. T. "thinking machine" can't be crossed with a politician, for the improvement of the species.

The Rhode Island Supreme Court has ruled that a man who stole a railroad last December must pay the penalty for theft, and not the penalty for lacking business judgment.

The Nazis' idea is, in something like the words of Edgar Guest, that it takes a heap of living in a country to make an Aryan.

If you want to see what censorship can do, take any Mother Goose rhyme, black out words here and there, and let unbridled fancy replace the words according to taste.

Congressmen want to go home to find out whether their constituents want them to stay there or in Washington.

Gov. La Follette now claims the support of Iowa, where the tall third parties grow.

The submarine Seal has been completed for the Navy, at the cost of a good many fish.

Supporters of the new third party may take comfort from the fact that neither of the two old parties was ever conspicuously wonderful.

Things are quiet in Europe just now. There hasn't been a crisis for a week.

An old saw revised: "The hand that bombs the babies rules the world.

Theme song of Mr. Hitler's victims is, "O, you Nazi man!"

The grass is always greener out at the ball park.

This is a month with a holiday week-end.

Keep in Festival File

MUSIC OF THE

FESTIVAL SURVEY

Summer Events in America Create New Fields of Artistic Activity

Jul 17 '38 Times

By OLIN DOWNES

AN aspect of American musical development which may be even more indicative than the impressive programs of the wintertime of the shift of the musical balance of power between America and Europe is the growth and multiplication of our Summer music festivals, open-air concert series, and opera and ballet performances. We have as yet no Summer musical festival which parallels in repertory those given in Salzburg, Munich and other European centers, although the Berkshire Symphonic Festival now given each August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, and planned by Dr. Koussevitzky to greatly extend its scope in the years to come, is a movement obviously headed in that direction. And the New York World's Fair of 1939 is planning a six months' music festival of far wider repertory than any of the institutions mentioned.

* * *

We have had for many years certain great festivals, such as the Cincinnati Biennial May Festival, the Ann Arbor Music Festival, the Bethlehem Bach Festival, which take place in the warm months, and the Worcester (Mass.) Music Festival, which transpires in early Fall, with other established festivals of lesser proportions.

Aside from these, the most important and popular musical institutions of the summertime are the open-air series of symphonic concerts in various centers, from the Lewisohn Stadium on the Eastern coast to the Hollywood Bowl on the West. More lately opera has become popular as a component element of symphonic series, and for special seasons of open-air entertainment. At the Stadium the programs have not confined themselves to "Aïda" and "Carmen." "Boris Godunoff" and Strauss's "Salome" have vied with the symphonic lists. A considerable operatic repertory is heard in different parts of the country in the Summertime.

* * *

Appealing to select but also to numerous audiences are the chamber music festivals given from coast to coast, the greater number of these owing their existence to the beneficent offices of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the founder of the Berkshire Chamber Music Festivals held at Pittsfield and inaugurated by her twenty years ago, which have assembled in successive seasons most of the leading chamber music organizations of the day. An offshoot of this festival is the one given annually in the Fall in the Music Room of the Library of Congress in Washington. The complete list of chamber music series given in Summer as well as Winter would be lengthy, if only confined to territory immediately adjacent to New York and neighboring Eastern States, as the series given by the Jacques Gordon Quartet at Music Mountain; by Hugo Kortschak and others at Cummington, Mass.; the numerous programs offered in connection with the Summer terms of universities, music schools and educational institutions, such as the Summer season at Chautauqua, N. Y. The Yaddo Festival held at Saratoga Springs for a period of several weeks of August and September has a special character in the conditions it offers not only for performance but for creative effort by American composers.

These and similar developments will continue—unhappily at the expense of Europe. The great German music festivals are losing patronage and they now operate under limited resources. The same thing will now apply to the Salzburg music festival since Austria's absorption by Germany, with the resultant injurious effects of politics upon artistic production. When Bayreuth and Munich, because of political agencies, began to lose international patronage, Salzburg, with Toscanini as its inspiring head, took their place. Now Salzburg is facing difficult days, while an increasing number of musicians, the majority Jews, but an important minority musicians of other races, leave places of intolerance for the hospitable American shores. In a word, the tide of Summer visitants to musical festivals is certain to turn westward instead of eastward in the years immediately before us, and give American effort an additional stimulus in this field.

* * *

The big American festivals have their position and public. Of even greater promise is the mushroom rapidity with which small new festivals are springing up on every hand. They indicate the popular zest for this form of activity. This article cannot pretend to enumerate all the new Summer musical activities which have been inaugurated, even in the last two years. In that time the Essex County Symphony Society of Newark, N. J., which Alexander Smallens directed this year, has become an institution to reckon with, representing musical activities of the city and adjacent counties in New Jersey. The National Symphony Orchestra, under Hans Kindler at Washington, has become a Summer as well as Winter institution of great benefit to the public. It now organizes a new series of "Sunset Symphonies" at the Potomac Watergate near the Lincoln Memorial, the concerts given in a beautiful setting which utilizes the river for the occasion.

The concerts given on the Charles River Embankment by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, following the earlier "Pop" season in Symphony Hall, are now an official part of the orchestra's season. Milwaukee announces the dedication of the new Emil Blatz music shell at Washington Park. Accompanying this gift to the city the Park Commission has engaged for the programs "such artists," runs the press announcement, "as Lotte Lehmann, Jessica Dragonette, Richard Bonelli and John Carter."

William Matheus Sullivan's Dunrovin Music Festival, which has completed its first season, represents special effort. Portions of Mozart's operas have been given with performances of chamber music and compositions in smaller forms suitable to the intimate character of the auditorium where the performances are given. The young and vigorous Silvermine Festival is one that assembles not only musicians, but workers in various arts. The nucleus of this festival is the presence of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and the festival chorus assembled for the occasion. The Westchester Music Festival is an older, bigger and influential institution.

* * *

Here are the Friends of Music of the Lower Connecticut Valley. They announce their second series of Summer concerts under the direction of Ronald Murat. The Putnam Valley Board of Education, cooperating with the Federal Music Project, has arranged a serie of symphonic concerts by the Westchester Philharmonic Orchestra. These take place at the Putnam Valley Central School Stadium, on Oscawana Road. The opening concert includes the Beethoven "Egmont" overture, the Bach-Stoessel chorale, "O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden," the Mozart A major concerto, with Augusta Scheiber as soloist, and other works by Liszt, Ravel and J. Strauss.

At Hartford a Summer season of open-air opera begins in the park's new amphitheatre, the performances produced by Alfredo Salmaggi, commencing on July 23. These are near-by events, taking place in the effete East. But Carmel-by-the-Sea in California has now its own Bach Festival, a beginning which is modest, but which will have, as those who have been there know, an extremely intelligent and cultivated clientele to rely upon, and a public exceptionally interested in music.

* * *

In other words, music in America is no longer a question of a few symphony orchestras and a great opera company which function with solemnity and éclat for the social leaders and the cognoscenti of principal cities in the wintertime. Nor is it a question of a limited public attending Winter concerts and forgetting music for the rest of the year, as allegedly respectable people go to church on Sundays and turn to devilment and the enthusiastic mulcting of their fellow-citizens on the other days of the week. Music is not seasonally adjourned. Summer vacationists have less and less need of going overseas for representative musical entertainment. More communities are discovering the fun of having music festivals within their own means and facilities, making the summertime and the vacation period richer than ever before. And this is the sort of thing that makes for the full musical life of the nation.

OPERA NOTES

Kep

MONDAY, JUNE 20, 1938.

SYMPHONY IS URGED AS GUIDE TO LIVING

Dr. Gilkey at Wellesley Lauds Its Balanced Variety, Order and Disciplined Unity

ASKS SENIORS TO 'TUNE UP'

President Wilkins of Oberlin Will Give the Address at Today's Exercises

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WELLESLEY, Mass., June 19.—"Education at its best and its most is no solo of individual ability and achievement, but a symphony of shared experience, whose genius is its reconciliation of variety and harmony," Dr. Charles W. Gilkey, dean of the Chicago University Chapel, told the baccalaureate audience in the Wellesley College Memorial Chapel this morning.

Dr. Gilkey's daughter, Mary Jane, a member of the graduating class, sat in the nave with her black-robed classmates, surrounded by their parents and alumnae, to hear her father propound the superiority of concerted action to individual achievement.

"It is the special temptation of an educated man or woman to try to make life the singing of a solo," Dr. Gilkey said. "We have our specialty, about which we know lots more than most other folks. We have our individuality, which, having been developed so far, must, of course, be maintained and cultivated. And, of course, we have our human nature, our opinions, our emotions, our idiosyncrasies, our passions, each of which in turn must have its expression in full cry.

"So life itself turns into a succession of solos or explosions, each unaccompanied: and when we begin to ask for its coherence, its meaning, its integration, we find no answer."

Symbol of the Symphony

Dr. Gilkey has found the answer "in the direction of the symphony, with its balanced variety, its disciplined unity and order."

"You have been born too late in human history to sing the song of any race or nation or class alone," he continued, "or to leave out of the symphony of our social hopes and faiths the distinctive voice of any human group."

"A modern democracy forgets at its peril," he warned, "either its under-privileged children who are out of work, or its children of privilege like ourselves who have been trained to serve the commonweal."

Specifically addressing the seniors, Dr. Gilkey urged them to prepare themselves for the parts to which they would eventually be assigned.

"You can do with your life what every man in the orchestra does before he ever plays his instrument; you can tune it up to that note in which for you the voice of God sounds clearest," he added.

This afternoon President McAfee received seniors, their parents, alumnae and college guests on the lawn of her home overlooking Lake Waban. Tomorrow she will confer degrees and announce prizes and scholarships in Alumnae Hall. Dr. Ernest Hatch Wilkins, president of Oberlin College, will deliver the commencement address.

LIST OF THE CANDIDATES

The candidates for degrees are as

Patrici
Dorothi
Eleano
Pauline
H. Ev
Janet
Mary-J
E. Ma
Lois K
Marion
Mildred
Bernice
Bernice
Marion
Miriam
Betsey
Marjori
ter
Sally S
Marion
Grace
Barbara
Jean M
Cyril S
Moira
Frances
Mary A
Rita G.
Sybil S
Martha
Virginia
May Sp
Barbara
Caroline
Eleanor
Rilda M
Miriam
Claire S
Hilda S
Margery
Mary B
Laura

Hannah
Geneva
Naomi
Dorothy
Katheri
ing
Catherin
Harriet berg

IN

Katheri
woody
Marjorie
Eberha
Frances
Naomi

Certific

Katheri
woody
Marjorie
Eberh
Frances
Naomi

NEW DE

2-Yea
Stud

Spe
BOST
the "N and exp
America
Univers fessors accompl made by and Jes
School o
The st mental teach t into" from with th laborat work will ha in true of the Seve which young ready ests as t cours gene read year they bili
low
I ne cu or

Times Apr 17 '38

MUSIC OF THE TIMES

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Report of Progress—Building of Shed Begun—Programs Are Set

By OLIN DOWNES

THE music editor of THE TIMES has been mildly taken to task for a remark in a recent article on American music festivals. In that article he said, en passant, that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would have developed even more rapidly than it has if the wishes of Dr. Koussevitzky had been followed. The retort courteous to this observation has been made in the form of some special announcements from the management of this festival given annually at Stockbridge, Mass., by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

First and foremost is the news of the actual erection of the new Music Shed, which seats an audience of 5,000 people in a spacious and comfortable way. This edifice, soon to be completed, covers an acre and a half of ground, is surrounded by an arcade twenty-seven feet wide, and open at the sides to the Summer air. This auditorium, as the plan shows, has excellent sight-lines, and it will be subjected to final tests for acoustics next July 1. The expert engaged for this task is Professor Richard Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

* * *

The construction of the Shed follows the gift made last season to the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Tanglewood, the country estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks. With this gift the Boston Symphony acquired a permanent home for its festival, a place gloriously situated and landscaped and an ideal environment for artistic performance. The Music Shed is designed not only for the practical purposes of an appropriate auditorium, but also as an edifice that will harmonize with its surroundings. Its steel structure is now complete, and its roof going on. It was started last Jan. 1, and it has risen in response to the growth and the pressing needs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

That festival has developed with impressive public support from recent and very modest beginnings. It was inaugurated by the late Henry Hadley in 1934 as a step toward his conception of an American music festival. Three open-air concerts with players from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra were given. Mr. Hadley gave his utmost to the plan. In 1936 Dr. Koussevitzky and his players assembled, and the public response to their efforts at once established the logic of the undertaking. Three concerts were given in 1936, and six, in two weeks, in 1937. Meanwhile, in those four years, the attendance had doubled, from 2,500 to over 5,000 a concert. It was evident that the public which assembles at Stockbridge for the festival was behind the institution, and was prepared, in large and increasing numbers, to support it. The festival will be extended next year.

Last season Stockbridge experienced a beneficent catastrophe—the cloudburst, which showed the indispensability, for shelter as well as the desirable acoustics, of a great roofed building. The storm made such a clamor that the orchestra could not be heard; much less could the music transmitted by radio. As for the guests, they were marooned under the tent, helpless, till a late hour, to cross shallow, swirling currents of water.

* * *

A music shed had been virtually decided upon, considerably in advance of this event, which, nevertheless, appears to have had an effect of precipitation. The fact that delightful weather had attended the former season's concerts was evidently not a guarantee against a repetition of the catastrophe. Furthermore, despite surprisingly good acoustics secured within the tent last season, it was realized that a more substantial structure would meet this requirement as no canvas structure ever could do; $81,000 of the $100,000 which the structure costs has been raised. A remarkable response to the announcements of the concerts of next August has taken place; 108 of the 160 boxes have already been sold, while patrons of last year and new ones of the season to come have placed their applications for seats. The concerts next August will be given on the 4th, 6th, 7th and 11th, 13th and 14th of that month. The works to be included in the programs are Beethoven's Sixth and Ninth symphonies, Sibelius's First and Tchaikovsky's Sixth symphonies, a Brahms symphony, to be selected; a Wagner program, drawn from the operas "Walkuere" and "Siegfried"; the Brahms-Haydn Variations, Sibelius's "Tapiola," Debussy's "La Mer," Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kitej," Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Rhapsody," Ravel's "Mother Goose," Copland's "Music for the Theatre" and Walter Piston's "Concerto for Orchestra." Other compositions are to be announced.

* * *

Thus Dr. Koussevitzky's plans for a festival to be systematically extended in its scope and character do advance, and promise always more for the future. It is rather appalling to read that in 1937 over 2,400 automobiles from nearly every one of the United States parked near the scene of the concerts; and "all had left within twenty minutes after," and that "more extended facilities are being prepared for this year." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is thus up and coming. It is a membership corporation, none of whose officers receive a salary, while the work of promotion is done by local and State committees.

The festival looks confidently ahead and plans optimistically for the future. It has now an established base. "The trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are working in the closest cooperation and they will broaden the program of the festivals as the public demands. With the New York Fair in 1939 it may be expected that a greater program will be developed." It is eminently fitting that these things should transpire in a time when America is realizing herself anew in her thought and her art.

SWISS CITIES AS POTENT

SAN CARLO O

Who testified regarding work

lowing the hurricane in Sept

Koussevitzky Career Filmed

(Continued from Page 9)

even Germany," he continued. "Most people in American audiences desire new music. What a change in the last 10 years! New York I find more conservative in its tastes than Boston, but perhaps that is because the tradition among Boston Symphony conductors has always been to introduce new music. The Boston audience is the best audience in the world even when, sometimes, it rubs its palms together and thinks it is giving you an ovation."

Speaking of the old and the new reminded the conductor of Bach, whom he considers one of the most "modern" composers who has ever written. Bach was writing dissonances long before the moderns had ever discovered the word.

"But Bach wrote dissonances because he must pursue a certain melodic line. If the pursuance of that line required a G flat to be played beside a G, that would not stop Bach. And, always, the resolution of harmonies was right.

"Wagner borrowed from Bach. The whole of 'Parsifal' is based on two measures found in the Matthew Passion. And Bach, himself, borrowed from such composers as Schütz, who was writing fine religious music a hundred years before Bach's time."

Festival Programs

Besides pioneering in modern fields during his 15 years' incumbency, Dr. Koussevitzky has paid due respect to the older composers with special festival programs dedicated to Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and Haydn.

This year, he will increase the amount of Beethoven and Sibelius on his programs.

"As for new music," he said, "I am going to introduce the youngest generation of American composers. We will play pieces by William Schuman, Robert McBride, David Diamond, and Charles Naginski. I will also play Hill, Berezovsky, Copland, Piston, Hindemith, Stravinsky, Prokofieff, Harris, and others."

Dr. Koussevitzky feels that music today is moving away from the complexity which characterized it from the time of Wagner, Berlioz, and Liszt up to the period of Strauss and the early Scriabin. He considers the music of Debussy a reaction to this complexity, because "Debussy, in orchestration, returned to simplicity."

Scriabin's Status

The conductor, who has been called the greatest interpreter of Scriabin and who once fought valiantly for the recognition of that composer's music, was asked about Scriabin's decline in popularity.

"Scriabin is still a very fine composer," he said, after a moment's pause. "People forget a little but I am sure Scriabin's time will come again. Now, I must say, I lose something. I have not the same contact with his music. I have satisfaction more from other music. I probably played too much Scriabin when I was younger."

Dr. Koussevitzky regards Stravinsky as "already a classic." Hindemith and Prokofieff he calls "the most interesting writers today."

Tomorrow evening, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra entrain for the annual "western" tour. They will visit Rochester, Buffalo, Ann Arbor, Toledo, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh. It seemed opportune to ask him of the relationship of music to democracy.

"Ah, that is a very deep question," he said. "So far, democracy has failed the arts — in France, in England, even in America. As strongly as I am opposed to all forms of autocracy, I must say that it is the kings and courts who have endowed music. But in democracy, there might be the greatest hope for the future."

Testimony Taken In Parkway Case

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Dec. 3 (AP)—Testimony that G. Leroy Kemp, while acting as the State Highway Department's land purchasing agent in securing a right of way for the Merritt Parkway, divided commissions with a real estate broker representing land owners, was written in Superior Court records today.

Thomas N. Cooke, Greenwich and New York broker, on the stand five hours yesterday, told the Court he shared commissions with Kemp. He is due to resume the stand Tuesday, when the trial of Kemp starts its third week. Kemp is charged with conspiracy.

The special grand jury that spent better than two months this spring investigating land purchases for the Parkway, besides indicting Kemp, similarly accused Cooke, Samuel H Silberman, another broker wi whom Kemp is accused of sha commissions, and six others.

Their trials have been d until the Kemp case ends.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

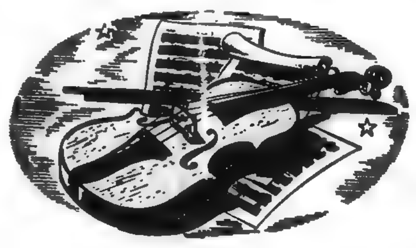
Think

SEP - 1938 N. Y. C.

Silence De Rigueur at Symphonies

Concerning the ban on applause at the conclusion of the third movement of "Pathétique".

NO TEMPEST in a teapot ever boiled more furiously than the discussion which is raging over recent breaks with tradition in the manner of listening to symphony concerts. A symphony, to be sure, is more than a teapot, though the latter, too, as everyone knows, has venerable traditions and ceremonies.



What prompts these remarks is a situation which arose at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, had reached the third movement of Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique". The audience had, step by step, come under the spell of the composer's mood, which builds up a wild and fantastic theme and marches on with roaring brass and pounding drums to a finale of low register instruments. It was too much.

The audience, at least a part of the audience, could not wait in silence, or indulge merely in a conventional stirring and rustling, until the next movement started. It broke out into applause, which was promptly suppressed by a gesture of the conductor.

* * *

The question is, are there not occasions at the conclusion of a symphonic movement when it is not only natural, but proper for the audience to applaud? If so, is not the conclusion of the third movement of the "Pathétique" preeminently one of those occasions? It happens that the final movement is a dirge, worked out with fine variations, but still a dirge. When it ends, the audience has settled back into decorous composure and is deep in thought. Yet that is the time when it has its only opportunity to show its appreciation. It must try to reenact the enthusiasm which it has wished to express earlier. Is this logical or fitting?

The question is discussed at considerable length by the musical critic, Mr. Olin Downes, who, while far from singling out Dr. Koussevitzky for censure, takes violent exception to this standardized practice.

Symphony audiences are supposed to be intelligent, and a conductor's rigid rule against applause, except at the conclusion, might be interpreted as a reflection on their power of discrimination. This is one of several angles from which the Berkshire "scandal" is being viewed. Another angle is seen in the bitter question—though posed without any animosity toward Dr. Koussevitzky, "Why should a conductor thus get directly between the audience and the music, as if it were his music and not theirs, and his the responsibility of dictating an audience's response?" All conductors do it, we are told, the small fry as well as the leviathans.

* * *

The tempest, one is led to infer, will simmer down to something like this — Tradition, though not infallible, has a way of commanding respect because often it is reasonable. Violate it and you will start violent discussion, as in the present instance.

From such discussions may come a compromise or two. Just now the compromise for which not a few are hoping is a general understanding that it is good form to vent one's pent-up feelings at the conclusion of the third movement of Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique". At present "the movement that should arouse frantic excitement is hearkened to as if it were the funeral of a statesman, where everyone should wear black and walk with muffled tread."

[182]

FORT WAYNE, IND.
NEWS - SENTINEL

SEP 1 - 1938

Critic Says Debussy Was No Renegade

French Composer Is Called One Of The World's Great Masters.

BY WALTER A. HANSEN,
News-Sentinel Music Critic.

The quaint notion that Claude Debussy was a renegade among composers seems to be blessed with more than the proverbial nine lives of a diehard tomcat. Again and again, we hear it said that the Frenchman could not write melodies, that his harmonic vocabulary was harsh and grating, and that his attempts at what is known as impressionism were nebulous and often without any meaning whatever to the average listener.

Sometimes strictures of this kind are based on a meagre and highly superficial acquaintance with what Debussy wrote; sometimes they are nothing more nor less than bluntly put reflections of deeply felt disapprobation. We all know, of course, that we should never become quarrelsome when that sacred cow, called Taste, shows her horns and begins to moo in the offing.

At any rate, Debussy still provides us with much food for discussion. He is by no means a dead issue. Pianists and conductors have long since come to realize that, taste or no taste, they cannot afford to ignore him.

A Forthright Appraisal.

It is often infinitely more comfortable to be mealy-mouthed in one's appraisals than to give forthright expression to convictions; but your reviewer prefers to cast comfort to the four winds by declaring that a man who had the ability to give us works like "La Mer," the "Preludes" for piano, "The Afternoon of a Faun," the "Quartet in G Minor," the three orchestral "Nocturnes" ("Nuages," "Fetes and "Sirenes"), "The Children's Corner" and the impressions of Spain, entitled "Iberia," must have been of the kith and kin of the great masters.

On second thought, however, there is, truth to tell, no great risk involved in emitting a statement of such positiveness. A careful, reexamination of "Iberia"—which is beautifully played by the New York Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra under John Barbirolli (Victor Album M-460)—is sufficient, I believe, to convince impartial listeners that Debussy was one of music's major prophets. Philip Hale once said of this work that it is "conspicuous for exquisite effects of color." And the learned critic of Boston did not hesitate to maintain that in it "there are combinations of timbres and also contrasts that were hitherto unknown." This is another way of saying that Debussy was one of the important trail-blazers in the tonal art.

Scored For Large Orchestra.

"Iberia" has the following three parts: In the Streets and Byways, The Fragrance of the Night and The Morning of a Festival Day. It is scored for piccolo, three flutes, two oboes, English horn, three clarinets, three bassoons, contrabassoon, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones, tuba, kettledrums, side drum, tambourine, castanets, xylophone, celesta, three bells (F, G, A), two harps and strings.

Those who have a hankering for humor in music will be glad to become acquainted with Sergei Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije Suite," Opus 60. It is played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky (Victor Album M-459). Written a few years ago for a Russian film, its subject, in the words of Nicolas Slonimsky, "is based on an anecdote about the Czar Nicolas I, who misread the report of his military aide so that the last syllable of the name of a Russian officer which ended with 'ki' and the Russian intensive expletive 'je' (untranslatable by any English word, but similar in position and meaning to the Latin 'quidem') formed a non-existent name, Kije. The obsequious courtiers, fearful of pointing out to the Czar the mistake he had made, decided to invent an officer of that name (as misread by the Czar). Hence all kinds of comical adventures and quid-pro-quo's."

Rubinstein Plays Chopin.

Arthur Rubinstein gives exquisitely chiseled performances of Chopin's "Nocturnes" in B Flat Minor, E Flat Major, and B Major, Opus 9, Nos. 1, 2 and 3; in F Major, F Sharp Major and G Minor, Opus 15, Nos. 1, 2 and 3; in C Sharp Minor and D Flat Major, Opus 27, Nos. 1 and 2; and in G Minor and G Major, Opus 37, Nos. 1 and 2 (Victor Album M-461). His amazing technical ability triumphs over all the difficulties contained in the inimitable tone poems; and in the recorded readings it is always the obedient servant of sensitive musicianship.

William Primrose, formerly violist of the London String Quartet and now a member of the NBC Symphony Orchestra, has adapted Brahms' "Sonata in E Flat Major for Clarinet and Piano," Opus 120, No. 2, to his chosen instrument, and in conjunction with Gerald Moore, pianist, he gives a remarkably fine reading of the work (Victor Album M-422). The change from clarinet to viola does no violence at all to the music, and it is scarcely necessary to add that there have been and, undoubtedly, will continue to be few exponents of the viola who have been or will be equipped with such mastery as belongs to Mr. Primrose. It is a revelation to hear him play.

Cailliet's Orchestrations Praised.

Lucien Cailliet's fine ability as an orchestrator has become favorably known throughout the length and breadth of our land. The Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy, plays his transcriptions of Bach's chorale, "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," and of the same master's "Prelude in E Major," from the third Partita for solo violin (Victor 14973). And the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, led by Arthur Fiedler, gives us his ingenious variations on "Pop Goes the Weasel" (Victor 4397). In addition, Mr. Fiedler and his forces contribute Waldtoufel's tuneful waltz, "The Skaters" (Victor 4396).

Choral singing worthy in every way of high praise is done by the Augustana Choir, which sings W. Stenhammer's "Ode to Sweden" and Sjoeberg's "Tones" under the leadership of Henry Veld (Victor 14954), and there is carefully disciplined artistry in the work of the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society, which offers Arcadelt's "Ave Maria" and Charles O'Connell's transcription of the "Lament" from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas" (Victor 1895).

Great art is revealed by Marian Anderson, the Negro contralto, in the spirituals, "I Know de Lawd Laid His Hand On Me" and "Trampin'" (Victor 1896); but Igor Gorin, who sings Albert Hay Malotte's "The Beatitudes" and "The Twenty-third Psalm," with an orchestra under Wilfred Pelletier, does not reach so high a plane (Victor 12245). Paderewski's performance of Chopin's great "Polonaise in A Flat Major" (Victor 14974) has all the earmarks of authoritativeness.

CINCINNATI, O.
RADIO DIAL

SEP 2 - 1938

Symphonic Strains

BY CLINTON BROOKS

With the air waves figuratively still vibrating with two excellent performances of Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony, there are a few comments we should like to make regarding the last of the German composer's symphonic works. Heard far less frequently than Beethoven's other symphonies, it possibly is the least well known of the "Immortal Nine."

In the first place, if one must particularize, the Ninth Symphony actually is not Beethoven's ninth. It is the eleventh. Two of the symphonies never got numbered, seldom are performed today outside of Germany, Holland, and several other European countries. The first of these is the "Jenear" Symphony, which, like Beethoven's First Symphony, is keyed in C Major, goes without "opus" number, and (like Shakespeare's "Pericles") is only "attributed' 'to the Master by over-particular Beethoven enthusiasts. The second non-numbered symphony is the "Battle" Symphony (or "Wellington's Victory at Victoria"), Op. 91, written immediately before Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Completed when the composer was 43 years old, it was first performed in December, 1813, at a benefit concert for Austrian and Bavarian soldiers disabled in the Napoleonic wars. The famous composer, Meyerbeer, played the bass-drum on this occasion—"always on the off-beat, always too late," as Beethoven, who conducted, said afterward.

Whatever the reason for their infrequent performance (they have been ignored altogether by the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, for instance), these two symphonic works, in our opinion, are better than most of the Haydn's symphonies and a majority of early Mozart, and in certain places even surpass Beethoven himself. Like the Bizet Symphony No. 1 in C. Major, given a hearty and enthusiastic reading by Howard Barlow with the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony last Sunday, perhaps the two Beethoven works will be revived in the near future and permit critics to say "really, they're not so bad after all," or words to that effect.

To get back to the "Choral" Symphony "No. 9," it is interesting to note that, despite its power and genuine musical grandeur, it has not inspired a train of successors. There is one worthy exception, Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in C Minor, in which the last (fifth) movement calls upon the services of a soprano and a contralto soloist and a huge chorus (to say nothing of a whole carillion of church bells)to render Klopstock's poem "Resurrection." The novelty of Beethoven symphony, of course, is its fourth movement, an allegro based on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," which is sung by a solo quartet and chorus. Nothing parallels this work in music, unless one includes the field of opera (Wagner and Moussorgsky), contatas and choral preludes (Bach), or oratorio and requiem (Brahms, Berlioz, Handel, and Mendelssohn). Incidentally Wagner found in the Ninth Symphony "a tacit acknowledgement on Beethoven's part that the symphony had gone as far as it could without the addition of song and dramatic idea to the instrumental scheme," and himself admitted the work influenced his own operatic output.

When Beethoven first conducted the Ninth Symphony at Vienna, in March, 1824, he had but three more years to live. Already completely deaf to the incomparable beauty of his own music, he had taken the precaution to warn the orchestra and chorus to disregard the motions of his baton. It is said that, several moments after the players had ceased, he stood, his head sunk in his breast, still listening to the music in his mind, beating time to phantom rhythms. One of the soloists, a Fraulein Unger, had to turn him about to face a shouting audience, many of whom were in tears.

It is certain that neither Eugene Ormandy, conducting the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra in the work last week from the Silvermine festival at Norwalk, Conn., and Serge Koussevitzky, directing the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., two weeks ago, were deaf. To decide which was the better performance, would be to attempt a thankless task of hair-splitting. The Koussevitzky performance was, perhaps, the more scholastic and meticulously accurate — the Ormandy reading, the same colorful and grandiloquent.

For those who took particular note of the dance-like second movement of the symphony, we call attention to the fact that the "molto vivace" scherzo will be performed Friday night, this week, by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, with Leo Kopp, conductor of the Chicago City Opera, directing. "Whenever the scherzo is played," Olin Downes, the New York critic says, "the universe dances."

Not only the United States, but Europe also has placed an accent on music festivals this summer. The National Broadcasting Company, this week and next, will bring three programs to its listeners from the first International Music Festival at Lucerne, Switzerland. Arturo Toscanini, an emigre from Salzburg, Austria, will conduct two concerts, and Bruno Walter, another Nazi outcast, the third. Toscanini, originally dated for only one concert, will perform Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Brahms symphonies; give two Wagnerian excerpts, and present his listeners a Cherubini overture for lagniappe. The Walter program will concentrate on two famous scenes from Wagner, for which the conductor is justly famous.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

SEP 24 1938

Arthur Rubinstein Se Titan Of Piano W rld

A STIMULATING novelty is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's recording of Sergei Prokofieff "Lieutenant Kije." Written first as the musical background for the Russian film of the same name produced by the corporation, Beigoskino, in 1933, the composer has arranged it as a concert suite.

Prokofieff proves that music can inflict stinging satire upon a social system. The Czar has mispronounced an officer's name. No one dares correct him. So obsequious courtiers invent a personality and a whole biography from birth to date to fit the mythical character. There is mirth, melody and brilliant orchestration written into the music sufficient to please the most discriminating listener. The performance under Kousseitzky and the recording are of a kind to fit this pungent episode.

The University of Pennsylvania Choral Society, directed by Harl McDonald, American composer, firmly establishes its right to an attentive listening by its recording of the "Lament" from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas" and of an Ave Maria by Arcadelt. Choral selections frequently are not of the best, when recorded, but this one by RCA-Victor is a rare exception.—G.M.

RADIO STARS
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP - - 1938

Music critics usually rank the Philadelphia, New York Philharmonic-Symphony and Boston orchestras as the three preeminent orchestras of America.

The first-mentioned two have been on the air regularly. Boston's great orchestra has had parts of concerts slipped in to fill gaps here and there. Radio is full of inequities which only volunteer and plentiful protests from listeners can correct. It's a matter for writing.

NBC is bringing back Toscanini for another series this winter. As a tribute to a great orchestra, this little gray idol of music should make amends for radio neglect and conduct one or more major broadcasts with the Boston orchestra. The mere suggestion may anger (perhaps rightly) the disciples of the orchestra's own conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The old truism that music is universal reaches justification now with radio networks extending over a nation. Toscanini is the greatest of living conductors. Boston and a nation owe it to themselves to have conductor and orchestra fused this season. It's a matter for writing.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS

SEP 1 - 1938

Audience Joins In

Stockbridge, Mass. — (INS) — When the Boston Symphony orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecila chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

SEP 4 - 1938

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphony festival closed August 14 in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., with the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky as the performing ensemble.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

SEP 3 - 1938

Music Notes

Other series offered by the Institute at the Academy are notably, five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music recitals.

CHRONICLE

SEP 1 - 1938

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Penonka, who were married at Nashua, New Hampshire, a week ago, sailed from Boston last Saturday on the Canadian National liner Lady Drake on a thirty-day cruise to Bermuda and the British West Indies. Mrs. Panenka is the former Erna Zimbler, well-known pianist, and Mr. Penenka has been bassoon player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past eight years.

Aug 3, '38

AGAIN AT STOCKBRIDGE

The Berkshire symphonic festival will begin its fifth season of concerts tomorrow. The record for so short a period has been remarkable. It originated as more or less of a scratch affair on a farm where the audience sat in the open. Two years of this made the sponsors realize that, although there was a public for summer symphony concerts, that public could best be encouraged by a more elaborate project.

Consequently the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky were engaged, and the festival became self-supporting. A serious traffic problem had to be faced at the 1936 concerts; but this was partly obviated and partly solved ingeniously at the concerts on Tanglewood, the estate so generously donated to the cause by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. Now, with the solid assurance of wide public support, the festival authorities have had built a permanent shed with a stage that can be turned to other purposes than merely for symphonic music.

Such is the story of the festival to date, and as such it is a creditable record, showing above all that the concerts have reflected a genuine public demand. Whether that demand will spread to opera, oratorio and other musical activities is not yet certain. At the moment the festival is limiting itself to six concerts of the symphonic repertoire familiar to any one who is a regular subscriber to one of our large orchestras. It is not yet time to talk of a second Salzburg and similar far-fetched comparisons, for those wiles of press-agentry do a deal of harm. The Berkshire festival, which, unlike the European festivals, is not aided by the state, must work out its own salvation in terms that are congenial to its atmosphere.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER - JOURNAL

SEP 2 - 1938

Etcetera

Plans for An American Salzburg

(St. Louis Post-Dispatch.)

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5,000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists. Dr. Kousselitzky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will still be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will be not a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

TALLADEGA, ALA.
DAILY HOME

SEP 2 - 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

BOSTON.—(INS)—Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

SEP 24 1938

'Lieut. Kije' Suite Heads Victor's List Of September Discs

New Records Include Debussy Album by N. Y. Philharmonic

Music patrons hereabouts who heard the superb performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Philadelphia Forum last season will be pleased with the album set that, to our way of thinking, heads the RCA Victor record releases. It contains Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije Suite. As in the concert, the orchestra is under the master hand of Serge Koussevitzky in this set (M-459). The appeal, of course, should not be limited to those who already have heard this finest expression of pure humor in music since Till Eulenspiegel—all one has to do is to listen to be captivated.

The music concerns a story about Czar Nicholas I, who misread a report and thought there was a Lieutenant Kije. His couriers feared to tell him otherwise, so they invented an officer by that name. From the "Birth of Kije" to the "Death" movement, the music is a satire on the pomposity of the military. Don't be afraid that it is so highly programmatic it can't be enjoyed for its tonal qualities alone. The concert last Winter marked its first performance in Philadelphia and no program notes were given to the audience; yet the listeners could not escape the infectious humor and gave it a great hand amid their chuckles. You'll do the same—perhaps more so, because the program notes are included in the album set. Performance and recording are, of course, excellent.

In the light of present trends, one wonders, sometimes, why he feels he must go on improving his recorded library, whether there will ever be a time when he can listen as much as he hopes to or whether, before that time arrives, if the world will go smash. It isn't a pleasant thing to be aware of all that's happening about us, all the tendencies of even our friends to ignore and scoff at anything of culture, although they would deny kinship with world powers pledged to do just that.

And so, conscious of our own faults and wishing to ignore various schemes of living which deny any need of certainty of something beyond the life we know, we turn to music, good music, and our worries are dispelled for at least a little time. So it proved, at least, in listening to this month's list which, in addition to including the Prokofieff, includes also the New York Philharmonic in Debussy's "Iberia," the Chopin Nocturnes, played by Arthur Rubinstein and the Brahms Viola and Piano Sonata, played by William Primrose and Gerald Moore.

John Barbirolli, who conducts the Debussy, makes his first appearance under the Victor banner and, as has been said, has chosen a good medium, music in which he obviously delights and in which his New York audience delights to hear him (M-460). The set was made in Carnegie Hall, the acoustics of which are acclaimed as unusual.

You may wonder a moment about the Brahms. Well, as a matter of fact the opus wasn't originally for viola but for clarinet. Mr. Primrose, a member of the London String Quartet and later solo violist with the NBC Symphony, made the transcription. There is no doubt about it, this is the unusual album of the month, one that won't be matched for a long time. (M-422).

Undubtedly you will enjoy Igor Gorin's singing of two songs of Albert Hay Malotte, "The Twenty-third Psalm" and "The Beatitudes," as well as Paderewski's playing of the Chopin Polonaise in A Flat Major (12245 and 14974). But there is something special, beyond that enjoyment, in the "Lament" from "Dido and Aeneas" of Purcell and the "Ave Maria" of Arcadelt, equally beautiful (1895). If you can afford one record, this, with the Choral Society of the University of Pennsylvania singing, Dr. Harl McDonald conducting and Elsie MacFarlane soloist, is the one.

The Boston "Pops" is here again with Lucien Caillet's arrangement of "Pop Goes the Weasel" in which he had a lot of fun (4397) and "The Skaters," the well known waltz (4396). Marian Anderson sings two songs which are usually part of her programs, "Trampin'", a Negro spiritual, and "I Know Lord Laid His Hands on Me" (1896). Two of Lucien Caillet's most beautiful transcriptions, the Back "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" and "Prelude in E Major" are played in all their loveliness by Mr. Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra (14973).

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 1 (INS).—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened [illegible] season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1938

18TH CENTURY MUSIC PROGRAM

During the week of October 10th, a series of harpsichord recitals will be given each evening in the ballroom of the Governor's Palace, according to an announcement made today at the offices of the Williamsburg Restoration. The series will be held under the auspices of Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., in response to a growing interest in early eighteenth century music performed in a contemporary setting.

Mr. Ralph Kirkpatrick, who gave the first series of harpsichord recitals last May, has just accepted an invitation to present another series in Williamsburg under the sponsorship of the Restoration. Programs for the concert have been developed by a Music Committee after extensive research in the musical life of Williamsburg.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is well known as a harpsichordist, having appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Chamber Orchestra, the Beethoven Association in New York and the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Festival in Washington, D. C.

MT. PLEASANT, TEXAS
TIMES

- 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., (INS)—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

SEP 2 - 1938

Cleveland Symphony Sets Attendance Mark

Cleveland—(UP)—The Cleveland Orchestra set a new attedance record during its 1937-38 season, when its concerts were heard by 62,722 people.

The orchestra also set a national record in presenting 113 concerts at home and on tour during its regular season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was [illegible] with 110 concerts.

RADIO STARS
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP - - 1938

Music critics usually rank the Philadelphia, New York Philharmonic-Symphony and Boston orchestras as the three preeminent orchestras of America.

The first-mentioned two have been on the air regularly. Boston's great orchestra has had parts of concerts slipped in to fill gaps here and there. Radio is full of inequities which only volunteer and plentiful protests from listeners can correct. It's a matter for writing.

NBC is bringing back Toscanini for another series this winter. As a tribute to a great orchestra, this little gray idol of music should make amends for radio neglect and conduct one or more major broadcasts with the Boston orchestra. The mere suggestion may anger (perhaps rightly) the disciples of the orchestra's own conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The old truism that music is universal reaches justification now with radio networks extending over a nation. Toscanini is the greatest of living conductors. Boston and a nation owe it to themselves to have conductor and orchestra fused this season. It's a matter for writing.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
PRESS

SEP 1 - 1938

Audience Joins In

Stockbridge, Mass. — (INS). — When the Boston Symphony orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecila chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

SEP 4 - 1938

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphony festival closed August 14 in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., with the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky as the performing ensemble.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

SEP 3 - 1938

11

Music Notes

Other series offered by the Institute at the Academy are notably five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chamber music recitals.

CHRONICLE

Brookline-Mass

SEP 1 - 1938

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Penonka, who were married at Nashua, New Hampshire, a week ago, sailed from Boston last Saturday on the Canadian National liner Lady Drake on a thirty-day cruise to Bermuda and the British West Indies. Mrs. Panenka is the former Erna Zimbler, well-known pianist, and Mr. Penenka has been bassoon player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past eight years.

Aug 3, 38

AGAIN AT STOCKBRIDGE

The Berkshire symphonic festival will begin its fifth season of concerts tomorrow. The record for so short a period has been remarkable. It originated as more or less of a scratch affair on a farm where the audience sat in the open. Two years of this made the sponsors realize that, although there was a public for summer symphony concerts, that public could best be encouraged by a more elaborate project.

Consequently the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky were engaged, and the festival became self-supporting. A serious traffic problem had to be faced at the 1936 concerts; but this was partly obviated and partly solved ingeniously at the concerts on Tanglewood, the estate so generously donated to the cause by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. Now, with the solid assurance of wide public support, the festival authorities have had built a permanent shed with a stage that can be turned to other purposes than merely for symphonic music.

Such is the story of the festival to date, and as such it is a creditable record, showing above all that the concerts have reflected a genuine public demand. Whether that demand will spread to opera, oratorio and other musical activities is not yet certain. At the moment the festival is limiting itself to six concerts of the symphonic repertoire familiar to any one who is a regular subscriber to one of our large orchestras. It is not yet time to talk of a second Salzburg and similar far-fetched comparisons, for those wiles of press-agentry do a deal of harm. The Berkshire festival, which, unlike the European festivals, is not aided by the state, must work out its own salvation in terms that are congenial to its atmosphere.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER - JOURNAL

SEP 2 - 1938

Etcetera

Plans for An American Salsburg

(St. Louis Post-Dispatch.)

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5,000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists. Dr. Kousselitzky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will still be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will be not a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

TALLADEGA, ALA.
DAILY HOME

SEP 2 - 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

BOSTON.—(INS)—Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

SEP 24 1938

'Lieut. Kije' Suite Heads Victor's List Of September Discs

New Records Include Debussy Album by N. Y. Philharmonic

Music patrons hereabouts who eard the superb performance of he Boston Symphony Orchestra or the Philadelphia Forum last eason will be pleased with the lbum set that, to our way of hinking, heads the RCA Victor ecord releases. It contains rokofieff's Lieutenant Kije Suite. s in the concert, the orchestra is nder the master hand of Serge oussevitzky in this set (M-459). he appeal, of course, should not e limited to those who already ave heard this finest expression f pure humor in music since Till ulenspiegel—all one has to do is o listen to be captivated.

The music concerns a story bout Czar Nicholas I, who misead a report and thought there was a Lieutenant Kije. His ouriers feared to tell him otherwise, so they invented an officer y that name. From the "Birth f Kije" to the "Death" movenent, the music is a satire on the omposity of the military. Don't e afraid that it is so highly programmatic it can't be enjoyed for ts tonal qualities alone. The concert last Winter marked its first erformance in Philadelphia and o program notes were given to he audience; yet the listeners ould not escape the infectious umor and gave it a great hand mid their chuckles. You'll do the ame—perhaps more so, because he program notes are included in he album set. Performance and ecording are, of course, excellent.

In the light of present trends, ne wonders, sometimes, why he eels he must go on improving his ecorded library, whether there will ever be a time when he can isten as much as he hopes to or whether, before that time arrives, f the world will go smash. It isn't a pleasant thing to be aware of all hat's happening about us, all the endencies of even our friends to gnore and scoff at anything of culture, although they would deny kinship with world powers pledged to do just that.

And so, conscious of our own faults and wishing to ignore various schemes of living which deny any need of certainty of something beyond the life we know, we turn to music, good music, and our worries are dispelled for at least a little time. So it proved, at least, in listening to this month's list which, in addition to including the Prokofieff, includes also the New York Philharmonic in Debussy's "Iberia," the Chopin Nocturnes, played by Arthur Rubinstein and the Brahms Viola and Piano Sonata, played by William Primrose and Gerald Moore.

John Barbirolli, who conducts the Debussy, makes his first appearance under the Victor banner and, as has been said, has chosen a good medium, music in which he obviously delights and in which his New York audience delights to hear him (M-460). The set was made in Carnegie Hall, the acoustics of which are acclaimed as unusual.

You may wonder a moment about the Brahms. Well, as a matter of fact the opus wasn't originally for viola but for clarinet. Mr. Primrose, a member of the London String Quartet and later solo violist with the NBC Symphony, made the transcription. There is no doubt about it, this is the unusual album of the month, one that won't be matched for a long time. (M-422).

Undubtedly you will enjoy Igor Gorin's singing of two songs of Albert Hay Malotte, "The Twenty-third Psalm" and "The Beatitudes," as well as Paderewski's playing of the Chopin Polonaise in A Flat Major (12245 and 14974): But there is something special, beyond that enjoyment, in the "Lament" from "Dido and Aeneas" of Purcell and the "Ave Maria" of Arcadelt, equally beautiful (1895). If you can afford one record, this, with the Choral Society of the University of Pennsylvania singing, Dr. Harl McDonald conducting and Elsie MacFarlane soloist, is the one.

The Boston "Pops" is here again with Lucien Caillet's arrangement of "Pop Goes the Weasel" in which he had a lot of fun (4397) and "The Skaters," the well known waltz (4396). Marian Anderson sings two songs which are usually part of her programs, "Trampin'", a Negro spiritual, and "I Know Lord Laid His Hands on Me" (1896). Two of Lucien Caillet's most beautiful transcriptions, the Back "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" and "Prelude in E Major" are played in all their loveliness by Mr. Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra (14973).

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 1 (INS).—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE

SEP 2 - 1938

18TH CENTURY MUSIC PROGRAM

During the week of October 10th, a series of harpsichord recitals will be given each evening in the ballroom of the Governor's Palace, according to an announcement made today at the offices of the Williamsburg Restoration. The series will be held under the auspices of Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., in response to a growing interest in early eighteenth century music performed in a contemporary setting.

Mr. Ralph Kirkpatrick, who gave the first series of harpsichord recitals last May, has just accepted an invitation to present another series in Williamsburg under the sponsorship of the Restoration. Programs for the concert have been developed by a Music Committee after extensive research in the musical life of Williamsburg.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is well known as a harpsichordist, having appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Chamber Orchestra, the Beethoven Association in New York and the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Festival in Washington, D. C.

MT. PLEASANT, TEXAS
TIMES

SEP 2 - 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., (INS)—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

SEP 2 - 1938

Cleveland Symphony Sets Attendance Mark

Cleveland—(UP)—The Cleveland Orchestra set a new attedance record during its 1937-38 season, when its concerts were heard by 62,722 people.

The orchestra also set a national record in presenting 113 concerts at home and on tour during its regular season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was [illegible] with 110 concerts.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

SEP 4 - 1938

Prokofieff's Suite Proves Real Novelty

First Performance in Country Was by Boston Symphony—Renditions Always Acclaimed

By L. R. Boals

The Victor release for September contains among its "Masterpiece Sets" a distinct novelty in the recording, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, of Prokofieff's suite, "Lienteuant Kije." The first performance of the work in this country was by the Bostonians at their regular concert in Symphony Hall, October 15, 1937. Later they played it in New York and elsewhere, always with conspicuous success.

Prokofieff was commissioned to compose music for the Russian sound-picture, "Lieutenant Kije," which was highly successful. Later the present concert suite was extracted from the incidental music for the picture. The music outlines the life of the lieutenant. If anyone hesitates at the modernism of Prokofieff's usual compositions, he needn't in this case, for in the suite there is much humor, lovely melodies and stirring rhythm.

Divided into Parts

The suite is divided into the following parts: The birth of Kije, Romance, Kije's wedding, Troika and the Burial of Kije. In the last section there is a sort of musical sketch of the lieutenant's life, characteristic themes being deftly interwoven.

On the "B" side of the third disk are two short movements, March and Scherzo, from the same composer's suite, "The Love for Three Oranges." The whole forms an album of colorful, interesting music, brilliantly performed.

Another valuable set is the recording of "Iberia," No. 2 of "Images for Orchestra," by Claude Debussy, played by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, under John Barbirolli.

"Iberia Impressionistic"

When "Iberia" was first performed Debussy was quoted as saying that he had no intention of writing Spanish music, but wished rather to interpret musically the impressions which awoke in him. Manuel De Falla credits him with having realized this aim as follows:

"The echoes from the villages, a kind of sevillana (in the first movement)—the generic theme of the work—which seems to float in a clear atmosphere of scintillating light; the intoxicating spell of Andalusian nights, the festive gayety of a people dancing to the joyous strains of a banda or guitars and bandurrias . . . all this whirls in the air, approaches and recedes, and our imagination is continually kept awake and dazzled by the power of an intensely expressive and richly varied music."

The performance and recording are eminently satisfactory.

Chopin's Nocturnes are recorded in two albums by Arthur Rubinstein, the pianist who made a "sensational" tour of this country last season. While I have not heard the records of the second album, judging from the first, the collection as a whole constitutes a treasure for every pianist, every student, every lover of piano music and record collectors generally.

Single Disks

Last month I was particularly delighted with a recording by the Philadelphia Orchestra of a transcription of the Andante from Sesar Franck's great organ work, "Grand Piece Symphonique." This month the same orchestra records the transcription of another favorite by another great churchman, John Sebastian Bach. The Chorale-Prelude —"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," to me is one of the most beautiful of the smaller organ pieces ever written. It is transcribed for orchestra by Lucien Cailliet. Although at times the lovely melody is permitted to be somewhat overshadowed, the record is one that should be in every collection. On the "B" side is another Bach Prelude which is more than a transcription. This E Major Prelude is a development of a section of a Partita for unaccompanied violin which demonstrates Mr. Cailliet's skill in composition as well as in orchestration. The orchestra is under the direction of Eugene Ormandy.

Another notable single disk is the recording of Chopin's Polonaise in A-flat major by Paderewski. Since the success of the motion picture starring him, called "Moonlight Sonata," there has been renewed interest in the great old master of the piano. The Polonaise is one of his old favorites and he plays it with his accustomed authority.

Some time ago Richard Himber and his Essex House Orchestra made a record entitled Parade of Bands (25754) which proved so popular that in the present release they have made another with the same title, parts 3 and 4 (26007). The impersonations of Ted Lewis, Rudy Vallee and the orchestras of Horace Heidt, Glen Gray, Benny Goodman and Hal Kemp are almost unbelievably perfect.

On No. 2006 Larry Clinton and his orchestra record two fox trots; one an original Clinton composition, "Boogie-Woogie Blues," played in traditional blues tempo. On the other side, entitled "My Reverie," Clinton has arranged an effective dance tune from a beautiful melody from Claude Debussy's "Reverie."

Four popular songs written by Irving Berlin for the moving picture "Carefree," which includes Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire in its cast, are in the popular list. Hal Kemp and his orchestra record "I Used to Be Color Blind" and "The Night Is Filled with Music" on No. 26009, and on 26010 Larry Clinton and his orchestra record "Change Partners," a medium slow fox trot, and "The Yam," a fast swing, with Beatrice Wain singing the vocal refrain.

Others on the list:

Joseph Rines—"Lambeth Walk" and "Je : e sais pa pa."

Tommy Dorsey—"The Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "Copenhagen."

Lionel Hampton—"Muscrat Ramble" and "Ring Dem Bells."

Larry Clinton—"Milenberg Joys" and "Dipper Mouth."

Sammy Kaye — "Confidentially" and "Love Is Where You Find It."

Art Shaw—"Indian Love Call" and "Begin the Beguine."

Johnny Messner—"That Week in Paris" and "Spanita."

Jan Savitt—"Love of My Life" and "I Haven't Changed a Thing."

Hilo Hawaiian—"That Night in Avalon" and "Colorada Sunset."

Johnny Messner — "Don't Cross Your Fingers, Cross Your Heart" and "How Much Do You Mean to Me?"

CINCINNATI, O.
POST

SEP 22 1938

Music on the Disc

Goossens and London Philharmonic Record "La Boutique Fantasque"

There's quite an element of local interest in the September record releases. Our own Eugene Goossens has led the London Philharmonic Orchestra through an excellent recording that makes one of the feature albums of the month. The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije—Suite," and Cincinnatians who attended the Boston Symphony concert in Music Hall last winter remember what a hit this seldom-heard composition made. Then, Marian Anderson, the great Negro contralto who has been heard with admiration by Cincinnati audiences in the past year, presents several Negro spirituals.

Chopin is definitely our choice for "composer of the month," and thanks to the splendid rendition of his "Nocturnes" by Arthur Rubenstein, a flood of lovely piano music comes pouring out of two big albums. All in all, this month's list is especially full of interest, variety—and melody!

LA BOUTIQUE FANTASQUE—BALLET (The Fantastic Toyshop), by Rossini. Performed by the London Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Goossens. A Victor album of three 12-inch records in the Musical Masterpiece series. This delightfully appealing music was orchestrated by Respighi for the colorful ballet created by Leonide Massine, which has been performed here by the Ballet Russe. Mr. Goossens won early fame as conductor of music for the ballet in London, and these records show his expert touch. Victor predicts that "this music will be much in the public ear during the forthcoming season," and well it should be, for it is full of sparkle and verve and is good to hear.

LIEUTENANT KIJE—SUITE, by Prokofieff, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. A Victor Musical Masterpiece album of three 12-inch records. Your reviewer reached for this one because he, like several thousand others, enjoyed it much when it was played by the Boston Symphony at Music Hall last winter. Composed as recently as 1933, and with as "unorthodox" origin as having been written to accompany a Russian sound film, this "modern" piece has been enormously popular wherever Mr. Koussevitsky has played it. The composer is of Soviet Russia's "musical hierarchy" today. The mythical Lieutenant Kije's career is portrayed through such movements as the "Birth of Kije," "Romance," "Kije's Wedding," "Troika" and the "Burial of Kije." There are some unusual effects with trumpets and drums, and some stirring climaxes; the whole thing is colorful, entertaining, and filled with tunefulness and humor. Five sides of the three records are filled with "Kije" the sixth is devoted to a new and brilliant performance of Prokofieff's most popular piece, "The Love for Three Oranges—Suite."

CHOPIN NOCTURNES. (Op. 9, 15, 27, 32, 37, 48, 55, 62 and 72, No. 1). Played by Arthur Rubenstein. All 19 of Chopin's Nocturnes in two Victor Musical Masterpiece albums; five 12-inch records in one, and six in the other. This is a monumental recording job, to which it is difficult to do justice in a few words. Lovers of Chopin will welcome these albums as the rarest of treats; others who listen to them are pretty sure to become lovers of Chopin. Mr. Rubenstein is one of the greatest of living pianists, and his playing of Chopin has been largely instrumental in building up that reputation. He was the sensation among pianists during the last concert season, in which he devoted much of his repertoire to Chopin. Thus, these recordings, artistically and technically, are Chopin's music at its very best. Outstanding among the nocturnes is Op. 32, No. 2 in A Flat Major, which is used as the music for the dream-like ballet "Les Sylphides;" that opened the Ballet Russe program at Music Hall last season.

There are a number of noteworthy individual records in Victor's list this month; among them are these:

POLONAISE IN A FLAT MAJOR, Parts 1 and 2. Chopin again, played this time on a 12-inch Red Seal record, by none other than Ignace Jan Paderewski. The great old master gives a peerless performance of one of his favorites.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS, sung by Marian Anderson. A 10-inch record. They are the well-known "Trampin'" and "I Know Lord Laid His Hands On Me," sung with all the richness of tone and the deep feeling for which Miss Anderson is famous.

LES PATINEURS, by Waldteufel, much better known as "The Skaters' Waltz," played by the Boston "Pops" orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. This ever-popular waltz gets the treatment by a great orchestra, on two sides of a 10-inch record.—H. W. M.

AKRON, O.
BEACON - JOURNAL ✓

SEP 25 1938

'Lieutenant Kije' Clever Suite; 'Turkey In The Straw' Scores

FIVE years ago, Sergei Prokofieff wrote the incidental music for the Russian film, "Lieutenant Kije," and later arranged it as an orchestral suite.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, has made an album recording of the work for Victor, and for good measure does the "March" and "Scherzo" from Prokofieff's famous "The Love for Three Oranges" suite.

"Lieutenant Kije" is an odd mixture of humor, romance and military effects. In "The Birth of Kije" there are amusing parts for the cornet, drums and piccolo, depicting the swaggering officer, full-grown and uniformed at birth.

The "Romance" number, in the film, was done by a baritone voice, but in the recording the part is taken by a tenor saxophone. The musical story goes on, and in "Kije's Wedding" there is a peculiar blending of military and sentimental music, with a pompous quality breaking through.

In the "Troika" the saxophone again substitutes for the baritone voice. It is an old Russian tavern ditty, "A Woman's Heart Is Like An Inn."

There's nothing sad about the "Burial of Kije." According to the movie version, Kije's brother officers were not bowed down by grief at his demise. In fact, they were downright glad to be rid of him. Prokofieff's clever music carries out that idea.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TRIBUNE

9/3/38

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Introduce Haitian Music.

NEW YORK, (CNA) —Arthur Feidler, white, assistant conducor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived here this week aboard the liner Santa Rosa with the script for what he said would be a unique symphony production.

The music is entitled "Drums of Haiti." Feidler said it would be played for Boston audiences next season. Feidler spent several months in Haiti studying Negro music and customs.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES

SEP 2 - 1938

Boston Symphony Applauds Audience

BOSTON, September 2. — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell.

At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat - Chronicle

SEP 4 - 1938

Appearance of Rubinstein Adds Distinction to Series; Old Favorites Return

WHAT is regarded by musical authorities as the finest concert series ever to be offered in Rochester was announced by the Civic Music Association last week.

World-famous vocalists, instrumentalists and musical organizations are included, along with two performances of favorite grand operas in English.

With one exception, the artists who will appear during the season have been heard on previous occasions and have found favor with Rochester audiences.

The newcomer, well-known both in Europe and America, is Arthur Rubinstein, who is regarded as one of the greatest living pianists.

Old favorites include Fritz Kreisler, violinist, who opens the season on Friday evening, Oct. 21; Marian Anderson, famed colored contralto; Jascha Heifetz, violinist; Serge Rachmaninoff, pianist and composer; and Lawrence Tibbet, baritone.

EASTMAN THEATER CONCERT SERIES
Season 1938-39
Series A

Friday, Oct. 21—Fritz Kreisler, violinist.

Monday, Dec. 5—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Friday, Jan. 27—Marion Anderson, contralto.

Friday, Feb. 8—Madame Butterfly, sung in English, with Rochester Civic Orchestra, Guy Fraser Harrison, conductor.

Thursday, March 23—Arthur Rubinstein, pianist.

Series B

Friday, Oct. 28—The Marriage of Figaro, sung in English, with Rochester Civic Orchestra, Guy Fraser Harrison, conductor.

Friday, Nov. 25 — Jascha Heifetz, violinist.

Friday, Jan. 6—Serge Rachmaninoff, pianist.

Friday, Feb. 24 — Lawrence Tibbett, baritone.

Thursday, March 9—The New Ballet Russe, with Leonide Massine.

Koussevitzky Returns

The Boston Symphony Orchstra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, returns for the third consecutive season, while the New Ballet Russe, with Leonide Massine and many of the stars of the old Monte Carlo ballet, will be seen.

Grand operas to be heard during the season are Puccini's Madame Butterfly, and Mozart's jolly Marriage of Figaro.

Guest roles in Butterfly will be sung by Hilda Burke, Metropolitan soprano; Armand Tokatyan, Metropolitan tenor; and Joan (Brownie) Peebles, former star of the Rochester American Opera Company.

A galaxy of guest stars will sing the Mozart work. They include Josephine Antoine, Metropolitan soprano; John Brownlee, Metropolitan tenor; Cecile Sherman, former Rochester girl, now a star of the concert and operatic stages; Ethel Codd, who is also well-known here; Warren Lee Terry; Donald Beltz, who sang the lead in The Barber of Seville here last season, and Abrasha Robofsky, baritone, who co-starred with Beltz in the same opera.

RADIO GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y. ✓

SEP 3 - 1938

New Books

"Chords and Discords." By Sam Franko. (Viking Press, New York City, $2.75). Memoirs of an American musician covering half a century of musical life in America and Europe.

"The Orchestra Speaks." By Bernard Shore. (Longmans-Green, New York, $2.50). The leading English viola player has written a fascinating and amusing book on the orchestra, which includes penetrating character sketches of some of the world's best-known conductors such as Toscanini, Koussevitzky, etc.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
SEP 4 - 1938

SUMMER FESTIVALS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

WILL summer music festivals become in the course of time a regular and prominent feature of the American musical scene and gradually assume an importance corresponding to that of the principal summer festivals of Europe? It is probably much too early to answer this question except with speculations, hopeful or otherwise, but increased interest in events of this kind can be noted in the expansion of two festivals and the inauguration of a third in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in the fifth summer of its existence, the third of its association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and the first in its new building, somewhat over-modestly named the Music Shed, on the Tanglewood estate at Lenox, drew six audiences of over five thousand persons each. The Silvermine Guild Music Festival in the village of Silvermine near Norwalk, Conn., inaugurated last summer with a single concert by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, offered for its second season three regular concerts and a children's program by this organization; three concerts of chamber music by the Roth Quartet an outdoor Sunday musical service, lectures on musical subjects and exhibitions of painting and sculpture. Audiences of five thousand or more attended the three evening concerts. Both festivals departed from a purely instrumental repertoire by presenting Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and Dr. Koussevitzky also devoted one concert to Wagnerian excerpts with soloists.

* * *

Opera at Dunrovin

NEAR by, on his estate, Dunrovin, at Ridgefield, William Matheus Sullivan and the Chamber Music Society of America presented an early summer festival series of two programs of chamber music and one composed of scenes from Mozart's operas in a theater remodeled from an old carriage house. This was, naturally, on a scale considerably smaller than that of the two August festivals, but the Mozart program pointed to the possibility of an eventual festival devoted to Mozart and other operas best suited to presentation in relatively small theater, corresponding to the well known English Mozart festival in John Chrystie's theater at Glyndebourne, Sussex—with perhaps somewhat less formality than at Glyndebourne where it is said, the wearing of tail coats and white ties by the male members of the audience is almost de rigueur.

In artistic and acoustic standards, as well as in regard to patronage, the fifth Berkshire Festival was generally considered to have been highly successful. Audiences were composed not only of residents or summer colonists in the neighborhood, but included quite a few who had made special trips, in some cases from considerable distances, for all or part of the series. So far as the performances were concerned, the series proved self-supporting, aided, of course, by the fact that the management and promotion of the festival was in charge of music lovers who donated their services. This was also the case in Silvermine.

* * *

Success of the Berkshire Music Shed

EVEN without the finishing touches which will be added before next summer, if the necessary funds are raised, the Music Shed served its purpose well, although there were no thunderstorms to illustrate how well the building might prevent the interruption of a concert by extraneous elemental sounds. Most of the reviewers present praised the acoustic properties of the building, although L. A. Sloper, writing in "The Christian Science Monitor," thought that the tone of the strings carried less well than that of the brass or percussion instruments. There were a few measures in the fourth symphony of Brahms, in the third concert, when I thought that the wind instruments were a little over-dominating in the musical picture, as compared with the strings, and the balance between the chorus and orchestra seemed to incline unduly in the former's favor in the opening Bach chorus in the first program, but otherwise, in the first three concerts, the acoustic conditions impressed me as entirely satisfactory. Such discrepancies of tonal balance as may exist can doubtless be solved by some further experiment.

On the whole, the Music Shed has provided an excellent compromise between the charms of an outdoor concert and the advantages, from a musical point of view, of a performance in a concert hall. Its appearance, dignified and unornate, also came in for favorable mention. In the matter of future expansion, the policy appears to be one of gradual conservative progress; the plans for further development contemplated by Dr. Koussevitzky and the festival committee are far-reaching, but are to be realized by degrees.

* * *

Plans for Expansion

THE dates already announced for next summer correspond to those of last month's series, the first two Thursdays, Fridays and Sundays of August, but while the Boston Symphony's services will apparently not be available for more than those two weeks, it is said that two concerts on Wednesday evenings will be added, making eight performances in all. By 1940 Dr. Koussevitzky hopes to have his proposed academy for conductors and instrumentalists established, and is reported to be looking forward to both opera and the spoken drama as a later stage in the festival's progress under his direction. The Music Shed is so constructed, according to a report from an authoritative source, that an adequate stage can be added without the need of extensive reconstruction of the rest of the building.

Dr. Koussevitzky's programs have hitherto been conservative, drawn mainly from the standard repertoire of the Boston Symphony's regular season, but, with the prestige and apparently assured patronage which this institution has won, we may look for a wider scope next summer, either in a slightly larger proportion of unfamiliar music or the addition of more choral works or music calling for the services of soloists.

* * *

The Silvermine Series

THE Silvermine festival combined quite successfully the atmosphere of a large-scale event with that of an enthusiastically co-operative community enterprise. The site is attractive and the weather was kind, while the artistic standards were as high as could be expected, considering the limitations imposed upon rehearsal by the fact that the festival began immediately after the Stadium season. There was some competition with the music by a vigorous-toned chorus of katydids, but this, for the most part, could be accepted as part of the engaging rural surroundings. A potential acoustic drawback in outdoor music is the need of amplification so that the sounds can reach remoter listeners, with the risk which this involves of affecting the quality of tone. The amplification two weeks ago was very fair, but not impeccable. Further experiment should bring an improvement by next summer, when there are to be three symphony concerts, as before, probably including one choral program. A dance program is also being considered.

It has also been rumored that the Dunrovin festival, for which no future plans have yet been announced, may be allied with the Silvermine series. Considering that Ridgefield is not many miles from Silvermine, such an alliance would be logical, and would also be advantageous if the distinct and varied purposes of the two institutions are kept in view. The principal need would be a small but adequate theater, larger than the quarters which housed last June's programs, for the operas, which are not of a type well suited to an outdoor performance.

* * *

Questions of Weather and Traffic

ONE problem to be considered at Silvermine before the next festival is that of bad weather, as this year's good luck may not necessarily prove permanent. A sudden, heavy shower, considering that there is no building in Silvermine large enough to shelter an audience of 5,000, and that some of the parking fields are necessarily at a fair distance from the grounds, might prove to be unusually vexatious both to the festival management and the audience. There is also the inevitable traffic problem, complicated at Silvermine by the relative narrowness of the roads to the village. Both there and in the Berkshires, matters in this respect were handled as well as could be expected, but it might be worth considering to limit the roads leading away from Silvermine, and the two mile stretch of road from Tanglewood to Lenox to one way traffic for half an hour or more after the close of each program.

Another unofficial suggestion made in connection with Tanglewood is that restaurant facilities might be installed during the festival period, serving dinners before and suppers after the concerts, which would probably mean that the arrivals and departures would be spread over a longer period than at present, and that the traffic problem would thus be eased.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
SEP 3 - 1938

News of the Music World

The outdoor opera season ends tomorrow night with a performance of Verdi's "Il Trovatore" by one of Alfredo Salmaggi's Hippodrome Opera Company troupes at the Randall's Island Municipal Stadium. This evening, Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" will be sung there.

Tonight, another Hippodrome company will present Verdi's "Rigoletto" at the Marine Stadium in Jones Beach State Park, bringing to an end the series of performances there.

Beginning next Thursday evening, Mr. Salmaggi's companies will move indoors at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. On Thursday, "Aida" will be sung. "Rigoletto" is scheduled for Friday night, September 9; "Il Trovatore" for Saturday night, September 10, and "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci" for Sunday evening, September 11.

* * *

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences today announced the attractions for the 1938-39 subscription series of concerts and recitals, known as "Music and the Dance," which will be given in the Academy of Music from October through May. There will be twelve events in this series. In addition, the Institute will, as usual, sponsor five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and a number of chamber-music recitals.

"Music and the Dance" will open on Monday evening, October 24, with a performance of Borodin's opera, "Prince Igor," sung in Russian under the direction of Eugene Fuerst. On Monday evening, November 7, the New York Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra, directed by John Barbirolli, and with Emanuel Feuermann, 'cellist, as soloist, will appear there. The third event in the series is a performance by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, on Monday evening, November 28.

Other artists who will appear later in the season are Myra Hess, pianist; Jussi Bjoerling, tenor; Yehudi Menuhin, violinist; Kirsten Flagstad, soprano; Georges Enesco, violinist; Alexander Kipnis, basso; Gertrude Pitzinger, mezzo-soprano; Argentinita; the Philadelphia Ballet; Hanya Holm, Anna Sokolow and Tamiris, dancers.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH

SEP 3 - 1938

Prokofieff Suite Well Recorded by Boston Symphony

By FRANCES BOARDMAN

Composed by Serge Prokofieff, played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky and pressed by Victor, the "Lieutenant Kije" suite comprises an extremely attractive album set.

The music was written for a film based on a favorite figure of modern Russian legend: a mythical lieutenant invented to save the face of the Tsar Nicholas I (and the heads of his military subjects), whose misreading of a name resulted in "Kije", which, besides being difficult to pronounce, represents a play on words appreciable only by the Russian-speaking world.

Prokofieff, one of the much-higher-ups in Soviet music circles, has long since distinguished himself by a dazzling talent which rests on the stoutest of technical foundations. This suite will more than confirm previous indications that he is one of the rare composers who can mix humor and music without spoiling the effectiveness of either one.

If you have habitually thought of the viola as a sort of out-size violin whose voice is chiefly useful in bridging the tonal gap between the orchestral violins and 'cellos, listen to William Primrose's performance, with Gerald Moore at the piano, of the Brahms Sonata in E-flat major, Op. 120, No. 2. Yes, yes—the opus was originally written for clarinet and piano, as the catalogue purists will remember, but it can never have seemed more beautifully, tenderly melodious than in this version, a Victor release.

William Primrose's exquisite technical facility first came into general notice when he was a member of the London String quartet. Now he heads the viola section of Toscanini's NBC orchestra. Gerald Moore is considered one of London's finest chamber music experts and accompanists.

Of historical importance as well as great immediate interest is the new Victor album containing records of the Chopin Nocturnes, as played by that unquestioned musical authority and superb pianist, Artur Rubinstein. He undoubtedly has a congenital bias toward the compositions of his great compatriot, and this, added to experience and virtuosity, gives his performances great beauty as well as great value.

The statement that the taste for the unaccompanied suites of Bach must be, in most cases, an acquired one, should be directly followed by another, to the effect that it is well worth acquiring. Musicraft sustains its reputation for deliberately offering music that is certain, only, of a limited public, although a highly fastidious one, by recording one of these suites: That for 'cello, in No. 4 E-flat minor, the performance being entrusted to long recognized artist-scholar, Iwan d'Archambeau. Concert-goers will remember him as a member of the great Flonzaley quartet and, at present, of the Stradivarius ensemble.

The record, in four parts, displays splendidly the deep musical insight, the technical control and the unfaltering sense of phrase and balance that distinguish the d'Archambeau gifts.

ST. MARYS, O.
EVE. LEADER
SEP 3 - 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

Boston, Sept. 2 —INS— Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Carles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, AUGUST 5, 1938

Boston Symphony Orchestra Dedicates Music Shed at Stockbridge

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Its Fifth Annual Season

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—The emphasis of the fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the third in which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has participated, has been partly on the unique new quarters provided for it and partly on the idea of jubilation expressed in the finale of Beethoven's ninth symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky's ringing appeal to the audience to heed the words of Schiller's poem and its message of brotherly love the world over did not fall amiss on the ears of an audience of 5000 or more, ears customarily attuned to frightening headlines of war.

The physical side of the festival, consisting in the new Shed, a most inadequate word by the way, has been described in many advance bulletins and appeals, but it must be seen to be appreciated. Surprisingly it has, if not beauty of detail, at the least dignity of line and mass. It discourages naturally the intimacy that the old tent suggested, very probably due to reminiscences of the circus. The new building is however, a magnificent structure for music. Though vast, it has fine acoustical properties so that the music, except for the very softest nuances, can be heard at the extreme rear perfectly clearly. The authorities of the festival have done well and propose to do more in this line. The note of congratulations in the remarks by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the president of the festival, and in those by Bentley Warren, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, was justified by the result.

Meanwhile it was not for architecture that so large a public assembled here tonight and will gather during the rest of the concerts of the festival. The music offered here this evening began with Bach, one of the splendid polyphonic choruses from the Cantatas, in this instance "Eine Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." The Cecilia Society Chorus, trained by Arthur Fiedler, were the singers, efficient here and in the finale of the Beethoven.

After the dedicatory remarks for the new Shed, the chorus sang the concluding chorale from the same cantata, which was repeated with the audience joining in. Bach merely harmonized these old hymns, many of them to words by Martin Luther. Some of the same tunes, as a matter of fact, are in modern hymnals and are sung by congregations today. In Bach's day the congregation was supposed to join in singing the chorales wherever they occurred in cantatas or Passions so that Dr. Koussevitzky was but harking back to tradition when he asked for the audience's assistance. There could not have been a more suitable dedication.

Beethoven's great symphony, one of those strange acts of genius when it appears to be finished with smaller forms and seeking new and wider limits of expression, is perhaps best heard at a festival of this kind when its listeners come to it with no other purpose in mind and not as incidental to a busy day. At any rate, it sounded superbly, and obviously afforded the most searching test of the new building's acoustics. The work of the Cecilia Society Chorus and the four soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon, was much appreciated.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra reaped the reward of their extraordinary efforts by the enthusiastic applause of the huge audience.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

SEP 4 - 1938

Comments on Poems

Poems are often criticized for being monotonous or prosy. Monotony is frequetly caused by over-regularity of rhythm and prosiness is caused by too little regularity. An occasional variation is good but too many successive syllables all unaccented, or the accent falling in the wrong places, causes the reader to lose the swing of the rhythm. It is well to read poems aloud several times—read them to other people (providing they do not object too much), they may detect faults which you have passed unnoticed.

From recent letters, "I am not as lonely as this poem might lead people to think I am"—"My friends are making a collection of my poems"—"Having the poem published has added years to her life" — "The 'Corner' seemed smaller, hope it has not been cut down"—"Written after listening to a concert by the Boston Symphonic Orchestra at Stockbridge"—"This may not be a good poem, but I am writing a lot and hope to improve"—"Vacation will soon be over, but I have stored up many thoughts for the winter days which I hope to put in verse"—etc., etc. Reading the letters is one of the pleasantest parts of conducting this column and I often wish I could answer all personally, but all of the poems are read and re-read with the hope that if not acceptable at first, a little revision will make them so.

There is a fine exhibit of POETRY in the lower hall at Harmanus Bleecker Library. I hope that those living in or near Albany will look this exhibit over and keep a list of the books shown.

You will notice that many of these poems are from titles suggested in a recent column. Note also the various ways in which the same thought may be developed, depending on the writer's viewpoint.

M. W. W.

PLANS FOR

N. Y. Times
Sept. 4/38

THE subscription series "Musi and the Dance," to be offered this season by th Brooklyn Institute of Art and Sciences, will open Monda night, Oct. 24, with a presentatio of Borodin's opera, "Prince Igor," under the direction of Eugen Fuerst and Mme. Marie Yakovleff The work will be sung in Russian There will be 100 participants o stage, not including the Yakovlef Ballet, which will perform the Polo vetzian dances. The orchestra wil number forty musicians.

John Barbirolli will conduct th New York Philharmonic Chambe Orchestra at the second event, Nov 7, with Emanuel Feuermann, 'cell ist, as soloist. Third in the serie will be a program Nov. 28 by th Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, di rected by Leonide Massine. There will be recitals by Myra Hess, Jussi Bjoerling, Yehudi Menuhin, Kirsten Flagstad, Georges Enesco, Alexander Kipnis and Gertrude Pitzinger. In addition dance performances are scheduled by Argentinita and her Andalusian troupe and the Philadelphia Ballet, the series terminating April 18 with a "Festival of the Dance," in which Hanya Holm, Anna Sokolow and Tamaris will appear with their professional groups. Among other attractions offered by the institute during the coming season will be five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, chamber music recitals and young people's programs, as well as lectures on current history, literature, social problems, science and the arts.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

SEP 4 1938

Renaissance Of Great Music Credited To New Recordings

Chopin, Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner Highlight New Releases For Phonographs

MAKERS OF MUSIC and phonograph recordings have presented a dour and trouble-beset world with a golden era of melody. Brahms, Chopin, Mozart and Beethoven are having a twentieth century renaissance and the world is being given an insight into a melange of melody that has heretofore been hidden from sight and withheld from hearing—except to the favored few whose lives are cast in those centers where great symphonic orchestras and superior singers abide. The new recordings have been released in such numbers as to challenge the time of reviewers. There have been so many notable presentations that one would run out of stars were the usual film critique procedure followed.

Arthur Rubenstein plays 10 of the Chopin Nocturnes for recording (Victor M-461) and thereby put in his debt votaries of this school. Rubenstein executes with a deft touch and superb understanding. He throws the aura of the composer's moods about each of his recitals. In this series are Nocturne, Opus. 9, No. 1 in B Flat Minor; Opus 9, No. 2 in E Flat Major. Known to every musical student and to every concert goer, it has appropriately been termed Chopin's "beautiful nocturne" to which might well be added "and sentimental fantasy;" Opus 9, No. 3 in B Major; the inspiring Opus 15, No. 1 in F Major; Opus 15, No. 2 in F Sharp Major; somber Opus 15, No. 3 in G Minor; dramatic Opus 27, No. 1 in C Sharp Minor; Opus 27, No. 2 in D Flat Major; Opus 37, No. 1 in G Minor and Opus 37, No. 2 in G Major—in fact a nocturne for every mood—and all ably executed.

William Primrose, viola player, transcribed for viola and piano the Brahms Sonata in E Flat Major which he plays with Gerald Moore. Mr. Primrose was the solo viola artist of Toscanini's N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra. With his tonal depth and virtuosity of technique he reveals in the Brahms Sonata a brilliance of coloring that almost leaves one speechless. It is as though a master /violinist were playing with a deep-throated violin—and so one is. The Sonata bears Victor Number M-422.

Among contemporary composers Sergei Prokofieff, a pianist of class, is perhaps giving us the best picture of Russia, interpreted in the international language of music. He wrote the incidental music score to a motion picture. It became an accepted classic almost overnight. It is the Lieut. Kije Suite. In 1937 the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky introduced the suite to America. Later it was given by other orchestras. Lieutenant Kije is thoroughly Slav without the melancholy, even in the burial scene. It's the Victor Musical Masterpiece album M-459.

Columbia has outdone itself in meritorious production, both in domestic and in European recordings. Felix Weingartner directs the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra in its rendition of Beethoven's Egmont Overture (Columbia 69195-D recording). Beethoven gave Goethe's drama of the same name a melodic understanding that has outlived the story. Mr. Weingartner's interpretation of this often-heard number entitles it to first place in any gallery of musical literature. Columbia has done some other monumental things, including the recording of Wagner's Tristan and Isolde, Tannhauser and Parsifal and parts of Siegfried as given by the Bayreuth Festival Singers and Orchestra. A review of these will be undertaken later.

Sir Thomas Beecham directs the London Philharmonic Orchestra in its playing of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, the Number 8 in B Minor. It is recorded by Columbia (No. 330) and is a masterpiece. Known to everyone who has heard a symphony orchestra or seen a motion picture, the "Unfinished" long ago became an opening cleft to the popular acceptance of Schubert. It needs no review and under the baton of Sir Thomas it has been happily recorded so that its beauty may be enjoyed over and over again. A record collection without the "Unfinished" Symphony is like a library without a dictionary, unthinkable.

Felix Weingartner, in London, the London Symphony Orchestra in its reading of the Bethoven Leonore Overture No. 2 (Opus 74.) This number was rewritten by Beethoven because woodwind players were unable at first to execute its difficult passages. It is Columbia recording X-96—and magnificently done.

The Boston 'Pops' Orchestra is giving the American people a new insight into their traditional—or folk—music. That symphonic organization has recorded "Pop Goes the Weasel," Victor 4397 in festival formula. Everyone, too will enjoy that orchestra's playing of the old Waldteufel favorite, "The Skaters" (Victor 4396). It is perfect waltz time.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

SEP 4 - 1938

RECENT RECORDINGS

Victor's list for September includes a new and brilliantly played version of Debussy's "Iberia," by John Barbirolli and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije—Suite," by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston, and several interesting singles.

"Iberia," the second of three orchestral works by Debussy entitled "Images," is impressionistic, tightly knit music, in which the composer's mastery of tonal coloring is provocatively vivid and exciting. The work is in three sections: "Par les rues et par les chemins," "Parfums de la nuit," and "Le matin d'un jour de fete." All three divisions are charged with throbbing rhythmic contrasts and the second is sheer tonal magic. (An interesting companion set for "Iberia" is Ravel's "Rapsodie Espagnole," played by Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia on Victor 8282-3.)

The new Victor set of "Iberia" (VM-460) marks Mr. Barbirolli's debut on domestic recordings. The noted young conductor and his superb orchestra perform Debussy's evocative music with deep understanding and great tonal beauty. They have been given a recording of crystalline clarity.

The Prokofieff "Lieutenant Kije" (VM-459), we have not yet heard. Dr. Koussevitzky featured this music at the recent Berkshire Festival, where it met with great success. The suite has been evolved from music Prokofieff composed for a Russian motion picture and has been described by various commentators as spirited and intensely amusing.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

SEP 3 - 1938

Noted Stars Coming to Eastman

Linking such concert artists as Kreisler, Heifetz, Tibbett, Rachmanioff, Anderson and Rubinstein with Hofmann, Lehmann, Salzedo and Enesco, Philharmonic guest soloists, local music lovers are looking forward to the greatest year in Rochester's musical history.

The former group will appear in the Eastman Theater in the regular concert series, along with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New Ballet Russe, and "Madame

ARTISTS' PROBLEMS

N.Y. Times - Sept 4/38

The Native Versus the Foreign Conductor —Need of Fostering American Effort

By OLIN DOWNES

THERE come certain times in the development of a nation's art when it is not easy to distinguish clearly between provincialism and excessive interest in foreign products. At the present time, for example, the political events in Europe have thrust out of Germany and Austria able conductors and musicians of other classification, who have come to America in need of a livelihood and are eager to place conspicuous musical abilities at the service of our public. These musicians, in greater number, are beset by gravest economic problems. They should be welcomed and assisted, but not to the detriment of native talent. Among the newcomers are plain mediocrities, not a whit more gifted than a large number of native sons, and something is owing to American art and the American people. We should see to it that our own conductors are given the recognition that they deserve, and the proper opportunities for development, and that they shall not be elbowed aside by newcomers who through no fault of America are in a difficult pass and must strive energetically to secure a living.

Mr. Bernard Tuthill wrote a letter to The Times, published last week in these columns, in which he expressed this viewpoint with the force of conviction born of observation. There is certainly in some quarters of musical America a tendency to accept unquestioningly musicians and musical standards which are foreign-bred. This false notion is gradually disappearing and will soon go out of fashion. But American conductors still have to contend with it, and their problems are made the harder by the new influx of musicians, some of them entitled to the highest respect for their ideals and achievements, others obviously mere job-hunters. These latter, who know the ropes astonishingly well, have in more than one instance ousted deserving native musicians from positions which they counted as permanent, and upon which they based their careers.

Sympathy may be had and may be exercised to the utmost to musicians who have been treated with a cruelty and injustice hardly conceivable in the modern age. But we owe it to ourselves to be a little more thoughtful and attentive to the fundamental issues. Some Americans still prefer to patronize a foreigner because he is a foreigner, while refusing the recognition that a native talent deserves.

* * *

The time for this is past, and we should realize it. We must develop our own culture, in our own way. The musician from overseas is often inclined to take it for granted that he is the master and the prophet of an ancient civilization come to our shores to give us our first real appreciation of art. What does he know of us or of our art? What has he to give America besides his individual talent? To claim that he can help America to express herself as an artistic nation is rather nonsensical. Foreign artists usually show quickly that they know little or nothing about the American spirit or American art, and that few of them particularly care to learn. They are filled to satisfaction with their own traditions, their national methods and points of view. Many of them are beyond changing, or gaining any new angle of vision. They continue to live in a past that is gone, refusing even seriously to consider a future that is forming under their eyes, and a nation advancing by leaps and bounds in the direction of an art of its own.

It is a proud and enduring tradition of this nation to welcome all human beings and ideas for their true worth and from whatever quarter they come. This is one of the great sources of our national wealth, material and of the spirit. Americanism never meant provincialism; it only means respect for ourselves and concern for our own artistic integrity. We do not want to cultivate chauvinism to the extent of permitting an inferior musician to flourish simply because he is a native product, but, on the other hand, we do owe our native musicians, constantly multiplying and developing in their art, encouragement and support and the first opportunity, other things being equal.

* * *

A young conductor who has developed his own orchestra by virtue of his talent, enthusiasm and capacity for affairs, and by whose efforts the community has profited, should not be forced to give place to a newcomer from overseas. A great orchestra in search of a new leader should not feel compelled to reach far out over the water to engage a musician from the other side of the Atlantic who proves to be a mediocrity. But this, too, has happened. The worst chauvinism would be preferable to such a course.

The American conductor is seriously handicapped in his development by the fact that there are so few opera houses in this country, and that the smaller communities have yet to become "opera-minded," as in Europe. For the opera house is the unsurpassable training ground of the conductor, whether he ends in the operatic or the symphonic field. There is the more need to protect those who, with insufficient opportunity, have made a place for themselves and who show promise for the future.

In the end, of course, the conditions which are peculiar to this period will find balance. In the end we can absorb all and more than the musicians who are now seeking place among us. In the end their presence and activities here will have proved a benefit and a stimulus to keener effort by all musicians who seek advancement. Because in the end this competition will make for better conductors and more of the orchestras which are now springing up all over the country, in small places as well as large ones. The sum of it will be a great enrichment of our musical life. But this growth should be directed with proper thought for the interests of our musicians and the development of a genuinely American art.

Impressions Of Festival At Salzburg

~~N.Y. Tribune~~

Musical Standard Is Found Below That of Previous Years; "Falstaff" Best of Opera Productions

Sept 4/38

By Edward Downes

SALZBURG, Aug. 15.—Salzburg this summer is a striking object lesson for friends and enemies of National Socialism alike. For not even the most embittered Nazi foe can deny the satisfaction and elation of the general populace over the Anschluss. On the other hand, not even the most fiery partisan of the German government would attempt to assert that this year's Salzburg Festival lives up to the achievements of previous seasons.

Indeed, a more striking example of the result of political interference in artistic matters can hardly be imagined. By far, the most brilliant European music festival of recent years and one of the most enchanting products of modern Austrian culture has become overnight a provincial affair, ranking as far below the Bayreuth and Munich festivals as it used to rank above them.

With the exception of the loss of the two Rheinhardt productions, "Everyman" and "Faust," the program is virtually as it was announced before the Anschluss. But Rheinhardt, Toscanini and Bruno Walter together made the Salzburg Festival. With them gone and a long list of artists headed by Lotte Lehmann missing, relatively little remains.

Of all the operatic conductors at Salzburg this summer, Furtwaengler is the best known, but he conducts only "Meistersinger." The ranks of distinguished singers have been decimated, and, generally speaking, there is little to distinguish the presentations from performances to be heard day in, day out, during the winter season of the Vienna State Opera.

The German press, to be sure, rejoices that Salzburg at last has a purely German festival. But German visitors who were unable to visit Salzburg in previous years and now make up the bulk of the audience may wonder what, in vulgar parlance, all the shooting used to be about.

"Falstaff" Most Successful

Certain things, like Verdi's "Falstaff" are still enchanting, but it is a great question how much the performance still owes to Toscanini who conducted it for so many years here. Productions new to Salzburg this year such as "Tannhaeuser" are decidedly second rate.

Salzburg under the sign of the Swastika is full of tourists. More crowded than it has ever been before. Each day dozens of busses laden with enormous groups of workers from all parts of Germany arrive and disgorge their "Strength Through Joy" vacationers by the cathedral square. And the magic of Salzburg, which somehow managed to absorb even the silliest American debutante, struggles in vain with these new visitors. Nor are the townfolk over enthusiastic about their visiting compatriots, for they do not spend like the English and Americans. As the writer's cabman gloomily remarked one evening, they are "rechte Sparmeister" (past masters of thrift).

Among the most successful of this year's offerings is Verdi's "Falstaff." It has a well schooled, entirely Italian cast headed by brilliant Mariano Stabile in the title role. In this performance the substitute for Toscanini was Vittorio Gui who, though a skilled technician, has not the spontaneous perfection of rhythm "Falstaff" demands. The remainder of the cast sang and acted with a jocosity and high-spirited ease that quickly put the audience in a good humor and kept it there the rest of the evening.

"Don Giovanni"

This year's "Don Giovanni" has practically the same cast as last, with Pinza in the name part, Rethberg as Donna Anna, Helltsgruber, of Vienna, as Elvira, Anton Dermota as Ottavio, Lazzari of the Metropolitan as Leporello and Maria Cebotari as Zerlina. Karl Boehm, of Dresden, took over Bruno Walter's baton. The result was a performance that rose above adequacy only when Pinza was on the stage. Elisabeth Rethberg in the role of Donna Anna was constantly obliged to force her voice and in general the male side of the cast was the superior one.

"Tannhaeuser," which was to have been Toscanini's new production this summer, was conducted by Hans Knappertsbusch. It seems a great injustice to compare any but the very greatest conductors to Toscanini. Toscanini's "Tannhaeuser" at Bayreuth in 1930, the first opera he conducted there, remains a revelation to those that heard it. This Salzburg production could have taken its place as a good routine performance at the Metropolitan Opera or in Vienna, but the writer has heard more distinguished "Tannhaeusers" in both houses.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
SEP 4 - 1938

PLANS FOR NEW SEASON

THE subscription series, "Music and the Dance," to be offered this season by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, will open Monday night, Oct. 24, with a presentation of Borodin's opera, "Prince Igor," under the direction of Eugene Fuerst and Mme. Marie Yakovleff. The work will be sung in Russian. There will be 100 participants on stage, not including the Yakovleff Ballet, which will perform the Polovetzian dances. The orchestra will number forty musicians.

John Barbirolli will conduct the New York Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra at the second event, Nov. 7, with Emanuel Feuermann, 'cellist, as soloist. Third in the series will be a program Nov. 28 by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, directed by Leonide Massine. There will be recitals by Myra Hess, Jussi Bjoerling, Yehudi Menuhin, Kirsten Flagstad, Georges Enesco, Alexander Kipnis and Gertrude Pitzinger. In addition dance performances are scheduled by Argentinita and her Andalusian troupe and the Philadelphia Ballet, the series terminating April 18 with a "Festival of the Dance," in which Hanya Holm, Anna Sokolow and Tamaris will appear with their professional groups. Among other attractions offered by the institute during the coming season will be five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, chamber music recitals and young people's programs, as well as lectures on current history, literature, social problems, science and the arts.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
SEP 4 - 1938

Meet 'Lieutenant Kije'—He's Introduced on New Records

Prokofieff Music for Comedy Played by Boston Symphony; There's Also Bach and 'Pop Goes the Weasel,' According to Lucien Cailliet.

By Jay Walz.

'Lieutenant Kije' is not among the Russian films we have seen, and as far as we know it hasn't been shown in America. That's too bad, because it would undoubtedly give us a new slant on the Soviet's sense of comedy—convince us that, after all, he has one.

Our indicator is the newly released (Victor) recording of the orchestral suite extracted from Sergei Pokofieff's incidental music for the movie. It has more fun than any concert piece we've heard in a long time. It's bound up in Album M-459, three large discs, and it's played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky conducting. This orchestra gave the suite its American premiere in Boston last October, and introduced it later in New York during its visits there.

Lieut. Kije, the character, is a big, amiable soldier of blustering ways. Evidently (but the suite doesn't refer to very many) the plot of the movie takes him through a series of comical adventures. His fellows like him, yet laugh at him and finally get tired of him. And there is no sadness of farewell when he embarks. At least Prokofieff hints this in a funeral march that expresses more of relief than of grief.

Prokofieff is humorous throughout this music. He works comical twists not only into his theme song—the bugle call at the birth of Kije, but also into the romance, Kije's wedding music, and a troika in which in the orchestral version a tenor saxophone substitutes for the original barytone voice. The humor is broad insofar as it depicts a rather coarse character, a rogue. But being Mr. Prokofieff's Opus 60, the music could hardly be expected to be obvious. And it isn't. There are plenty of subtleties that aren't apparent until the third or fourth playing. And that is all right, because most people will want to hear it that many times, and many more.

* * * *

Asked to identify Mr. Lucien Cailliet, I would, until last week, have replied promptly, "He's the man who makes the Bach arrangements for the Philadelphia Orchestra."

Now it develops that Mr. Cailliet practices his art outside working hours with the result that he can no longer be labled a one-composr or one-orchestra man. Among the new Victor releases is a little item (one small disc, No. 4397) called "Pop Goes the Weasel," arranged by Lucien Cailliet and played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. And it is "Pop Goes the Weasel" all right, all duked up in togs befitting his first appearance in the concert hall. What has happened, of course, is this: Arranger Cailliet has applied all his knowledge of instruments and skill in distributing parts around the orchestra to one of our beloved homely ditties. We guarantee you won't find its humor so subtle as Prokofieff's, but it's clean fun and very good to entertain your friend with of an evening. They'll get a big kick hearing a symphony orchestra going to town on the low brow.

But Mr. Cailliet has been doing his home work, too. In the same batch of September releases is a large disc (Victor No. 14973) devoted to his orchestral interpretations of Bach's "Prelude in E Major, and the choral prelude, "Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring." These are played by the Philadelphia Orchestra, Ormandy conducting. Washingtonians have heard both of the pieces at Philadelphia Orchestra concerts in Constitution Hall. They sound on the records much as they did in public performance. I think they are a little pompous and noisy, especially the "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" which, being more fragile than Bach music usually is, should be handled with extreme care. Neither Mr Cailliet nor Mr. Ormandy seem to agree.

DENVER, COLO.
Rocky Mountain News

SEP 7 - 1938

Daughter of Composer to Lead Orchestra

—Acme Photo.

Miss Averil Coleridge-Taylor, daughter of the composer, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, who is coming to the United States from London, England, to conduct the Boston symphony.

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

SEP 5 - 1938

TO CONDUCT BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Miss Averil Coleridge-Taylor, daughter of the famous composer, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, is shown in her home here shortly before making preparations to leave for the United States to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Coleridge-Taylor was the first woman ever invited to conduct a band of the Royal Marines. It is an unusual honor for an Englishwoman to receive [illegible] from the famous Boston organization.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

SEP 5 1938

'Lieutenant Kije' Provides Fun for the Record-Player

John Barbirollie and New York Philharmonic Offered in Debussy Album

By GEORGE HAGE

PERHAPS there never really was a Lieutenant Kije (and the historians would assure us there wasn't) but he is very much alive on an album of discs released this month by Victor, thanks to Sergei Prokofieff, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And a pompous and amiably stupid fellow he is, too.

The Lieutenant, we are told, was the creation of courtiers of Czar Nicholas I, and owed his existence to the fact that they were afraid to tell the Czar that he had made a mistake.

The Czar, according to the story, had so bungled the report of his military aide that he hitched the last syllable, "ki," of the name of a Russian officer onto the Russian intensive expletive, "je." Thus he had on his hands a name without an officer to bear it, and the obliging courtiers undertook to remedy the situation.

Their creature and his comical adventures are the subject of an orchestral suite written by Prokofieff in 1933.

* * *

Movie Music

THE suite is extracted from the incidental music written by Prokokieff for a movie of the same which was produced by a Russian film corporation. It was published and first performed in Moscow in 1934, and received its first American performance by Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra in 1937.

The same artists repeated it several times during the last season with a success which is understandable after hearing the records.

For "Lieutenant Kije" is fun, giving the lie as it does to the supposition that the music of the masters must be pretty deep stuff. The music amusingly satirizes military life under the Czars, and Mr. Koussevitzky and his musicians have been exceedingly deft in mocking the military stiffness and pomposity which the composer intended to deride. The recording is mechanically excellent.

with great sensitiveness for the composer's intensions.

These records, too, meet all exactions mechancally.

* * *

Other Releases

FOR your selection, Victor also offers this month:

Chopin—"Nocturnes," played by Arthur Rubinstein.

Brahms—"Sonata in E Flat Major," played by viola and piano.

Malotte—"The Twenty-Third Psalm," and "The Beatitudes," sung by Igor Gorin.

Bach—"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," and "Prelude in E Major," played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under direction of Eugene Ormandy.

Particularly recommended is a small record of the wonderful contralto of Marian Anderson singing two songs of her own race: "Trampin'" and I Know the Lord Laid His Hands on Me."

WILKES BARRE, PA.
NEWS

SEP 5 - 1938

WORDS WITHOUT MUSIC

By LOUIS

The Metropolitan Opera season is to be extended next year through May as an added attraction for visitors to New York's World's Fair. The extra month will be given over entirely to Wagner.

Contrary to the popular belief New York is not the cradle of grand opera in America. New Orleans has this distinction. Almost 150 years ago a company was presenting French operas in the southern city.

New Music Prize

Another cash lure to musical inspiration in connection with the World's Fair has been announced. G. Schirmer, music publisher, offers a $500 prize for an original unaccompanied choral composition to be dedicated to the Fair. Only American citizens may compete. The cimposition must be a setting of a poem by an American author selected by the contestant, and its performance time must not be less than ten or more than fifteen minutes. It should be capable of being sung a cappella by a four-part mixed chorus of singers of high school age, and should be written in open score.

Ford
A.S.

No longer will the Summer festivals of the Boston Symphony in the [redacted] be hampered by rain. An imposing, and, it is reported, acoustically-satisfactory shed has been erected for the orchestra's pastoral performances. In previous years cloudbursts have descended upon the musicians of the most impressive moments of Beethoven and Wagner.

C IN REVIEW

Jewish Advocate Sept. 16/38

By JULES WOLFFERS

Koussevitzky's Fifteenth—Symphony's Fifty-eighth and Some Notable Firsts

Next month, on October 7, Dr. Koussevitzky is to begin his 15th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. During the 58 years of the orchestra's existence, only one man has come anywhere near duplicating Koussevitsky's length of service. This was Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the orchestra for 13 years with an interregnum dividing his sway into two terms, one of five years, the other of eight. Dr. Koussevitzky has, however, reigned uninterruptedly and his length of service is sufficient commentary on his ability as conductor, his skill as program-maker, and of the esteem and affection with which Boston's musical public regard him.

We have heard that a particularly brilliant season will mark the conductor's 15th anniversary. While there is, of course, no limits to brilliancy, it might well be observed that all of Dr. Koussevitzky's seasons have been particularly brilliant. He stands as one of the greatest conductors of the world, a superb interpreter of the old—a dynamic force for the new.

Several important events are listed for the season. Stravinsky is to appear in the spring as composer, conductor and piano soloist. He will conduct a performance of his oratorio, "Oedipus Rex", which, it will be remembered, received its American premiere here ten years ago. An orchestral concerto is to receive its first American hearing. Other of Stravinsky's works will no doubt be repeated.

Another composer who is to appear is Ernst Krenek, who will make his first public appearance in Boston as soloist in his own Piano Concerto. Still a young man, Krenek is a composer of more than ordinary reputation. Best known for his jazz opera, "Jonny spielt auf", Krenek is much more than just the composer of this controversial opera which created such a sensation 11 years ago. In "Music Since 1900" by Nicolas Slonimsky, Krenek is mentioned no less than 23 times although his first notice as composer does not come until 1921.

Georges Enesco and Eugene Goosens are to be guest conductors. Both men are excellent musicians and fine leaders. It is probable that Enesco will give us some of his own stirring compositions as heretofore. The assistant conductor and concert-master of the orchestra, Richard Burgin, will conduct a pair of concerts as he has done in past years.

Soloists will include the incomparable Jascha Heifetz, the pianists Myra Hess, Artur Rubinstein, Rudolf Serkin; the Boston violinist, Ruth Posselt; the famous 'cellist Piatigorsky.

Also, Zlatko Balokovic will perform here for the first time John Alden Carpenter's violin concerto. Sanroma's pianism will introduce to Boston a new piano concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky, better known to swingsters as Vernon Duke. Which of the two is his real name anyway?

Nicolai Berezowsky has written a concerto for string quartet and orchestra which will be heard through the instrumentality of the Coolidge Quartet of which Mr. Berezowsky is a member.

Altogether an interesting list, stimulating and worthwhile.

What Dr. Koussevitzky himself plans is, except for a few items, not known to us at present. But we can safely leave the programs to this master program builder.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

SEP 21 1938

AROUND TOWN

THE FIRST CHECK is in for the 1938 Alias Santa Claus Club show at Stambaugh Auditorium Dec. 10. E. M. Barr read the announcement, sent his check to "get it over with." . . . Zlatko Balokovic, who'll fiddle as the final number of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra series, must be good. The Boston Symphony, which is tops, has him down for two appearances this season.

DENVER, COLO.
Rocky Mountain News

SEP 7 - 1938

Daughter of Composer to Lead Orchestra

—Acme Photo.

Miss Averil Coleridge-Taylor, daughter of the composer, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, who is coming to the United States from London, England, to conduct the Boston symphony.

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

SEP 5 - 1938

TO CONDUCT BOSTON ORCHESTRA

Miss Averil Coleridge-Taylor, daughter of the famous composer, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, is shown in her home here shortly before making preparations to leave for the United States to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Coleridge-Taylor was the first woman ever invited to conduct a band of the Royal Marines. It is an unusual honor for an Englishwoman to receive such an invitation from the famous Boston organization.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

SEP 5 1938

'Lieutenant Kije' Provides Fun for the Record-Player

John Barbirollie and New York Philharmonic Offered in Debussy Album

By GEORGE HAGE

PERHAPS there never really was a Lieutenant Kije (and the historians would assure us there wasn't) but he is very much alive on an album of discs released this month by Victor, thanks to Sergei Prokofieff, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And a pompous and amiably stupid fellow he is, too.

The Lieutenant, we are told, was the creation of courtiers of Czar Nicholas I, and owed his existence to the fact that they were afraid to tell the Czar that he had made a mistake.

The Czar, according to the story, had so bungled the report of his military aide that he hitched the last syllable, "ki," of the name of a Russian officer onto the Russian intensive expletive, "je." Thus he had on his hands a name without an officer to bear it, and the obliging courtiers undertook to remedy the situation.

Their creature and his comical adventures are the subject of an orchestral suite written by Prokofieff in 1933.

* * *

Movie Music

THE suite is extracted from the incidental music written by Prokokieff for a movie of the same which was produced by a Russian film corporation. It was published and first performed in Moscow in 1934, and received its first American performance by Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra in 1937.

The same artists repeated it several times during the last season with a success which is understandable after hearing the records.

For "Lieutenant Kije" is fun, giving the lie as it does to the supposition that the music of the masters must be pretty deep stuff. The music amusingly satirizes military life under the Czars, and Mr. Koussevitzky and his musicians have been exceedingly deft in mocking the miltiary stiffness and pomposity which the composer intended to deride. The recording is mechanically excellent.

with great sensitiveness for the composer's intensions.

These records, too, meet all exactions mechancally.

* * *

Other Releases

FOR your selection, Victor also offers this month:

Chopin—"Nocturnes," played by Arthur Rubinstein.

Brahms—"Sonata in E Flat Major," played by viola and piano.

Malotte—"The Twenty-Third Psalm," and "The Beatitudes," sung by Igor Gorin.

Bach—"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," and "Prelude in E Major," played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under direction of Eugene Ormandy.

Particularly recommended is a small record of the wonderful contralto of Marian Anderson singing two songs of her own race: "Trampin'" and I Know the Lord Laid His Hands on Me."

WILKES BARRE, PA.
NEWS

SEP 5 - 1938

By LOUIS

The Metropolitan Opera season is to be extended next year through May as an added attraction for visitors to New York's World's Fair. The extra month will be given over entirely to Wagner.

Contrary to the popular belief New York is not the cradle of grand opera in America. New Orleans has this distinction. Almost 150 years ago a company was presenting French operas in the southern city.

New Music Prize

Another cash lure to musical inspiration in connection with the World's Fair has been announced. G. Schirmer, music publisher, offers a $500 prize for an original unaccompanied choral composition to be dedicated to the Fair. Only American citizens may compete. The cimposition must be a setting of a poem by an American author selected by the contestant, and its performance time must not be less than ten or more than fifteen minutes. It should be capable of being sung a cappella by a four-part mixed chorus of singers of high school age, and should be written in open score.

Ford
A.S.

No longer will the Summer festivals of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires be hampered by rain. An imposing, and, it is reported, acoustically-satisfactory shed has been erected for the orchestra's pastoral performances. In previous years cloudbursts have descended upon the musicians of the most impressive moments of Beethoven and Wagner.

MUSIC IN REVIEW

Jewish Advocate Sept. 16/38

By JULES WOLFFERS

Koussevitzky's Fifteenth—Symphony's Fifty-eighth and Some Notable Firsts

Next month, on October 7, Dr. Koussevitzky is to begin his 15th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. During the 58 years of the orchestra's existence, only one man has come anywhere near duplicating Koussevitsky's length of service. This was Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the orchestra for 13 years with an interregnum dividing his sway into two terms, one of five years, the other of eight. Dr. Koussevitzky has, however, reigned uninterruptedly and his length of service is sufficient commentary on his ability as conductor, his skill as program-maker, and of the esteem and affection with which Boston's musical public regard him.

We have heard that a particularly brilliant season will mark the conductor's 15th anniversary. While there is, of course, no limits to brilliancy, it might well be observed that all of Dr. Koussevitzky's seasons have been particularly brilliant. He stands as one of the greatest conductors of the world, a superb interpreter of the old—a dynamic force for the new.

Several important events are listed for the season. Stravinsky is to appear in the spring as composer, conductor and piano soloist. He will conduct a performance of his oratorio, "Oedipus Rex", which, it will be remembered, received its American premiere here ten years ago. An orchestral concerto is to receive its first American hearing. Other of Stravinsky's works will no doubt be repeated.

Another composer who is to appear is Ernst Krenek, who will make his first public appearance in Boston as soloist in his own Piano Concerto. Still a young man, Krenek is a composer of more than ordinary reputation. Best known for his jazz opera, "Jonny spielt auf", Krenek is much more than just the composer of this controversial opera which created such a sensation 11 years ago. In "Music Since 1900" by Nicolas Slonimsky, Krenek is mentioned no less than 23 times although his first notice as composer does not come until 1921.

Georges Enesco and Eugene Goosens are to be guest conductors. Both men are excellent musicians and fine leaders. It is probable that Enesco will give us some of his own stirring compositions as heretofore. The assistant conductor and concert-master of the orchestra, Richard Burgin, will conduct a pair of concerts as he has done in past years.

Soloists will include the incomparable Jascha Heifetz, the pianists Myra Hess, Artur Rubinstein, Rudolf Serkin; the Boston violinist, Ruth Posselt; the famous 'cellist Piatigorsky.

Also, Zlatko Balokovic will perform here for the first time John Alden Carpenter's violin concerto. Sanroma's pianism will introduce to Boston a new piano concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky, better known to swingsters as Vernon Duke. Which of the two is his real name anyway?

Nicolai Berezowsky has written a concerto for string quartet and orchestra which will be heard through the instrumentality of the Coolidge Quartet of which Mr. Berezowsky is a member.

Altogether an interesting list, stimulating and worthwhile.

What Dr. Koussevitzky himself plans is, except for a few items, not known to us at present. But we can safely leave the programs to this master program builder.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

SEP 21 1938

AROUND TOWN

THE FIRST CHECK is in for the 1938 Alias Santa Claus Club show at Stambaugh Auditorium Dec. 10. E. M. Barr read the announcement, sent his check to "get it over with." . . . Zlatko Balokovic, who'll fiddle as the final number of the Youngstown Symphony Orchestra series, must be good. The Boston Symphony, which is tops, has him down for two appearances this season.

[189]

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

SEP 7 - 1938

Plans For An American Salzburg

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, has just concluded its fifth Summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5,000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists. Dr. Kousselitzky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will not be a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN - TELEGRAPH

SEP 4 - 1938

On The Records

By Michael Shaw, Jr.

ONCE MORE TWO Serges combine their abilities and a surge of delightful music results.

"Lieutenant Kije," a suite built by Prokofieff from the score he supplied for a Soviet film, is a captivating satire treated with the utmost felicity by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony (Victor Set M-459; five sides).

When it comes to Russian music our money goes on the down East maestro. In addition, his engravings are fast eclipsing all rivals in capturing the full verities of an orchestra, yet keeping them in tonal balance. Memorable is the reproduction of a lusty fanfare (side 1), a tenor saxophone, tuba and cymbals (side 3), the poising of percussion against pizzicato (side 4) and the superbly played mock sorrow of the final movement.

In more ways than one "Lieutenant Kije" is closely allied to Kodaly's "Hary Janos" Suite.

On the odd side of Koussevitzky re-records the "March," and "Scherzo" from Prokofieff's "Love of Three Oranges" with such brilliance that it will be little short of criminal if he does not wax the rest of this six-movement suite.

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Plans

B. Tran. - Sept. 8/38

The fifty-eighth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, beginning on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 7 and 8, will be the fifteenth of the continuous tenure of the conductorship of the organization by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. To mark the anniversary appropriately Dr. Koussevitzky has indicated his intention to include in the first half of the opening program three numbers which appeared on the program at the beginning of the season in 1924, when he made his Boston debut. Those numbers were Vivaldi's Concerto for orchestra in D minor, Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture and Brahms' Haydn Variations.

The conductor who has presided over the orchestra for almost one-quarter of its existence—longer than any of his predecessors—is now vacationing at Bourget-du-lac in France, whence he will return to Boston to arrive on Oct. 1. The preliminary rehearsals of the orchestra will thus occupy a briefer period than customarily.

The preliminary announcement of the orchestra's plans, issued today from Symphony Hall, points out that Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted at least 1400 concerts during his fourteen years' tenure, an average of 100 concerts a year. This imposing figure must constitute something of a record in such matters. Those who suspected that the eminent conductor might begin to rest more seriously on his laurels during the coming season are assured that he will again conduct "the usual 100 concerts."

As in the past, Dr. Koussevitzky will be relieved by guest conductors. The names, which have been predicted in these columns from time to time, are Igor Stravinsky, Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens. Stravinsky's participation in a two-week festival of his music has already been described here in more detail than the presnt announcment makes clear. Enesco, eminent Roumanian composer and violinist as well as conductor, was warmly received by almost everybody when he took over a week's concerts last season. Mr. Goossens, who has also conducted here as guest in the past, is the leader of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

SEP 7 - 1938

Music Views

Symphonic Shell

BY EUGENE STINSON

AT THE recent Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, Mass., the Angelus from the late Henry Hadley's third symphony was given a performance, not so much memorial in its nature as commemorative of the energy and the foresight and the application without which 6,000 persons would never have foregathered to honor Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony at the opening of a dedication of Tanglewood's new music shell. The "festival" was not a festival more than it was a series of symphonic programs, save in the inclusion of a performance of Beethoven's Choral symphony and the inclusion of the comparatively pitiful device of a concert performance of some solid Wagnerian excerpts, the end of the first act of "Walkuere" and the complete third act of "Siegfried." What the future prospects of Tanglewood may be is quite indefinite, but surely they are also unlimited. It is a striking fact, however, that a music shed, covering an acre and a half, seating 5,700, costing $100,000 and in need of $57,342 more, was dedicated this summer for the purpose of attracting New England in its automobiles for nothing more enterprising than two series of three concerts each.

I say "nothing more enterprising" because I wish to emphasize that for 24 concerts, given this summer in six weeks under four conductors, Chicago and its suburbs already had at their disposition the Ravinia grounds and opera house, evidence of the munificence of a single man, Louis Eckstein, and of Mrs. Eckstein.

The Tanglewood shed is built fan shape under a roof 66,000 square feet in extent. The outer rim of the fan is 404 feet long; the depth of its seating space is 176 feet. Its lighting would suffice for 50 average houses. It is still in need of $22,000 worth of iron roll curtains for protection in storms, $13,500 worth of seats, $5,000 worth of permanent lighting, $3,000 worth of landscaping and other items.

This can and will be done—for the sake, at present, of six concerts per summer.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 6 - 1938

at West Point.

Pasquale Cardillo of 102 Francis street has returned to his home here for the remainder of the summer vacation. Mr. Cardillo played clarinet with a group of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a hotel in Wentworth-by-the-Sea. N. H., giving two daily concerts during the summer. He will return next week to the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, where he is studying, and where he is a member of the junior faculty, teaching beginners in clarinet.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER - PRESS

EP 6 - 1938

She'll Conduct in Boston

Miss Averil Coleridge-Taylor, daughter of the famous composer, Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, will leave London soon to make a guest appearance as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She is the first woman ever invited to conduct a band of the Royal Marines.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 6 - 1938

Hampshire County Dogs Win Ribbons at Lenox Contest

Entries of Walter Kotschnig of Northampton and Col. G. A. Taylor of Hadley Among Winners

The annual dog show of the Lenox Kennel club was held Saturday on the grounds of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival association. Four hundred and seventy-eight canine aristocrats were benched under the new steel theater, where the Boston Symphony orchestra holds its summer concerts.

All the dogs from Hampshire county came away with ribbons. From Northampton, Frederick von Huly handled for Walter M. Kotschnig, the imported novice colored bull terrier, Limpsfield Jack, which took all the ribbons in its breed. Mr. von Huly, who is taking an active part in dog shows, also handled John J. Moriarty's English cocker spaniel, Mepal's Sandman, which took a blue as a novice. From Whately, Irene M. Connelly's Luckie Dee, by Champion Elyria Easter Parade, had to content herself with a red, bowing to Princess Royal II, in a close decision.

From North Amherst, Mrs. Gerald D. Jones brought her two Dalmatian coachdogs, which have done well this summer, particularly at Lake George. Broad Place Luck took the blue for puppy dogs, but Broad Place Lassie was forced to bow to a litter mate in the puppy bitches' class, exhibited by Mrs. F. S. Gage of South Amherst, Enfield Venture. From the Norwottuck Kennels in Old Hadley, Col. and Mrs. G. A. Taylor brought a brace of orange belton English setters. Handled by Henry J. Parent of Northampton, Norwottuck Countess Melva took the blue in the novice class.

The colonel took Count Aldershot into the ring in the field trial class and was awarded a blue. "Shot" also went into the ring for best of breed with Champion Bayldone Buccaneer of Prune's Own Kennels, handled by the famous Charles Palmer of Maridor, East Longmeadow. This sterling English setter was brought back from England by the former Priscilla St. George, now Mrs. Angier Biddle Duke of Tuxedo Park, N. Y. Both "Shot" and "Buck" are field trial, as well as show dogs. When tooled around the ring by their owner as a brace, "Shot" and "Milly" took the gallery and a blue. They were also warmly complimented by the judge, Charles G. Hopton of Brooklyn, for their speed-lines, strong legs and withers.

Among those attending from Northampton were Mrs. W. W. Barnes and Mrs. Merville H. Stowe of Prospect street, who are prominent members of the Springfield Kennel club. The show was won by Champion Herman Rinkton, a smooth-coated Dachshund.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CALL BULLETIN

SEP 5 - 1938

Reverse Applause

BOSTON, Sept. 5 (INS).—Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell.

CINCINNATI, O.
TIMES - STAR

SEP 8 - 1938

A HOLLOW BETWEEN THE HILLS

These weeks between the cessation of summer music activities and surveys of the season to come, which begins about one month from now, are filled with bookkeeping work. The directors of summer music are figuring on how nearly they come within or without the guarantee fund. The winter season, the essential part of which is the concerts played by the Cincinnati Orchestra, also affords considerable latitude for bookkeepers. How much will the orchestra concerts lose, how much will they gain in comparison with the deficits of other seasons?

The burning question about summer music—opera—is where to have it. Each season it becomes more and more evident that we will eventually have to establish our summer opera elsewhere than where we have been having it. Cincinnati is a hill city. A hill does not exist unless it has hollows, between itself and other hills. Cincinnati, a city of many hills, has an equivalent number of hollows between. It behooves us to look up a suitable hollow between our many hills and to develop the hollow, when found, into an ampitheater of the simplest description and to establish therein the finest music during the summer which can be financed.

During the last season of opera it was observed that, with one exception, no particular artist drew exceptionally when his name or hers was announced for the cast. It was the opera which drew and drew very well. On rainy nights it was interesting to note the scurry for cover or the spreading of umbrellas in the bleachers. It might be an economy not to have a performance on rainy nights. The bookkeeping will affirm or deny that idea.

We have not in this hill city of ours, the same spirit of public cooperation from the powers which direct city-owned parks, as elsewhere exists. And although for years we have argued and hoped, we have never convinced those directing the maintenance of parks that before we began exploiting inartistic, though it may be practical matters, the fame of Cincinnati as a center of fine music was nationally conceded. We have therefore before us the task of hunting a hollow of our own, and wrangling with whoever owns or controls this hollow to let us have it. The next step is not to make improvements in our ampitheater which shall be too expensive.

The first seasons at Hollywood Bowl were played with the ampitheater constructed in a very simple way, and the stage arrangements extremely fine. Subsequent improvements of the ampitheater added but little to its charm in the opinion of many. We can not hope to attain anything like the conditions at the Hollywood Bowl, where the rainless California summer permits definite arrangements for every concert night. We can, however, consider the simplicity with which Eastern concerts of the Boston Orchestra have been played at the so-called Berkshire Festival, where auditorium arrangements are almost primitive, and yet where one of the great world orchestras, directed by a world famous conductor, has played without pomp and circumstance. We will have to convince ourselves that no superlative auditoriums nor decorative surroundings are the real thing in musical art. The real thing is the music. Hollywood Bowl has a superb lighting arrangement which illuminates the stage while the music is playing, leaving the Bowl in darkness. When intermission comes, the process is reversed. The stage is dim, the ampitheater flooded with lights placed on the rim of the surrounding hills.

We could have something like that. We have hills and hollows aplenty around Cincinnati. The thing is to get a hollow and regard it as a place sufficient to satisfy an [illegible] on hearing music

[190]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

SEP 8 - 1938

SYMPHONY TO BEGIN 58TH SEASON OCT. 7

Koussevitsky Will Return to Conduct Orchestra for 15th Year

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation following the Berkshire Festival last month, and will return the first of October for the season's opening.

Season's Plans

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge, and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for important, concertos, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the 'cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

Nicolai Berezowsky's concerto for String Quartet and Orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge Quartet, and Ernst Krenek will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky will visit America in the spring, and will appear as guest in the concerts of two weeks, as composer, conductor and piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors, each for a single week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which was revived last spring with conspicuous success, not having been heard in Boston since the Beethoven Festival of 1927, will be repeated at a special concert in the autumn.

First Programs

Word has just been received from Koussevitzky, who is vacationing at Bourget-du-Lac, France, that the opening program of his 15th season, Oct. 7 and 8, will include in the first half three numbers with which he opened his first Boston program in 1924,—Vivaldi's Concerto for Orchestra in D minor, Berlicz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. Dr. Koussevitzky's period of conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra exceeds by several years any previous conductor of this organization.

During the 14 years which Dr. Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony, he has conducted not less than 1400 concerts, an average of 100 a year. The coming season will be no exception, when he will again undertake to prepare and conduct the usual 100 concerts.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 8 - 1938

Koussevitzky Announces Plans

BOSTON, Sept. 8.—Word has been received from Serge Koussevitzky, who is vacationing at Bourget-du-Lace, France, that the opening program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 7 and 8, will include three numbers with which he opened his first Boston program in 1924—Vivaldi's Concerto for Orchestra in D minor; Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. Dr. Koussevitzky's 14 years as conductor of the Boston Orchestra exceeds by several years any previous conductor of this organization.

During the 14 years which Dr. Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he has conducted not less than 1400 concerts, an average of 100 a year. The coming season will be no exception, when he will again undertake to prepare and conduct the usual 100 concerts. During two weeks this coming season, Dr. Koussevitzky has asked Igor Stravinsky to appear as composer-conductor, as well as piano soloist in the performance of his own works.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 8 - 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY PLANS

Koussevitzky to Direct Again—Guest Conductors Named

Serge Koussevitzky will begin his fifteenth year in America as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when he directs the opening of the season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 1, it was announced yesterday. During the season, the orchestra's fifty-eighth, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct almost 100 concerts.

The management of the Boston Symphony also revealed that the guest conductors this season will be Igor Stravinsky, who will appear for a fortnight as conductor and piano soloist in the performance of his own works, and Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens, who will lead the orchestra for a week each.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST
SEP 8 - 1938

Koussevitzky's 15th Season in Boston

Serge Koussevitzky begins his fifteenth year in America as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when he opens the season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on October 7. The conductor is now taking a rest at Bourget-du-Lac, France, having sailed for Europe at the conclusion of the Berkshire Festival.

During the coming season, which is the orchestra's fifty-eighth, Koussevitzky will conduct almost 100 concerts. Two weeks, however, will be given over to Igor Stravinsky, who will appear as conductor and piano soloist in performances of his own works. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goosens will each be guest conductors for a single week.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

SEP 8 - 1938

Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th year as conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra when it opens season October 1.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

SEP 8 - 1938

STRAVINSKY CHOSEN FOR HUB CONCERTS

Famous Composer Engaged as Guest Conductor of Symphony

Igor Stravinsky, famous composer, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two weeks in the coming season, it was announced yesterday. He also will appear as piano soloist with the orchestra.

This season will be Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's 15th as conductor of the orchestra, the longest tenure of any of the orchestra's conductors. For his opening programs, Oct. 7 and 8, he will include three pieces that were on his first Boston program—Vivaldi's concerto for orchestra in D-minor, Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture and Brahms's variations on a theme of Haydn.

Dr. Koussevitzky, vacationing at Bourget-du-Lac, France, will return at the end of the month. Before returning, he will confer with Stravinsky in France concerning the programs the composer will conduct. It is understood that a revival of Stravinsky's oratorio "Oedipus Rex" is contemplated.

Stravinsky will conduct during the weeks of March 12 and 19. Georges Enesco will be guest conductor the week of Jan. 8. Eugene Goosens will have a week as conductor, also.

Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted the orchestra in more than 1400 concerts. He plans about 100 for this year, including five in Providence.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, SATURDAY, Sept. 10/38

Newcomer, to Be Soloist With Symphony

Geoffrey Landesman

Zlatko Balokovic

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

SEP 8 - 1938

Stravinsky Will Conduct His Own Music in Boston

Composer Also to Play Piano With Symphony Orchestra

Igor Stravinsky will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two weeks next winter as conductor and piano soloist in his own music, it was announced yesterday. Other guest conductors during the season will be Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

Serge Koussevitsky, who is now taking a short vacation at Bourget-du-Lac, France, will return late this month or at the beginning of October to conduct the first concert of his fifteenth season with the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon, October 7. As before, he will conduct nearly 100 concerts. The orchestra, entering its fifty-eighth year, will give its first New York concert of the season Thursday night, November 17, in Carnegie Hall. Dr. Koussevitzky has now been in charge of the Boston Symphony for a longer period than any of his eight predecessors.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

SEP 8 - 1938

CONDUCTOR NAMED

BOSTON, Sept. 8 (UP) — Igor Stravinsky, celebrated composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two weeks during the annual mid-Winter vacation of Serge Koussevitzky, it was announced today. Dr. Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season as conductor of the orchestra Oct. 7.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 8 - 1938

WILL LEAD ORCHESTRA

BOSTON, Sept. 8 (UP)—Igor Stravinsky, celebrated composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two weeks during the annual mid-Winter vacation of Serge Koussevitzky, it was announced today. Doctor Koussevitzky will begin his 5th season as conductor of the orchestra Oct. 7.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

SEP 8 - 1938

Stravinsky to Lead Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Sept. 8 (UP)—Igor Stravinsky, celebrated composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony orchestra for two weeks during the annual mid-winter vacation of Serge Koussevitzky, it was announced today. Dr. Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season as conductor of the orchestra Oct. 7.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

SEP 8 - 1938

Boston, Sept. 8—Igor Stravinsky, celebrated composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two weeks during the annual mid-winter vacation of Serge Koussevitzky, it was announced today. Dr. Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season as conductor of the orchestra October 7th

---

MT. PLEASANT, TEXAS
TIMES

SEP 6 - 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

BOSTON, (INS)—Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Carles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

N. ATTLEBORO, MASS.
EVE. CHRONICLE

SEP 8 - 1938

Reverse Applause

BOSTON, Sept. 8 (INS)—Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles river to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

MOBILE, ALA.
PRESS

SEP 1 0 1938

Plans for an American Salzburg

(St. Louis Post- Dispatch)

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5,000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists. Dr. Kousselitzky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will be opportunity for a middle western community to develop a musical center which will not be a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST

SEP 9 - 1938

Miss Eunice Wheeler Is Concert Artist

Miss Eunice Wheeler, daughter of Mrs. Leonard Wheeler of Old Colony road, was guest artist at a concert given in the Marshall house in York, Me., as a highlight of this week's entertaining. Miss Wheeler played the viola in a quintet for clarinet, two violins, viola, and 'cello. Harold Hansen, son of Einar Hansen of the Boston Symphony orchestra, played the clarinet.

Miss Wheeler, who has been with her mother at their York Harbor home since early summer, will manage the toy department at a sale which will be held Thursday in the town hall for the benefit of the Women's League

[191]

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Symphony Orchestra Offers Its Wares

Sept. 10/38

By MOSES SMITH

The briskness of the weather during the past week has made an appropriate setting for the release of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's plans for the season. The preliminary announcement, made on Thursday, is rounded out now, as if the management were loathe to risk over-feeding the appetite of the Orchestra's public, eager for news. The news is prevailingly good even if the list of soloists does not rival in length similar lists from other orchestras, summarized in another column on this page. One might have guessed in the past that economy was the operating factor. One knows now that the real reason is that in fourteen years Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has firmly established in the minds of his audiences his conviction that the orchestra is, and of right ought to be, the principal soloist. Concerts without soloists are now the rule here, not the exception, in contrast with the practice still prevailing practically everywhere else in this country.

It would even be possible to argue that the Boston Orchestra, far from sacrificing in size of audiences by such procedure, has actually been rewarded, because the audiences have been steadily increasing since the low-point of the depression, and the Orchestra rests, on the whole, probably on the most stable financial base of any similar institution in this country. Dr. Koussevitzky's antipathy towards employing soloists for the sake of the box-office does not, of course, extend to the point of blindness in the face of the more legitimate uses of soloists—as assistants in the presentation of certain masterworks of the past and provocative music of the present; as artistic personages to be honored in a quasi-ceremonial way on rare occasions, and so forth. But those are different matters from the engagement of a celebrated virtuoso for a symphonic concert simply to boost the box-office "take."

Soloists and Repertory

The brief list from Symphony Hall, already made known partially in these columns from time to time, has the virtue of excelling quality. Heifetz will return for the Beethoven Concerto. There will be five pianists—Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, who will be making his first appearances with the Boston Orchestra, Jesus Maria Sanroma, who will present the new Concerto of Dukelsky, and Ernst Krenek, who will be soloist in his own Concerto. For violinists, there will be, in addition to Heifetz, Ruth Posselt and Zlatko Balokovic. While nothing has been released on the subject of what Mr. Balokovic will play, the presumption is that the piece will be John Alden Carpenter's Violin Concerto, concerning the first performance of which in Chicago this observer wrote at some length in these columns last November. Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, will return to exhibit again the magic of his art in Strauss' "Don Quixote." The only other "soloist" will be the Coolidge String Quartet, which will play the new Concerto of one of its members, Nicolai Berezovsky.

Aside from the foregoing information and that released on Thursday the only other clue to the nature of the repertory for the coming season is the statement that "Beethoven will be the predominating composer," a number of his symphonies being performed as well as the Violin Concerto. Obviously new or recent music will not be played so frequently as in the early seasons of Dr. Koussevitzky's regime. By the same token more and more emphasis is being placed on the classical and established repertory. Such are probably the natural and even inevitable results of the development of the conductor's art.

Exceptions

One is, however, quite as naturally led to comment on some of the things the announcement omits for the excellent reason that they will not happen during the coming season of the Boston Orchestra. For several years, for example, the Violin Concerto of another American composer, Roger Huntington Sessions, has been periodically and more or less definitely announced for performance at the Boston concerts. For one reason or another it has been laid aside with equal regularity. It has become, indeed, almost one of the mysteries of the American concert-halls. The mystery may even be said by this time to be a scandal. Certainly—and without attempting invidious comparisons—it seems strange that a newer Violin Concerto of another American composer, Mr. Carpenter, should precede Mr. Sessions' in Bostonian performance.

Another defect in the announced repertory, for this writer, is the absence of the Berg Violin Concerto. In the flush of enthusiasm attending the beautiful performances of the work during the season before last Dr. Koussevitzky promised a repetition for the following season. The season passed without such repetition. In bewailing the non-appearance of the work in the repertory of a new season the present writer might more easily discount the value of his own conviction were it not for the profound impression the Concerto made on eminent writers abroad, including the sober Ernest Newman and the tart Constant Lambert, who can scarcely be regarded as over-sympathetic with the tendencies of the school of composition founded by Arnold Schoenberg.

There is one name that has become more and more conspicuous by its absence—that of Emmanuel Feuermann, the 'cellist. Again there is no intention of comparison with the only 'cellist on the actual list. Rather does this writer regret that it has thus far been possible to hear a superlative artist in this city only at private or semi-public functions. Clearly the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are his appropriate and deserved setting.

It would have been a fine and praiseworthy thing to have included Bruno Walther among the guest-conductors. One is referring not to his art, which needs no apology, but to the symbol that he has necessarily become in the minds of many, the symbol of artistic freedom as opposed to authoritarian oppression. There may have been many excellent reasons why he was not and could not have been engaged. But perhaps another chance will come soon.

The burden of these exceptions is not intended to lessen the thrill of anticipation which the announcement of a new symphonic season regularly brings. If the present writer had the authority to make up his own list he would have chosen differently in some particulars. But that fact need not serve to substitute disappointment for what remains pleasurable expectancy for the opening shot of the 1938-39 campaign on Oct. 7.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

SEP 9 - 1938

MORNING GOSSIP

SHEEP

When strangers pass the sheepfold on the hill
They always stop to call the silly things
And baa and bleat at them, as people will,
To imitate their plaintive bletherings.

Slowly the trusting ewes come trotting over,
And tiny-footed little black-nosed lambs
Nuzzle against the fence for gifts of clover
Or rub contentedly against their dams.

Setting their little knock-kneed legs with care,
They crowd and listen to each bleating taunt
And twiddle their big ears, and blink and stare—
And wonder what these sily people want.

—Gerald Raftery in the New York Herald-Tribune.

Igor Stravinsky will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two weeks next Winter as conductor and piano soloist in his own music. Other guest conductors during the season will be Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

Serge Koussevitsky, who is now taking a short vacation at Bourget-du-Lac, France, will return late this month or at the beginning of October to conduct the first concert of his fifteenth season with the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, Boston, and Friday afternoon, Oct. 7. As before, he will conduct nearly 100 concerts. The orchestera, entering its fifty-eighth year, will give its first New York concert, Nov. 17, in Carnegie Hall. Dr. Koussevitzky has now been in charge of the Boston Symphony for a longer period than any of his eight predecessors.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

SEP 1 1 1938

CONTROVERSY ABOUT APPLAUSE BRINGS 'BOUQUETS AND BRICKBATS' IN LETTERS TO CRITIC

By SALLY BROWN MOODY

Our mention in last Sunday's San Diego Union of the present custom of barring applause between the movements of a symphony has brought forth "bouquets and brickbats," thus achieving the purpose for which it was written.

Controversy, or difference of opinion keeps things going—even horse racing. Many telephone calls, (in agreement with us) letters, and group discussions have been intensely interesting.

We remember that years and years ago—well, never mind about that—listening to the Chicago orchestra or the great ochestras of Boston and New York, audiences were not forbidden to applaud by an irritable fling of the conductor's head, or his upraised hands to stifle any demonstration.

"Why," asks the New York Times critic, "should a conductor thus get directly between the audience and the music, as if it was his music and not theirs, and his the responsibility of dictating an audience's response?"

'APPLAUSE' LETTER

Weldon Hebert, 3576 First ave., writes us, in part, as follows: "Congratulations and many thanks for expressing my longstanding opinion upon barring applause between the movements of symphony. . . . Music was created to be enjoyed and used, not something to be afraid of. . . .

"At the concerts young people who feel a great joy from the music are awed into silence by the great round eyes of the numerous dowagers around them if they attempt to give vent to their emotion. The thought has come to me that the young probably experience the music better than their seniors because they actually live it and feel it. This is what the composer desired. . . .

"I suppose sham and pretense have always been with us but at present it can be seen everywhere. Many, (and Mr. Hebert includes the 'unwilling husbands') go because it is the thing to do and not because they love the art. . . ."

We are grateful for Mr. Herbert's interest and glad that he agrees with us, nevertheless, we shall be glad to publish any letter which comes to us—pro or con.

* * *

DEFINES SYMPHONY

Charles O'Connell in his book on the symphony writes: "The symphony is at once the most important and most highly developed and elaborate of musical forms. . . . Roughly a symphony is a sonata for an orchestra. . . . . It has usually four movements, thematically independent, but with the first and last similar in style and tonality.

The character of these movements is ordinarily desginated by the terms "Allegro," (quick and vigorous); "Andante" (smooth and moving) or "Adagio" (slow); "Scherzo" brisk and gay), and 'Finale' which may partake of any character dictated by the composer."

Puzzle — Find your "sustained mood" the "culture" fiends object having interrupted by applause, constitute shallowness and vandalism, while applause after the march movement is the normal, sincere, unaffected response to the work."

Too bad we can't have a word from Tschaikowsky.

Still pursuing the symphony, perhaps you would be interested in a description by Olin Downes of the performance of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." He writes:

"Its third movement is one of the wildest and most fantastical in the literature of the art. On this particular occasion Dr. Koussevitzky was not able completely to stifle the applause. Few conductors can in this place.

GESTURE OF COMMAND

Part of the audience broke loose, but almost as quickly subsided. . . . The conductor made a gesture of command then began the last movement of the symphony which is a dirge, slow, somber, elegiac, music of monumental resignation and desdying away till the softest of pianissimos faded into complete silence.

"No one wanted to applaud then, and no one should have. But it was the end of the symphony, therefore time to applaud. . . . It may have been satisfactory to the conductor, but applause at the end of 'Symphonie Pathetique,' can con-

---

MANCHESTER, N. H.
UNION

SEP 9 - 1938

Boston Symphony Opens 58th Season October 7

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony hall, Boston, October 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation following the Berkshire festival last month, and will return the first of October for the season's opening.

During the 14 years which Dr. Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony orchestra, he has conducted not less than 1,400 concerts, an average of 100 a year.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

SEP 9 - 1938

Boston Symphony Opens 58th Season October 7

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony hall, Boston, October 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation following the Berkshire festival last month, and will return the first of October for the season's opening.

During the 14 years which Dr Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony orchestra, he has conducted not less than 1,400 concerts an average of 100 a year.

MADISON, IND.
HERALD

SEP 9 - 1938

Reverse Applause

BOSTON, Sept. 8.— INS — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Carles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

SEP 10 1938

The Carryall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra engages its soloists because of their fitness to interpret the works they will play with the orchestra rather than because they are big names, according to Manager G. E. Judd, who recently addressed a group of music critics in the Harvard Club in Boston.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Symphony Orchestra Offers Its Wares

Sept. 10/38

By MOSES SMITH

The briskness of the weather during the past week has made an appropriate setting for the release of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's plans for the season. The preliminary announcement, made on Thursday, is rounded out now, as if the management were loathe to risk over-feeding the appetite of the Orchestra's public, eager for news. The news is prevailingly good even if the list of soloists does not rival in length similar lists from other orchestras, summarized in another column on this page. One might have guessed in the past that economy was the operating factor. One knows now that the real reason is that in fourteen years Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has firmly established in the minds of his audiences his conviction that the orchestra is, and of right ought to be, the principal soloist. Concerts without soloists are now the rule here, not the exception, in contrast with the practice still prevailing practically everywhere else in this country.

It would even be possible to argue that the Boston Orchestra, far from sacrificing in size of audiences by such procedure, has actually been rewarded, because the audiences have been steadily increasing since the low-point of the depression, and the Orchestra rests, on the whole, probably on the most stable financial base of any similar institution in this country. Dr. Koussevitzky's antipathy towards employing soloists for the sake of the box-office does not, of course, extend to the point of blindness in the face of the more legitimate uses of soloists—as assistants in the presentation of certain masterworks of the past and provocative music of the present; as artistic personages to be honored in a quasi-ceremonial way on rare occasions, and so forth. But those are different matters from the engagement of a celebrated virtuoso for a symphonic concert simply to boost the box-office "take."

Soloists and Repertory

The brief list from Symphony Hall, already made known partially in these columns from time to time, has the virtue of excelling quality. Heifetz will return for the Beethoven Concerto. There will be five pianists—Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, who will be making his first appearances with the Boston Orchestra, Jesus Maria Sanroma, who will present the new Concerto of Dukelsky, and Ernst Krenek, who will be soloist in his own Concerto. For violinists, there will be, in addition to Heifetz, Ruth Posselt and Zlatko Balokovic. While nothing has been released on the subject of what Mr. Balokovic will play, the presumption is that the piece will be John Alden Carpenter's Violin Concerto, concerning the first performance of which in Chicago this observer wrote at some length in these columns last November. Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, will return to exhibit again the magic of his art in Strauss' "Don Quixote." The only other "soloist" will be the Coolidge String Quartet, which will play the new Concerto of one of its members, Nicolai Berezovsky.

Aside from the foregoing information and that released on Thursday the only other clue to the nature of the repertory for the coming season is the statement that "Beethoven will be the predominating composer," a number of his symphonies being performed as well as the Violin Concerto. Obviously new or recent music will not be played so frequently as in the early seasons of Dr. Koussevitzky's regime. By the same token more and more emphasis is being placed on the classical and established repertory. Such are probably the natural and even inevitable results of the development of the conductor's art.

Exceptions

One is, however, quite as naturally led to comment on some of the things the announcement omits for the excellent reason that they will not happen during the coming season of the Boston Orchestra. For several years, for example, the Violin Concerto of another American composer, Roger Huntington Sessions, has been periodically and more or less definitely announced for performance at the Boston concerts. For one reason or another it has been laid aside with equal regularity. It has become, indeed, almost one of the mysteries of the American concert-halls. The mystery may even be said by this time to be a scandal. Certainly—and without attempting invidious comparisons—it seems strange that a newer Violin Concerto of another American composer, Mr. Carpenter, should precede Mr. Sessions' in Bostonian performance.

Another defect in the announced repertory, for this writer, is the absence of the Berg Violin Concerto. In the flush of enthusiasm attending the beautiful performances of the work during the season before last Dr. Koussevitzky promised a repetition for the following season. The season passed without such repetition. In bewailing the non-appearance of the work in the repertory of a new season the present writer might more easily discount the value of his own conviction were it not for the profound impression the Concerto made on eminent writers abroad, including the sober Ernest Newman and the tart Constant Lambert, who can scarcely be regarded as over-sympathetic with the tendencies of the school of composition founded by Arnold Schoenberg.

There is one name that has become more and more conspicuous by its absence—that of Emmanuel Feuermann, the 'cellist. Again there is no intention of comparison with the only 'cellist on the actual list. Rather does this writer regret that it has thus far been possible to hear a superlative artist in this city only at private or semi-public functions. Clearly the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are his appropriate and deserved setting.

It would have been a fine and praiseworthy thing to have included Bruno Walther among the guest-conductors. One is referring not to his art, which needs no apology, but to the symbol that he has necessarily become in the minds of many, the symbol of artistic freedom as opposed to authoritarian oppression. There may have been many excellent reasons why he was not and could not have been engaged. But perhaps another chance will come soon.

The burden of these exceptions is not intended to lessen the thrill of anticipation which the announcement of a new symphonic season regularly brings. If the present writer had the authority to make up his own list he would have chosen differently in some particulars. But that fact need not serve to substitute disappointment for what remains pleasurable expectancy for the opening shot of the 1938-39 campaign on Oct. 7.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

SEP 9 - 1938

MORNING GOSSIP

SHEEP

When strangers pass the sheepfold on the hill
They always stop to call the silly things
And baa and bleat at them, as people will,
To imitate their plaintive bletherings.

Slowly the trusting ewes come trotting over,
And tiny-footed little black-nosed lambs
Nuzzle against the fence for gifts of clover
Or rub contentedly against their dams.

Setting their little knock-kneed legs with care,
They crowd and listen to each bleating taunt
And twiddle their big ears, and blink and stare—
And wonder what these sily people want.

—Gerald Raftery in the New York Herald-Tribune.

Igor Stravinsky will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for two weeks next Winter as conductor and piano soloist in his own music. Other guest conductors during the season will be Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

Serge Koussevitsky, who is now taking a short vacation at Bourget-du-Lac, France, will return late this month or at the beginning of October to conduct the first concert of his fifteenth season with the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, Boston, and Friday afternoon, Oct. 7. As before, he will conduct nearly 100 concerts. The orchestera, entering its fifty-eighth year, will give its first New York concert, Nov. 17, in Carnegie Hall. Dr. Kousse-

---

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
UNION

SEP 1 1 1938

CONTROVERSY ABOUT APPLAUSE BRINGS 'BOUQUETS AND BRICKBATS' IN LETTERS TO CRITIC

By SALLY BROWN MOODY

Our mention in last Sunday's San Diego Union of the present custom of barring applause between the movements of a symphony has brought forth "bouquets and brickbats," thus achieving the purpose for which it was written.

Controversy, or difference of opinion keeps things going—even horse racing. Many telephone calls, (in agreement with us) letters, and group discussions have been intensely interesting.

We remember that years and years ago—well, never mind about that—listening to the Chicago orchestra or the great ochestras of Boston and New York, audiences were not forbidden to applaud by an irritable fling of the conductor's head, or his upraised hands to stifle any demonstration.

"Why," asks the New York Times critic, "should a conductor thus get directly between the audience and the music, as if it was his music and not theirs, and his the responsibility of dictating an audience's response?"

'APPLAUSE' LETTER

Weldon Hebert, 3576 First ave., writes us, in part, as follows: "Congratulations and many thanks for expressing my longstanding opinion upon barring applause between the movements of symphony. . . . Music was created to be enjoyed and used, not something to be afraid of. . . .

"At the concerts young people who feel a great joy from the music are awed into silence by the great round eyes of the numerous dowagers around them if they attempt to give vent to their emotion. The thought has come to me that the young probably experience the music better than their seniors because they actually live it and feel it. This is what the composer desired. . . .

"I suppose sham and pretense have always been with us but at present it can be seen everywhere. Many, (and Mr. Hebert includes the 'unwilling husbands') go because it is the thing to do and not because they love the art. . . ."

We are grateful for Mr. Herbert's interest and glad that he agrees with us, nevertheless, we shall be glad to publish any letter which comes to us—pro or con.

* * *

DEFINES SYMPHONY

Charles O'Connell in his book on the symphony writes: "The symphony is at once the most important and most highly developed and elaborate of musical forms. . . . Roughly a symphony is a sonata for an orchestra. . . . . It has usually four movements, thematically independent, but with the first and last similar in style and tonality.

The character of these movements is ordinarily desginated by the terms "Allegro," (quick and vigorous); "Andante" (smooth and moving) or "Adagio" (slow); "Scherzo" brisk and gay), and 'Finale' which may partake of any character dictated by the composer."

Puzzle — Find your "sustained mood" the "culture" fiends object having interrupted by applause, stitute shallowness and vandalism, while applause after the march movement is the normal, sincere, unaffected response to the work."

Too bad we can't have a word from Tschaikowsky.

Still pursuing the symphony, perhaps you would be interested in a description by Olin Downes of the performance of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." He writes:

"Its third movement is one of the wildest and most fantastical in the literature of the art. On this particular occasion Dr. Koussevitzky was not able completely to stifle the applause. Few conductors can in this place.

GESTURE OF COMMAND

Part of the audience broke loose, but almost as quickly subsided. . . . The conductor made a gesture of command then began the last movement of the symphony which is a dirge, slow, somber, elegiac, music of monumental resignation and desdying away till the softest of pianissimos faded into complete silence.

"No one wanted to applaud then, and no one should have. But it was the end of the symphony, therefore time to applaud. . . . It may have been satisfactory to the conductor, but applause at the end of 'Symphonie Pathetique,' can con-

---

MANCHESTER, N. H.
UNION

SEP 9 - 1938

Boston Symphony Opens 58th Season October 7

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony hall, Boston, October 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation following the Berkshire festival last month, and will return the first of October for the season's opening.

During the 14 years which Dr. Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony orchestra, he has conducted not less than 1,400 concerts, an average of 100 a year.

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

SEP 9 - 1938

Boston Symphony Opens 58th Season October 7

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony hall, Boston, October 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation following the Berkshire festival last month, and will return the first of October for the season's opening.

During the 14 years which Dr Koussevitzky has led the Boston Symphony orchestra, he has conducted not less than 1,400 concerts an average of 100 a year.

MADISON, IND.
HERALD

SEP 9 - 1938

Reverse Applause

BOSTON, Sept. 8.— INS — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, recently aplauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Carles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

SEP 10 1938

6

The Carryall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra engages its soloists because of their fitness to interpret the works they will play with the orchestra rather than because they are big names, according to Manager G. E. Judd, who recently addressed a group of music critics in the Harvard Club in Boston.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
SEP 11 1938

PLANS FOR ORCHESTRAS

THE Philadelphia Orchestra's thirty-ninth season in its home city will open Oct. 7 and close April 29. Twenty-eight Friday-Saturday concert pairs are scheduled and ten Tuesday night programs. The season in Philadelphia will consist of twenty-four symphony concert weeks, two ballet weeks and two weeks when recitalists will appear in the subscription series while the orchestra is out of town.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct for sixteen of the twenty-four symphony concert weeks, Georges Enesco for two and Saul Caston and Vladimir Golschmann for one each. The remaining four symphony concert weeks are being held for Leopold Stokowski. These are the weeks of March 13, 20 and 27 and April 3. According to the organization's announcement, definite assurance from Mr. Stokowski is expected before the opening of the season. The two ballet weeks, during which the Ballet Russe and the Philadelphia Ballet will appear with the orchestra, will find Mr. Caston on the podium.

There will be five symphony concerts in the Youth Concert series. In addition, one special event is listed in which the orchestra and the Ballet Russe will participate.

A feature of the season will be a Brahms cycle, included in the Friday-Saturday subscription series. In the course of this cycle, which is under Mr. Ormandy's direction, the four symphonies of the master will come to performance as well as more than half a dozen of his other more important works. These concerts will be given Nov. 25 and 26, Dec. 16 and 17, Jan. 6 and 7 and Jan. 27 and 28. Erika Morini, violin, and Emanuel Feuermann, 'cello, will be the soloists at the first of the Brahms concerts. They will be heard in the double concerto. Other soloists engaged for the cycle are Marian Anderson, contralto; Joseph Szigeti, violin, and Walter Gieseking, piano.

Numerous soloists also will appear during the season in concerts outside of the Brahms cycle. Among these artists will be Serge Rachmaninoff, Hortense Monath, Josef Wissow, Jacques Abram and Boris Golschmann, pianists; Efrem Zimbalist, violinist; Friedrich Schorr, baritone, and Miss Anderson. Mr. Schorr will be heard as assisting artist on the Wagner programs slated for the first week in February under Mr. Ormandy's baton. During the last week in April the Coolidge String Quartet will play with the orchestra at three concerts.

Recitals will take the place of orchestral concerts on two of the week-ends. Lotte Lehmann, soprano, and Lauritz Melchior, tenor, will offer a joint recital before the Philadelphia Orchestra subscription audiences, Friday and Saturday, Nov. 4 and 5, and Jascha Heifetz will be heard as recitalist Friday and Saturday, Feb. 10 and 11.

The weeks of Dec. 5 and Jan. 9, there will be no concerts in the Friday-Saturday subscription series.

With the opening of the fifty-eighth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 7 in Boston, Serge Koussevitzky begins his fifteenth year as conductor in this country. The orchestra will celebrate this anniversary in suitable fashion. Its plans include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, beginning Thursday night, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 17 and 19; five concerts in Brooklyn, opening Friday, Nov. 18, and appearances in New England and in Western cities.

The soloists for the twenty-four pairs of concerts in Boston have been selected with special reference to important classic and modern concertos. Jascha Heifetz has been engaged to perform the Beethoven violin concerto. And Beethoven, by the way, will be the predominating composer in the season's repertoire. Slatko Balokovic will play the new violin concerto by John Carpenter, which he introduced abroad last season, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, the orchestra's official pianist, will be at the keyboard for a new concerto by Paul Dukelsky. Other soloists announced are Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess and Rudolf Serkin, pianists; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

Nicolai Berezowsky's concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge String Quartet, and Ernst Krenek, the Austrian composer-pianist, will be heard in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky, who visits America this Spring, will appear in the concerts of one fortnight in the triple capacity of composer, conductor and pianist. His new orchestral concerto will then receive its first public presentation in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors. Each will direct for one week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which the orchestra revived last Spring in Boston for the first time in a decade, will be repeated at a special concert this Fall.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra opens its forty-eighth season Oct. 13 in Chicago. That night Frederick Stock will be on the podium and the occasion will mark the inception of his thirty-fourth year as the organization's conductor. Hans Lange will enter his third year's duties as the orchestra's associate conductor. Ernst Krenek and Igor Stravinsky will appear as guest conductors.

The season will consist of twenty-eight pairs of concerts on Thursday nights and Friday afternoon, a series of twelve Tuesday afternoon concerts and six concerts for young people. On alternate Saturday nights, beginning Oct. 22, popular programs are scheduled.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
SEP 11 1938

THE ORCHESTRAS

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, who is now abroad on a short vacation at Bou[redacted], after completing his third term as conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last month, will return to America at the beginning of October to begin rehearsals for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fifty-eighth season, which opens in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7 and 8.

The Boston series will, as usual, include twenty-four pairs of concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday nights, and shorter series on Mondays and Tuesdays, besides eight concerts at Saunders Theater, Harvard University, Cambridge. Dr. Koussevitzky, who is beginning his fifteenth consecutive season with this orchestra, will conduct nearly 100 concerts. Igor Stravinsky, paying his fourth visit to this country early next spring, will appear as guest conductor and pianist with the Boston Symphony for two weeks in his own music, including a new concerto for orchestra which will then have its American premiere. The other guest leaders will be Georges Enesco, Rumanian con[redacted] is also a guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony, and Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, who will be in charge of the Boston Symphony for a week apiece.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in D major, which had its first Boston performance in eleven years last spring, will be repeated in a special concert this fall.

Boston Symphony's Soloists

Beethoven, it is announced, will be the predominating composer in the regular Boston repertoire. Jascha Heifetz will be a soloist in the Beethoven violin concerto. Zlatko Balakovic will play John Alden Carpenter's violin concerto, and Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in a new piano concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky. Gregor Piatigorsky will play the cello solo in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote." The Coolidge Quartet will take part in a concerto for string quartet and orchestra by Nicolai Berezowsky, who is its second violinist, and Ernst Krenek will play his new piano concerto. Other soloists in Boston will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess and Rudolf Serkin, pianists, and Ruth Posselt, violinst.

In New York the Boston Symphony will give its usual two series of five concerts each in Carnegie Hall: on Thursday evenings, November 17, January 5, March 9 and 30, and Friday evening, February 10, and Saturday afternoons, November 19, January 7, February 11, March 11 and April 1. The concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be held on Friday nights, November 18 and January 6; Thursday night, February 9, and Friday nights, March 10 and 31. The orchestra will be heard in several New England cities and in the Mid-West.

Chicago Symphony Plans

Despite Dr. Koussevitzky's notable length of service with one orchestra, the record established by Frederick A. Stock, who begins his thirty-fourth season with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, on Thursday night and Friday afternoon, October 13 and 14, will probably long remain unequaled. Hans Lange will begin his third season as associate conductor of this orchestra, whose forty-eighth season will last twenty-eight weeks. In addition to the regular Thursday and Friday concerts, there will be twelve Tuesday concerts on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month; six young people's concerts on the third Wednesday afternoon of each month. Popular concerts will be given on alternate Saturday nights. There will be ten concents in Milwaukee.

Ernst Krenek and Igor Stravinsky will conduct the orchestra in their own music. Soloists making their first appearance with this organization are Yehudi Menuhin, Louis Krasner and Ro[redacted] violinists, and Storm Bull and Jose Echaniz, pianists, and E. Power Biggs, organist. Enid Szantho and Charles Kullmann will sing in Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." Other soloists will be Gitta Gradova, Myra Hess, Josef Hofmann, Ernest Schel[redacted] Smeterlin, pianists; Fritz Kreisler, Albert Spalding and John Weicher, violinists, and Edmund Kurtz and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellists. The Harvard Glee Club will sing with the Chicago Symphony for the first time. The air-conditioning of Orchestra Hall is to be completed by October 1.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

SEP 10 1938

Symphony Season Will Open Oct. 15

Serge Koussevitsky to Again Conduct

When the ~~Boston Symphony~~ orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation, following the Berkshire Festival last month, and will return Oct. 1 for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge, and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for importants concertos, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
SEP 10 1938

News of the Music World

With the opening of the San Carlo Opera Company's seventeen-day engagement at the Center Theater next Thursday night, the 1938-39 music season will be definitely under way. Before another month is out, the New York music-lover will be receiving the usual embarrassment of musical riches offered in Carnegie, Town and the other recital and concert centers of the city.

Fortune Gallo, impresario of the San Carlo company, has chosen Bizet's "Carmen" as his opening production. Coe Glade will have the title-role, and the cast will include Mostyn Thomas, Dimitri Onofrei, Leola Turner, Alice Homer, Harold Kravitt, Lloyd Harris and Francesco Curci. The attractions for the remainder of the opening week are "Madama Butterfly," on Friday night; "Faust" on Saturday afternoon; "Il Trovatore" on Saturday evening, and "La Boheme" on Sunday evening.

Mr. Gallo announces that he hopes to present extended seasons of grand opera performances at the Center in future years, "with the idea of giving New York a permanent popular-priced opera company."

* * *

Three symphonic concerts will be given next week at the Federal Music Theater. Herman Neuman, musical director of radio station WNYC, will conduct the New York Civic Orchestra tomorrow afternoon; Emma Redell, soprano, will appear as guest soloist. Tomorrow evening Eugene Plotnikoff will conduct the Federal Symphony Orchestra in the inaugural concert of an all-Russian series, with Milton Kaye, pianist, as guest soloist. On Thusday evening, the Greenwich Orchestra, conducted by Joseph Littau, and assisted by Carina Orasto, Finnish soprano, will give a concert featured by the performance of Sibelius's "Hostkvall" and Schubert's Seventh Symphony.

The WPA Music Project announces three series of symphonic concerts, seven madrigal concerts and four operatic performances for the new season at the Music Theater.

* * *

The Boston Symphony begins its fifty-eighth season—the fifteenth under the directorship of Serge Koussevitsky—on October 7 in Symphony Hall. It will make its first appearances in New York on November 17 and 19. It is announced that Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory. Novelties scheduled include a new piano concerto by Dukelsy; Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra; a piano concerto by Ernst Krenek, in which the composer will be soloist; and Stravinsky's new orchestral concerto, which will have its first American performance during the composer's engagement as guest conductor and piano soloist with the orchestra. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be performed at a special concert. Other soloists include Heifetz, Zlatko Balokovic, Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, Jesus Maria Sanroma, and Gregor Piatigorsky.

B. Record Sept. 10/38

Symphony On Oct. 7

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the Friday matinee concert scheduled for October 7. No other symphony conductor has been here so long. He has added much to his own fame and that of the Hub's peerless orchestra.

On the opening program for October 7 and 8 are three pieces from his first 1924 program, these being Vivaldi's concerto for orchestra in D minor, the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" overture and the Brahms "Variations on a Theme by Haydn."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who is now resting at Bourget-du-Lac, France, has conducted 1400 symphony concerts during his 14 years in Boston. He expects to preside over another 100 this coming season. Igor Stravinsky, Georges Enesco and Eugene Goessens will be guest conductors in mid-season. Stravinsky will also appear as piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance at Symphony Hall. A revival of Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" oratorio is also a possibility.

Jascha Heifetz will play the Beethoven violin concerto when he appears as soloist; and Beethoven music will be featured through the season. Zlato Balokovnic will play the new Carpenter concerto for violin. J. M. Sanroma will be soloist in the new Dukelsky concerto for piano and orchestra. Other soloists will be Arthur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt and Gregor Piatigorsky, who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote."

There will be 24 pairs of concerts in Boston, as usual; and other concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Cambridge, Providence and Western cities

---

CORTLAND, N. Y.
STANDARD

SEP 10 1938

Serge Koussevitsky will begin hi 15th year as conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra when it opens season October 1.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

SEP 10 1938

Symphony Season Will Open Oct. 15

Serge Koussevitsky to ~~Again Conduct~~

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation, following the Berkshire Festival last month, and will return Oct. 1 for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge, and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for importants concertos, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge quartet, and Ernst Krenek will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky will visit America in the spring, and will appear as guest in the concerts of two weeks as composer, conductor, and piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors, each for a single week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which was revived last spring with conspicuous success, not having been heard in Boston since the Beethoven Festival of 1927, will be repeated at a special concert in the autumn.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
SEP 11 1938

PLANS FOR ORCHESTRAS

THE Philadelphia Orchestra's thirty-ninth season in its home city will open Oct. 7 and close April 29. Twenty-eight Friday-Saturday concert pairs are scheduled and ten Tuesday night programs. The season in Philadelphia will consist of twenty-four symphony concert weeks, two ballet weeks and two weeks when recitalists will appear in the subscription series while the orchestra is out of town.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct for sixteen of the twenty-four symphony concert weeks, Georges Enesco for two and Saul Caston and Vladimir Golschmann for one each. The remaining four symphony concert weeks are being held for Leopold Stokowski. These are the weeks of March 13, 20 and 27 and April 3. According to the organization's announcement, definite assurance from Mr. Stokowski is expected before the opening of the season. The two ballet weeks, during which the Ballet Russe and the Philadelphia Ballet will appear with the orchestra, will find Mr. Caston on the podium.

There will be five symphony concerts in the Youth Concert series. In addition, one special event is listed in which the orchestra and the Ballet Russe will participate.

A feature of the season will be a Brahms cycle, included in the Friday-Saturday subscription series. In the course of this cycle, which is under Mr. Ormandy's direction, the four symphonies of the master will come to performance as well as more than half a dozen of his other more important works. These concerts will be given Nov. 25 and 26, Dec. 16 and 17, Jan. 6 and 7 and Jan. 27 and 28. Erika Morini, violin, and Emanuel Feuermann, 'cello, will be the soloists at the first of the Brahms concerts. They will be heard in the double concerto. Other soloists engaged for the cycle are Marian Anderson, contralto; Joseph Szigeti, violin, and Walter Gieseking, piano.

Numerous soloists also will appear during the season in concerts outside of the Brahms cycle. Among these artists will be Serge Rachmaninoff, Hortense Monath, Josef Wissow, Jacques Abram and Boris Golschmann, pianists; Efrem Zimbalist, violinist; Friedrich Schorr, baritone, and Miss Anderson. Mr. Schorr will be heard as assisting artist on the Wagner programs slated for the first week in February under Mr. Ormandy's baton. During the last week in April the Coolidge String Quartet will play with the orchestra at three concerts.

Recitals will take the place of orchestral concerts on two of the week-ends. Lotte Lehmann, soprano, and Lauritz Melchior, tenor, will offer a joint recital before the Philadelphia Orchestra subscription audiences, Friday and Saturday, Nov. 4 and 5, and Jascha Heifetz will be heard as recitalist Friday and Saturday, Feb. 10 and 11. The weeks of Dec. 5 and Jan. 9, there will be no concerts in the Friday-Saturday subscription series.

With the opening of the fifty-eighth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 7 in Boston, Serge Koussevitzky begins his fifteenth year as conductor in this country. The orchestra will celebrate this anniversary in suitable fashion. Its plans include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, beginning Thursday night, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 17 and 19; five concerts in Brooklyn, opening Friday, Nov. 18, and appearances in New England and in Western cities.

The soloists for the twenty-four pairs of concerts in Boston have been selected with special reference to important classic and modern concertos. Jascha Heifetz has been engaged to perform the Beethoven violin concerto. And Beethoven, by the way, will be the predominating composer in the season's repertoire. Slatko Balokovic will play the new violin concerto by John Carpenter, which he introduced abroad last season, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, the orchestra's official pianist, will be at the keyboard for a new concerto by Paul Dukelsky. Other soloists announced are Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess and Rudolf Serkin, pianists; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist.

Nicolai Berezowsky's concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge String Quartet, and Ernst Krenek, the Austrian composer-pianist, will be heard in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky, who visits America this Spring, will appear in the concerts of one fortnight in the triple capacity of composer, conductor and pianist. His new orchestral concerto will then receive its first public presentation in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors. Each will direct for one week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which the orchestra revived last Spring in Boston for the first time in a decade, will be repeated at a special concert this Fall.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra opens its forty-eighth season Oct. 13 in Chicago. That night Frederick Stock will be on the podium and the occasion will mark the inception of his thirty-fourth year as the organization's conductor. Hans Lange will enter his third year's duties as the orchestra's associate conductor. Ernst Krenek and Igor Stravinsky will appear as guest conductors.

The season will consist of twenty-eight pairs of concerts on Thursday nights and Friday afternoon, a series of twelve Tuesday afternoon concerts and six concerts for young people. On alternate Saturday nights, beginning Oct. 22, popular programs are scheduled.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

SEP 10 1938

Symphony Season Will Open Oct. 15

Serge Koussevitsky to ~~Again Conduct~~

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation, following the Berkshire Festival last month, and will return Oct. 1 for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge, and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for importants concertos, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge quartet, and Ernst Krenek will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky will visit America in the spring, and will appear as guest in the concerts of two weeks as composer, conductor, and piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors, each for a single week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which was revived last spring with conspicuous success, not having been heard in Boston since the Beethoven Festival of 1927, will be repeated at a special concert in the autumn.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
SEP 11 1938

THE ORCHESTRAS

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, who is now abroad on a short vacation at Bou[redacted] after completing his third term as conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last month, will return to America at the beginning of October to begin rehearsals for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fifty-eighth season, which opens in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7 and 8.

The Boston series will, as usual, include twenty-four pairs of concerts on Friday afternoons and Saturday nights, and shorter series on Mondays and Tuesdays, besides eight concerts at Saunders Theater, Harvard University, Cambridge. Dr. Koussevitzky, who is beginning his fifteenth consecutive season with this orchestra, will conduct nearly 100 concerts. Igor Stravinsky, paying his fourth visit to this country early next spring, will appear as guest conductor and pianist with the Boston Symphony for two weeks in his own music, including a new concerto for orchestra which will then have its American premiere. The other guest leaders will be Georges Enesco, Rumanian cond[redacted] who is also a guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony, and Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, who will be in charge of the Boston Symphony for a week apiece.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in D major, which had its first Boston performance in eleven years last spring, will be repeated in a special concert this fall.

Boston Symphony's Soloists

Beethoven, it is announced, will be the predominating composer in the regular Boston repertoire. Jascha Heifetz will be a soloist in the Beethoven violin concerto. Zlatko Balakovic will play John Alden Carpenter's violin concerto, and Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in a new piano concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky. Gregor Piatigorsky will play the cello solo in Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote." The Coolidge Quartet will take part in a concerto for string quartet and orchestra by Nicolai Berezowsky, who is its second violinist, and Ernst Krenek will play his new piano concerto. Other soloists in Boston will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess and Rudolf Serkin, pianists, and Ruth Posselt, violinst.

In New York the Boston Symphony will give its usual two series of five concerts each in Carnegie Hall: on Thursday evenings, November 17, January 5, March 9 and 30, and Friday evening, February 10, and Saturday afternoons, November 19, January 7, February 11, March 11 and April 1. The concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will be held on Friday nights, November 18 and January 6; Thursday night, February 9, and Friday nights, March 10 and 31. The orchestra will be heard in several New England cities and in the Mid-West.

Chicago Symphony Plans

Despite Dr. Koussevitzky's notable length of service with one orchestra, the record established by Frederick A. Stock, who begins his thirty-fourth season with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, on Thursday night and Friday afternoon, October 13 and 14, will probably long remain unequaled. Hans Lange will begin his third season as associate conductor of this orchestra, whose forty-eighth season will last twenty-eight weeks. In addition to the regular Thursday and Friday concerts, there will be twelve Tuesday concerts on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month; six young people's concerts on the third Wednesday afternoon of each month. Popular concerts will be given on alternate Saturday nights. There will be ten concents in Milwaukee.

Ernst Krenek and Igor Stravinsky will conduct the orchestra in their own music. Soloists making their first appearance with this organization are Yehudi Menuhin, Louis Krasner and Ro[redacted] violinists, and Storm Bull and Jose Echaniz, pianists, and E. Power Biggs, organist. Enid Szantho and Charles Kullmann will sing in Gustav Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde." Other soloists will be Gitta Gradova, Myra Hess, Josef Hofmann, Ernest Schel[redacted] Smeterlin, pianists; Fritz Kreisler, Albert Spalding and John Weicher, violinists, and Edmund Kurtz and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellists. The Harvard Glee Club will sing with the Chicago Symphony for the first time. The air-conditioning of Orchestra Hall is to be completed by October 1.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
SEP 10 1938

News of the Music World

With the opening of the San Carlo Opera Company's seventeen-day engagement at the Center Theater next Thursday night, the 1938-39 music season will be definitely under way. Before another month is out, the New York music-lover will be receiving the usual embarrassment of musical riches offered in Carnegie, Town and the other recital and concert centers of the city.

Fortune Gallo, impresario of the San Carlo company, has chosen Bizet's "Carmen" as his opening production. Coe Glade will have the title-role, and the cast will include Mostyn Thomas, Dimitri Onofrei, Leola Turner, Alice Homer, Harold Kravitt, Lloyd Harris and Francesco Curci. The attractions for the remainder of the opening week are "Madama Butterfly," on Friday night; "Faust" on Saturday afternoon; "Il Trovatore" on Saturday evening, and "La Boheme" on Sunday evening.

Mr. Gallo announces that he hopes to present extended seasons of grand opera performances at the Center in future years, "with the idea of giving New York a permanent popular-priced opera company."

* * *

Three symphonic concerts will be given next week at the Federal Music Theater. Herman Neuman, musical director of radio station WNYC, will conduct the New York Civic Orchestra tomorrow afternoon; Emma Redell, soprano, will appear as guest soloist. Tomorrow evening Eugene Plotnikoff will conduct the Federal Symphony Orchestra in the inaugural concert of an all-Russian series, with Milton Kaye, pianist, as guest soloist. On Thusday evening, the Greenwich Orchestra, conducted by Joseph Littau, and assisted by Carina Orasto, Finnish soprano, will give a concert featured by the performance of Sibelius's "Hostkvall" and Schubert's Seventh Symphony.

The WPA Music Project announces three series of symphonic concerts, seven madrigal concerts and four operatic performances for the new season at the Music Theater.

* * *

The Boston Symphony begins its fifty-eighth season—the fifteenth under the directorship of Serge Koussevitsky—on October 7 in Symphony Hall. It will make its first appearances in New York on November 17 and 19. It is announced that Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory. Novelties scheduled include a new piano concerto by Dukelsy; Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra; a piano concerto by Ernst Krenek, in which the composer will be soloist; and Stravinsky's new orchestral concerto, which will have its first American performance during the composer's engagement as guest conductor and piano soloist with the orchestra. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be performed at a special concert. Other soloists include Heifetz, Zlatko Balokovic, Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, Jesus Maria Sanroma, and Gregor Piatigorsky.

LOWELL, [redacted]
LEADER

SEP 10 1938

Symphony Season Will Open Oct. 15

Serge Koussevitsky to Again Conduct

When the Bos[redacted]ny orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation, following the Berkshire Festival last month, and will return Oct. 1 for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge, and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for importants concertos, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

B. Record Sept. 10/38

Symphony On Oct. 7

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the Friday matinee concert scheduled for October 7. No other symphony conductor has been here so long. He has added much to his own fame and that of the Hub's peerless orchestra.

On the opening program for October 7 and 8 are three pieces from his first 1924 program, these being Vivaldi's concerto for orchestra in D minor, the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" overture and the Brahms "Variations on a Theme by Haydn."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who is now resting at Bourget-du-Lac, France, has conducted 1400 symphony concerts during his 14 years in Boston. He expects to preside over another 100 this coming season. Igor Stravinsky, Georges Enesco and Eugene Goessens will be guest conductors in mid-season. Stravinsky will also appear as piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance at Symphony Hall. A revival of Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" oratorio is also a possibility.

Jascha Heifetz will play the Beethoven violin concerto when he appears as soloist; and Beethoven music will be featured through the season. Zlato Balokovnic will play the new Carpenter concerto for violin. J. M. Sanroma will be soloist in the new Dukelsky concerto for piano and orchestra. Other soloists will be Arthur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt and Gregor Piatigorsky, who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote."

There will be 24 pairs of concerts in Boston, as usual; and other concerts in New York, Brooklyn, Cambridge, Providence and Western cities

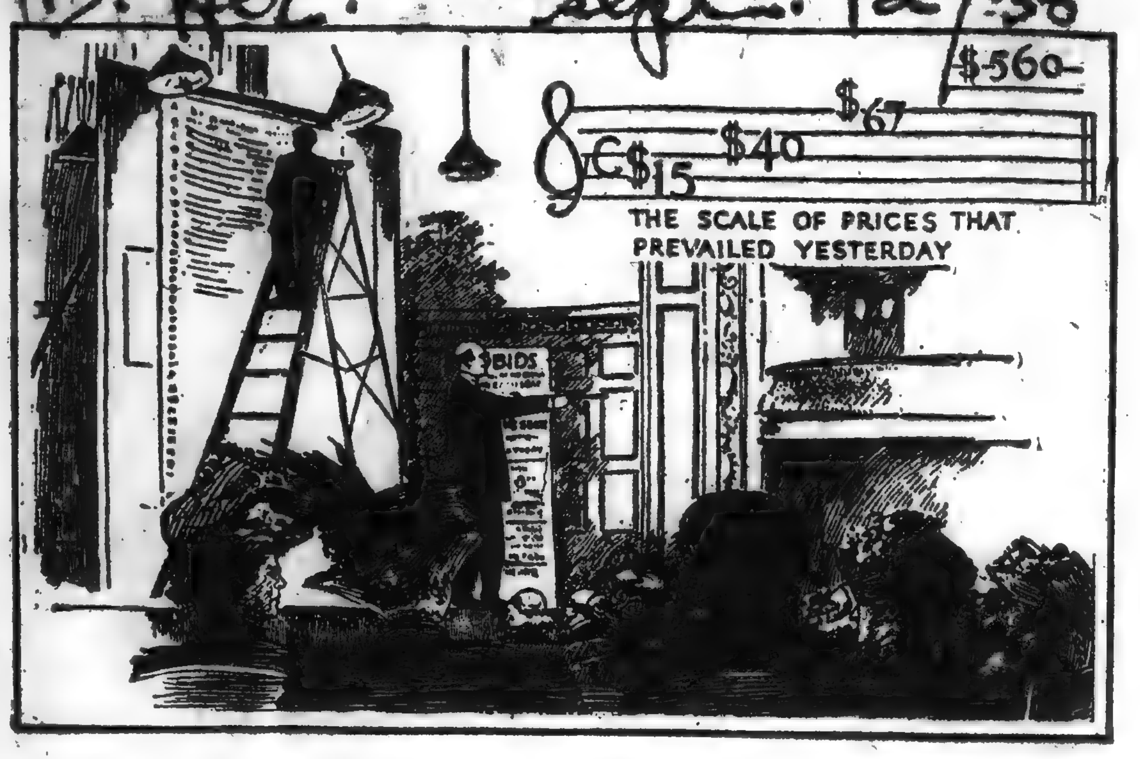
---

CORTLAND, N. Y.
STANDARD

SEP 10 1938

Serge Koussevitsky will begin his 15th year as conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra when it opens season October 1.

B. Her. Sept. 12/38



$15
$40
$67
$560
THE SCALE OF PRICES THAT PREVAILED YESTERDAY
BIDS

SYMPHONY AUCTION SALE IN 1900
As Depicted in the Boston Press

Auctioning season tickets to the highest bidder was more picturesque but less convenient than the subscription sale now employed at Symphony Hall • In 1938 you choose the seat you want for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra • It is yours as long as you want it • Your favorite location and price (well below the high notes shown above) are assured by annual right of renewal • The Orchestra benefits by the stability of its patronage, annual renewals often running above ninety-five percent • Keeping faith with a great public that demands the best in musical performance, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra stand today at the height of their powers.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

SEP 11 1938

Overtones

By WANDA MacDOWELL
(Music Page Editor)

Returning from a three-month vacation spent in New England one naturally comes laden with music, dance and art news. Probably in no part of the country do so many noted workers in the various arts congregate in summer as in that delightful hilly and sea-swept corner of these United States.

The music and art-minded doubtless go to the mountains and seashore for a rest, but it's a bussman's holiday for most of them, for music, dance and choral festivals echo over hill and dale, art exhibits break out on every beach and every red barn and town hall houses a first-class theatrical company. One could spend the entire summer attending an important exhibit, performance or a concert by the most distinguished groups in America almost every day and still not take advantage of all the interesting events that take place in this region so steeped in the best artistic traditions of our nation.

But I'm not going to bore you with trying to mention more than a few of the events that I found most entrancing after finally breaking my early decision to keep away from concerts during the summer. (I have enough of them in winter, I thought.)

Towering above all other events was the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival held this year for the first time in the new auditorium, or shed, as the New Englanders modestly call the unique structure, open to the mountain breezes on every side and seating over 6,000 people. It stands on the beautiful 200-acre estate known as "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, the munificent gift of Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks to the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Never have I heard music under such ideal circumstances. Arriving early for one of the Sunday afternoon programs we wandered across the broad lawns under the ancient elms, strolled in the exquisite and extensive formal gardens, through the roomy residence overlooking a picturesque lake. Tanglewood, by the way, is where Hawthorne lived when he wrote his "Tanglewood Tales." People were there from all parts of the country, judging by the license plates observed on the mass of cars that soon poured in. I was glad to see Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gregor of Brickell ave. and Albert Spalding among the many celebrities.

During the concert one might look at the players in their white suits or at their distinguished conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, a most charming leader, or at the view of the mountains. I looked mostly at the mountains and wondered why Miami cannot have such a structure as that one. It would be ideal in this climate, open all around, but with a roof designed by engineers to give the most perfect acoustical service, as well as to keep off the hot rays of the sun and the all too occasional showers that spoil so many out-of-door affairs down here. It could not be so very costly and it would be ornamental and a great asset to the city, useful for so many occasions.

Boston critics agreed that the performances, which included six programs upon which were such leading works as Beethoven's Ninth and Sixth, Brahms' Fourth and Second, Tschaikowsky's Sixth, Sibelius' First and other great symphonies, reached the highest standard ever attained in the orchestra's winter home, Symphony hall in Boston. Plans are already announced for adding a school for conductors at Tanglewood and eventually to give full opera performances as well as symphony concerts at the festivals, making this the American Salzburg.

In the Berkshire region are other such noted music centers as South Mountain where Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge established a distinguished colony where chamber music concerts are given each week during the summer; the Gordan string quartet plays each week at Music Mountain; Alexander Bloch conducts regular concerts nearby, and Ted Shawn has his summer school, giving weekly exhibitions of the dance at his farm in Lee.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 11 1938

RECENT PHONOGRAPH RECO

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

UNLIKE most of our recording orchestras, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony works in bursts. After a long silence, the Toscanini series came in a bunch, after which two seasons were allowed to elapse. Debussy's "Iberia" (Victor Album M-460) in all probability commences another round, for it is made under the direction of the incumbent regular conductor. With it, John Barbirolli adds another to his already long list of recording orchestras.

"Iberia" comes from the third set of "Images," the first two of which were for piano. The fruit of long study and a short visit to Spain, the suite contains three characteristic sketches which have achieved the unusual in captivating even native composers. The panels are "In the Streets and Roadsides," "Scents of Night" and "Festival Morning," each an individual masterpiece in Debussy's elusive manner.

Cast in Spanish molds, they appear to have a more immediate appeal than much of his work, though familiarity reveals the unmistakable fleeting and shadowy suggestions from which each of us is at liberty to limn his own picture. Of "Iberia," Barbirolli makes something of a toasted sandwich. The two outer movements are crisp, brisk and to the point, but the perfumed middle tends to become sticky. Whether the conductor's experience in recording is to be given the credit we cannot say, but this is quite the best reproduction of the orchestra we have heard.

* * *

Alfred Wallenstein's Sinfonietta makes its second appearance of the Columbia list with Mozart's "Paris" Overture (K.311a). New to us, it is also a novelty on records. A work that had slipped out of the general ken for years and only was rediscovered in 1901. Why it is not better known is a puzzle, for it is so obviously Mozart and even its length might have been a recommendation. Wallenstein treats it with his customary refined taste and it is gratifying to find that the recording has vastly improved over the Sinfonietta's first set.

"Lieutenant Kijé" was one of those delightfully ridiculous creatures that are occasionally born of a misconception, provide a lot of amusement during their careers, then conveniently have to be put out of the way and die to the accompaniment of laughter. One of them flourished at Oxford, though his sponsors failed to get him a degree. Lieutenant Kijé as an idea is no novelty, but Prokofieff has raised him over his peers by setting him to decidedly entertaining music. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have put this on records, and the result is worth examination.

Briefly: Czar Nicholas I misread a name in a report as "Kijé" and as the Czar could do no wrong the fiction was maintained. Kijé was thus created and proceeded to live, love, marry, enjoy a picaresque existence and finally, to the relief of many, die. All of which was disclosed in a Russian picture some five years ago. Prokofieff was commissioned to write the incidental music for the comedy, and the present suite was publicly performed for the first time in Moscow about a year before its release.

* * *

That Prokofieff has a sense of humor is not news. He could tickle us in his early days and in the interval his craftsmanship has developed immeasurably. Less intense than he has been of late, his wit has taken on a caustic snap well fitted to something of this nature. The sketches are all more or less in the same vein. There are mock heroics, conscious pomposity and an artificial, "marionette" atmosphere to the suite that move to real laughter—not by any means a common effect of music. The Boston Symphony plays "Kijé" with zest and vigor. The recording, as is particularly necessary with such a score, is superlative.

The "La Boutique Fantasque" (Rossini-Respighi) that Eugene Goossens made with the London

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 10 1938

The New Records

The Franck Quintet—Movie Music by Prokofieff—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

It is certain that Franckians, if none others, will welcome Columbia's new recording of the Belgian Bach's F minor piano quintet. One specifies "Franckians" as a class, because of all composers, his adherents are the most pronouncedly typical in their enthusiasm. For them, this performance by the Roth Quartet and E. Robert Schmitz, pianist, will doubtless constitute a major revelation of the true faith.

For others, however, it is likely to be ranked as a singularly apt and persuasive reading of a work whose qualities do not bear well the scrutiny of a close investigation. It has been customary for even those who do not concede Franck a place in the inner circle of the hierarchy to vote an exception in favor of the quintet. But the ear which knows the contours of the symphony, the symphonic variations, and the violin sonata is apt to find a greater evidence of them in this work than is tolerable, even as the expression of the same mind. That this score anticipated (in publication and performance) each of the other three does not alter the fact that it impresses one as their echo, if an echo differently pitched and instrumentated.

So far as the performers are concerned, they are entitled to praise honestly earned for accomplishing their task with excellent musical skill and thoroughgoing eloquence. The mark achieved by Columbia and the Roth Quartet in their recent album of the Dvorak "American" quartet is even exceeded in the playing and recording of this work, and Mr. Schmitz's collaboration is technically secure and tempermentally resourceful. (Five 12-inch records.)

"Lt. Kije."

There was shown in this city, within the last half-dozen years, a Russian film entitled (in its English version) "The Czar Wants to Sleep," especially distinguished by a charming and humorous score by Serge Prokofieff. It is this score which has provided the basis for the orchestral suite by him currently in the repertory of the Boston Symphony Orchestra known as "Lieutenant Kije," although the brochure accompanying the Victor recording asserts the film has not been shown in this country.

Having satisfied the purists on this point, it may be well to inquire into the more relevant details of the album. It is certainly another Prokofieff than the composer of the second violin concerto recently recorded by Heifetz and Koussevitzky with which we are here concerned, but an artist of no less individuality and skill. It is the very acme of what movie music should be—terse, illuminating unornate, and, as becomes the farcical plot, intimately humorous. From the first off-stage trumpet call which heralds the fanciful creation of Lieut. Kije to its recurrence (signalizing) at the end of the piece, the recording is a miracle of contemporary mechanics, remarkably brilliant and truthful. It need scarcely be added that the performance by Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra is fully worth this exceptionally reproduction. The sixth side of the three disks contains a mordantly cheerful perpaniment of a small orchestra, which is adequate for the composer's needs.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 15 1938

Whiting's Boston Letter

By E. E. WHITING

Boston, Sept. 12—Koussevitzky, the "toffee king," soldiers on [illegible]n, crowds of legionnaires piling aboard trains to go across the country, the return of some youths of Boston and its neighborhood from the Arctic, a celebration of the beauty that can come to alleys, tons of pounds added to the weight of other Boston boys, who have been at the newsboys' camp, some thoughts on swing music and swing dancing, a visitation from winged aphids, scrubbing on the customhouse tower, some thoughts on eggs—so runs the week in town.

Dr Koussevitzky will be back in town by the end of the month, to conduct the Symphony orchestra through its 58th season; and the year is notable as being the 15th of this leader. This passes all records of Boston Symphony conductors, for the great Gericke served but a total of 13 years in the two periods of his distinguished leadership. The Symphony season begins on October 7 with the first Friday afternoon concert, and on this program, to be repeated as usual the following night, will be three compositions which Dr Koussevitzky conducted the first time he led this band, in October, 1924.

In a changing world, where many things which had come to be regarded as fixtures have vanished or worn thin, it is pleasant to think upon Boston's Symphony orchestra. It has endured. It survived the war, when much died; it survived the depression, when much starved; it held its own in the lush days and in the lean. It goes marching steadily on. It has had a succession of conductors, many of them notable, and it is reasonable to say that it has never been a better band than it has been under Koussevitzky.

He is a great musician; but it has ever puzzled us that he should have, in his youth, selected the bass viol as his instrument. We say this in no spirit of criticism, or undue flippancy. We have all respect for that noble instrument. It is as necessary as anything in the band. No symphony orchestra could get along with all first violins. We know that. Someone has to take up the bass viol. It would be a sad musical world if everyone with musical sense and determination should decide on the violin, or even the piccolo, and be satisfied with nothing else. Someone has to learn to play the bass viol, and then play it. Just as someone has to play the kettledrum, and someone has to know how and when to tingle the bell-like triangle, and someone has to do various things to make up the band. But Dr Koussevitzky is a very great musician. He is a master. And when he was young, setting out on his career, he settled on the bass viol as his favorite.

We lack information about the boyhood of Dr Koussevitzky. It may be that he went from street to street, serenading young ladies on his bass viol. It may be that he was the bright light of winter Sunday-school socials. But it seems to us to be an unwieldy instrument, and it has ever puzzled us to understand why and how a young man who aimed at great things picked out the bass viol, necessary and excellent though that instrument is.

Well, success is success, whether with bass viols or clarinets or saxophones or bassoons or toffee; and an interesting and distinguished visitor to town lately was Sir Harold Mackintosh, of Halifax, Eng. He has made a great deal of money in candy and is called by some the "toffee king." However, this is not the whole story of Sir Harold Mackintosh. He is also a magistrate, is president of a bank, is head of a building loan society, and also is head of the World Sunday-school association, which has, it is said, 46,000,000 members.

It is a pleasant thought in these days that a man can grow great by the toffee route. It can be said honestly of Sir Harold that he by his business has added to the sum of human happiness; and what could be better worth while? So, mention of him follows logically along with mention of Dr Koussevitzky—there may be no close kinship between Beethoven and toffee, or between Sir Harold Mackintosh and symphony music; but if the world were made up altogether of men and women who brought to it what these two both have brought—happiness—we'd have a better world. So, all respect and friendship and admiration for the toffee king. Heaven knows the world needs sweetening!

CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

SEP 17 1938

In Concert Spotlight
Menuhin
Koussevitzky

© Leon Elzin

Rudolph Serkin

Pianist, who will appear this season as recitalist and as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

~~Top center, one of the dancers with the Don Cossack Choir, which on Oct. 9 will open the Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon series of concerts.~~

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

SEP 13 1938

Serge Koussevitsky returns soon from a short vacation in France to begin rehearsals for the 58th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and his 15th as its conductor. Between the opening of the season, October 7th at Symphony hall, and its close, Mr. Koussevitsky will lead the orchestra in almost 100 concerts in Boston, New York, New England, and the West.

Among the guest conductors and artists to appear with the orchestra will be Igor Stravinsky, who will appear as conductor and pianist for the presentation of some of his own compositions, including a new orchestral concerto next spring.

Other guest leaders will be Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens.

Jascha Heifetz will perform the Beethoven violin concerto; Zlatko Balakovic will play John Alden Carpenter's violin concerto; and Jesus Maria Sanroma, the orchestra's official pianist, will play a new concerto by Paul Dukelsky. Other artists to appear with the orchestra are Gregor Piatigorsky, Ernest Krenek, the Coolidge string quartet, Myra Hess, Rudolf Serkin, and Ruth Posselt.

Beethoven is the composer whose works will be most frequently played during the orchestra's Boston series, and Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," performed in Boston for the first time in 11 years last spring, will be repeated in a special concert in that city this fall.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

SEP 19 1938

MRS. ELIZABETH FISHBURN is receiving piano pupils for registration for the Fall term at her studio, 1730 State Street. She received her musical education at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston and was a pupil of the late Alfred De Voto, concert pianist for the Longy Club and soloist at the Boston Symphony concerts.

She plans a course for pupils who wish to enter the New England Conservatory for both beginners and advanced pupils. Mrs. Fishburn is chairman of the music committee for the Schenectada Chapter, D. A. R.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL - COURIER

SEP 13 1938

Woolsey Hall Series Parades Great Artists

Latest Musical Sensations and Old Favorites Among Celebrities to Be Heard — Boston Symphony Twice.

With the announcement of from Manager Daggett M. Lee of the Woolsey Hall Concert Series schedule for the coming season, music-lovers of this vicinity are assured of one of the most brilliant of concert events ever arranged for New Haven. So much superlative talent is crowded into the six concerts that one rivals the other for feature honors without reaching any definite conclusion as to superiority or all-around appeal.

The complete list, with dates, is as follows: Tuesday, November 1st, Jascha Heifetz, violinist; Wednesday, November 16th, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Tuesday, December 13th, Amparo and Jose Iturbi, pianists; Wednesday, January 11th, Marian Anderson, Negro contralto; Tuesday, February 15th, Walter Gieseking, pianist; Wednesday, March 8th, Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Although the names of Heifetz and Jose Iturbi stand out brightly through their previous notable appearances here, Marian Anderson, Amparo Iturbi and Walter Gieseking loom equally important as newcomers to the local concert platform. Miss Anderson is recognized as the greatest woman singer ever born in America, and Miss Iturbi in the short space of a year of concertizing has become almost as well known in this country as her famous brother. Mr. Geiseking, internationally famous pianist, is about the only top-ranking performer in his field who has not appeared in New Haven during the past ten years. Plans had been made to bring him here last season, but his European concert schedule kept him across the water all year long.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has long been a fixture on New Haven's concert schedule. For some years they played here but once a season, but so many people were unable to gain admission to their concerts that the trustees of the orchestra were prevailed upon to allow two appearances in New Haven. This is still not enough, for hundreds of persons are turned away each time they visit this city.

As usual, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct both of the Boston Symphony concerts this season, and this fact will still further add to the interest in these events because the distinguished Russian leader, now in his fifteenth year as conductor of the great one hundred and ten piece orchestra, was honored with the degree of Doctor of Music by Yale University last Spring.

According to Manager Lee, announcements of this season's plans would not have been made public until near the time for the opening of Yale University two weeks from yesterday. However, so many requests have been received during the past month as to what the schedule would be that the usual announcement date was advanced. Last season the Woolsey Hall Series was far oversubscribed and hundreds were unable to secure tickets. With interest in fine music increasing, and a concert schedule for the coming season equalling any of the notable ones of the past, another brilliant season is assured.

Boston Symphony to Open 58th Season Oct. 7 and 8

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation following the Berkshire festival last month, and will return the first of October for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge, and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for important concerts, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's violin concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the violin concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the 'cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

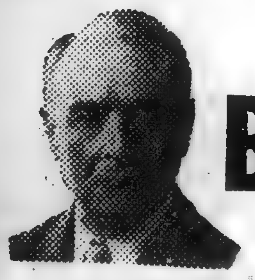
Nicolai Berezowsky's concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge quartet, and Ernst Krenek will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky will visit America in the spring, and will appear as guest in the concerts of two weeks, as composer, conductor and piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors, each for a single week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which was revived last spring with conspicuous success, not having been heard in Boston since the Beethoven festival of 1927, will be repeated at a special concert in the autumn.

SYMPHONY SERIES TO START OCTOBER 30

The first joint concert in this city by Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchior will auspiciously open Aaron Richmond's first Symphony Hall series, Sunday afternoon, Oct. 30. Although close friends in private life and for many years associated on the opera stage, Lehmann and Melchior made their first joint appearance in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 11 of last year; since that time they have filled more than 40 joint engagements. Other artists in this course will be Rudolph Serkin, the Russian pianist; the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe, Kirsten Flagstad, and John Charles Thomas.

SYMPHONY HALL—Com. 1492



ANNOUNCEMENT of 58th Season
Opening Concerts Oct. 7-8

Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY—Conductor

GUEST ARTISTS INCLUDE

HESS • ENESCO • HEIFETZ
PIATIGORSKY • GOOSSENS
SERKIN • POSSELT RUBINSTEIN
BALOKOVIC • STRAVINSKY

Season Tickets NOW on Sale at BOX OFFICE

B. Her. Sept. 11/38

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER - JOURNAL

SEP 11 1938

Audience Joins Chorus

Stockbridge, Mass., Sept. 10 (INS)—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

SEP 12 1938

Hub Symphony to Open 58th Season Oct. 15

Serge Koussevitzky Will Begin His 15th Year in America as Conductor at Boston Hall—Plans Announced

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation, following the Berkshire Festival last month, and will return Oct. 1 for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for importants concertos, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge quartet, and Ernst Krenek will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky will visit America in the spring, and will appear as guest in the concerts of two weeks as composer, conductor, and piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors, each for a single week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which was revived last spring with conspicuous success, not having been heard in Boston since the Beethoven Festival of 1927, will be repeated at a special concert in the autumn.

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT & LEADER

SEP 11 1938

THE BOSTON . . . Symphony orchestra begins its 58th season on Saturday, Oct. 1 and Serge Koussevitsky enters his 15th year as its conductor. Koussevitsky will direct 100 of the season's concerts. Guest conductors this year will be Stravinsky who also will appear as piano soloist in a program of his own works, Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens each will lead the orchestra for one week.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

SEP 12 1938

NOTED ARTISTS TO APPEAR IN CONCERTS HERE

Heifetz, The Iturbis and Boston Symphony Orchestra Included on Yale Program

An announcement today from Daggett M. Lee, manager of the Woolsey Hall Concert Series, promises music lovers of this vicinity one of the most pretentious concert schedules in the long history of these distinguished musical presentations. hTe list includes recitals by Jascha Heifetz, violinist; Amparo and Jose Iturbi, pianists; Marian Anderson, Negro contralto; Walter Gieseking, pianist and two appearances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Dates of Concerts

The dates of six concerts are as follows: Tuesday, November 1, Jascha Heifetz; Wednesday, November 16, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Tuesday, December 13, Amparo and Jose Iturbi; Wednesday, January 11, Marian Anderson; Tuesday February 15, Walter Gieseking; Wednesday, March 8, Boston Symphony Orchestra. Each recital is given in the evening, commencing at 8:30.

The schedule that Manager Lee has planned should find favor with the most discriminating concertgoers, for variety and quality are the keynotes of the brilliant list exents. Another prominent feature is that three of the artists, Marian Anderson, Amparo Iturbi and Water Gieseking, will make their first appearances in New Haven.

Heifetz, although still a young man, has long been one of the world's foremost violinists, and Jose Iturbi, the colorful Spanish pianist, a leading figure in his field, even though much of his time is now taken up as a symphonic conductor. Miss Anderson has been acclaimed, during the past three years, as the greatest American-born singer, and Miss Iturbi, now starting her second season of concertizing in this country, gives promise of rivalling her famous brother as a concert personality.

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is acknowledged the most popular musical organization to visit New Haven. For many years the great one hundred and ten piece musical body came here but once in a season. Five years ago, however, Mr. Lee prevailed upon them to give two concerts each season. The success of this move is best indicated by the fact that hundreds of people are turned away each time the orchestra plays here.

The Woolsey Hall concert series is presented under the auspices of the School of Music, Yale University. Although students and faculty of the university and New Haveners comprise a considerable portoin of the audiences who attend these concerts, subscribers are recruited from all over this section of the state. Last season the series was sold out by subscription before the first concert.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
B'klyn. Section

SEP 11 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE 5 CONCERTS

Series at Academy of Music to Open Nov. 18—WPA Unit to Present 'Mikado'

ARION BENEFIT PLANNED

Recital to Be Given Sunday in Catskill—Large Registration at Music Settlement

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Serge Koussevitzky is conductor, will give a series of five concerts this season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the sponsorship of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, the Brooklyn Committee and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The dates are Nov. 18, Jan. 6, Feb. 9, March 10 and 31.

Sept. 12/38 BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

New World Vienna Here Lures Seeker of Old Music

Professor Ballon Comes to Find in Boston The Gemutlichkeit the Old Vienna Has Lost

By Mary Elizabeth Prim

Perhaps it never has occurred to you because your family has been here since the Indians moved West of the Charles River, but there is a musical spirit in Boston that is unique since the heart went out of Vienna.

Prof. Ballon

That is on the word of Professor Hedda Ballon, who, for eighteen years, was on the faculty of the New Vienna Conservatory. She remembers Vienna as it was, before the old war of "Gemutlichkeit" vanished, and with it the city's interest in music, ancient and modern.

Mme. Ballon is in Boston now, and she thinks this city has much of the love and appreciation of music that Vienna has lost.

"I came to Boston because I had a feeling—here in my fingertips!" said Mme. Ballon, who is staying at the Franklin Square House. The Viennese, she says, regard Boston as the great music center of the United States.

Professor Ballon is a concert pianist and teacher and has given broadcasts in Italy, Germany, Hungary and other parts of Europe. She gives instruction in playing the harpischord as well as the piano and was the founder of the Society for the Cultivation of Old Music. She hopes to inaugurate a branch here.

Professor Ballon does not expect to have difficulty in finding Boston musicians who own and play such neglected instruments as the viola d'amore, the viol de gamba, or the harpsichord. Members of the society in Vienna gave frequent concerts of the lovely neglected music written for these instruments several centuries ago.

It is nothing unusual for a present day Viennese girl to study the harpsichord. Professor Ballon had ten in her class at the Conservatory last year. As for her piano class so many came to her from all parts of Europe and Great Britain that she was unable to accept them all. It seems a little odd to Frau Ballon to be starting all over again in a strange land, but she is confident that she will find many pupils here. Her daughter and her brother are still in Vienna.

Another honor that Professor Ballon has had to forego was serving on the jury for the great music contests for young people that used to be held in Vienna and to which students came from all parts of the world.

The reputation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is familiar to Professor Ballon and she can hardly wait to hear the concerts.

Since Symphony Hall is not far from Mme. Ballon's present quarters she has been over to see it already. She was cheered to see the name of an old friend among the announcements of coming concerts. It is Rudolf Serkin, who studied with the same teacher as she—the famous Professor Robert of Vienna.

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

SEP 12 1938

September Records

Some phonograph records are musical events. Each month TIME notes the noteworthy.

Symphonic, etc.

CHOPIN: NOCTURNES (Arthur Rubinstein, pianist; Victor: 2 volumes, 22 sides). Though no towering musical architect, moody, consumptive 19th-Century Chopin still holds his place among the greatest of all lyric composers. Masterly playing by Pianist Rubinstein and excellent sound-reproduction make this first complete phonographic edition of the Nocturnes the month's most distinguished recording.

PROKOFIEFF: LIEUTENANT KIJE SUITE (Boston Symphony, Sergei Koussevitzky conducting; Victor: 6 sides). To cover up a Tsar's error, obsequious Russian courtiers invented a hypothetical army officer named Kije. The nonexistent lieutenant outlived his inventors, became the subject of a satirical Soviet film seen in Manhattan in 1934. Composer Prokofieff's music, written to accompany the film, is clever, brilliantly orchestrated. The Bostonians do a scintillating job.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS

SEP 11 1938

CARRIE JACOBS BOND

Carrie Jacobs Bond, the well known author of "I Love You Truly," is still composing, although 75 years old. The musician who lives near San Diego, Calif., declares that she remembers when her songs were called "too high-brow."

VOLUME OF PROGRAMS

A volume of concert programs issued by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is just off the press. All the concerts which have been given by the organization during the past season are included in the book. The 24 concert bulletins make a book of 1,180 pages. John W. Burk furnished all of the informative historical and descriptive notes.

Boston Symphony to Open 58th Season Oct. 7 and 8

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens its 58th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation following the Berkshire festival last month, and will return the first of October for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge, and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for important concerts, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's violin concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the violin concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the 'cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

Nicolai Berezowsky's concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge quartet, and Ernst Krenek will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky will visit America in the spring, and will appear as guest in the concerts of two weeks, as composer, conductor and piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors, each for a single week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which was revived last spring with conspicuous success, not having been heard in Boston since the Beethoven festival of 1927, will be repeated at a special concert in the autumn.

SYMPHONY SERIES TO START OCTOBER 30

The first joint concert in this city by Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchior will auspiciously open Aaron Richmond's first Symphony Hall series, Sunday afternoon, Oct. 30. Although close friends in private life and for many years associated on the opera stage, Lehmann and Melchior made their first joint appearance in Carnegie Hall on Jan. 11 of last year; since that time they have filled more than 40 joint engagements. Other artists in this course will be Rudolph Serkin, the Russian pianist; the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe, Kirsten Flagstad, and John Charles Thomas.

SYMPHONY HALL—Com. 1492

ANNOUNCEMENT of 58th Season
Opening Concerts Oct. 7-8

Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY—Conductor
GUEST ARTISTS INCLUDE
HESS • ENESCO • HEIFETZ
PIATIGORSKY • GOOSSENS
SERKIN • POSSELT RUBINSTEIN
BALOKOVIC • STRAVINSKY
Season Tickets NOW on Sale at BOX OFFICE

B. Her. Sept. 11/38

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

SEP 12 1938

Hub Symphony to Open 58th Season Oct. 15

Serge Koussevitzky Will Begin His 15th Year in America as Conductor at Boston Hall—Plans Announced

When the Boston Symphony orchestra opens [illegible] season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 7, Serge Koussevitzky will begin his 15th season in America as conductor. The conductor went to France for a vacation, following the Berkshire Festival last month, and will return Oct. 1 for the season's opening.

Notable plans are announced for the anniversary season, which will include five pairs of monthly concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, five concerts in Brooklyn, five in Providence, eight in Cambridge and appearances in New England and western cities. Soloists for the 24 pairs of concerts in Boston have been chosen with regard for importants concertos, classical or recent. Jascha Heifetz will appear in Beethoven's Violin Concerto (Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory). Zlatko Balokovic will appear in the Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Sanroma in a new concerto by Dukelsky. Other soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, and Gregor Piatigorsky (who will play the cello solo in Strauss' "Don Quixote").

Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra will be performed with the assistance of the Coolidge quartet, and Ernst Krenek will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Igor Stravinsky will visit America in the spring, and will appear as guest in the concerts of two weeks as composer, conductor, and piano soloist. His new orchestral concerto will have its first public performance in this country. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens will be the other guest conductors, each for a single week.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," which was revived last spring with conspicuous success, not having been heard in Boston since the Beethoven Festival of 1927, will be repeated at a special concert in the autumn.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER - JOURNAL

SEP 11 1938

Audience Joins Chorus

Stockbridge, Mass., Sept. 10 (INS)—When the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia Chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT & LEADER

SEP 11 1938

THE BOSTON . . . Symphony orchestra begins its 58th season on Saturday, Oct. 1 and Serge Koussevitsky enters his 15th year as its conductor. Koussevitsky will direct 100 of the season's concerts. Guest conductors this year will be Stravinsky who also will appear as piano soloist in a program of his own works. Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens each will lead the orchestra for one week.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

SEP 12 1938

NOTED ARTISTS TO APPEAR IN CONCERTS HERE

Heifetz, The Iturbis and Boston Symphony Orchestra Included on Yale Program

An announcement today from Duggett M. Lee, manager of the Woolsey Hall Concert Series, promises music lovers of this vicinity one of the most pretentious concert schedules in the long history of these distinguished musical presentations. hTe list includes recitals by Jascha Heifetz, violinist; Amparo and Jose Iturbi, pianists; Marian Anderson, Negro contralto; Walter Gieseking, pianist and two appearances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Dates of Concerts

The dates of six concerts are as follows: Tuesday, November 1, Jascha Heifetz; Wednesday, November 16, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Tuesday, December 13, Amparo and Jose Iturbi; Wednesday, January 11, Marian Anderson; Tuesday February 15, Walter Gieseking; Wednesday, March 8, Boston Symphony Orchestra. Each recital is given in the evening, commencing at 8:30.

The schedule that Manager Lee has planned should find favor with the most discriminating concertgoers, for variety and quality are the keynotes of the brilliant list exents. Another prominent feature is that three of the artists, Marian Anderson, Amparo Iturbi and Water Gieseking, will make their first appearances in New Haven.

Heifetz, although still a young man, has long been one of the world's foremost violinists, and Jose Iturbi, the colorful Spanish pianist, a leading figure in his field, even though much of his time is now taken up as a symphonic conductor. Miss Anderson has been acclaimed, during the past three years, as the greatest American-born singer, and Miss Iturbi, now starting her second season of concertizing in this country, gives promise of rivalling her famous brother as a concert personality.

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is acknowledged the most popular musical organization to visit New Haven. For many years the great one hundred and ten piece musical body came here but once in a season. Five years ago, however, Mr. Lee prevailed upon them to give two concerts each season. The success of this move is best indicated by the fact that hundreds of people are turned away each time the orchestra plays here.

The Woolsey Hall concert series is presented under the auspices of the School of Music, Yale University. Although students and faculty of the university and New Haveners comprise a considerable portoin of the audiences who attend these concerts, subscribers are recruited from all over this section of the state. Last season the series was sold out by subscription before the first concert.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
B'Klyn Section
SEP 11 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO GIVE 5 CONCERTS

Series at Academy of Music to Open Nov. 18—WPA Unit to Present 'Mikado'

ARION BENEFIT PLANNED

Recital to Be Given Sunday in Catskill—Large Registration at Music Settlement

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which Serge Koussevitzky is conductor, will give a series of five concerts this season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, under the sponsorship of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, the Brooklyn Committee and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The dates are Nov. 18, Jan. 6, Feb. 9, March 10 and 31.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

New World Vienna Here Lures Seeker of Old Music

Professor Ballon Comes to Find in Boston The Gemutlichkeit the Old Vienna Has Lost

By Mary Elizabeth Prim

Perhaps it never has occurred to you because your family has been here since the Indians moved West of the Charles River, but there is a musical spirit in Boston that is unique since the heart went out of Vienna.

Prof. Ballon

That is on the word of Professor Hedda Ballon, who, for eighteen years, was on the faculty of the New Vienna Conservatory. She remembers Vienna as it was, before the old war of "Gemutlichkeit" vanished, and with it the city's interest in music, ancient and modern.

Mme. Ballon is in Boston now, and she thinks this city has much of the love and appreciation of music that Vienna has lost.

"I came to Boston because I had a feeling—here in my fingertips!" said Mme. Ballon, who is staying at the Franklin Square House. The Viennese, she says, regard Boston as the great music center of the United States.

Professor Ballon is a concert pianist and teacher and has given broadcasts in Italy, Germany, Hungary and other parts of Europe. She gives instruction in playing the harpischord as well as the piano and was the founder of the Society for the Cultivation of Old Music. She hopes to inaugurate a branch here.

Professor Ballon does not expect to have difficulty in finding Boston musicians who own and play such neglected instruments as the viola d'amore, the viol de gamba, or the harpsichord. Members of the society in Vienna gave frequent concerts of the lovely neglected music written for these instruments several centuries ago.

It is nothing unusual for a present day Viennese girl to study the harpsichord. Professor Ballon had ten in her class at the Conservatory last year. As for her piano class so many came to her from all parts of Europe and Great Britain that she was unable to accept them all. It seems a little odd to Frau Ballon to be starting all over again in a strange land, but she is confident that she will find many pupils here. Her daughter and her brother are still in Vienna.

Another honor that Professor Ballon has had to forego was serving on the jury for the great music contests for young people that used to be held in Vienna and to which students came from all parts of the world.

The reputation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is familiar to Professor Ballon and she can hardly wait to hear the concerts.

Since Symphony Hall is not far from Mme. Ballon's present quarters she has been over to see it already. She was cheered to see the name of an old friend among the announcements of coming concerts. It is Rudolf Serkin, who studied with the same teacher as she—the famous Professor Robert of Vienna.

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

SEP 12 1938

September Records

Some phonograph records are musical events. Each month TIME notes the noteworthy.

Symphonic, etc.

CHOPIN: NOCTURNES (Arthur Rubinstein, pianist; Victor: 2 volumes, 22 sides). Though no towering musical architect, moody, consumptive 19th-Century Chopin still holds his place among the greatest of all lyric composers. Masterly playing by Pianist Rubinstein and excellent sound-reproduction make this first complete phonographic edition of the Nocturnes the month's most distinguished recording.

PROKOFIEFF: LIEUTENANT KIJE SUITE (Boston Symphony, Sergei Koussevitzky conducting; Victor: 6 sides). To cover up a Tsar's error, obsequious Russian courtiers invented a hypothetical army officer named Kije. The nonexistent lieutenant outlived his inventors, became the subject of a satirical Soviet film seen in Manhattan in 1934. Composer Prokofieff's music, written to accompany the film, is clever, brilliantly orchestrated. The Bostonians do a scintillating job.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS

SEP 11 1938

CARRIE JACOBS BOND

Carrie Jacobs Bond, the well known author of "I Love You Truly," is still composing, although 75 years old. The musician who lives near San Diego, Calif., declares that she remembers when her songs were called "too high-brow."

VOLUME OF PROGRAMS

A volume of concert programs issued by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is just off the press. All the concerts which have been given by the organization during the past season are included in the book. The 24 concert bulletins make a book of 1,180 pages. John W. Burk furnished all of the informative historical and descriptive notes.

TIMES

Bedford—O.

SEP 16 1938

Reviewing Records

By

NORMAN NADEL

IN sharp contrast with the mediocrity of most of the recent records, this week's releases include waxings, particularly among the classical sets, that are outstanding. One especially is as nearly perfect as anything I have listened to not only in quality of the recording but in performance as well.

Presented by Victor, it is a suite made up of incidental music to a Russian movie. Sergei Prokofieff, a prominent figure in modern Russian music, was commissioned to compose the accompanying score to the story of "Lieutenant Kije," an imaginary figure created by the Czar's misreading a military report. The suite, which bears the name of the non-existent officer, depicts his life from birth through his romance, wedding, festive occasions and finally death and burial. Like all mythical heroes he is born a full grown man, and at his death the relief of the Czar's officers is obvious in the music.

The clarity of each instrument, whether playing solo or ensemble, is truly amazing. Cornet, saxophone (tenor sax solos are featured), trombones, piccolo, all seem but ten feet away. The power of the orchestra, the intensity of the beat, leave one breathless. And the performance is what would be expected from as sterling an ensemble as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Kousevitzky.

The suite covers five sides; on the sixth is the Scherzo and March from "The Love of the Three Oranges," by the same composer—also beautifully done. This set, Victor M-459, is an event.

OBSERVER

Cleveland

SEP 16 1938

Reviewing Records

By

NORMAN NADEL

IN sharp contrast with the mediocrity of most of the recent records, this week's re-

---

MONITOR

Caddo Mills Tex

SEP 16 1938

WORDS WITHOUT MUSIC

By LOUIS REID

(Music Features & Photo Syndicate)

Louis Reid

THE Metropolitan Opera season is to be extended next year through May as an added attraction for visitors to New York's World's Fair. The extra month will be given over entirely to Wagner.

Contrary to the popular belief, New York is not the cradle of grand opera in America. New Orleans has this distinction. Almost 150 years ago a company was presenting French operas in the Southern city.

New Music Prize

Another cash lure to musical inspiration in connection with the World's Fair has been announced. G. Schirmer, music publisher, offers a $500 prize for an original unaccompanied choral composition to be dedicated to the Fair. Only American citizens may compete. The composition must be a setting of a poem by an American author selected by the contestant, and its performance time must not be less than ten or more than fifteen minutes. It should be capable of being sung a cappella by a four-part mixed chorus of singers of high school age, and should be written in open score.

Ford
A.S.C

• • •

No longer will the summer festivals of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires be hampered by rain. An imposing, and, it is reported, acoustically-satisfactory shed has been erected for the orchestra's pastoral performances. In previous years cloudbursts have descended upon the musicians at the most impressive moments of Beethoven and Wagner.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

SEP 13 1938

Cotton Market.

Quoted by H. T. Carey, Joost & Patrick.

Option	Open	High	Low	1:30
March	795	795	795	795
May	791	791	791	791
July	788	788	788	788
Oct	792	792	792	792
Dec	795	795	795	795
Jan	793	793	793	793

REVERSE APPLAUSE.

Boston (INS — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

OBSERVER

Cleveland O.

SEP 16 1938

Cleveland Concert Course Will Open Sixth Season on Nov. 4

Koussevitzski and his 110 men come from Boston Dec. 9. This orchestra, which has just completed its fifty-seventh season, travels just one week a year and the course is considered fortunate to be included this season, for the first time in many years.

After the Christmas interval, on

B. Adv. Sept. 18/38

Koussevitzky's 15 Years In Boston

By Ruth Marsters

Music Editor

THE opening concerts of the fifty-eighth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on October 7 and 8, will celebrate Serge Koussevitzky's fifteenth consecutive season as conductor.

The first half of the program will be drawn from the conductor's first in America, to include Vivaldi's Concerto for Orchestra with Organ in D minor, Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, and Berlioz' Overture, "The Roman Carnival."

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony likewise finds its place in the program by being the first symphony to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on his arrival in this country.

Beethoven will be stressed throughout the programs of the coming season.

Among the new works to be introduced will be an orchestral concerto by Stravinsky which will be given its first performance in America during the composer's visit as guest conductor of the orchestra.

RACINE, WIS.
JOURNAL - TIMES

SEP 14 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — (INS)—When the Boston symphony orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

EAST LIVERPOOL, O.
REVIEW

SEP 13 1938

ORCHESTRA APPLAUDS AUDIENCE'S PATIENCE

By International News Service.

BOSTON—Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

Original Subscribers Are on Symphony List

B. Trans. Sept. /38

Koussevitzky's Fifteenth Season Sponsored by Former Patrons

Boston is a music lover's city. For the past fourteen years many of her citizens have followed with interest and deep appreciation the career of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky with the Symphony Orchestra. Next month, which marks the opening of his fifteenth season will find many of those people on the patrons' list who sponsored the orchestra in the autumn of 1924.

By the process of microfilm this list has been photographed to be preserved for posterity, and to keep perfect records (in a minimum of space) for a complete history of the organization. On this list are those who will no doubt be present at Dr. Koussevitzky's opening concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturda garet H. Aubin, Mrs. Arthur J Barkhouse, R. S. Barlow, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Barnet, Mrs. John W Bartol, Mrs. Boylston Beal, Sylonda Beebe, Mr. and Mrs. A. Farwell Bemis, Mrs. Edward H. Best Mrs. Arthur W. Blake, Mrs. Arthur T. Bradlee, Mr. and Mrs. E D. Brandegee, Helen C. Burn

---

MAYFIELD, KY.
MESSENGER

SEP 16 1938

AMERICAN SALZBURG

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5,000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists, Dr. Koussevitsky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will still be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will be not a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 14 1938

MUSIC

NEWS NOTES

Boston Symphony orchestra announcements are always important in music news but outstanding in conjunction with the annual fall announcement of this organization is the fact that Dr. Serge Koussevitsky returns to direct this notable aggregation of musicians for the 15th consecutive season.

The notable record of Dr. Koussevitsky's leadership is well known and unequalled in the history of the organization. No other conductor has led the orchestra for so many years. The nearest approach to this was Wilhelm Gericke's reign of 13 years, divided into periods of five and eight seasons each.

"Beethoven will be the predominating composer" during this 15th anniversary year of Koussevitsky's directing of the orchestra, and concerts without soloists excel in numbers those with assisting artists.

Dr. Koussevitsky's "conviction that the orchestra is, and of right ought to be, the principal soloist" is understood. The result of his procedure has been steadily increasing audiences since the depression's low point. Moses Smith, commenting at length on this in the Boston Evening Transcript, declares that today "the orchestra, rests on the whole, probably on the most stable financial base of any similar institution in the country."

CEDAR FALLS, IOWA
RECORD

SEP 15 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

Boston—(INS)— Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat thru a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Carles river to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
PRESS

SEP 15 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

Boston, (INS) — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles river to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

TIMES

Bedford-O.

SEP 16 1938

Reviewing Records

By

NORMAN NADEL

IN sharp contrast with the mediocrity of most of the recent records, this week's releases include waxings, particularly among the classical sets, that are outstanding. One especially is as nearly perfect as anything I have listened to not only in quality of the recording but in performance as well.

Presented by Victor, it is a suite made up of incidental music to a Russian movie. Sergei Prokofieff, a prominent figure in modern Russian music, was commissioned to compose the accompanying score to the story of "Lieutenant Kije," an imaginary figure created by the Czar's misreading a military report. The suite, which bears the name of the non-existent officer, depicts his life from birth through his romance, wedding, festive occasions and finally death and burial. Like all mythical heroes he is born a full grown man, and at his death the relief of the Czar's officers is obvious in the music.

The clarity of each instrument, whether playing solo or ensemble, is truly amazing. Cornet, saxophone (tenor sax solos are featured), trombones, piccolo, all seem but ten feet away. The power of the orchestra, the intensity of the beat, leave one breathless. And the performance is what would be expected from as sterling an ensemble as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Kousevitzky.

The suite covers five sides; on the sixth is the Scherzo and March from "The Love of the Three Oranges," by the same composer—also beautifully done. This set, Victor M-459, is an event.

OBSERVER

Cleveland

SEP 16 1938

Reviewing Records

By

NORMAN NADEL

IN sharp contrast with the mediocrity of most of the recent records, this week's re-

---

CEDAR FALLS, IOWA
RECORD

SEP 15 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

Boston—(INS)— Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat thru a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Carles river to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

MONITOR

Caddo Mills
Tex

SEP 16 1938

WORDS WITHOUT MUSIC

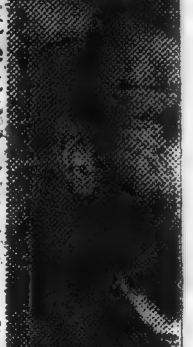
By LOUIS REID
(Music Features & Photo Syndicate)

Louis Reid

THE Metropolitan Opera season is to be extended next year through May as an added attraction for visitors to New York's World's Fair. The extra month will be given over entirely to Wagner.

Contrary to the popular belief, New York is not the cradle of grand opera in America. New Orleans has this distinction. Almost 150 years ago a company was presenting French operas in the Southern city.

New Music Prize



Ford
A.S.C

Another cash lure to musical inspiration in connection with the World's Fair has been announced. G. Schirmer, music publisher, offers a $500 prize for an original unaccompanied choral composition to be dedicated to the Fair. Only American citizens may compete. The composition must be a setting of a poem by an American author selected by the contestant, and its performance time must not be less than ten or more than fifteen minutes. It should be capable of being sung a cappella by a four-part mixed chorus of singers of high school age, and should be written in open score.

• • •

No longer will the summer festivals of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires be hampered by rain. An imposing, and, it is reported, acoustically-satisfactory shed has been erected for the orchestra's pastoral performances. In previous years cloudbursts have descended upon the musicians at the most impressive moments of Beethoven and Wagner.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

SEP 13 1938

Cotton Market.

Quoted by H. T. Carey, Joost & Patrick.

Option	Open	High	Low	1:30
March	795	795	795	795
May	791	791	791	791
July	788	788	788	788
Oct	792	792	792	792
Dec	795	795	795	795
Jan	793	793	793	793

REVERSE APPLAUSE.

Boston (INS — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
PRESS

SEP 15 1938

REVERSE APPLAUSE

Boston, (INS) — Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles river to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

OBSERVER

SEP 16 1938

Cleve Open

of Ohio Stag how This We

Koussevitzski and his 110 men come from Boston Dec. 9. This orchestra, which has just completed its fifty-seventh season, travels just one week a year and the course is considered fortunate to be included this season, for the first time in many years.

After the Christmas interval, on

B. Adv. Sept. 18/38

Koussevitzky's 15 Years In Boston

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

THE opening concerts of the fifty-eighth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on October 7 and 8, will celebrate Serge Koussevitzky's fifteenth consecutive season as conductor.

The first half of the program will be drawn from the conductor's first in America, to include Vivaldi's Concerto for Orchestra with Organ in D minor, Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn, and Berlioz' Overture, "The Roman Carnival."

Beethoven's Fifth Symphony likewise finds its place in the program by being the first symphony to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky on his arrival in this country.

Beethoven will be stressed throughout the programs of the coming season.

Among the new works to be introduced will be an orchestral concerto by Stravinsky which will be given its first performance in America during the composer's visit as guest conductor of the orchestra.

RACINE, WIS.
JOURNAL - TIMES

SEP 14 1938

AUDIENCE JOINS CHORUS

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — (INS)—When the Boston symphony orchestra opened its season at "Tanglewood" here, an old custom was revived and the audience was invited to join the Cecelia chorus of Boston in singing the second verse of Bach's magnificent old hymn, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott."

EAST LIVERPOOL, O.
REVIEW

SEP 13 1938

ORCHESTRA APPLAUDS AUDIENCE'S PATIENCE

By International News Service.

BOSTON—Reversing the usual procedure, the Boston Symphony orchestra recently applauded the audience. The crowd had sat through a heavy rainstorm on the banks of the Charles River to listen to the program while the players were sheltered by the huge shell. At the conclusion the entire orchestra rose and drummed on their fiddlebacks with their bows and clapped their hands.

Original Subscribers Are on Symphony List

B. Trans. Sept. /38

Koussevitzky's Fifteenth Season Sponsored by Former Patrons

Boston is a music lover's city. For the past fourteen years many of her citizens have followed with interest and deep appreciation the career of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky with the Symphony Orchestra. Next month, which marks the opening of his fifteenth season will find many of those people on the patrons' list who sponsored the orchestra in the autumn of 1924.

By the process of microfilm this list has been photographed to be preserved for posterity, and to keep perfect records (in a minimum of space) for a complete history of the organization. On this list are those who will no doubt be present at Dr. Koussevitzky's opening concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturda evening, Oct. 7 and 8, just a they attended the first concert fifteen years ago.

They are Clara A. Adams, Mrs O. H. Alford, Mrs. William B Ames, Margaret Anthony, Mar garet H. Aubin, Mrs. Arthur J Barkhouse, R. S. Barlow, Mr. an Mrs. S. J. Barnet, Mrs. John W Bartol, Mrs. Boylston Beal, Syl anda Beebe, Mr. and Mrs. A. Far well Bemis, Mrs. Edward H. Best Mrs. Arthur W. Blake, Mrs. Ar thur T. Bradlee, Mr. and Mrs. E D. Brandegee, Helen C. Burn

---

MAYFIELD, KY.
MESSENGER

SEP 16 1938

AMERICAN SALZBURG

A blight of adverse political and economic conditions has fallen upon the great European music festivals, which formerly attracted audiences from beyond the seas. Salzburg, for instance, is but the shadow of its former self since Austria fell under Nazi sway. It is America's opportunity to assume leadership in this field, and there are indications that this country will seize the moment to carry on the tradition of high art.

The most promising development is probably the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, held near Stockbridge, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitsky, has just concluded its fifth summer season. Through the gift of a patron, the festival has a 200-acre estate as its permanent site, and adequate facilities for its audiences of 5,000 and more have been constructed. Of more significance than the physical plant, however, are the plans for extending its scope to include opera, ballet, the classical drama and a school for young artists, Dr. Koussevitsky's vision of developing "the greatest music and art center in the world" has the support of the Boston symphony organization.

Even such a broad project as this, however, will be inadequate for a country of the size and wealth of the United States. There will still be opportunity for a Middle Western community to develop a musical center which will be not a rival but a companion to the Berkshire project.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 14 1938

MUSIC

NEWS NOTES

Boston Symphony orchestra announcements are always important in music news but outstanding in conjunction with the annual fall announcement of this organization is the fact that Dr. Serge Koussevitsky returns to direct this notable aggregation of musicians for the 15th consecutive season.

The notable record of Dr. Koussevitsky's leadership is well known and unequalled in the history of the organization. No other conductor has led the orchestra for so many years. The nearest approach to this was Wilhelm Gericke's reign of 13 years, divided into periods of five and eight seasons each.

"Beethoven will be the predominating composer" during this 15th anniversary year of Koussevitsky's directing of the orchestra, and concerts without soloists excel in numbers those with assisting artists.

Dr. Koussevitsky's "conviction that the orchestra is, and of right ought to be, the principal soloist" is understood. The result of his procedure has been steadily increasing audiences since the depression's low point. Moses Smith, commenting at length on this in the Boston Evening Transcript, declares that today "the orchestra, rests on the whole, probably on the most stable financial base of any similar institution in the country."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

SEP 19 1938

THE MUSIC BOX

Derrick Gives Views Of Stockbridge Fete

Joseph Derrick, president of the Schenectady Conservatory of Music, has returned from Stockbridge, Mass., where he spent most of the summer, and is teaching every day at the conservatory. Mr. Derrick has been a teacher of many of the most accomplished young musicians of this section and a number of his pupils are occupying important posts in musical work at present.

He has been accompanist for the Thursday Musical Club for many years and appears occasionally in concert, as when he appeared as piano soloist with the Schenectady Symphony Orchestra. Always interested in encouraging the best music in Schenectady, Mr. Derrick attends the important concerts and is chairman of the talent committee of the Schenectady Civic Music Association

For several years Mr. Derrick was the representative in Schenectady of the Berkshire Symphony Festival and it is partly to be near Tanglewood that he chooses the lake at Stockbridge for his summer vacation place. Last summer he not only attended the concerts but also all the rehearsals when he watched and listened to Serge Koussevitsky work with the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The great leader treats the men in his orchestra as fellow artists and is most considerate of them, Mr. Derrick says, but always firm and insistent upon carrying out directions.

There was a delightful incident when the orchestra was rehearsing, the composition by Aaron Copeland. Without telling the members of the orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky wanted the trumpet call, which was so effective in the composition, to come from a distance, he sent the young trumpet player who was to take the passage out into the field beyond the music shed. When the orchestra came to the trumpet call, the men were delighted to hear it sound from the distance so beautifully and, enthusiastic artists that they are, they all got quite excited about it. After the rehearsal the young man came in to ask the director if it was all right, and Mr. Derrick said, it was pleasant to see Koussevitsky patting him on the back and talking in such a friendly way with him

In the rehearsals of the Wagnerian program, Mr. Derrick found the director kindly but firmly insisting upon the conception of Wagnerian music as a balance between orchestra and voices, never the orchestra as mere background for voices. The voices were not too much restricted, but voice and orchestral parts were blended in a symphonic whole. In all his dealings with the men, Dr. Koussevitzky is kind and courteous, bringing out the best in his "peerless orchestra," as he has called it.

Asked about the plan of broadening the scope of the festival, Mr. Derrick said he thought Koussevitzky was definitely planning for operatic performances and hoped to attract artists of the dramatic and musical fields to emphasize the development of American music and general interest in musical art. A favorite plan is to train young musicians to direct orchestra and choral music, and Koussevitzky hopes to start this work, in connection with the music school, perhaps in 1940. These young directors would have experience with sections of the Boston orchestra or in works to be performed. As to the summer music school project, Mr. Derrick said that it seemed quite practical to him, pointing out that the members of the orchestra, all artists of high accomplishment, would supply the instrumental teaching and there would be only voice and piano to be added.

BATESVILLE, ARK.
GUARD

SEP 21 1938

CLEVELAND SYMPHONY SETS ATTENDANCE MARKS

CLEVELAND (U.P.) — The Cleveland Orchestra set a new attendance record during its 1937-38 season, when its concerts were heard by 62,722 people.

The orchestra also set a national record in presenting 113 concerts at home and on tour during its regular season.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was second with 110 concerts

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

SEP 22 1938

Silvermine Concerts

The financial report of the Silvermine Symphony Concerts this year discloses that there would have been a deficit had it not been for the advance of $5,000 in the form of an initial contribution by a few devoted friends of music who dug deeply into their own pockets. This put the enterprise out of the red and put it eventually a few hundred dollars into the black. But it was only a bookkeeping profit for if the enterprise had been run entirely as a self-sustaining affair it would have operated at a loss.

This is common experience in dealing with large symphony orchestras, in concerts of advanced music. The Boston Symphony orchestra, the Philadelphia Symphony, the New York Philharmonic and most of the other great orchestras have been kept alive season after season by the devotion of a relatively few persons who made up the accumulated deficit.

In this particular case the Silvermine Guild which gave the use of its grounds for the concert was not directly involved as the concerts were legally and financially sponsored by a group which took over all of the financing.

Musically and socially, concert week at Silvermine was a great success. Financially it didn't quite make the grade. A week of bad weather might have put it deeply into the red. It is obvious that the continuation of such concerts cannot be expected unless a more assured method of supporting them is found.

It is unfair to expect one or two generous persons to assume the burden.

ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR

SEP 19 1938

* * *

MRS. J. W. LUKE RETURNS FROM TRIP

Mrs. J. W. Luke, president of the new Civic Celebrity Series which will be inaugurated by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt on the evening of October 26 at the Municipal Auditorium, has returned from an extensive trip East where she conferred with managers concerning the Birmingham season, and booked attractions for a celebrity series which she will inaugurate next summer at an exclusive New England resort. During her visit Mrs. Luke attended the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood; heard the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Conductor Serge Koussevitzky; traveled through the Berkshire Hills where such men as Nathaniel Hawthorne, William Cullen Bryant and Daniel Chester French found inspiration; visited Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller's estate with its "Cathedral of Trees," and spent some time with her son at his Lake Pontoosuc home in Pittsfield, Mass. On her return to Birmingham, Mrs. Luke left immediately for Albertville to attend the opening of her brother's new theatre, "The Carol," named in honor of Mrs. Luke.—Birmingham News-Age-Herald.

THE MUSICAL TOWN OF ASCH

Sept. 18/38 - B. Post

In Headlines Now, Was Once "Set to Music" by Schumann

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE most musical spot on the map, the little town of Asch, in Czechoslovakia, is once more in the news, the very ominous news, as the place where Hitler's armies would probably strike first. And why the most musical? Because it was actually set to music—by Robert Schumann. In Asch lived Ernestine von Fricken, to whom Schumann was for a few months engaged, and under the spell of this attachment he wrote, as part of what later formed the "Carnaval" for piano, a series of little pieces based on the two musical mottoes "A, E-flat, C, B" and "A-flat, C, B." In German nomenclature, you see, A-flat is As; E-flat is Es, and B. is H. Incidentally in another order, these letters were the only musical ones in Schumann's own name. In one of the pieces, "Lettres dansantes," the notes A-S-C-H and S-C-H-A "dance boisterously and noisily, and then vanish like airy phantoms." It might be added that in the "Carnaval" Ernestine appears as "Estrella" and Clara Wieck, whom Schumann really did marry, masquerades as "Chiarina."

* * * *

Desirous of seeing some more of the world while it is still there to see, the Post's music critic last month took ship to Mexico, via Havana, (a delightful voyage, even in summer) and sojourned there for two weeks. In the midst of the bewildering investigation of Aztec ruins, Spanish remains, native markets, silver shops and snow-clad volcanoes, he yet found time to hear two concerts by the Orquesta Sinfonic de Mexico under the direction of the country's most distinguished musician, Carlos Chavez.

Your Latin is likely to bring to German music an engaging animation ("Tannhauser" at the Paris Opera is an almost sprightly affair), and from Mr. Chavez and his 96 per cent Mexican orchestra an all-Beethoven programme, including the Fifth and Seventh Symphonies, was not the dull occasion it might easily be, but a quite exciting one. For example, the Andante con moto of the Fifth went at the comfortably brisk pace of Beethoven's expressed intentions; it did not plod or saunter. Certainly it did not lapse into the Adagio con molt'espressione to which we are sometimes treated here in the North.

In the Allegretto of the Seventh, which was not turned into a solemn Andante, Mr. Chavez tactfully subordinated the monotonous tumtumty-tum-tum of the chief theme to the more beguiling counter-melody (which makes its appearance in the violas and 'cellos in measure 27), and built up his climax with the latter always in the ascendency. Again, the Trio of the Scherzo in this Symphony was not dragged, as it too often is, and in the "Coriolanus" Overture, given a most dramatic performance, inner voices were effectively brought to the fore. A fresh approach can do wonders to stale music, provided, of course, that it is free from the merely bizarre and tasteless distortion.

A week later with Haydn's "Military" Symphony, long unheard hereabouts, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" the Mexico Orchestra was somewhat less successful. It was good to hear again the charming Haydn Symphony, but it was hardly played with the degree of virtuosity to which the strings of the Boston Symphony have accustomed us, while in "Asi Hablaba Zarathustra," as it appeared in Spanish, there was not quite the tonal splendor and brilliance one might hear at Symphony hall.

And it could have been idle to expect it. Our orchestra is close on six times as old as that of Mr. Chavez, and like other symphonic aggregations in this part of the world, it obtains from various countries of Europe the best that each has to offer. On the other hand, if we could turn out in 10 years something as American as the orchestra of Mr. Chavez is Mexican-American founded, drilled and led and as good as the one in question, we might well feel that we had done something.

The performance of "Zarathustra" was, by the way, the first in Mexico. We of Boston have been hearing the piece at fairly frequent intervals since 1897. Also this summer, in the magnificent Palace of Fine Arts, Mr. Chavez introduced to Mexico City the First Symphony of Sibelius, which we have heard time and again. In short, Mr. Chavez is still pioneering, and he has both the enthusiasm and the ability, not to mention the requisite breadth of taste, to fit him for the task. A few years ago Boston heard him as conductor of his own music. It was interesting to discover his patent sympathy with that of composers as widely ranging as Haydn, Beethoven, Rimsky-Korsakov and Strauss.

Orchestra News

B. Trans
Sept 17/38

The complete program of the opening pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky, on Oct. 7 and 8 will contain Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for orchestra with organ, Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture, Brahm's "Haydn" Variations and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be given at a special concert in the fall.

The New York Philharmonic Symphony Society, led by John Barbirolli, will play in Boston next spring. Artur Schnabel will be the soloist.

The fifty-ninth year of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will begin on Oct. 28 with Vladimir Golschmann conducting for the eighth season. During the season of eighteen pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts the soloists will include Rachmaninov, Kreisler, Lotte Lehmann, Myra Hess, Boris Golschmann, Lawrence Tibbetts, Artur Rubinstein and others.

The Montreal Orchestra, led by Douglas Clar, will open its ninth season on Oct. 30. There will be ten Sunday afternoon concerts and as many soloists, including Bauer, Enesco, Zimbalist and Harriet Cohen.

Ernst Krenek will play his Piano Concerto with the Chicago Orchestra this season, as he will with the Boston. But in the Western city he will also appear as conductor, probably of his "Triumph der Empfindsamkeit." Some time during the season Mr. Stock will present Mahler's "Lied von der Erde," with Charles Kullman and Enid Szantho for singers. The Harvard Glee Club, appearing with the orchestra, will sing music by Wagner, Mozart, Palestrina, Gabrielli, Brahms, Malipiero, Liszt and Piston. The work by Piston will be a new chorus with brasses.

—Burma has some coins called "willow leaf," which are covered on one side with a yellowish-red substance made from the burnt yolk of a hen's egg.

First Symphony Program

B. Globe
Sept 18/38

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has forwarded the complete program with which he will begin the 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his 15th as conductor, at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Oct. 7, and Saturday evening, Oct. 8. The program, as already announced, will consist of three numbers which he conducted at his first concert here, in 1924: Vivaldi's D minor Concerto for Orchestra, the "Roman Carnival" Overture by Berlioz, and the Variations On a Theme by Haydn, by Brahms. The program will be concluded with the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven. This was the first symphony that Dr. Koussevitzky conducted in the United States.

The list of Boston Symphony soloists for the coming season includes the following: Myra Hess, Artur Rubinstein and Rudolph Serkin, pianists; Jascha Heifetz, Ruth Posselt and Zlatko Balokovic, violinists; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, who will be heard in the "Don Quixote" of Strauss. In addition, Jesus Maria Sanroma, official pianist of the Boston Symphony, will be soloist in a new concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky, and Ernst Krenek, the Czech composer and pianist who is to teach in Boston this year, will play the solo part in a concerto of his own. The Coolidge Quartet will assist in the first performances of Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for orchestra and string quartet.

There will be three guest conductors—Eugene Goossens for a week in November; Georges Enesco for a like period in January, and Igor Stravinsky, the Russian composer, for a fortnight during the Spring. Repetition of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," revived by the Boston Symphony last Spring, will be a feature of the coming Autumn.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

SEP 17 1938

* * *

FOR TWO weeks during this winter Serge Koussevitsky will turn over his podium to Igor Stravinsky, the Russian composer-pianist, who will conduct the Boston Symphony in a series of concerts containing his own works. Mr. Stravinsky will not only lead the orchestra but will also appear several times as soloist.

SYMPHONY TICKETS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, on the eve of its 58th season and the 15th year of Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership, has contrived in an ingenious fashion to call attention to its sale of tickets. Advertisements appeared showing an auction for seats in 1900. This unequal scale of prices was compared unfavorably with today's method of a fixed schedule.

Undoubtedly it is gratifying to know that you can have the same seat, year in and year out, without being obliged to bid for it. It is easier to budget for your entertainment or education, depending on how you regard symphony concerts, with the assurance that your seat in Symphony Hall will cost you a precise sum. But there must have been a good deal of fun in attending so strange an auction. It would have been amusing to watch the spirited bidding of two rich men for a favorite location and to feel the thrill that you might get your own seat at a bargain.

Some people did not bother with this rather innocent racket and let an agent do the work for them. When the change to the present system was announced, patrons were expressly warned that they would be wise to secure their subscriptions directly from the management, as the seat would thereafter belong as an annual first choice to the actual purchaser. Nevertheless there are doubtless a few who must still pay an agent for their seats, with the agent's premium tacked on to the regular price.

B. Sunday Herald
Sept. 18/38

NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR
SEP 12 1938

MUSIC

By JON BYRON

Prima Donna in Vaudeville: Marjorie Gainsworth, currently at Loew's State, has appeared with the Chicago Opera Company and is a member of the faculty of the Chicago Music College. . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra begins its 58th season Oct. 1, with Serge Koussevitsky entering his 15th year as conductor of that organization. . . Elmo Russ, who writes

[198]

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

SEP 25 1938

Music Festivals Grow In Favor

Birmingham Latest City With Plans for Fete

By BURNET C. TUTHILL
Director of Music at Southwestern

These days festivals are all the rage!

People with common interest in any field like to gather together, not only for a single event, but rather for a series of events between the enjoyment of which they may mingle in friendly concourse and discuss their chosen field. These festivals have the advantage of not only bringing the outstanding personalities of this special subject together for a few days but of bringing them into contact with less distinguished followers who are located in the territory where the festival is held.

Music festivals are also becoming more popular and more frequent as the years go by. Some of them, such as the Cincinnati May Music Festival, with a history of over 50 years, the Ann Arbor May Festival, both presenting a series of five or six great choral concerts with soloists and orchestra, have long been established on a regular biennial or annual basis. There is the Bach Festival each year at Bethlehem, Pa., and more recently another Bach Festival at Baldwin-Wallace College in Berea, near Cleveland, Ohio.

Few In South

Last Summer in Lenox, Mass., was held the fourth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitsky. At the moment of writing Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge is presenting in Pittsfield, Mass. the twentieth anniversary concert series of the Berkshire Festival of Chamber Music to a gathering of 400 invited guests, a group of well known composers, performers and patrons of music. This gentle feminine Maecenas also finances many another chamber music festival in various parts of the world and a biennial series of such events at the Library of Congress in Washington.

So far the South has been the scene of but few such musical gatherings. Atlanta has presented a week of grand opera by the Metropolitan Company of New York during a good many sesasons and Virginia has had folk-music festivals. But through the enterprise of one of the South's fine musicians, whose reputation as a violinist has been earned largely in the field of chamber music, our neighboring city of Birmingham is to enjoy its first festival of this type of music Oct. 7-9. This activating personality is Ottokar Cadek, a native of Chattanooga, for 15 years first violinist of the New York String Quartet, for the past five years concert master of the Birmingham Symphony orchestra, head of the violin department of the Birmingham Conservatory of Music and director of the Cadek Conservatory of the University of Chattanooga, who has also added to all this activity a frequent visit to Memphis as guest artist teacher of violin at the Memphis College of Music. Not satisfied with all these duties he has further assumed direction of the Birmingham Chamber Music Society and of the coming festival in that city. The series is dedicated to the memory of Edna Gockel Gussen, a pioneer of chamber music in the South.

An Intimate Art

As its name implies, chamber music is an intimate art, one that is primarily for the spacious home or the private apartment and certainly not for a great public hall. Appropriately the Birmingham concerts will be given in the Little Theatre there with its capacity limited to 400 listeners. Indications are that the seats will all be filled, some of them by a group of music lovers who will motor over from Memphis. Happily the programs will be presented by both local forces and a visiting group, the celebrated Curtis String Quartet of Philadelphia. Mr. Cadek himself will direct a string ensemble from the Birmingham Chamber Music Society and will play a Brahms Sonata with Lois Greene Seals. A wind ensemble from the Birmingham Symphony will be heard and the visiting quartet will present two of the four concerts.

The music at this first festival will be confined to well tried and tested compositions by the great masters, Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms, Tschaikovski and Debussy. Not being backed by a wealthy patron who delights in footing all the bills and inviting her friends to accept invitations, there will of course be a charge for subscription tickets, but they are quoted as a lower figure than is usual at most festivals, three dollars for the four concerts.

Memphis wishes all success to Mr. Cadek and Birmingham in this new enterprise which should mean so much culturally to that city and to all the surrounding territory.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL - COURIER
SEP 24 1938

Woolsey Hall Series Brings Great Stars.

A distinguished group of the "greats" in the world of fine music will make their appearance in New Haven during the coming season as presentations of the Woolsey Hall Concert Series under the auspices of the School of Music, Yale university. The opening concert of the season has been arranged for November 1st, when Jascha Heifetz, world famous violinist, returns to New Haven after a three year absence.

The series will continue with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, November 16th; Amparo and Jose Iturbi in a two piano recital made up of solo and duet selections, on December 13th; Marian Anderson, American Negro contralto, January 11th; Walter Gieseking, pianist, February 14, and again the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 8th. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed Russian leader of the one hundred and ten piece Boston Orchestra, will conduct both the local concerts by the noted organization.

The Woolsey Series for the season of 1938-1939 blends admirably quality and variety, as well as old favorites and the latest musical sensations. Heifetz and Iturbi are of course well known here by dint of former successful appearances on the local concert platform Marian An-

---

WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

SEP 18 1938

Igor Stravinsky, composer and conductor will lead the Boston Symphony for two weeks during the annual mid-winter vacation of Serge Koussevitzky. The latter will begin the fifteenth season as conductor of the orchestra on October 7.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
SEP 24 1938

* * *

Ernest Krenek, appearing in the triple role of guest conductor-composer-soloist, will be heard in his own piano concerto and will doubtless direct his "Triumph der Emfindsamkeit." Bela Bartok's Music for Strings, Piano, Celeste and Percussions will be the vehicle with which Storm Bull will make his bow. Louis Krasner, another newcomer, will offer the first local hearing of the late Alban Berg's violin concerto. Albert Spalding will give the initial performance of Frederick Jacobi's violin concerto and he will also revive Elgar's, which was last scheduled in the 31st season.

Leo Sowerby's organ concerto will be presented with E. Power Biggs as the soloist. Biggs performed it last winter with the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Enid Szantho and Charles Kullman will make their debuts with Mahler's "Das Lied on der Erde." The Pro Arte String Quartet, also making a debut, will introduce Martinu's Concerto for String Quartet and Orchestra. Jose Echaniz, another new soloist, will give us the first performance of John Ireland's piano concerto. Echaniz will also be heard in Liszt A major. Arne Oldberg's cello concerto may be played by Edmund Kurtz.

The purely orchestral compositions to be presented here for the first time include Cadman's Suite for Strings, Roy Harris' Chorale for Strings, Op. 3; Piston's Suite for Orchestra, Harl McDonald's Fourth Symphony, Vaughn-Williams' "A Norfolk Rhapsody," Roussel's Fourth Symphony and his "Flemish" Rhapsody, Butterworth's rhapsody, "A Shropshire Lad," Sibelius' Fifth Symphony (played by the orchestra at Ravinia) and his tone poem, "Pohjola's Daughter"; Schoenberg's Suite for Strings, Max Trapp's Symphonic Suite, Alfredo Casella's Introduction, Chorale and Marche, Poot's Allegro Symphonique, Miaskowsky's Symphony, No. 15; Liadow's "Picture from the Apocalypse," Golestan's "Rumanian Rhapsody," No. 1; Ireland's "A London Overture," Walton's "Facade" (played at Ravinia), Kurt M. Atterberg's "Vaermland Rhapsody," Kodaly's Dance Suite (played at Ravinia), Prokofieff's Russian Overture, Op. 72, and Von Reznicek's "Overture to a Comedy."

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

SEP 24 1938

Bridgeport's Symphony

Bridgeport's Symphony orchestra, manned by local musicians, sponsored by the WPA music project and supported in part by the paid admissions of the general public, recently closed its summer season of concerts and is now preparing for a winter season of indoor events.

Every person of musical taste who has been following the development of this symphony orchestra realizes that great progress has been made. In its closing concert the Bridgeport Symphony produced music of a quality which ordinarily would be expected of only the well known and long established orchestras.

The last concert of the summer season significantly enough produced the largest number of paid admissions of any concert since the organization of the orchestra. Public appreciation is obviously growing while the orchestra continues to develop and augment its skill. Both signs are of a happy nature.

For those who would develop musical taste in America, for those whose ambition it is to bring the best of music within the reach of all the people, is not this the real answer? Is it not much better that an organization such as the Bridgeport Symphony orchestra should give a whole season of concerts available to the community at a modest price, rather than that one or two of the famed orchestras should visit us only once or twice in the course of a year?

Isn't our trouble in America largely due to the fact that we are a nation of name-worshippers, who place too much stress upon the high-priced and the magnificent and neglect that which is available right at hand?

At any rate we believe that no person of musical culture or intelligence would today sneer at the musicianship of the Bridgeport Symphony and that those who insist that nothing less than the Boston Symphony or the New York Philharmonic is good enough for their tender ears are not musicians but snobs. Those who have a real hunger for music in their souls cannot be satisfied with one or two concerts a year from visiting organizations. We predict greater success for the Bridgeport Symphony in its coming season of fall and winter concerts.

WAUKEGAN, ILL.
NEWS - SUN

SEP 24 1938

Denver Symphony Must Compete With WPA Music

San Carlo Season in New York Will End Oct. 1 after 20 Performances.

New York (U.P.)—

Igor Stravinsky, composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony for two weeks during the annual mid-winter vacation of Serge Koussevitzky. The latter will begin his fifteenth season as conductor of the orchestra on October 7.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

SEP 25 1938

Forum Lists Music Events

Leading Artists Coming Here

In addition to an extensive lecture program, which includes as headliners Alexander Kerensky, head of the Russian Provisional Government in 1917; Paul van Zeeland, former Premier of Belgium; Stefan Zweig, historian and biographer, and Andre Maurios, brilliant French essayist, The Philadelphia Forum will present an attractive musical season.

Exclusive performances under the auspices of the Forum will be made by the Boston Symphony, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Lawrence Tibbett, Jussi Bjoerling, the Swedish tenor of the Metropolitan Opera; Kathryn Meisle, leading contralto of the Metropolitan; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Elisabeth Schumann, leading soprano of the Vienna State Opera, and Robert Casadesus, pianist.

CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

SEP 24 1938

Phila. Forum Lists Important Events

World Notables, Singers, Boston Symphony on Varied Calendar

In addition to an extensive lecture program, which includes as headliners Alexander Kerensky,

---

WAUKESHA, WIS.
FREEMAN

SEP 24 1938

Notes From the Wo

IGOR STRAVINSKY, composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony for two weeks during the annual mid-winter vacation of Serge Koussevitzky. The latter will begin his 15th season as conductor of the orchestra on Oct. 7.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

SEP 24 1938

Forum Plans a Varied Season

Boston Symphony, Kerensky, and the Lunts Listed in Annual Subscription Series

THE Philadelphia Forum announced today with pardonable pride its schedule of attractions for the coming season. The list covers as usual, a wide range of interests, including music, ballet, the theatre, and lectures by authorities on a number of subjects.

The musical schedule is headed again by the only Philadelphia concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. There will be recitals by Lawrence Tibbett, Jussi Bjoerling, Elisabeth Schumann and Robert Casadesus; a joint recital by Kathryn Meisle and Gregor Piatigorsky, and concerts by the Curtis Symphony Orchestra and the Wagnerian Singers.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

SEP 24 1938

Prime Boston Symphony Bow

Koussevitzky Returning Monday From France to Start 15th Music Season.

Serge Koussevitzky, returning from France on the Normandie, which arrives in New York Monday, will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra for rehearsal a week later, in preparation for the opening of the symphony season in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7-8. This will be the 15th consecutive season of Koussevitzky in America as the orchestra's conductor.

New music of special interest will lend importance to the anniversary season, while the classical repertory will have its due predominance. A larger number than usual of the symphonies of Beethoven will be performed, according to the conductor's plans, and, likewise, the "Missa Solemnis." Notable soloists will assist at the Boston concerts, and there will be three distinguished guest conductors. They are Igor Stravinsky (who will take the concerts of two weeks), Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens (one week each).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give 60 concerts in Boston in its four subscription series, eight in Cambridge, Mass.; 15 in Greater New York, five in Providence, two each in Hartford, New Haven and Pittsburgh. There will, likewise, be single concerts in Rochester, Buffalo, Ann Arbor, Toledo, Cleveland, Philadelphia, New Brunswick, N. J., and Northampton.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

SEP 18 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEASON TO OPEN OCT. 7

Serge Koussevitzky will open his fifteenth consecutive season as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony hall on Oct. 7 and 8, which will be the 58th season of the orchestra. The conductor has compiled the first part of his programme from his first programme in America, and announces Vivaldi's Concerto for orchestra with organ, in D minor, Berlioz's Overture "The Roman Carnival," and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Hayden. The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, which was the first symphony which Koussevitzky conducted in America, will complete this programme.

Events of interest and importance are announced for the anniversary season. The soloists will include the pianists Myra Hess, Artur Rubinstein, and Rudolph Serkin; the violinists, Jascha Heifetz, Ruth Possett and Zlako Balokovic, Gregor Piatigorsky, the 'cellist, will appear in Straus" "Don Quixote."

Balokovic will introduce the new Violin Concerto of Carpenter, and Jesus Maria Sanroma will appear in the first performance of a new concerto by Dukelsky. Another first performance will be a concerto for string quartet and orchestra by Nicolai Berezowsky, in which the Coolidge quartet will appear with the orchestra. Ernest Krenek will be guest composer and soloist in piano concerto of his own composition.

A notable visitor will be Igor Stravinsky, who will take charge of the orchestra for two weeks, presenting his own music, as conductor and piano soloist. There will be two further distinguished visitors—Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens, who will each be the guest conductors of a single week.

A performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis", notably revived last spring, is announced for a special concert in the autumn.

Shipman's Scrap Book
FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBER
911
ASA L. SHIPMAN'S SONS
NEW YORK

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 64

BSO

1938 - 1939

ON NY
IRA

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Season of 1938-1939

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's
15th year
as Conductor

BLANK PAGE

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

SEP 23 1938

About the Town and County

By BETSY

Concert Series

Announcement has come to me today of the 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert series at Symphony Hall with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Although few from this area can attend the Boston concerts, which are held from Oct. 7 until April 29, many will remember the splendid performance given at "Tanglewood" during the Berkshire Music Festival this past Summer.

It was in the autumn of 1924 that Serge Koussevitsky arrived in America to become the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The span of the ensuing years—longer than that of any previous conductor—has borne fruit in the preeminence of the orchestra which its conductor has made the fullest realization of his interpretative career. As Mr. Koussevitsky opens his 15th season on Oct. 7 and 8, the orchestra stands at the very height of its virtuosity and tonal beauty, the fulfillment of the leader's loftiest aim.

Always alert to new creative currents and ever enkindled anew by the great scores of the past, Dr. Koussevitzky is laying brilliant plans for his anniversary season. Beethoven will be the predominating composer, a number of the Symphonies and the Violin Concerto (with Mr. Heifetz as soloist) being performed. Soloists chosen with a regard for the important concertos to be given will include Arthur Rubinstein, Myra Hess and Rudolph Serkin. Sanroma will play the piano part in the new concerto of Dukelsky. Violinists will include Ruth Posselt, Jascha Heifetz and the newcomer, Zlatko Balokovic. Gregor Piatigorsky is to be violoncello soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote."

The concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as evidenced by the interest and enthusiasm of capacity audiences in Boston, New York, "Tanglewood," wherever the Orchestra plays, have never been more engrossing. Locally the orchestra will be brought into homes over the radio for many of its performances, so that no one need miss this fine music.

GAZETTE

Rockland Me

SEP 24 1938

Announcement of the 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, has been received. The season also marks the 15th anniversary of Dr. Koussevitzky, with the Orchestra, and the announcement has this to say of the event:

"It was in the autumn of 1924 that Serge Koussevitzky arrived in America to become the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The span of the ensuing years—longer than that of any previous conductor—has borne fruit in the preeminence of the Orchestra which its conductor has made the fullest realization of his interpretative career. As Serge Koussevitzky opens his 15th season on Oct. 7 and 8, the Orchestra stands at the very height of its virtuosity and tonal beauty, the fulfillment of its leader's loftiest aim."

Dr. Koussevitzky, always alert to new creative currents and ever enkindled anew by the great scores of the past, is laying brilliant plans for the season. Beethoven will be predominating composer, a number of the Symphonies and the Violin Concerto (with Jascha Heifetz as soloist) being performed. Soloists chosen with a regard for the important concertos to be given will include Arthur Rubinstein, Myra Hess and Rudolph Serkin. Sanroma will play the piano part in the new concerto of Dukelsky. Violinists will include Ruth Posselt, Heifetz, Zlatko Balakovic. The violoncello soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote" will be Gregor Piatigorsky.

COURIER

Rockland Me

SEP 24 1938

REALM OF MUSIC

by Gladys St. Clair Heistad

Announcement of the 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, has been received. The season also marks the 15th anniversary of Dr. Koussevitzky, with the Orchestra, and the announcement has this to say of the event:

"It was in the autumn of 1924 that Serge Koussevitzky arrived in America to become the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The span of the ensuing years—longer than that of any previous conductor—has borne fruit in the preeminence of the Orchestra which its conductor has made the fullest realization of his interpretative career. As Serge Koussevitzky opens his 15th season on Oct. 7 and 8, the Orchestra stands at the very height of its virtuosity and tonal beauty, the fulfillment of its leader's loftiest aim."

Dr. Koussevitzky, always alert to new creative currents and ever enkindled anew by the great scores of the past, is laying brilliant plans for the season. Beethoven will be predominating composer, a number of the Symphonies and the Violin Concerto (with Jascha Heifetz as soloist) being performed. Soloists chosen with a regard for the important concertos to be given will include Arthur Rubinstein, Myra Hess and Rudolph Serkin. Sanroma will play the piano part in the new concerto of Dukelsky. Violinists will include Ruth Posselt, Heifetz, Zlatko Balakovic. The violoncello soloist in Strauss' "Don Quixote" will be Gregor Piatigorsky.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

SEP 25 1938

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky opens its fifty-eighth season in Symphony hall, Boston, on Oct. 7 and 8. Twenty-four pairs of concerts will be given on Friday afternoons and Saturday nights, besides a shorter series on Mondays and Tuesdays, and a set of eight concerts at Harvard university. Guest conductors include Eugene Goosens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra; Georges Enesco, composer, and Igor Stravinsky, who will conduet programs of his own music, including a new concerto for orchestra, and appear as piano soloist. Other soloists are Myra Hess, Artur Rubinstein, Rudolf Serkin, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianists; Jascha Heifetz, Zlatko Balakovic, and Ruth Posselt, violinists, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist. The Coolidge quartet will play a new concerto for string quartet and orchestra, by Nicolai Berezowsky, second violinist in the Boston Symphony orchestra; Ernst Krenek will play his new piano concerto, and the "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven will be given at a special concert this fall.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 25 1938

Koussevitzky to Return

Dr. Serg[illegible]ssevitzky, who this season celebrates his fifteenth year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will arrive in New York tomorrow on the Normandie. A week after his return he will assemble the orchestra for rehearsal for its opening concert, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 7 and 8, in Symphony Hall, Boston.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

SEP 25 1938

Grand Duchess Among Notables On Normandie

When the Normandie drops anchor in New York Harbor tomorrow a number of notables will walk down the gangplank.

Her Imperial Highness Grand Duchess Marie of Russia is on board, coming to this country for an extended stay, and probably will come to Washington during her sojourn.

Others on the ship include the Belgian Ambassador, Count Van der Straten-Ponthoz; Walter Evans Edge, former United States Senator and diplomat, and Mrs. Edge; Irwin B. Laughlin, former United States Ambassador to Spain; Mr. and Mrs. Myron C. Taylor; and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

SEP 25 1938

Forum Books Noted Soloists and Lecturers

In addition to an extensive lecture program, which includes as headliners Alexander Kerensky, head of the Russian Provisional Government in 1917; Paul van Zeeland, former Premier of Belgium and author of the famous Van Zeeland plan for world financial adjustment; Stefan Zweig, biographer, and Andre Maurois, essayist and biographer, the Philadelphia Forum will present a distinguished musical season this year.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, again will make its annual Philadelphia appearance under Forum auspices.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD

SEP 26 1938

Dr. Koussevitzky Returns to U. S.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who this season celebrates his fifteenth year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will arrive in New York tomorrow on the Normandie. A week after his return he will assemble the orchestra for rehearsal for its opening concert, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 7 and 8, in Symphony Hall, Boston. The orchestra will give sixty concerts in Boston in its four subscription series.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

SEP 26 1938

Music and The Drama

NEWS OF THE MUSIC WORLD

The Boston Symphony begins its 58th season—the 15th under the directorship of Serge Koussevitsky—on October 7 in Symphony Hall. It will make its first appearances in New York on November 17 and 19. It is announced that Beethoven will be the predominating composer in the season's repertory. Novelties scheduled include a new piano concerto by Dukelsy; Nicolai Berezowsky's Concerto for string quartet and orchestra; a piano concerto by Ernest Krenek, in which the composer will be soloist; and Stravinsky's new orchestral concerto, which will have its first American performance during the composer's engagement as guest conductor and piano soloist with the orchestra. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be performed at a special concert. Other soloists include Heifetz, Zlatko Balokovic, Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Rudolph Serkin, Ruth Posselt, Jesus Maria Sanroma, and Gregor Piatigorsky.

Several new compositions written for and dedicated to Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, founder and sponsor of the Berkshire Festival of Chamber Music, will be played at the 20th anniversary concerts of the festival, to be given on South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., on September 21, 22 and 23. Among the works to be heard are a String Quartet in Three Movements by Anton von Weber, Louis Gruenberg's Quartet No. 2, Op. 40; Frederick Jacobi's "Hagiographa"; Frank Bridge's Fourth String Quartet, and Ernst Toch's new Quintet for piano and strings. The Kolisch, Gordon and Roth Quartets will participate in the festival.

MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD

SEP 26 1938

Jascha Heifetz

ries plans for the season of 1938-1939. Presented under the auspices of the School of Music, Yale University, the list this year will comprise six of the finest concert attractions ever arranged for Connecticut.

Jascha Heifetz, world famous violinist, will open the season on November 1st. In the following order will then appear the Boston Symphony Orchestra on November 16th; Amparo and Jose Iturbi, pianists, on December 13th; Marian Anderson, American Negro contralto, January 11th; Walter Gieseking, pianist, February 14th; and the Boston Symphony Orchestra again on March 8th to conclude the notable program. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, distinguished Russian conductor of the Boston Orchestra, will, as usual, lead the one hundred and ten piece organization at both of the New Haven concerts.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 26 1938

Ocean Travelers

The North German Lloyd liner Bremen will arrive today from Bremen and channel ports, bringing a large list of passengers, including Dr. Hans H. Dieckhoff, German Ambassador, and Dr. Hans Borchers, Consul General of Germany in New York. Dr. Dieckhoff is accompanied by his wife and their daughter, Charlotte. Others on the ship are Dr. Georg Krause-Wichmann, Dr. Georg Gyssling, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kettering, C. R. Henschel, Mme. Chang-Chun, Johannes S. Estroom, Frank Rediker, Colonel Cleveland C. Lansing, Werner Bateman and Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Weyerhauser.

The Czechoslovak Minister to the United States, Vladimir Hurban, and Vojta Benes, brother of President Benes of Czechoslovakia, are arriving on the Gdynia-America liner Batory. Also among the passengers are Henryk Floyar-Rajchman, Roman Kutylowski, Professor and Mrs. Charles Hodges, Professor Arthur P. Coleman, Professor Severyn Cytronberg, Dr. Alfred Schloman, Edward Witkowski, the Rev. Franciszek Domanski, Charles William Jacobsen, I. B. Pedersen and H. M. Marker.

Passengers on the French liner Normandie, arriving from Havre and Southampton, include Count Van der Straten-Ponthoz, Belgian Ambassador; Walter E. Edge, former United States Senator and Ambassador; Joseph Pulitzer Jr., Myron C. Taylor, former chairman of the board of United States Steel, with Mrs. Taylor; Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association, and Paul Manship, sculptor.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

SEP 26 1938

Johnson Back To Prep Met.

Managing Director of Opera Company Returns From Search for Talent.

Edward N. Johnson, managing director of the Metropolitan Opera Company, arrives today on the Normandie from his annual tour in search for European singing talent. Upon his arrival, he immediately will busy himself with the details of getting the Met's season, which starts in December, readied.

Another passenger of musical note on the Normandie is Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has been enjoying a European vacation. He too will commence preparations for the Boston's coming programs immediately he debarks.

Other notables on the liner include Mr. and Mrs. Ray Noble, he the well known band leader; Mrs. Gilbert Miller, wife of the theatrical producer; Jeff Dickson, Paris sports promoter; Mr. and Mrs. Harold S. Vanderbilt; Joseph Pulitzer, Jr., son of the famous publisher; and numerous members of the philanthropic Guggenheim family, including Mr. and Mrs. Simon Guggenheim and Mr. and Mrs. Murry Guggenheim.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

SEP 26 1938

Normandie Docks Today

Passengers in the French Line flagship Normandie, due in New York today, include: The Grand Duchess Marie of Russia, Count Van der Straten-Ponthoz, Belgian Ambassador to the United States; Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Bos[illegible]phony Orchestra; Edward Johnson, director of the Metropolitan Opera Company; and Ray Noble, British orchestra leader.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 26 1938

German, Czech Envoys Here From Europe Today

Brother of Benes Also Is on the Liner Batory

Dr. Hans H. Dieckhoff, German Ambassador to the United States, will arrive from Europe today aboard the North German Lloyd liner Bremen. The Czechoslovak Minister to the United States, Vladimir Hurban, and Vojta Benes, brother of President Benes of the Czech Republic, will arrive aboard the Gdynia America liner Batory.

Passengers arriving from Europe aboard the French liner Normandie include Count Robert van der Straten-Ponthoz, Belgian Ambassador to the United States; Walter Evans Edge, former Ambassador to France; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Edward Johnson, director of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, will return with Mrs. Lewis aboard the Panama Pacific liner City of Norfolk after a vacation trip to Mexico.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 27 1938

ENVOY DOUBTS WAR IS CERTAIN

Belgian Ambassador Sees Chance for Peace.

DR. RICE IS A PASSENGER

Tells of Talk He Had With Franco About Rebel Aims in Spain.

That there will be no armed conflict in Europe was the opinion expressed last night by Count Robert van der Straten-Ponthoz, Belgian Ambassador to the United States, as he arrived on the French liner Normandie.

The Belgian people are nervous, he said, but he cannot believe that war will break out.

"In case of an outbreak, however, I am sure that our country will not be involved and that all nations will respect the policy of independence which our King pronounced in 1934," declared the envoy, who goes to Washington today.

Another of the Normandie's passengers was Dr. Alexander Hamilton Rice, chairman of the Spanish Nationalist Relief Committee, who discussed a fifty-minute interview he had with Generalissimo Francisco Franco, Insurgent leader, on September 11 in the front line trenches of the Ebro sector near Alcaniz.

Fears for America.

In the interview, the first Franco ever granted at the front, the rebel commander expressed "great solicitation" for the United States which he feared in growing danger of being brought by communists to the same state as Spain just before the revolution.

Dr. Rice praised Gen. Franco calling the latter a man of the highest ideals, who is fighting not only for Spain, but for all humanity against atheism. The general told Dr. Rice that his aim is the bringing about of law and order and liberty and justice, with a strong moral sense such as the church stands for, and Christianity represents.

Dr. Rice felt himself convinced there would be no dictatorship in Spain like the German and Italian if the rebels won. Franco wants to be neither a dictator nor president, Dr. Rice said.

Two figures in the American music world were Normandie travelers, Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Johnson said that he expects to announce plans for the coming season within a week and that he had made no definite engagements abroad with foreign singers. He attended concerts in the State Opera in Stockholm and he visited other Scandinavian countries as well as France and Italy.

Dr. Koussevitzky is to begin his fifteenth season with the Boston orchestra and will start rehearsals for his opening concerts on October 7 and 8 in Boston.

MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL

SEP 26 1938

BRILLIANT CONCERT PROGRAM FOR NEW HAVEN SERIES

Presenting one of the finest concert schedules ever arranged in New Haven, the Woolsey Hall Concert Series under the auspices of the School of Music, Yale University, will commence on November 1, with a recital by Jascha Heifetz, violinist. In the following order will then appear during the season the Boston Symphony Orchestra, November 16; Amparo and Jose Iturbi in a two piano recital, December 13; Marian Anderson, Negro contralto, January 11; Walter Gieseking, pianist, February 14, and again the Boston Symphony Orchestra, March 8.

An interesting feature of the series is that three of the artists will be appearing for the first time on the famous New Haven musical schedule, they being Miss Anderson, Miss Iturbi and Mr. Gieseking. The former is probably the most talked of singer of the day. American born, Marian Anderson made her first great fame in Europe, and three years ago returned to her native land to be widely acclaimed as the vocal sensation of the day. Amparo Iturbi, sister of the famous Jose, made her American debut last year, and bids fair to rank with her brother as a concert personality. The joint recital by the two artists is one of the few they are giving together this season. Walter Gieseking, distinguished Franco-German pianist, is about the only first-ranking performer in his field who has not visited New Haven. Considered for the Woolsey Series last year, he was unable to come to this country because of his numerous European schedule, which called for more than one hundred concerts.

Heifetz and Jos Iturbi need no introduction to music-lovers. The former long has rated as one of the world's greatest violinists, and the latter since coming to America eight years ago, has made his mark as both pianist and conductor of symphony orchestras.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a standard occasion in New Haven, and no season would be complete without two appearances of the great one hundred and ten piece organization. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now in his fifteenth year as the orchestra's leader, will, as usual, conduct both of the New Haven concerts.

Many local concert patrons attend the Woolsey Hall Series each year, and the forthcoming schedule, being so notable, will doubtless attract many more.—Adv.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

SEP 26 1938

WOOLSEY HALL CONCERT SERIES

Presenting one of the finest concert schedules ever arranged in New Haven, the Woolsey Hall Concert Series under the auspices of the School of Music, Yale University, will commence on November 1st with a recital by Jascha Heifetz, violinist. In the following order will then appear during the season the Boston Symphony Orchestra on November 16th; Amparo and Jose Iturbi in a two piano recital on December 13th; Marian Anderson, Negro contralto, on January 11th; Walter Gieseking, pianist, February 14th, and again the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 8th.

An interesting feature of the series is that three of the artists will be appearing for the first time on the famous musical schedule, they being Miss Anderson, Miss Iturbi and Mr. Gieseking. The former is probably the most talked of singer of the day. American born, Marian Anderson made her first great fame in Europe, and three years ago returned to her native land to be widely acclaimed as the vocal sensation of the day. Amparo Iturbi, sister of the famous Jose, made her American debut last year, and bids fair to rank with her brother as a concert personality. The joint recital by the two artists is one of the few they are giving together this season. Walter Gieseking, distinguished Franco-German pianist, is about the only first-ranking performer in his field who has not visited New Haven.

Heifetz and Jose Iturbi need no introduction to music-lovers.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is a standard occasion in New Haven. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, now in his 15th year as the orchestra's leader, will, as usual, conduct both of the local concerts.

Conductor Brings Home Works By Stravinsky and Hindemith

Monitor — Sept. 27/38

By a Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK, Sept. 27—It is America—not Europe—that is today giving the world its finest music, in the opinion of Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is on this side of the Atlantic that the greatest compositions are now being written, and it is over here that interest in music and the arts is strongest, he said.

"There is nothing new in European music, no new names having risen to join those already known," Mr. Koussevitzky told The Christian Science Monitor correspondent here when he returned to New York aboard the steamship Normandie, of the French Line, last night. He especially deplored the musical situation in Germany, which he declared to be completely barren, and doubted if there would be a return in 500 years to the Germany of Beethoven, Bach, and Brahms. It would need that length of time, he said, "to clear from German thought the barbarisms now being inculcated by the present regime."

Mr. Koussevitzky predicted, however, that other nations would come along to lift up the musical torch Germany has dropped. But such a musical renaissance cannot come to Europe, he held, until the Continent's troubles are settled. He declared that European musicians were still technically great and that they still were capable of producing beautiful music, but that creative art abroad had been strangled by the tension and the fear under which men were living.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who is returning for his fifteenth season as Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the longest term in the history of the institution, seemed genuinely glad to be back in the United States. He revealed that, despite Europe's dearth of good new compositions, he had several new pieces for Boston audiences.

One of these is a new Stravinsky Concerto for Orchestra, which was brought out in Paris, and which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present for the first time in the United States. Another is a new suite by Paul Hindemith, while still another is a new Symphony by Arnold Bax. Mr. Koussevitzky said he would also conduct several compositions by Czech composers, as well as old and new favorites.

The maestro stated that the greatest successes in Europe this season had been scored by American composers. London had enthusiastically greeted Copland's "Mexican Rhapsodies," he added, and Leo Sowerby's Piano Concerto had won great ovations in London and Venice.

Mr. Koussevitzky remarked enthusiastically on the growth in musical appreciation in Boston, and, indeed, in all America, during the past 14 years. The demand for music is growing, he said, especially for new compositions.

"If there is not something new on the program, Boston audiences feel that something is missing," he said. At the same time, he spoke of the deep appreciation he felt for the way in which Boston audiences had never swerved in their loyalty to his conducting. As a parting word of advice to artists, Mr. Koussevitzky said that with world conditions as they are, it was the duty of the artist and the musician to give all he could.

Likewise returning aboard the Normandie from a trip abroad was Edward Johnson, General Manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association of New York City. He toured the Scandinavian countries, France and Italy, attending concerts, but said he had made no further definite arrangements with foreign singers for the coming opera season. He said that within a week the Association would be ready to announce this year's plans.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 27 1938

Edward Johnson Back After European Tour

Head of Metropolitan to Announce Opera Plans Soon

Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association, returned last evening on the French liner Normandie. He attended concerts in the State Opera in Stockholm, Sweden, and visited other Scandinavian countries, as well as France and Italy.

Mr. Johnson said that he would announce plans for the forthcoming opera season within a week. He said that he had made no definite engagements while abroad with foreign singers to appear at the Metropolitan next season.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will begin his fifteenth season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, also arrived on the Normandie. He will soon begin rehearsals for the opening concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7 and 8 in Symphony Hall, Boston.

FILM DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 27 1938

The Very Rev. OWEN FRANCIS DUDLEY of London, unofficial British pix censor, arrived in New York yesterday on the Santa Elena after a lecture tour of the West Indies, Australia and New Zealand.

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, conductor, E. N. JOHNSON, Metropolitan Opera Company head, RAY NOBLE, orchestra leader, and MRS. GILBERT MILLER arrived in New York yesterday on the Normandie.

KOUSSEVITZKY REACHES HOME

Tells of Rough Ocean Crossing on Normandie

B Post — Sept 28/38

After an ocean voyage, the worst in the memory of anyone on the Normandie, and a motor trip through devastated New England in the car of Symphony Manager George E. Judd, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived at his Brookline home late yesterday afternoon, none the worse for his harrowing experiences.

The storm which kept most of a capacity passenger list away from the dining room and the disquieting sight of the destruction of New England's "fine old trees" seemed to be more on the conductor's mind than the events in Europe which caused him to set sail a week earlier than he had planned.

According to Dr. Koussevitzky, however, the people of Paris up to the time of his departure were calm and determined. There was no hysteria. Although not "controlled" in the Nazi and Fascist sense, the French press was definitely not inflammatory. This, in Dr. Koussevitzky's estimation, had a salutary effect.

EDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1938 C

B Trans

Koussevitzky Condemns 'No. 1 Gangster' of World

Political Pressure on Europe Art Depresses Boston Symphony Conductor Returning Here

By Moses Smith

Neat little compartments separating art from politics no longer exist for Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has just returned from France on the Normandie after an exceptionally stormy passage. Music, he said, far from proceeding along its normal course in Europe, is in a low estate.

The reason? "Prostration in Europe." There is no time or inclination to feel or think about creation. The people's greatest energies are concentrated on war. Is there any hope for better men? "When the world's gangster No. 1 is no more!" came back the answer quickly and heatedly.

That was the only flareup in discussion devoted as much to politics as to art, as Dr. Koussevitzky, just arrived from an arduous and depressing automobile ride from New York through storm-harassed Connecticut and Massachusetts, spoke to reporters in his Brookline house. In a quieter tone he offered another reason for the present musical "depression" in Europe.

Germany Decadent

"Musical art must find a new source. Wagner and Brahms ended the round of great music in Germany. Aside from Hindemith, there is today in Germany only decadence—and shockingly bad taste. In France, at least good taste remains. But the compositions are empty. Only the stable composers remain—Hindemith and Stravinsky."

This season's programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will include, Dr. Koussevitzky confirmed, music by both masters—Stravinsky's new Concerto for small orchestra and the Suite from Hindemith's ballet, "Nobilissima visione." Another novelty will be the Sixth Symphony of Arnold Bax.

America New Source

The inference from the conductor's remarks about a "new source" was that this would be America, where, he said, interpretative art has already reached a height quite unpredicted by the best of late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century interpreters. Already, he intimated, creative art here has challenged the best in Europe.

At the two modern music festivals recently in London and Venice the two most successful works were by two Americans—Leo Sowerby's Piano Concerto and Aaron Copland's Suite, "El Salon Mexico." The first was played at the Boston Symphony concerts a couple of years ago. The second will be played early this season.

Our Orchestras Best

Although the best European orchestras cannot compare favorably with ours, the individual players in them are still excellent. The training, particularly at a place like the Paris Conservatoire continues to be better than anything in America, according to Dr. Koussevitzky.

Our orchestras are constantly taking in nowadays young, able musicians for the ranks. But the first chairs still have to be filled here by Europeans. Dr. Koussevitzky expects this condition will be remedied by the Academy at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, a dream that he hopes will be realized in the summer of 1940.

Two New Players

The conductor picked up two new players while abroad—a double-bass and second flutist—who will be the only new members of the orchestra this season. Despite his pessimism as to the international scene, he looks forward to his fifteenth season eagerly. It will be a busy season again—busier than that of any other American orchestra. That has been the reason, he explained, why it has been difficult to include such projects as children's concerts, for which he agreed there was a need here.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

SEP 28 1938

Europe Creative Desert, Declares Koussevitzky

New York, Sept. 27.—(AP.)—Serge Koussevitzky, renowned conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sees the present European situation as presenting the arts with their greatest opportunity.

"And particularly music," he added, "because in addition to relaxing and refreshing a weary people, music has the added power of movement. It goes along, and catches the listener up, and takes him out of himself."

Koussevitzky, with his wife and party, arrived last night after a stormy crossing on the "Normandie" and left today for Boston to begin rehearsals for the new season.

He found Europe a creative desert, he said, at least in music.

"I will play many more new American works this season than works by Europeans," he said. "I have found only three of these last, all by established composers, Stravinsky, Hindemith and Bax."

(3)

Koussevitzky, Back from Europe, Saddened by Low Depths of Culture

B. Her. By LAWRENCE DAME Sept. 28/38

Gloomy over prospects of war in Europe but enthusiastic about the prospects of his 15th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky reached his Brookline home last night after a storm-tossed voyage from France.

"France will certainly aid the Czechs—now there is no doubt," said the famous maestro. "In France, during the visit which started in August, I spoke with many, with peasants and with musicians. In absolute quietness, oh, so quietly, they said, 'When the country calls, we will go to die like men.'"

When Dr. Koussevitzky, rested and calm a half-hour after a long drive from New York, arrived at his Druce street home, he looked at hurricane-battered trees in the vicinity and exclaimed, "What is the matter with your Nature? In Europe the people are crazy and here Nature is crazy.

BLASTS HITLER

More disturbing to the conductor than the storm was Hitler's speech. A resident of Germany for six years during his student period, Dr. Koussevitzky expressed himself as horrified by "the down-culture" of Germany today.

As for Hitler, he said, "I cannot imagine such a head for the state, such a brutal peasant without culture."

Modern German music, he declared, "shows bad taste such as never before—it is in its decadence."

In fact, the maestro found that European composing generally is in decadence, with little new to offset the fact that America today is giving the world its finest new music.

"I think the reason is that in Europe, everybody is in absolute prostration—there is no feeling for art and not time to think about creation. War, war—and so Europe is musically dead."

Declaring that interpretive art is at a high standard as compared with creative music, the doctor saw no hope for creation in the future until people forget war.

"When the greatest world gangster No. 1 doesn't exist, there may be hope," declared the artist, in one of his rare outbursts of bitterness.

Then he smiled and told of the way German musicians play today. With such gestures of playing that one would have thought him holding a string instrument, he mimicked the hand movements of a highly tense and erratic musician, capable only of turning out strains which would annoy rather than please.

Dr. Koussevitzky placed his supple hand on his heart, with a quizzical look. "It is from here the vibrations must come, not from here," he said, and he wiggled his fingers.

Rehearsal work with the orchestra will start Monday. Two new players, a second flutist and a double bass, will join the ranks, of whom George E. Judd, who drove Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky from New York past wrecked trees and festooned wires, is the manager.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 28 1938

MUSIC NOTES

The San Carlo Opera Company will give two benefit performances today at the Center Theatre: the "Barber of Seville," this afternoon for the Municipal Art Committee; "Samson et Dalila," tonight in aid of the Jamaica Jewish Center. Both works will be given for the first time in the company's current season.

As a result of a competition, Werner Josten's "Symphony in F" was selected for publication by the Juilliard Musical Foundation. This is the second of Mr. Josten's works to be thus honored. The symphony has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the composer's direction.

Efrem Kurtz, musical director of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, has arrived from Europe to begin his duties here with the company's orchestra, in preparation for the nineteen-day engagement next month at the Metropolitan Opera House.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

SEP 29 1938

Conductor Scores Hitler's Music

Boston — (INS) — Music in Europe is dead and the corpse lies at the feet of the war lords of whom Adolf Hitler is world gangster No. 1, in the characterization today of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, in his first interview since returning from a tour in France.

German music has all sound and fury—"bad taste like never before," said the Maestro.

French music has good taste but is empty. "It has nothing to say."

"The people are in a state of prostration," he said. "They cannot hope to create in such an atmosphere. The contemporary concerts in London and Venice were poor—not to be compared with the concerts one hears in the United States."

Dr. Koussevitzky goes into rehearsal next Monday for the Boston Symphony Orchestra season which opens Oct. 7.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN

SEP 28 1938

Charges Hitler Killed Music in Europe

BOSTON, Sept. 28 (INS)—Music in Europe is dead and the corpse lies at the feet of the war lords of whom Adolf Hitler is world gangster No. 1, in the characterization today of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, in his first interview since returning from a tour in France.

German music has all sound and fury—"bad taste like never before," said the maestro.

French music has good taste but is empty. "It has nothing to say."

"The people are in a state of prostration," he said. "They cannot hope to create in such an atmosphere. The contemporary concerts in London and Venice were poor—not to be compared with the concerts one hears in the United States."

Dr. Koussevitzky goes into rehearsal next Monday for the Boston Symphony orchestra season which opens October 7.

RUTLAND, VT.
HERALD

SEP 28 1938

Words Without Music

BY LOUIS REID.

The Metropolitan Opera season is to be extended next year through May as an added attraction for visitors to New York's World's Fair. The extra month will be given over entirely to Wagner.

Contrary to the popular belief, New York is not the cradle of grand opera in America. New Orleans has this distinction. Almost 150 years ago a company was presenting French operas in the southern city.

New Music Prize.

Another cash lure to musical inspiration in connection with the World's fair has been announced. A music publisher offers a $500 prize for an original unaccompanied choral composition to be dedicated to the fair. Only American citizens may compete. The composition must be a setting of a poem by an American author selected by the contestant, and its performance time must not be less than ten or more than fifteen minutes. It should be capable of being sung a cappella by a four-part mixed chorus of singers of high school age, and should be written in open score.

No longer will the summer festivals of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires be hampered by rain. An imposing, and, it is reported, acoustically-satisfactory shed has been erected for the orchestra's pastoral performances. In previous years cloudbursts have descended upon the musicians at the most impressive moments of Beethoven and Wagner.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 28 1938

Edward Johnson Back After European Tour

Head of Metropolitan to Announce Opera Plans Soon

Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association, returned on Monday on the French liner Normandie. He attended concerts in the State Opera in Stockholm, Sweden, and visited other Scandinavian countries, as well as France and Italy.

Mr. Johnson said that he would announce plans for the forthcoming opera season within a week. He said that he had made no definite engagements while abroad with foreign singers to appear at the Metropolitan next season.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will begin his fifteenth season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, also arrived on the Normandie. He will soon begin rehearsals for the opening concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7 and 8 in Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 28 1938

MUSIC NOTES

The music which Jascha Heifetz will play in the film "The Restless Age," now before Samuel Goldwyn's cameras in Hollywood, was announced today. The violinist, in his debut-recital before motion-picture audiences, will be heard in his own arrangement of the Prelude from the Bach Partita in E Major; Saint-Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso;" Tschaikowsky's Andante Cantabile; the slow movement of the Mendelssohn Concerto; Wieniawski's D Major Polonaise; the slow movement of the Brahms D Minor Sonata; the Dinicu-Heifetz "Hora Staccato;" Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Flight of the Bumble Bee" and the Heifetz arrangement of Ponce's "Estrellita."

Both of today's performances by the San Carlo Opera Company at the Center Theater are benefits. The matinee of "The Barber of Seville" is being given for the Municipal Art Committee, which is sponsoring the current season of popular-priced opera. Tonight "Samson et Dalila" will be presented for the benefit of the Jamaica Jewish Center. Coe Glade and Aroldo Lindi will have the title roles. Both "The Barber" and "Samson" are having their only performances of the season, which ends next Saturday evening.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was one of several prominent musicians who returned to America in the Normandie on Monday. (Others included Edward Johnson, general manager, and Edward Ziegler, assistant general manager, of the Metropolitan Opera.) Dr. Koussevitzky begins rehearsals of his orchestra next Monday in preparation for its opening concerts on October 7 and 8. The Boston Symphony will give sixty concerts in its home city, eight in Cambridge, Mass.; fifteen in New York, five in Providence, two each in Hartford, New Haven and Pittsburgh, and single concerts in Rochester, Buffalo, Ann Arbor, Toledo, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Northampton and New Brunswick, N. J., this season.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

SEP 28 1938

Bowdoin College To Have Music Institute

BRUNSWICK—Music will be the theme of the ninth biennial Institute which will be held next April, according to an announcement by Prof. Frederic E. Tillotson. The program will be divided into two sections, one of lectures and one of concerts, both of which will be open to the public.

On the lecture program will be: Dr. Otto Kindeldey, Professor of Music, Cornell University and a prominent musicologist, Dr. Archibald T. Davidson, Professor of Choral Music, Harvard University, Olin Downes, music critic, New York Times and director of the New York World's Fair, Aaron Copland, Dean of American composers, lecture on modern music, John Tasker Howard, lecturer, composer, and author, authority on American music.

On the concerts program are: Curtis String Quartet, in a program of modern American chamber music by Walter Piston, Aaron Copland, and others.

Ives Chardon, cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Frederic Tillotson in a cycle of Bethoven and Bach sonatas.

George Laurent, flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a celebrated harpsichordist in a program to be announced.

Choral concert by the combined singing clubs of Bowdoin College (men) and Wellesley College (women) conducted by Mlle. Nadia Boulanger internationally famous woman musician, and soloists.

With Professor Tillotson on the committee are: Professors Charles T. Burnett, Manton Copeland, Thomas Van Cleve, M. Phillips Mason, Stanley P. Chase, and Stanley B. Smith; Associate Professors Herbert R. Brown and Newton P. Stallknecht; and Assistant Professors Philip S. Wilder, Fritz C. A. Kolln, Elbridge Sibley, Samuel E. Kamerling, and George H. Quinby.

---

6 BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN New Engla

Sept. 28/38

Koussevitsky Scores Hitler

Characterizing Adolf Hitler as "world gangster number one," Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, in the first interview since his return to Boston from France, declared that Europe is musically dead, and laid its death at the feet of the war-lords.

"The people are in a state of prostration," he exclaimed. "They cannot hope to create in such an atmosphere. The contemporary concerts in London and Venice were poor—not to be compared with the concerts one hears of the United States. And is it any wonder?"

Music in Germany, he says, has become all sound and fury with nothing "from in here," tapping his chest.

"Bad taste like never before!" he expostulated. And as for the French:

"Good taste, always, even with the young composers. But empty! It has nothing to say."

America, looked upon by many Europeans as the land of money-grubbing Phillistines, comes in for high praise from the noted conductor. For in London and Venice the greatest success of the season was that of young American composers and we have, he says, the finest interpretation of music in this country.

SAYS AMERICA EXCELS

"If it is true that there is little creation, it is also true that today we have great interpretation," he added. "Never before have the works of the great masters been played so well. And in America they are being played more beautifully than anywhere in Europe."

Ready to go into rehearsal next Monday for the Boston Symphony season, which opens Friday, October 7, Koussevitsky was, as usual, dapper in dress and warmly enthusiastic in his delightfully accented speech.

"As for new compositions which we will play, among them will be the Stravinski concerto for orchestra, which has been given one private performance but is otherwise new in this country. And we will give the Novilissima Visione, by Paul Hindemith. When I complain of the quality of contemporary German music, I except only Hindemith."

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL - COURIER

SEP 28 1938

Musical Mor

If the members of the Yale University Glee Club start strutting about with high hats this year, they will have ample justification. The announcement that they will appear as assisting artists for the fifth of the eight concerts scheduled by the combined New Haven Symphony Orchestra and Civic Orchestra marks them as the first gleemen to claim a complete symphonic accompaniment. This will be the first time a Glee Club has performed as a unit with a full symphony orchestra and will also be the first time the Odchestra has supplied the instrumental background for a collective soloist. The innovation may be musically unorthodox and may shock conservative, long-haired devotees of the musical muse—but concert patrons look forward to an interesting and novel evening's entertainment.

It will take strong singing and fine singing from the university throats to match the other assisting artists listed for the season. Bruce Simonds, New Haven's most famous pianist and an internationally known performer, starts off the series on October 10. Georges Barrere, undisputed monarch of all flute players, follows on November 7. Harold Bauer, one of the few truly great pianists of modern times, comes to New Haven December 5. An all Wagner-Tchaikowsky pro-

---

THE ORIGINAL
HENRY ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Union REPUBLICAN
APR 30 1939

SAMOVAR GIVEN KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston, April 29—(AP)—A richly designed silver samovar was presented to Serge Koussevitzky tonight at the close of a concert which marked the end of his 15th season as conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra. Ernest B. Dane, president of the orchestra's trustees, made the presentation of behalf of the trustees, and voiced appreciation for Koussevitzky's "15 years of unsurpassed achievement."

---

tal oratorio, Verdi's Requiem, with the solo quartet from St. Bartholomew's Church in New York City and huge chorus of mixed voices.

Pending Boston Symphony Season

Serge Koussevitsky, returning from France on the Normandie which arrives in New York Monday will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra for rehearsal a week later, in preparation for the opening of the Symphony season in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7-8. This will be the fifteenth consecutive season of Koussevitsky in America as the Orchestra's conductor.

New music of special interest will lend importance to the anniversary season, while the classical repertory will have its due predominance. A larger number than usual of the

---

KOUSSEVITZKY REACHES HOME

Tells of Rough Ocean Crossing on Normandie

After an ocean voyage, the worst in the memory of anyone on the Normandie, and a motor trip through devastated New England in the car of Symphony Manager George E. Judd, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived at his Brookline home late yesterday afternoon, none the worse for his harrowing experiences.

The storm which kept most of a capacity passenger list away from the dining room and the disquieting sight of the destruction of New England's "fine old trees" seemed to be more on the conductor's mind than the events in Europe which caused him to set sail a week earlier than he had planned.

According to Dr. Koussevitzky, however, the people of Paris up to the time of his departure were calm and determined. There was no hysteria. Although not "controlled" in the Nazi and Fascist sense, the French press was definitely not inflammatory. This, in Dr. Koussevitzky's estimation, had a salutary effect.

---

esco, and Eugene Goossens (one week each).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give sixty concerts in Boston in its four subscription series, eight in Cambridge, Mass., fifteen in greater New York, five in Providence, two each in Hartford, New Haven, and Pittsburgh. There will likewise be single concerts in Rochester, Buffalo, Ann Arbor, Toledo, Cleveland, Philadelphia, New Brunswick, (N. J.) and Northampton.

③

Koussevitzky, Back from Europe, Saddened by Low Depths of Culture

B. Her. · By LAWRENCE DAME Sept. 28/38

Gloomy over prospects of war in Europe but enthusiastic about the prospects of his 15th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky reached his Brookline home last night after a storm-tossed voyage from France.

"France will certainly aid the Czechs—now there is no doubt," said the famous maestro. "In France, during the visit which started in August, I spoke with many, with peasants and with musicians. In absolute quietness, oh, so quietly, they said, 'When the country calls, we will go to die like men.'"

When Dr. Koussevitzky, rested and calm a half-hour after a long drive from New York, arrived at his Druce street home, he looked at hurricane-battered trees in the vicinity and exclaimed, "What is the matter with your Nature? In Europe the people are crazy and here Nature is crazy.

BLASTS HITLER

More disturbing to the conductor than the storm was Hitler's speech. A resident of Germany for six years during his student period, Dr. Koussevitzky expressed himself as horrified by "the down-culture" of Germany today.

As for Hitler, he said, "I cannot imagine such a head for the state, such a brutal peasant without culture."

Modern German music, he declared, "shows bad taste such as never before—it is in its decadence."

In fact, the maestro found that European composing generally is in decadence, with little new to offset the fact that America today is giving the world its finest new music.

"I think the reason is that in Europe, everybody is in absolute prostration—there is no feeling for art and not time to think about creation. War, war—and so Europe is musically dead."

Declaring that interpretive art is at a high standard as compared with creative music, the doctor saw no hope for creation in the future until people forget war.

"When the greatest world gangster No. 1 doesn't exist, there may be hope," declared the artist, in one of his rare outbursts of bitterness.

Then he smiled and told of the way German musicians play today. With such gestures of playing that one would have thought him holding a string instrument, he mimicked the hand movements of a highly tense and erratic musician, capable only of turning out strains which would annoy rather than please.

Dr. Koussevitzky placed his supple hand on his heart, with a quizzical look. "It is from here the vibrations must come, not from here," he said, and he wiggled his fingers.

Rehearsal work with the orchestra will start Monday. Two new players, a second flutist and a double bass, will join the ranks, of whom George E. Judd, who drove Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky from New York past wrecked trees and festooned wires, is the manager.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 28 1938

MUSIC NOTES

The San Carlo Opera Company will give two benefit performances today at the Center Theatre: the "Barber of Seville," this afternoon for the Municipal Art Committee; "Samson et Dalila," tonight in aid of the Jamaica Jewish Center. Both works will be given for the first time in the company's current season.

As a result of a competition, Werner Josten's "Symphony in F" was selected for publication by the Juilliard Musical Foundation. This is the second of Mr. Josten's works to be thus honored. The symphony has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the composer's direction.

Efrem Kurtz, musical director of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, has arrived from Europe to begin his duties here with the company's orchestra, in preparation for the nineteen-day engagement next month at the Metropolitan Opera House.

---

6 BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN New Engla

Sept. 28/38

Koussevitsky Scores Hitler

Characterizing Adolf Hitler as "world gangster number one," Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, in the first interview since his return to Boston from France, declared that Europe is musically dead, and laid its death at the feet of the war-lords.

"The people are in a state of prostration," he exclaimed. "They cannot hope to create in such an atmosphere. The contemporary concerts in London and Venice were poor—not to be compared with the concerts one hears of the United States. And is it any wonder?"

Music in Germany, he says, has become all sound and fury with nothing "from in here," tapping his chest.

"Bad taste like never before!" he expostulated. And as for the French:

"Good taste, always, even with the young composers. But empty! It has nothing to say."

America, looked upon by many Europeans as the land of money-grubbing Phillistines, comes in for high praise from the noted conductor. For in London and Venice the greatest success of the season was that of young American composers and we have, he says, the finest interpretation of music in this country.

SAYS AMERICA EXCELS

"If it is true that there is little creation, it is also true that today we have great interpretation," he added. "Never before have the works of the great masters been played so well. And in America they are being played more beautifully than anywhere in Europe."

Ready to go into rehearsal next Monday for the Boston Symphony season, which opens Friday, October 7, Koussevitsky was, as usual, dapper in dress and warmly enthusiastic in his delightfully accented speech.

"As for new compositions which we will play, among them will be the Stravinski concerto for orchestra, which has been given one private performance but is otherwise new in this country. And we will give the Novilissima Visione, by Paul Hindemith. When I complain of the quality of contemporary German music, I except only Hindemith."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

SEP 29 1938

Conductor Scores Hitler's Music

Boston — (INS) — Music in Europe is dead and the corpse lies at the feet of the war lords of whom Adolf Hitler is world gangster No. 1, in the characterization today of Dr. Serge Kousvevitsky, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra, in his first interview since returning from a tour in France.

German music has all sound and fury—"bad taste like never before," said the Maestro.

French music has good taste but is empty. "It has nothing to say."

"The people are in a state of prostration," he said. "They cannot hope to create in such an atmosphere. The contemporary concerts in London and Venice were poor—not to be compared with the concerts one hears in the United States."

Dr. Koussevitsky goes into rehearsal next Monday for the Boston Symphony Orchestra season which opens Oct. 7.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN

SEP 28 1938

Charges Hitler Killed Music in Europe

BOSTON, Sept. 28 (INS)—Music in Europe is dead and the corpse lies at the feet of the war lords of whom Adolf Hitler is world gangster No. 1, in the characterization today of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of Boston Symphony orchestra, in his first interview since returning from a tour in France.

German music has all sound and fury—"bad taste like never before," said the maestro.

French music has good taste but is empty. "It has nothing to say."

"The people are in a state of prostration," he said. "They cannot hope to create in such an atmosphere. The contemporary concerts in London and Venice were poor—not to be compared with the concerts one hears in the United States."

Dr. Koussevitsky goes into rehearsal next Monday for the Boston Symphony orchestra season which opens October 7.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL - COURIER

SEP 28 1938

Musical Moments

Yale Glee Club To Sing With N. H. Symphony

Koussevitzky Returns

If the members of the Yale University Glee Club start strutting about with high hats this year, they will have ample justification. The announcement that they will appear as assisting artists for the fifth of the eight concerts scheduled by the combined New Haven Symphony Orchestra and Civic Orchestra marks them as the first gleemen to claim a complete symphonic accompaniment. This will be the first time a Glee Club has performed as a unit with a full symphony orchestra and will also be the first time the Odchestra has supplied the instrumental background for a collective soloist. The innovation may be musically unorthodox and may shock conservative, long-haired devotees of the musical muse—but concert patrons look forward to an interesting and novel evening's entertainment.

It will take strong singing and fine singing from the university throats to match the other assisting artists listed for the season. Bruce Simonds, New Haven's most famous pianist and an internationally known performer, starts off the series on October 10. Georges Barrere, undisputed monarch of all flute players, follows on November 7. Harold Bauer, one of the few truly great pianists of modern times, comes to New Haven December 5. An all Wagner-Tchaikowsky program completes the first half of the season on January 16.

February 6 the Glee Club tries its symphonic wings with Director Marshall Bartholomew as guest conductor for the vocal numbers. Kathleen Parlow, foremost woman violinist of the concert stage, follows on February 27. Povla Frijsh, celebrated Danish soprano, is scheduled for March 27. And on May 8 the Final Concert, true to the tradition now firmly established, features a complete presentation of the immortal oratorio, Verdi's "Requiem," with the solo quartet from St. Bartholomew's Church in New York City and huge chorus of mixed voices.

Pending Boston Symphony Season

Serge Koussevitsky, returning from France on the Normandie which arrives in New York Monday will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra for rehearsal a week later, in preparation for the opening of the Symphony season in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7-8. This will be the fifteenth consecutive season of Koussevitsky in America as the Orchestra's conductor.

New music of special interest will lend importance to the anniversary season, while the classical repertory will have its due predominance. A larger number than usual of the esco, and Eugene Goossens (one week each).

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give sixty concerts in Boston in its four subscription series, eight in Cambridge, Mass., fifteen in greater New York, five in Providence, two each in Hartford, New Haven, and Pittsburgh. There will likewise be single concerts in Rochester, Buffalo, Ann Arbor, Toledo, Cleveland, Philadelphia, New Brunswick, (N. J.) and Northampton.

RUTLAND, VT.
HERALD

SEP 28 1938

Words Without Music

BY LOUIS REID.

The Metropolitan Opera season is to be extended next year through May as an added attraction for visitors to New York's World's Fair. The extra month will be given over entirely to Wagner.

Contrary to the popular belief, New York is not the cradle of grand opera in America. New Orleans has this distinction. Almost 150 years ago a company was presenting French operas in the southern city.

New Music Prize.

Another cash lure to musical inspiration in connection with the World's fair has been announced. A music publisher offers a $500 prize for an original unaccompanied choral composition to be dedicated to the fair. Only American citizens may compete. The composition must be a setting of a poem by an American author selected by the contestant, and its performance time must not be less than ten or more than fifteen minutes. It should be capable of being sung a cappella by a four-part mixed chorus of singers of high school age, and should be written in open score.

No longer will the summer festivals of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires be hampered by rain. An imposing, and, it is reported, acoustically-satisfactory shed has been erected for the orchestra's pastoral performances. In previous years cloudbursts have descended upon the musicians at the most impressive moments of Beethoven and Wagner.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 28 1938

Edward Johnson Back After European Tour

Head of Metropolitan to Announce Opera Plans Soon

Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association, returned on Monday on the French liner Normandie. He attended concerts in the State Opera in Stockholm, Sweden, and visited other Scandinavian countries, as well as France and Italy.

Mr. Johnson said that he would announce plans for the forthcoming opera season within a week. He said that he had made no definite engagements while abroad with foreign singers to appear at the Metropolitan next season.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will begin his fifteenth season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, also arrived on the Normandie. He will soon begin rehearsals for the opening concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 7 and 8 in Symphony Hall, Boston.

KOUSSEVITZKY REACHES HOME

Tells of Rough Ocean Crossing on Normandie

After an ocean voyage, the worst in the memory of anyone on the Normandie, and a motor trip through devastated New England in the car of Symphony Manager George E. Judd, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived at his Brookline home late yesterday afternoon, none the worse for his harrowing experiences.

The storm which kept most of a capacity passenger list away from the dining room and the disquieting sight of the destruction of New England's "fine old trees" seemed to be more on the conductor's mind than the events in Europe which caused him to set sail a week earlier than he had planned.

According to Dr. Koussevitzky, however, the people of Paris up to the time of his departure were calm and determined. There was no hysteria. Although not "controlled" in the Nazi and Fascist sense, the French press was definitely not inflammatory. This, in Dr. Koussevitzky's estimation, had a salutary effect.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 28 1938

MUSIC NOTES

The music which Jascha Heifetz will play in the film "The Restless Age," now before Samuel Goldwyn's cameras in Hollywood, was announced today. The violinist, in his debut-recital before motion-picture audiences, will be heard in his own arrangement of the Prelude from the Bach Partita in E Major; Saint-Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso;" Tschaikowsky's Andante Cantabile; the slow movement of the Mendelssohn Concerto; Wieniawski's D Major Polonaise; the slow movement of the Brahms D Minor Sonata; the Dinicu-Heifetz "Hora" Staccato;" Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Flight of the Bumble Bee" and the Heifetz arrangement of Ponce's "Estrellita."

Both of today's performances by the San Carlo Opera Company at the Center Theater are benefits. The matinee of "The Barber of Seville" is being given for the Municipal Art Committee, which is sponsoring the current season of popular-priced opera. Tonight "Samson et Dalila" will be presented for the benefit of the Jamaica Jewish Center. Coe Glade and Aroldo Lindi will have the title roles. Both "The Barber" and "Samson" are having their only performances of the season, which ends next Saturday evening.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was one of several prominent musicians who returned to America in the Normandie on Monday. (Others included Edward Johnson, general manager, and Edward Ziegler, assistant general manager, of the Metropolitan Opera.) Dr. Koussevitzky begins rehearsals of his orchestra next Monday in preparation for its opening concerts on October 7 and 8. The Boston Symphony will give sixty concerts in its home city, eight in Cambridge, Mass.; fifteen in New York, five in Providence, two each in Hartford, New Haven and Pittsburgh, and single concerts in Rochester, Buffalo, Ann Arbor, Toledo, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Northampton and New Brunswick, N. J., this season.

LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

SEP 28 1938

Bowdoin College To Have Music Institute

BRUNSWICK—Music will be the theme of the ninth biennial Institute which will be held next April, according to an announcement by Prof. Frederic E. Tillotson. The program will be divided into two sections, one of lectures and one of concerts, both of which will be open to the public.

On the lecture program will be: Dr. Otto Kindeldey, Professor of Music, Cornell University and a prominent musicologist, Dr. Archibald T. Davidson, Professor of Choral Music, Harvard University, Olin Downes, music critic, New York Times and director of the New York World's Fair, Aaron Copland, Dean of American composers, lecture on modern music, John Tasker Howard, lecturer, composer, and author, authority on American music.

On the concerts program are: Curtis String Quartet, in a program of modern American chamber music by Walter Piston, Aaron Copland, and others.

Ives Chardon, cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Frederic Tillotson in a cycle of Bethoven and Bach sonatas.

George Laurent, flutist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and a celebrated harpsichordist in a program to be announced.

Choral concert by the combined singing clubs of Bowdoin College (men) and Wellesley College (women) conducted by Mlle. Nadia Boulanger internationally famous woman musician, and soloists.

With Professor Tillotson on the committee are: Professors Charles T. Burnett, Manton Copeland, Thomas Van Cleve, M. Phillips Mason, Stanley P. Chase, and Stanley B. Smith; Associate Professors Herbert R. Brown and Newton P. Stallknecht; and Assistant Professors Philip S. Wilder, Fritz C. A. Kolln, Elbridge Sibley, Samuel E. Kamerling, and George H. Quinby.

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

4

SEP 30 1938

Forum Season Opens Oct. 17 at Academy

Greatest Variety of Music, Lectures, Ballet Ever Listed Is Ready

William K. Huff, executive director of The Philadelphia Forum, announced today that The Forum's eighteenth season will open Monday evening, Oct. 17, at the Academy of Music with Alexander Kerensky, head of the Russian Provisional Government in 1917, who will speak on "Democracies vs. Dictatorships." On the following Friday evening, Oct. 21, Julien Bryan will show his uncensored documentary film "Inside Nazi Germany." The remainder of the October program will include Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in "Amphitryon 38," with the Forum's evenings Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 24 and 25, and the first and only Philadelphia appearance of the Wagnerian Festival Singers, an extraordinary European ensemble.

The November program will open with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in Chekhov's "The Sea Gull," on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Nov. 1 and 2.

Among other events to be presented by The Forum will be Paul van Zeeland, former premier of Belgium, author of the famous World Trade Report; Stefan Zweig, historian and biographer, who will discuss "The History of Tomorrow"; Andre Maurois, biographer and essayist, member of the Academie Francaise, who will speak on "French Wit and English and American Humor"; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Lawrence Tibbett, leading baritone of the Metropolitan; Kathryn Meisle, leading contralto of the Metropolitan, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Josef Hofman, pianist, and the Curtis Symphony Orchestra, with Fritz Reiner conducting; Elizabeth Schumann, leading soprano of the Vienna State Opera; the Salzburg Trapp Choir; Robert Casadesus, pianist; Elissa Landi, famous stage and screen star, who will explain "The Difference Between Stage and Screen Acting"; George Earle Raiguel, author and publicist, who will tell "What I Saw This Summer in Europe," the only lecture in Philadelphia except for his subscription series; Agnes Macphail, first woman member of the Canadian Parliament, who will use as her text, "We, the Good Neighbors"; Carl Sandburg, distinguished American poet and biographer, on "American Folk Songs and Tall Tales"; Sydney R. Montague, Royal Canadian Mounted Police; William Lyon Phelps, who will be heard in three talks on the new books, which will be discussed also by Edward Weeks, editor of the Atlantic Monthly; Christopher Morley, novelist and essayist, and his brother Felix, editor of the Washington Post, who will be heard in a debate on "Do Newspapers Do More Harm Than Good?"

The Forum will present two ballets, Argentinita, queen of Spanish dancers, and her Andalusian Company, and Trudi Schoop and her Dancing Comedians.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

SEP 29 1938

Rutgers Announces Its Concert Series

Special to Newark News.

NEW BRUNSWICK—For the fifth consecutive year the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature the Rutgers University's concert series of five concerts. Announcement of the series was made today by Professor Howard D. McKinney, head of the music department.

John Charles Thomas, well-known barytone, will open the series November 11. Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, will follow December 13. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its concert February 7.

Walter Gieseking will be presented March 1 in the fourth concert. The final concert will be given March 21, when Josephine Antoine, Metropolitan Opera star, will appear in solos as well as with the chorus of 200 male voices selected from the glee clubs of New York University, Princeton and Rutgers.

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER

SEP 29 1938

Plan Program Of Music of 18th Century

Programs of eighteenth century music will be presented by a string ensemble each evening during the week of Oct. 10 in the ballroom of the restored Governor's Palace under the auspices of Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., according to an announcement today at the office of the restoration.

Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordist, will direct the ensemble and will be assisted by Hildegarde Donaldson and Lois Porter, violinist, and Aaron Bodenhorn, cellist.

Programs for the ensemble which were developed after extensive research in the music history of Colonial Williamsburg by a special committee will include Trio Sonatas, by Handel, Corelli, Gasparini, Stamitz, works of Rameau, Pasquali, Geminiani, Pergolesi, J. C. Bach and harpsichord pieces of Arne, Handel, Rameau, Scarlatti and others.

This series of programs of music identified with the musical life of Colonial Williamsburg is sponsored by the restoration as a sequel to the programs presented in May when Mr. Kirkpatrick gave a series of harpsichord recitals devoted to seventeenth and eighteenth century chamber music. Wide interest in the harpsichord recitals was responsible for arranging a similar program using a combination of instruments most representative of those which had great contemporary popularity in pre-Revolutionary Williamsburg.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is an authority on seventeenth and eighteenth century chamber music, having devoted some years to its study here and abroad. As a harpsichord soloist, Mr. Kirkpatrick has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic Symphony Chamber Orchestra, the Beethoven Association in New York, the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Festival and the Town Hall in New York. He has received widespread recognition for his Bach programs.

During the summer Mr. Kirkpatrick has been associated with the Yaddo music group at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and his assistants will be from this group. Hildegarde Donaldson is a graduate of the Brussels Conservatory and a pupil of Ysaye. Lois Porter is a violinist of wide experience in all fields of music, the wife of Quincy Porter, the American composer and viola-player. She has played an important part in the Yaddo festivals. Mr. Bodenhorn, the cellist, is an accomplished musician, assistant of Alexarion, the representative of Casals.

The ballroom of the Palace will be lighted with candles, and during intermission the Palace gardens will be open.

Three programs will be given during the week as follows—the Monday program being repeated Thursday, the Tuesday program on Friday and the Wednesday program on Saturday.

Tickets will be placed on sale Oct. 3.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES

SEP 29 1938

Pull Up a Chair

By Neal O'Hara

(C. 1938, McNaught Syndicate)

Blotch on the escutcheon: Annually during childbirth the lives of more American mothers and babies are lost than Uncle Sam's total soldier deaths, both abroad and at home, during the World war.

Alexander Hamilton, serving as secretary of the treasury in George Washington's cabinet, suavely assumed the powers of a prime minister and invaded the province of the secretary of state and the secretary of war until the former, Thomas Jefferson, thwacked down on him and more or less put him in his place.

Specialists: Musicians who play the French horns in the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra are rated as easily the best in the land, if not the world.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 30 1938

Festival Seats To Be Reserved Next Season

Action Taken by Trustees for Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts Calls for No Increase in Prices—Memberships Are Available Up to November 1—Proposal to Move Offices to Lenox Deferred Until Next Meeting—Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith Re-elected President.

All seats in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood will be reserved for the concerts next year by the Boston Symphony orchestra according to action taken by the trustees this week. There will be no increase in prices.

The trustees point out that the advantages of the new policy are obvious but since the number of seats is limited to 5,700, it is essential for music lovers who wish to have first choice of locations to send in their memberships at once. Memberships are available only to November 1. Already there are more than 1,100 members and 95 boxes have been sold. These figures are much ahead of last year at this time indicating continued interest in the Festival

Deferred until the next meeting was the generous invitation received from the Selectmen of Lenox to occupy free of charge the former post office quarters in the Lenox town hall, as an office for the Festival.

Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox was elected a new member of the board this week. Officers too were re-elected as follows: President, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge; vice-president, Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York; executive vice-president, Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield; treasurer, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge; clerk, George W. Edman of Pittsfield. Trustees re-elected were Albert Spalding of Great Barrington and New York, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye and North Egremont, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Washington, D. C. and Williamstown, William L. Bull of Lenox, Mr. Edman, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of New York and Stockbridge, Miss Robinson Smith.

Plans for next year were discussed including the possibility of eight concerts, four each week, the first two weeks in August, but action was deferred pending a report from the Boston Symphony orchestra trustees and the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

According to reports of officers, the 1938 Festival was an outstanding success and the concerts were self-sustaining.

It was reported that $50,000 is needed for improvements at Tanglewood and to complete the shed. Members of the board were urged to solicit anyone who might be interested to aid the cause.

Anyone interested in memberships which make it possible to secure tickets at preferred prices and anyone wishing to contribute to the building fund is requested to write to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

SEP 30 1938

Wealth Wisely Distributed

Again in the will of a prominent Boston woman, Miss Grace M. Edwards, we learn of accumulated wealth being dedicated to helpful purposes. It creates a trust fund of a million and a half dollars to assist young people of Boston in obtaining an education so that they may better serve themselves and their fellow men.

It stipulates that all sums advanced to students shall be repaid if ever the beneficiary becomes able to do so. That should increase its helpfulness. In addition there are outright bequests to educational and charitable institutions, to the Museum of Fine Arts and to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. while the residue will go to the Massachusetts General Hospital to be used for general purposes. That latitude will make it of much more benefit to the institution.

Here is the disposal of a large estate which is to be wisely and widely distributed. Judging from the terms of the will Miss Edwards has regarded her wealth as a trust to be used for the benefit of those who have no such financial resources. For all time she will be sharing it with them.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

OCT 1 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Reserves All Seats

All seats in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood will be reserved for the concerts next year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according [illegible] taken by the trustees this week. There will be no increase in prices.

The trustees point out that the advantages of the new policy are obvious, but since the number of seats is limited to 5,700 it is essential for music lovers who wish to have first choice of locations to send in their memberships at once. Memberships are available only to Nov. 1. Already there are more than 1,100 members, and 95 boxes have been sold. These figures are much ahead of last year at this time, indicating continued interest in the festival.

Plans for next year were discussed, including the possibility of eight concerts, four each week, the first two weeks in August. Action was deferred pending a report from the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees and the conductor, Serge Koussevitsky.

According to reports of officers, the 1938 festival was an outstanding success and the concerts were self-sustaining. It was reported that $50,000 is needed for improvements at Tanglewood and to complete the shed.

Anyone interested in memberships which make it possible to obtain tickets at preferred prices, and anyone wishing to contribute to the building fund is requested to write to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

SEP 29 1938

TRUSTEES VOTE TO RESERVE ALL FESTIVAL SEATS

Membership List for Event in Berkshires Now 1100; Officers Re-elected

PITTSFIELD, Sept. 28—All seats in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglweood will be reserved next season, according to action taken this week at the annual meeting of the trustees. There will be no increase in prices.

Open Until Nov. 1

The membership lists are open until Nov. 1 and members will receive preference in assignment of seats as well as a substantial saving in the cost of tickets. There are already more than 1100 members for next season and 95 boxes are sold. These figures are considerably ahead of returns at this time last year. Under the membership plan it is possible to attend the concerts for less than a dollar.

The annual meeting was held at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. A new trustee, Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox was elected. Officers were re-elected as follows: president, Miss Robinson Smith of Stockbridge and New York; vice-president, Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York; executive vice-president, Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield; treasurer, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge; clerk, George W. Edman of Pittsfield.

Trustees re-elected included Albert Spalding, eminent violinist and summer resident of Great Barrington; also Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and North Egremont, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Washington, D. C., and Williamstown, William L. Bull of Lenox, Mr. Edman, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of New York and Stockbridge, Miss Robinson Smith.

Selectmen of Lenox, Joseph McCabe and John J. Shalley presented an offer of office space in the Lenox Town Hall and the proposal was referred to the next meeting.

Reports of officers indicated that the 1988 Festival had met with unprecedented success and had been self-sustaining.

Plans for 1939 were discussed, including the possibility of having eight concerts the first two weeks in August but action was deferred pending a report from the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Members of the board were urged to solicit their friends to help raise the $50,000 needed for improvements in the parking areas of Tanglewood and the shed.

Complete details of the membership plan may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 1 - 1938

MUSIC FETE RESERVATIONS

Applications for the Berkshire Event Will Close on Nov. 1

All seats for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next Summer at Tanglewood, Mass., will be reserved with no increase in price, it was announced yesterday. It was pointed out that since seats were limited to 5,700, applications for reservations should be made as soon as possible. Memberships are only open until Nov. 1, and already more than 1,100 memberships and ninety-five boxes have been taken.

The possibility of having eight concerts, four a week, during the first two weeks in August was discussed during the meeting of the festival committee, but no decision was made pending a report from Serge Koussevitzky and the trustees of [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also deferred until the next meeting was the invitation from the Selectmen of Lenox, Mass., to use the former postoffice in the Lenox Town Hall as an office for the festival. The completion of the Music Shed requires about $50,000, it was reported. Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox was elected a member of the board.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

OCT 1 - 1938

Music—At Carnegie Hall—Philadelphia Orchestra, Ormandy conducting, Oct. 18 and [illegible] Philharmonic-Symphony, Barbirolli conducting, starting Oct. 20. Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting, Nov. 17 and 19. Recitals: John Powell, Nov. 1; Heifetz, Nov. 9; Rachmaninoff, Nov. 12 (Aft.); Moriz Rosenthal, Nov. 13; Flagstad, Nov. 15.... At Town Hall: Zimbalist, Oct. 10, 17, 24, 31, and Nov. 7; Lotte Lehmann, Oct. 18; New Friends of Music, starting Oct. 23; Marjorie Lawrence, Nov. 6 (Aft.); Roland Hayes, Nov. 8; Guiomar Novaes, Nov. 9.

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

SEP 30 1938

Forum Season Opens Oct. 17 at Academy

Greatest Variety of Music, Lectures, Ballet Ever Listed Is Ready

William K. Huff, executive director of The Philadelphia Forum, announced today that The Forum's eighteenth season will open Monday evening, Oct. 17, at the Academy of Music with Alexander Kerensky, head of the Russian Provisional Government in 1917, who will speak on "Democracies vs. Dictatorships." On the following Friday evening, Oct. 21, Julien Bryan will show his uncensored documentary film "Inside Nazi Germany." The remainder of the October program will include Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in "Amphitryon 38," with the Forum's evenings Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 24 and 25, and the first and only Philadelphia appearance of the Wagnerian Festival Singers, an extraordinary European ensemble.

The November program will open with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in Chekhov's "The Sea Gull," on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Nov. 1 and 2.

Among other events to be presented by The Forum will be Paul van Zeeland, former premier of Belgium, author of the famous World Trade Report; Stefan Zweig, historian and biographer, who will discuss "The History of Tomorrow"; Andre Maurois, biographer and essayist, member of the Academie Francaise, who will speak on "French Wit and English and American Humor"; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Lawrence Tibbett, leading baritone of the Metropolitan; Kathryn Meisle, leading contralto of the Metropolitan, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Josef Hofman, pianist, and the Curtis Symphony Orchestra, with Fritz Reiner conducting; Elizabeth Schumann, leading soprano of the Vienna State Opera; the Salzburg Trapp Choir; Robert Casadesus, pianist; Elissa Landi, famous stage and screen star, who will explain "The Difference Between Stage and Screen Acting"; George Earle Raiguel, author and publicist, who will tell "What I Saw This Summer in Europe," the only lecture in Philadelphia except for his subscription series; Agnes Macphail, first woman member of the Canadian Parliament, who will use as her text, "We, the Good Neighbors"; Carl Sandburg, distinguished American poet and biographer, on "American Folk Songs and Tall Tales"; Sydney R. Montague, Royal Canadian Mounted Police; William Lyon Phelps, who will be heard in three talks on the new books, which will be discussed also by Edward Weeks, editor of the Atlantic Monthly; Christopher Morley, novelist and essayist, and his brother Felix, editor of the Washington Post, who will be heard in a debate on "Do Newspapers Do More Harm Than Good?"

The Forum will present two ballets, Argentinita, queen of Spanish dancers, and her Andalusian Company, and Trudi Schoop and her Dancing Comedians.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

SEP 29 1938

Rutgers Announces Its Concert Series

Special to Newark News.

NEW BRUNSWICK—For the fifth consecutive year the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature the Rutgers University's concert series of five concerts. Announcement of the series was made today by Professor Howard D. McKinney, head of the music department.

John Charles Thomas, well-known barytone, will open the series November [illegible]. Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, will follow December 13. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will hold its concert February 7.

Walter Gieseking will be presented March 1 in the fourth concert. The final concert will be given March 21, when Josephine Antoine, Metropolitan Opera star, will appear in solos as well as with the chorus of 200 male voices selected from the glee clubs of New York University, Princeton and Rutgers.

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER

SEP 29 1938

Plan Program Of Music of 18th Century

Programs of eighteenth century music will be presented by a string ensemble each evening during the week of Oct. 10 in the ballroom of the restored Governor's Palace under the auspices of Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., according to an announcement today at the office of the restoration.

Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordist, will direct the ensemble and will be assisted by Hildegarde Donaldson and Lois Porter, violinist, and Aaron Bodenhorn, cellist.

Programs for the ensemble which were developed after extensive research in the music history of Colonial Williamsburg by a special committee will include Trio Sonatas, by Handel, Corelli, Gasparini, Stamitz, works of Rameau, Pasquali, Geminiani, Pergolesi, J. C. Bach and harpsichord pieces of Arne, Handel, Rameau, Scarlatti and others.

This series of programs of music identified with the musical life of Colonial Williamsburg is sponsored by the restoration as a sequel to the programs presented in May when Mr. Kirkpatrick gave a series of harpsichord recitals devoted to seventeenth and eighteenth century chamber music. Wide interest in the harpsichord recitals was responsible for arranging a similar program using a combination of instruments most representative of those which had great contemporary popularity in pre-Revolutionary Williamsburg.

Mr. Kirkpatrick is an authority on seventeenth and eighteenth century chamber music, having devoted some years to its study here and abroad. As a harpsichord soloist, Mr. Kirkpatrick has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic Symphony Chamber Orchestra, the Beethoven Association in New York, the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Festival and the Town Hall in New York. He has received widespread recognition for his Bach programs.

During the summer Mr. Kirkpatrick has been associated with the Yaddo music group at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and his assistants will be from this group. Hildegarde Donaldson is a graduate of the Brussels Conservatory and a pupil of Ysaye. Lois Porter is a violinist of wide experience in all fields of music, the wife of Quincy Porter, the American composer and viola-player. She has played an important part in the Yaddo festivals. Mr. Bodenhorn, the cellist, is an accomplished musician, assistant of Alexanian, the representative of Casals.

The ballroom of the Palace will be lighted with candles, and during intermission the Palace gardens will be open.

Three programs will be given during the week as follows—the Monday program being repeated Thursday, the Tuesday program on Friday and the Wednesday program on Saturday.

Tickets will be placed on sale Oct. 3.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES

SEP 29 1938

Pull Up a Chair

By Neal O'Hara

(©, 1938, McNaught Syndicate)

Blotch on the escutcheon: Annually during childbirth the lives of more American mothers and babies are lost than Uncle Sam's total soldier deaths, both abroad and at home, during the World war.

Alexander Hamilton, serving as secretary of the treasury in George Washington's cabinet, suavely assumed the powers of a prime minister and invaded the province of the secretary of state and the secretary of war until the former, Thomas Jefferson, thwacked down on him and more or less put him in his place.

Specialists: Musicians who play the French horns in the celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra are rated [illegible] the best in the land, if not the world.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 30 1938

Festival Seats To Be Reserved Next Season

Action Taken by Trustees for Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts Calls for No Increase in Prices—Memberships Are Available Up to November 1—Proposal to Move Offices to Lenox Deferred Until Next Meeting—Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith Re-elected President.

All seats in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood will be reserved for the concerts next year by the Boston Symphony orchestra according to action taken by the trustees this week. There will be no increase in prices.

The trustees point out that the advantages of the new policy are obvious but since the number of seats is limited to 5,700, it is essential for music lovers who wish to have first choice of locations to send in their memberships at once. Memberships are available only to November 1. Already there are more than 1,100 members and 95 boxes have been sold. These figures are much ahead of last year at this time indicating continued interest in the Festival.

Deferred until the next meeting was the generous invitation received from the Selectmen of Lenox to occupy free of charge the former post office quarters in the Lenox town hall, as an office for the Festival.

Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox was elected a new member of the board this week. Officers too were re-elected as follows: President, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge; vice-president, Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York; executive vice-president, Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield; treasurer, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge; clerk, George W. Edman of Pittsfield. Trustees re-elected were Albert Spalding of Great Barrington and New York, Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye and North Egremont, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Washington, D. C. and Williamstown, William L. Bull of Lenox, Mr. Edman, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of New York and Stockbridge, Miss Robinson Smith.

Plans for next year were discussed including the possibility of eight concerts, four each week, the first two weeks in August, but action was deferred pending a report from the Boston Symphony orchestra trustees and the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

According to reports of officers, the 1938 Festival was an outstanding success and the concerts were self-sustaining.

It was reported that $50,000 is needed for improvements at Tanglewood and to complete the shed. Members of the board were urged to solicit anyone who might be interested to aid the cause.

Anyone interested in memberships which make it possible to secure tickets at preferred prices and anyone wishing to contribute to the building fund is requested to write to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

SEP 30 1938

Wealth Wisely Distributed

Again in the will of a prominent Boston woman, Miss Grace M. Edwards, we learn of accumulated wealth being dedicated to helpful purposes. It creates a trust fund of a million and a half dollars to assist young people of Boston in obtaining an education so that they may better serve themselves and their fellow men.

It stipulates that all sums advanced to students shall be repaid if ever the beneficiary becomes able to do so. That should increase its helpfulness. In addition there are outright bequests to educational and charitable institutions, to the Museum of Fine Arts and to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. while the residue will go to the Massachusetts General Hospital to be used for general purposes. That latitude will make it of much more benefit to the institution.

Here is the disposal of a large estate which is to be wisely and widely distributed. Judging from the terms of the will Miss Edwards has regarded her wealth as a trust to be used for the benefit of those who have no such financial resources. For all time she will be sharing it with them.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

OCT 1 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Reserves All Seats

All seats in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood will be reserved for the concerts next year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according [illegible] taken by the trustees this week. There will be no increase in prices.

The trustees point out that the advantages of the new policy are obvious, but since the number of seats is limited to 5,700 it is essential for music lovers who wish to have first choice of locations to send in their memberships at once. Memberships are available only to Nov. 1. Already there are more than 1,100 members, and 95 boxes have been sold. These figures are much ahead of last year at this time, indicating continued interest in the festival.

Plans for next year were discussed, including the possibility of eight concerts, four each week, the first two weeks in August. Action was deferred pending a report from the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees and the conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

According to reports of officers, the 1938 festival was an outstanding success and the concerts were self-sustaining. It was reported that $50,000 is needed for improvements at Tanglewood and to complete the shed.

Anyone interested in memberships which make it possible to obtain tickets at preferred prices, and anyone wishing to contribute to the building fund is requested to write to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

SEP 29 1938

TRUSTEES VOTE TO RESERVE ALL FESTIVAL SEATS

Membership List for Event in Berkshires Now 1100; Officers Re-elected

PITTSFIELD, Sept. 28—All seats in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglwood will be reserved next season, according to action taken this week at the annual meeting of the trustees. There will be no increase in prices.

Open Until Nov. 1

The membership lists are open until Nov. 1 and members will receive preference in assignment of seats as well as a substantial saving in the cost of tickets. There are already more than 1100 members for next season and 95 boxes are sold. These figures are considerably ahead of returns at this time last year. Under the membership plan it is possible to attend the concerts for less than a dollar.

The annual meeting was held at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. A new trustee, Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox was elected. Officers were re-elected as follows: president, Miss Robinson Smith of Stockbridge and New York; vice-president, Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York; executive vice-president, Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield; treasurer, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge; clerk, George W. Edman of Pittsfield.

Trustees re-elected included Albert Spalding, eminent violinist and summer resident of Great Barrington; also Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Rye, N. Y., and North Egremont, Prof. Philip Marshall Brown of Washington, D. C., and Williamstown, William L. Bull of Lenox, Mr. Edman, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold of New York and Stockbridge, Miss Robinson Smith.

Selectmen of Lenox, Joseph McCabe and John J. Shalley presented an offer of office space in the Lenox Town Hall and the proposal was referred to the next meeting.

Reports of officers indicated that the 1938 Festival had met with unprecedented success and had been self-sustaining.

Plans for 1939 were discussed, including the possibility of having eight concerts the first two weeks in August but action was deferred pending a report from the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Members of the board were urged to solicit their friends to help raise the $50,000 needed for improvements in the parking areas of Tanglewood and the shed.

Complete details of the membership plan may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 1 - 1938

MUSIC FETE RESERVATIONS

Applications for the Berkshire Event Will Close on Nov. 1

All seats for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next Summer at Tanglewood, Mass., will be reserved with no increase in price, it was announced yesterday. It was pointed out that since seats were limited to 5,700, applications for reservations should be made as soon as possible. Memberships are only open until Nov. 1, and already more than 1,100 memberships and ninety-five boxes have been taken.

The possibility of having eight concerts, four a week, during the first two weeks in August was discussed during the meeting of the festival committee, but no decision was made pending a report from Serge Koussevitzky and the trustees of [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also deferred until the next meeting was the invitation from the Selectmen of Lenox, Mass., to use the former postoffice in the Lenox Town Hall as an office for the festival. The completion of the Music Shed requires about $50,000, it was reported. Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox was elected a member of the board.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

OCT 1 - 1938

Music—At Carnegie Hall—Philadelphia Orchestra, [illegible] Ormandy conducting, Oct. 18 and [illegible] Philharmonic-Symphony, Barbirolli conducting, starting Oct. 20. Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting, Nov. 17 and 19. Recitals: John Powell, Nov. 1; Heifetz, Nov. 9; Rachmaninoff, Nov. 12 (Aft.); Moriz Rosenthal, Nov. 13; Flagstad, Nov. 15. . . . At Town Hall: Zimbalist, Oct. 10, 17, 24, 31, and Nov. 7; Lotte Lehmann, Oct. 18; New Friends of Music, starting Oct. 23; Marjorie Lawrence, Nov. 6 (Aft.); Roland Hayes, Nov. 8; Guiomar Novaes, Nov. 9.

5

Music News Here and In the Field

The supplementary series of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will again be given in pairs this season, the programs of Monday evenings being repeated on Tuesday afternoons. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct four programs, and Georges Enesco and Igor Stravinsky one each. The soloists will be Pierre and Genia Luboshutz, who will play the Mozart Concerto for two pianos; Myra Hess and Stravinsky, who will play the piano part of one of his compositions in addition to conducting. The concerts will fall on Oct. 24-25, Dec. 26-27, Jan. 16-17, Feb. 20-21, March 20-21 and April 17-18.

What's Going On in the Arts

Monitor Oct. 1/38

Janet Gill's Drawings

Drawings by Janet Gill are on exhibition at the Fine Arts Theater on Norway Street. Miss Gill's work is suited to showing in a theater because she is interested in actors, masks, dancers. Even her method in drawing favors dramatic emphasis. We see her models in extreme configurations of measured or frenzied movement; their figures, limbs, costumes, wrought in decorative motives. Sometimes we wonder whether the dancer is a means toward a decorative end, a mere excuse for making something ornamental, or whether Miss Gill wishes to stress feeling.

In her recent pictures the expression of feeling is more marked and more convincing. Miss Gill seems to have found a more original idiom and to have abandoned the time-worn symbols. Her earlier drawings, ably made, had the pat and neat and engaging qualities of the Disney "Snow White" cast. Maybe Miss Gill herself has come to the conclusion that the elfish motive and all the quaint and "cute" features have been overdone. It is pleasing to see her outgrow this stage, striving for a personal and, perhaps more searching idiom.

D. A.

Music and Dance Notes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate its fifty-eighth season next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, with Dr. Koussevitzky beginning his fifteenth year as conductor. The first three numbers of the program will be those with which he began his service in Boston: the Vivaldi-Siloti Concerto in D minor for orchestra with organ; Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture, and Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn. The concluding number will be Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, the first symphony Dr. Koussevitzky played in America.

Two notable guest conductors and distinguished soloists are announced for the shorter series of six Monday evening and six Tuesday afternoon concerts by the orchestra, opening Oct. 24 and 25. The soloists will include Pierre and Genia Luboshutz, who will appear with the orchestra in the Mozart Concerto for two pianos. Myra Hess, the English pianist, will appear as soloist in another pair of concerts. Georges Enesco and Igor Stravinsky will be guest conductors. The Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts will be given on: Oct. 24-25, Dec. 26-27, Jan. 16-17, Feb. 20-21, March 20-21, and April 17-18.

Serge Koussevitzky Fourteen Years After

Tumult and Shouting Have Died, and Leader Has Gone Steadily Forward

B. Trans By MOSES SMITH Oct. 1/38

The program that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has assembled for the opening concerts of the fifty-eighth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening is an explicit invitation for us to look backwards, as he is doing, to the time when he began his term just fourteen years ago. Among other likely considerations sentiment dictated that he begin the opening program of the present season with four numbers that stood on his first two American programs—Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for orchestra, Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture, Brahms's "Haydn" Variations, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. If it were merely a question of sentiment, though, the conductor might well have repeated the very first program in its entirety, consisting, as it did, of the Berlioz and Brahms, Honegger's "Pacific 231" and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy." The program was a little masterpiece in its way, covering considerable ground in the history of music and offering at first glance a fairly comprehensive view of the conductor's talents in the music of different centuries, nationalities and schools.

The programs of that first season were similarly illuminating as to the conductor's capacities and tastes. There was a considerable amount of familiar and unfamiliar music from the eighteenth-century masters. The older Russian school was fairly heavily represented. The classic and Romantic German masters were not entirely neglected, although a large part of the audiences thought they were being slighted. What was especially resented by many, though, was the heavy representation of contemporary composers. In alphabetical order they ran: Bax, Bliss, Borchard, Boulanger, Caplet, Copland, Dukas, Eichheim, Elgar, Falla, Foote, Glazounov, Hadley, Hill, Honegger, d'Indy, Loeffler, Manuel, Prokofiev, Rabaud, Rachmaninov, Respighi, Rigel, Roussel, Stravinsky and Tailleferre.

Even today that looks like a formidable list. It includes, to be sure, several composers who were already so well established in the Orchestra's repertory that they could not possibly have been cause for the small-sized civil war that raged in Boston—composers like Elgar, Foote, Glazounov and so forth. The real irritant was the heavy artillery of modernism, with the two Russians, Stravinsky and Prokofiev, to lead, and two members of the French "Six," Honegger and Tailleferre, to bring up the rear.

Times Change

But times, the audiences and even the conductor have changed. Who now remembers the very names of Borchard and Rigel, to say nothing of their music? Heavy artillery became respectable during the ensuing years of Dr. Koussevitzky's regime, and has even had time to go out of fashion. The "Six," with Honegger as their brightest star, have all but disappeared from contemporary programs. In an interview the other day Dr. Koussevitzky suggested, indeed, that, with the possible exception of Milhaud, they were played out as creative forces.

Much of the music of that day was shocking, part of it because the composers set out to hit people on the head, part of it because of our previous smugness and isolation. This is not to discount entirely the admirable efforts of Dr. Koussevitzky's predecessor, Pierre Monteux. But for one reason or another, M. Monteux could not cultivate the moderns as assiduously and systematically as did his successor. From the very first concert, when our ears were assailed (as we regarded it then) by the cacophonies of Honegger's "Pacific 231," Dr. Koussevitzky was identified with modernism. He was uncompromising, although, as was subsequently made clear upon reasoned examination, he did not overweight his programs with contemporary music nearly so much as he was accused of doing. But he believed in the music of that day, and—what is more important—he believed that serious artists ought to be heard. Audiences could decide not to like the music, but only after hearing it.

Because he persisted in this faith and acted on it through the years we Bostonians owe him an enormous debt of gratitude. From smug concert-goers with the more or less settled notion that all the great music had been written in the past and that the only thing a contemporary composer might reasonably attempt was imitation of the past, we proceeded—unwillingly, it is true—to something more nearly resembling musical cosmopolitanism and alertness. We learned that important, challenging music might be written in Hungary as well as in what had previously been the dominant portion of an empire; that Rimsky-Korsakov's was not the ultimate word from musical Russia; that even composers from Brooklyn and Ann Arbor, Boston and a Californian ranch need not invite our condescension.

. . . And the Conductor

The conductor himself, meanwhile, has changed. It was inevitable that a first-rate musical instinct should be sharpened and refined by years of association with the very superlative orchestral instrument it had fashioned. Dr. Koussevitzky is not the first great conductor who has learned much from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As the years have gone by we have noted rough edges shaved from his interpretation of standard works edges that seemed natural and inevitable to him when he came here, but which he finds unnecessary now. Such is the growth of an artist, and such the progress from impulsiveness to mellowness. It is not that the conductor was necessarily wrong then and right now. It is that he feels the music differently now. Our own memory in such matters is of course a tricky affair. Recourse to phonograph records would settle the matter, but unfortunately Dr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony Orchestra did not undertake recording until comparatively recently. Yet memory is certainly not so unreliable as to manufacture what seems like the enormous difference in the performance of the Ninth Symphony the first time Dr. Koussevitzky presented it in Boston and the recent performance at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

A related process is involved in the conductor's diminishing venturesomeness in the field of contemporary music. He still presents a considerable quantity, of course; but not so much as in his early years here. He himself has ascribed the change to the diminishing output of worthwhile scores by contemporary composers. That sounds plausible and may even be right. But I don't think it is the real reason. Rather we have to look for it in the same direction as that from which proceeded the conductor's changed point of view in the interpretation of many standard works. Like artists before him he comes to see, as he grows older, the masterpieces of the past as rising rather than receding in stature. They demand ever-increasing attention and study in order to yield secrets not apparent earlier. He will never, I think, lose all his enthusiasm for the art of the present. But his apparently boundless enthusiasm will be devoted more and more to music of the past, and his reverence will increase.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

OCT 1 - 1938

1 In the World of Music

By United Press

BRUNO WALTER, exile from Nazi Germany and Austria, has accepted an invitation of Dr. Hans Kindler, director of the National Symphony Orchestra, to appear in Washington as guest conductor during the coming season.

An open letter from Mr. Kindler last May in the Musical Courier, urging American conductors to make a place for the famous German musician on their winter programs, received wide attention.

Since the Nazi invasion of Austria, Mr. Walter has conducted summer concerts at Monte Carlo, and at a special festival in Lucerne, Switzerland.

* * *

ONE of the few events of its kind ever held in the South, a three-day chamber music festival, is expected to attract many visitors from Dixie states to Birmingham Oct. 7-9.

Intended, according to its sponsors, to demonstrate that "the South is not allergic to chamber-music," the festival will consist of four concerts. Two performances will be by the Curtis String Quartet and two by Birmingham musicians.

The program will be sponsored by the Birmingham Chamber Music Society, an organization of professional musicians. Ottokar Cadek, well known violinist, is its director.

The concerts, to be presented in the Birmingham Little Theater, will include works of Bach, Mozart, Tschaikowsky, Gluck, Hindemith, Beethoven, Mason and Brahms.

Proceeds will be used for the establishment of a Memorial Library of Chamber Music.

* * *

BORIS GOLSCHMANN, youngest brother of Valdimir Golschmann, conductor of the St. Louis Symphony, will make his American debut with his brother's orchestra in St. Louis next February. Later he will appear in New York. The young pianist, who was born in Paris in 1906, is the youngest of four brothers. He has appeared extensively in Europe.

The Handel and Haydn society of Boston will give Pierne's "Children's Crusade" on Oct. 31 for the benefit of the National Cathedral in Washington. The performance will be given by a symphonic chorus of 300 voices and a children's chorus of 200 from the Brookline public schools, assisted by 77 members of the Boston Symphony.

* * *

THE three-act opera "Cattedrale" by Mario Mariotti was given a successful premiere at the opera house in Bergamo, Italy. There were many curtain calls and critics expressed enthusiasm.

* * *

THE New York Philharmonic will open its 97th season on Oct. 20, under John Barbirolli. Sibelius, Stravinsky and Mozart will be represented on the program, which will close with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. It will be Barbirolli's third season with the orchestra. The Sunday afternoon concerts will be broadcast again this season.

* * *

MISCHA ELMAN, violinist, has canceled his European engagements because of the illness of his father and will remain in America for the entire 1938-1939 season.

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will begin his 15th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 7, when he opens a season of 60 concerts. The year's soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Jesus Maria Sanroma and Rudolf Serkin, pianists; Jascha Heifetz, Ruth Posselt and Zlatko Balokovic, violinists, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

New music will include Igor Stravinsky's orchestral concerto, a piano concerto by Ernest Krenek, and a concerto for string quartet and orchestra by Nicolai Berezowsky. The composers will appear as guest conductors or soloists. Other guest conductors will be Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Globe Oct 2

Boston Symphony Orchestra 58th Season Begins Friday

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will begin the 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his 15th year as conductor with concerts at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:30 and Saturday evening at 8:15. His opening program will appropriately commemorate his Boston debut, Oct. 10, 1924, by including three compositions heard on that occasion: Vivaldi's D minor Organ Concerto in the edition of Alexander Siloti; the "Roman Carnival" Overture by Berlioz and Brahms' Variations On a Theme By Haydn. The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, which will end the concerts this week, stood upon his second Boston program, and was the first symphony he conducted in this country.

This year, as last, the supplementary Symphony concerts on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons will be played on consecutive days, and the same program will serve for each set. The dates are as follows: Oct. 24, 25; Dec. 26, 27; Jan. 16, 17; Feb. 20, 21; March 20, 21, and April 17, 18. Two of the season's guest conductors—Georges Enesco and Igor Stravinsky—will appear during these series and the list of soloists includes Pierre and Genia Luboshutz, who will perform Mozart's Concerto for two pianos, and Myra Hess, distinguished English pianist.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 2 - 1938

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY begins his fifte[illegible]ason as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday and Saturday, when that organization opens its fifty-eighth season in Boston, Mass. The program includes three numbers which the director led at his American debut—namely, Vivaldi's concerto in D minor, Berlioz's overture, "The Roman Carnival," and the Brahms "Variations on a Theme by Haydn." Beethoven's Fifth symphony, the first conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky in this country, completes the program. The orchestra's New York season opens Nov. 17 in Carnegie Hall.

5

Music News Here and In the Field

The supplementary series of concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will again be given in pairs this season, the programs of Monday evenings being repeated on Tuesday afternoons. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct four programs, and Georges Enesco and Igor Stravinsky one each. The soloists will be Pierre and Genia Luboshutz, who will play the Mozart Concerto for two pianos; Myra Hess and Stravinsky, who will play the piano part of one of his compositions in addition to conducting. The concerts will fall on Oct. 24-25, Dec. 26-27, Jan. 16-17, Feb. 20-21, March 20-21 and April 17-18.

What's Going On in the ON

Monitor Oct. 1/38

Janet Gill's Drawings

Drawings by Janet Gill are on exhibition at the Fine Arts Theater on Norway Street. Miss Gill's work is suited to showing in a theater because she is interested in actors, masks, dancers. Even her method in drawing favors dramatic emphasis. We see her models in extreme configurations of measured or frenzied movement; their figures, limbs, costumes, wrought in decorative motives. Sometimes we wonder whether the dancer is a means toward a decorative end, a mere excuse for making something ornamental, or whether Miss Gill wishes to stress feeling.

In her recent pictures the expression of feeling is more marked and more convincing. Miss Gill seems to have found a more original idiom and to have abandoned the timeworn symbols. Her earlier drawings, ably made, had the pat and neat and engaging qualities of the Disney "Snow White" cast. Maybe Miss Gill herself has come to the conclusion that the elfish motive and all the quaint and "cute" features have been overdone. It is pleasing to see her outgrow this stage, striving for a personal and, perhaps more searching idiom.

D. A.

Music and Dance Notes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate its fifty-eighth season next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, with Dr. Koussevitzky beginning his fifteenth year as conductor. The first three numbers of the program will be those with which he began his service in Boston: the Vivaldi-Siloti Concerto in D minor for orchestra with organ; Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture, and Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn. The concluding number will be Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, the first symphony Dr. Koussevitzky played in America.

Two notable guest conductors and distinguished soloists are announced for the shorter series of six Monday evening and six Tuesday afternoon concerts by the orchestra, opening Oct. 24 and 25. The soloists will include Pierre and Genia Luboshutz, who will appear with the orchestra in the Mozart Concerto for two pianos. Myra Hess, the English pianist, will appear as soloist in another pair of concerts. Georges Enesco and Igor Stravinsky will be guest conductors. The Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts will be given on: Oct. 24-25, Dec. 26-27, Jan. 16-17, Feb. 20-21, March 20-21, and April 17-18.

Serge Koussevitzky Fourteen Years After

Tumult and Shouting Have Died, and Leader Has Gone Steadily Forward

B. Trans By MOSES SMITH Oct. 1/38

The program that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has assembled for the opening concerts of the fifty-eighth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening is an explicit invitation for us to look backwards, as he is doing, to the time when he began his term just fourteen years ago. Among other likely considerations sentiment dictated that he begin the opening program of the present season with four numbers that stood on his first two American programs—Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor for orchestra, Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture, Brahms's "Haydn" Variations, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. If it were merely a question of sentiment, though, the conductor might well have repeated the very first program in its entirety, consisting, as it did, of the Berlioz and Brahms, Honegger's "Pacific 231" and Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy." The program was a little masterpiece in its way, covering considerable ground in the history of music and offering at first glance a fairly comprehensive view of the conductor's talents in the music of different centuries, nationalities and schools.

The programs of that first season were similarly illuminating as to the conductor's capacities and tastes. There was a considerable amount of familiar and unfamiliar music from the eighteenth-century masters. The older Russian school was fairly heavily represented. The classic and Romantic German masters were not entirely neglected, although a large part of the audiences thought they were being slighted. What was especially resented by many, though, was the heavy representation of contemporary composers. In alphabetical order they ran: Bax, Bliss, Borchard, Boulanger, Caplet, Copland, Dukas, Eichheim, Elgar, De Falla, Foote, Glazounov, Hadley, Hill, Honegger, d'Indy, Loeffler, Manuel, Prokofiev, Rabaud, Rachmaninov, Respighi, Rigel, Roussel, Stravinsky and Tailleferre.

Even today that looks like a formidable list. It includes, to be sure, several composers who were already so well established in the Orchestra's repertory that they could not possibly have been cause for the small-sized civil war that raged in Boston—composers like Elgar, Foote, Glazounov and so forth. The real irritant was the heavy artillery of modernism, with the two Russians, Stravinsky and Prokofiev, to lead, and two members of the French "Six," Honegger and Tailleferre, to bring up the rear.

Times Change

But times, the audiences and even the conductor have changed. Who now remembers the very names of Borchard and Rigel, to say nothing of their music? Heavy artillery became respectable during the ensuing years of Dr. Koussevitzky's regime, and has even had time to go out of fashion. The "Six," with Honegger as their brightest star, have all but disappeared from contemporary programs. In an interview the other day Dr. Koussevitzky suggested, indeed, that, with the possible exception of Milhaud, they were played out as creative forces.

Much of the music of that day was shocking, part of it because the composers set out to hit people on the head, part of it because of our previous smugness and isolation. This is not to discount entirely the admirable efforts of Dr. Koussevitzky's predecessor, Pierre Monteux. But for one reason or another, M. Monteux could not cultivate the moderns as assiduously and systematically as did his successor. From the very first concert, when our ears were assailed (as we regarded it then) by the cacophonies of Honegger's "Pacific 231," Dr. Koussevitzky was identified with modernism. He was uncompromising, although, as was subsequently made clear upon reasoned examination, he did not overweight his programs with contemporary music nearly so much as he was accused of doing. But he believed in the music of that day, and—what is more important—he believed that serious artists ought to be heard. Audiences could decide not to like the music, but only after hearing it.

Because he persisted in this faith and acted on it through the years we Bostonians owe him an enormous debt of gratitude. From smug concert-goers with the more or less settled notion that all the great music had been written in the past and that the only thing a contemporary composer might reasonably attempt was imitation of the past, we proceeded—unwillingly, it is true—to something more nearly resembling musical cosmopolitanism and alertness. We learned that important, challenging music might be written in Hungary as well as in what had previously been the dominant portion of an empire; that Rimsky-Korsakov's was not the ultimate word from musical Russia; that even composers from Brooklyn and Ann Arbor, Boston and a Californian ranch need not invite our condescension.

. . . And the Conductor

The conductor himself, meanwhile, has changed. It was inevitable that a first-rate musical instinct should be sharpened and refined by years of association with the very superlative orchestral instrument it had fashioned. Dr. Koussevitzky is not the first great conductor who has learned much from the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As the years have gone by we have noted rough edges shaved from his interpretation of standard works edges that seemed natural and inevitable to him when he came here, but which he finds unnecessary now. Such is the growth of an artist, and such the progress from impulsiveness to mellowness. It is not that the conductor was necessarily wrong then and right now. It is that he feels the music differently now. Our own memory in such matters is of course a tricky affair. Recourse to phonograph records would settle the matter, but unfortunately Dr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony Orchestra did not undertake recording until comparatively recently. Yet memory is certainly not so unreliable as to manufacture what seems like the enormous difference in the performance of the Ninth Symphony the first time Dr. Koussevitzky presented it in Boston and the recent performance at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

A related process is involved in the conductor's diminishing venturesomeness in the field of contemporary music. He still presents a considerable quantity, of course; but not so much as in his early years here. He himself has ascribed the change to the diminishing output of worthwhile scores by contemporary composers. That sounds plausible and may even be right. But I don't think it is the real reason. Rather we have to look for it in the same direction as that from which proceeded the conductor's changed point of view in the interpretation of many standard works. Like artists before him he comes to see, as he grows older, the masterpieces of the past as rising rather than receding in stature. They demand ever-increasing attention and study in order to yield secrets not apparent earlier. He will never, I think, lose all his enthusiasm for the art of the present. But his apparently boundless enthusiasm will be devoted more and more to music of the past, and his reverence will increase.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

OCT 1 - 1938

In the World of Music

—By United Press—

BRUNO WALTER, exile from Nazi Germany and Austria, has accepted an invitation of Dr. Hans Kindler, director of the National Symphony Orchestra, to appear in Washington as guest conductor during the coming season.

An open letter from Mr. Kindler last May in the Musical Courier, urging American conductors to make a place for the famous German musician on their winter programs, received wide attention.

Since the Nazi invasion of Austria, Mr. Walter has conducted summer concerts at Monte Carlo, and at a special festival in Lucerne, Switzerland.

* * *

ONE of the few events of its kind ever held in the South, a three-day chamber music festival, is expected to attract many visitors from Dixie states to Birmingham Oct. 7-9.

Intended, according to its sponsors, to demonstrate that "the South is not allergic to chamber-music," the festival will consist of four concerts. Two performances will be by the Curtis String Quartet and two by Birmingham musicians.

The program will be sponsored by the Birmingham Chamber Music Society, an organization of professional musicians. Ottokar Cadek, well known violinist, is its director.

The concerts, to be presented in the Birmingham Little Theater, will include works of Bach, Mozart, Tschaikowsky, Gluck, Hindemith, Beethoven, Mason and Brahms.

Proceeds will be used for the establishment of a Memorial Library of Chamber Music.

* * *

BORIS GOLSCHMANN, youngest brother of Valdimir Golschmann, conductor of the St. Louis Symphony, will make his American debut with his brother's orchestra in St. Louis next February. Later he will appear in New York. The young pianist, who was born in Paris in 1906, is the youngest of four brothers. He has appeared extensively in Europe.

The Handel and Haydn society of Boston will give Pierne's "Children's Crusade" on Oct. 31 for the benefit of the National Cathedral in Washington. The performance will be given by a symphonic chorus of 300 voices and a children's chorus of 200 from the Brookline public schools, assisted by 77 members of the Boston Symphony.

* * *

THE three-act opera "Cattedrale" by Mario Mariotti was given a successful premiere at the opera house in Bergamo, Italy. There were many curtain calls and critics expressed enthusiasm.

* * *

THE New York Philharmonic will open its 97th season on Oct. 20, under John Barbirolli. Sibelius, Stravinsky and Mozart will be represented on the program, which will close with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. It will be Barbirolli's third season with the orchestra. The Sunday afternoon concerts will be broadcast again this season.

* * *

MISCHA ELMAN, violinist, has canceled his European engagements because of the illness of his father and will remain in America for the entire 1938-1939 season.

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will begin his 15th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 7, when he opens a season of 60 concerts. The year's soloists will be Artur Rubinstein, Myra Hess, Jesus Maria Sanroma and Rudolf Serkin, pianists; Jascha Heifetz, Ruth Posselt and Zlatko Balokovic, violinists, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

New music will include Igor Stravinsky's orchestral concerto, a piano concerto by Ernest Krenek, and a concerto for string quartet and orchestra by Nicolai Berezowsky. The composers will appear as guest conductors or soloists. Other guest conductors will be Georges Enesco and Eugene Goossens.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 2 - 1938

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY begins his fiftee[illegible]ason as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday and Saturday, when that organization opens its fifty-eighth season in Boston, Mass. The program includes three numbers which the director led at his American debut—namely, Vivaldi's concerto in D minor, Berlioz's overture, "The Roman Carnival," and the Brahms "Variations on a Theme by Haydn." Beethoven's Fifth symphony, the first conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky in this country, completes the program. The orchestra's New York season opens Nov. 17 in Carnegie Hall.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Globe Oct 2

Boston Symphony Orchestra 58th Season Begins Friday

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will begin the 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his 15th year as conductor with concerts at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:30 and Saturday evening at 8:15. His opening program will appropriately commemorate his Boston debut, Oct. 10, 1924, by including three compositions heard on that occasion: Vivaldi's D minor Organ Concerto in the edition of Alexander Siloti; the "Roman Carnival" Overture by Berlioz and Brahms' Variations On a Theme By Haydn. The Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, which will end the concerts this week, stood upon his second Boston program, and was the first symphony he conducted in this country.

This year, as last, the supplementary Symphony concerts on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons will be played on consecutive days, and the same program will serve for each set. The dates are as follows: Oct. 24, 25; Dec. 26, 27; Jan. 16, 17; Feb. 20, 21; March 20, 21, and April 17, 18. Two of the season's guest conductors—Georges Enesco and Igor Stravinsky—will appear during these series and the list of soloists includes Pierre and Genia Luboshutz, who will perform Mozart's Concerto for two pianos, and Myra Hess, distinguished English pianist.

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

OCT 2 - 1938

6

'Just as a Matter of Records'

By CECIL BETRON

ONE of Victor's September offerings that one cannot afford to overlook is an album devoted to Sergei Prokofieff, the distinguished contemporary composer and pianist. Humor is the distinguishing feature of the three 12-inch records produced under the auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

"Lieutenant Kije," a suite from the Russian motion picture of the same name, occupies five of the six sides. The picture and naturally the music is based on an anecdote of Czar Nicholas I who misread an officer's name in a military report. Fearful of correcting him, his yesmen were forced to invent the lieutenant. And so an interesting bit of fiction is created with the composer losing no opportunity of making it as comical as possible. The suite is tuneful and gay even when it celebrates the death of the fictitious officer.

The remaining side presents the March an Scherzo from Prokofieff's most famous piece, the burlesque opera, "The Love of Three Oranges."

With the graphic choregraphy of Leonide Massine etched in the mind, the music of "The Fantastic Toyshop" becomes, under Eugene Goossens' stick, quite as picturesque as the ballet itself. The ballet, as everyone knows, is based on various bits of Rossini's writings orchestrated by Respighi. The orchestra is London's Philharmonic and Victor is responsible for producing the album.

For a modest sum Columbia has made available an album in which the voices of the tumultous organ sing the religious meditations of Franck's Choral No. 1, in E. Major. Dr. Albert Schweitzer is the artist, playing the organ at Ste. Aurelie, Strasbourg. There are two 12-inch records.

One of the important prophets of the ancient harpsichord is Dr. Ernst Victor Wolff whose recording of Handel's Suite No. 5, in E. Major is featured by Columbia on its September list. The last movement is better known as a separate piece under the title, "The Harmonious Blacksmith." Dr. Wolff plays with his usual excellent technic and gets as much color from the instrument as it can produce. The album contains two 12-inch records.

Columbia also offers a single record of Mozart's Overture—Paris which is given a sprightly performance by Arthur Wallenstein and a "sinfonietta" orchestra. The piece begins with a graceful pastorale which precedes a sparkling and spirited allegro.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

OCT 2 - 1938

Chamber Music Series At Brooklyn Academy

Five Concerts Announced to Start October 19

Besides the usual five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the "Music and the Dance" subscription series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will offer a series of five chamber music concerts beginning Wednesday night, October 19, when Ernst Victor Wolff and Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordists, and a string quintet will play works of Bach, Couperin and Schieffelhut. On Wednesday night, December 14, the Budapest String Quartet will play works of Mozart, Schubert and Beethoven. The Pasquier Trio, Roth Quartet and Webster Aitken, pianist, with a small orches- [illegible] give the three remaining concerts of the series.

In a Saturday afternoon young people's series, the Yakovleff Ballet will present "Little Red Riding Hood" and "The Nightingale and the Rose" November 5, and the Junior Programs ballet company, headed by Edwin Strawbridge, will dance "The Princess and the Swineherd" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream" on January 14.

Lectures on various phases of music and the dance will be given by Aaron Copland, composer; John Martin, dance critic of "The New York Times," and John Mason Brown, drama critic of "The New York Post." B. H. Haggin will be the commentator for nine programs of recorded music on Friday afternoons, beginning December 16. The institute will also offer two courses in music: "Types of Music," by Harriet D. Johnson, beginning Wednesday night, October 3, and "Orchestral Rehearsal," by Jacques Malkin, beginning Monday night, October 3. Both courses may be taken by teachers for credit.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

OCT 1 - 1938

Reserved Seats for Festival

All seats in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood will be reserved for the concerts next year by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to action taken by the trustees this week. There will be no increase in prices.

The trustees point out that the advantages of the new policy are obvious but since the number of seats is limited to 5,700 it is essential for music lovers who wish to have first choice of locations to send in their membership at once. Memberships are available only to Nov. 1.

Already there are more than 1,000 members and 95 boxes have been sold. These figures are much ahead of last year at this time.

Deferred until the next meeting was the generous invitation received from the Selectmen of Lenox to occupy free of charge the former post office quarters in the Lenox Town Hall as an office for the festival.

Miss Mary Parsons of New York and Lenox was elected a new member of the board this week. Officers were re-elected as follows: President, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge; vicepresident, Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee and New York; executive vicepresident, Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield; treasurer, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge; clerk, George W. Edman of Pittsfield.

